The parade might have been in 1918 upon further investigation. She had these labelled as 1924, but there was a big Labor Day parade in 1918 that was written up in the paper. The newspaper even included a variation of one of those street scenes in the paper.

A woman named Tara Allen shared these photos with me. She and I corresponded last year about her search for a family member's local address, and I told her that I was always interested in local photos. I think she might have shared one of these with me back then. I can't recall now. She was happy to have them shared with others.

These were taken during a 1924 parade. The street views are looking north on Meeting from just south of Wentworth. Sorry the quality is not better, but I think these photos of photos is the best I can hope for.
