All of those sold to the same buyer who ended up being the only bidder. The buyer ended up dropping $450 on the images. I would like to think the buyer was someone who will ensure the views are donated to a public archive. Maybe Harlan or someone was bidding?

The photo of East Bay is, I think, where 59-63 East Bay are today.
The photo of the bombardment damage is looking east on Wentworth Street from Meeting Street.

Someone is selling a few stereoviews of Charleston that were part of a series taken by W.E. James during the Civil War. I'm attaching the images. I can't figure out where the photo of East Bay was taken. Any thoughts?

I am not sure whether these are worth buying or not. I normally don't bid on any commercial images since they are usually already part of a collection somewhere. But, I don't think I had seen these before. You?

Kevin
