PS We understand there is a story behind the fire truck out front. Wonder if there is a newspaper report on it?

What a stunning house ... and how sad it was demolished!! If you don't mind, I'd love to add this photo to the collection in case any future researchers of 191 Rutledge contact Historic Charleston Foundation.

Good luck with your continued research!!

Karen,

We found some Peecksen cousins in Mt. Pleasant. They had a picture of 191 Rutledge. John Peecksen is the first cousin of my father-in-law, George Lowndes Weeks. George's mother was Harriet Peecksen.... daughter of John N Peecksen of 191 Rutledge Ave. George remembers walking over to his grandparent's house from The Citadel as a cadet in the late 40s.

Anyway... thanks again for the other resources you've found. I happen to be from the Wragg family in Charleston, so maybe our path's will cross again with research. (Blackbeard... Westminster Abbey... Wragg Square) It's like playing detective.

Grateful for your help,
Kathryn Weeks

Hi Kathryn,

My records indicate that the engraving is from an advertisement in the 1903 City Directory. I believe that both the SC Historical Society and the SC Room of the Charleston County Public Library have original city directories in their collections. I am fairly sure either would be willing to scan the original page for you.

I've attached a document that has some architectural/historical information about 314 King Street as well as some contemporary (ca. 1990s) photographs (photocopies).

Best regards,
Karen

No problem, Karen,

Actually, my email has you as the sender.

My family is so excited about the engraving of the Peecksen store on King Street. Do you know where we could find the original?

Thanks,
Kathryn

Hi Katherine,

I sent you an email yesterday and noticed that it had someone else's name as the sender. I re-sent it today but it too has the other person's name. I just wanted you to know that it is from me, not William Olasov. I had used an email to him as the basis for the one I sent you because some of the referral info was the same.

Sorry for any confusion.
