I just picked up this neat real photo postcard of the house at the northwest corner of Gadsden and Montagu. The markings of the company that printed the postcard were in use from 1904-1918, so that is a still large window, but it's at least some indication.

It is a terrible case of demolition by neglect, and it has looked really bad since I first became aware of its existence about 1989 or so. The house was built in the 1850s.

This scan is 600 dpi, but I'll drop off the original the next time I am downtown during the day.
