Mike said he would be glad to let HCF have good copies for the archives. I asked him for 600 dpi, and he said there were at least that high. I don't know if that is right, but they are better than nothing!

Here are two nice shots of the house that used to be at 116 Rutledge Ave. Mike Kirlin snapped these in 1967 which is lucky because the house was torn down in 1970. Alas! That's not that long ago, and being across from the old museum seems like it would have been captured in other photos, but I've never seen one!

Attached are the two pics. Thinking back, the day I took those pictures I had just visited the old Charleston Museum, took the pictures of the old house and then walked down Rutledge to Colonial Lake. I was new to Charleston and loved walking and exploring the city.

I'd love a high res scan of those pics for sure! And I'll forward copies to my friend the archivist too with credit to you!
