

13 New Street

13 New Street was built in 1887-88 by Carter Brothers (William F. Carter and T. L. Carter) for merchant Joseph Thompson.

The area that became New Street was part of Henry Middleton's holdings in the late eighteenth century. In 1800 Middleton had surveyor Robert Purcell lay out 35 lots on both sides of New Street between Broad and Tradd, but did not pursue development of the area. In 1838 he gave his son Oliver Hering Middleton a large parcel on the west side of New Street, 291' on the street.

Oliver Hering Middleton had been married to Susan Chisolm of Edisto Island since 1827. As her parents' only child, Susan inherited The Launch, a sea island cotton plantation, and rice plantations on Chehaw River. Oliver Middleton took over planting all the Chisolm lands; he and Susan divided their time between Edisto Island, Middleton Place, Sullivan's Island, and northern cities. By 1839 their New Street town house, "a very handsome one," was complete.

In December 1861, Charleston was swept by a fire that destroyed buildings along New, Savage, Friend, and Broad streets. The frame house belonging to Oliver H. Middleton was among the losses. Because of the Civil War, the "burnt district" was not redeveloped for years. Oliver and Susan Middleton refuged in the Columbia area, where she died in 1865.

In the mid-1880s, Oliver Middleton finally sold off his New Street holdings. He had his 291' lot divided into six lots: today's 5 New, 7 New, 9 New, 11 New, 13 New, and 15 New Street. Joseph Thompson, a Charleston merchant, bought and developed several of the parcels. Between September and October 1887, he acquired Lots #1 and #2, and contracted with the Carter Brothers to build two houses. The contract amounts were $2500 to build 13 New Street, and $2350 for 15 New Street. By February 1888, the Carter Brothers filed a mechanic's lien for the unpaid balance due on the completed buildings. Change orders had brought the contract amount to a total of $7124.73, of which $2364.86 remained due. Thompson eventually settled the account, and sold both houses.

In 1892, Kirby S. Tupper paid $3500 for 13 New Street, and occupied it until 1894 when he sold it to Eliza (Mrs. W. Perry) Murphy. The Perry family kept it as their residence, then as a rental house, until 1915 when it was conveyed to Jane H. Ball. 13 New Street was home to the I. G. Ball family until 1932, when Sabina Elliott Wells purchased it for payment of an unpaid mortgage and paving assessments.

By 1934, Sabina E. Wells had converted the building into a rental duplex by installing a partition wall across the entry foyers. The two flats were accessed by separate interior doors, and a beaded-board partition enclosed the stair as part of the upper apartment. After 1945, 13 New Street was held by a series of owners who occupied one apartment and kept one for rental. Edward and Bowe Pritchard, who bought the building in 1993, restored it to single-family occupancy in about 1995.

13 New Street, Part One Certification Application

Description

#13 New Street is a ca. 1887 frame residence, two stories in height, with a full-height projecting window bay at the south façade, a two-tier piazza along the west elevation, and a narrow rear wing with separate piazza. The entry opening at the east bay of the façade has a hipped pent roof with turned brackets, a paneled wood and glass door, and a painted-glass transom with the number "13." The house is clad in novelty siding, with fishscale shingles at the bay window, and paired brackets at the upper cornice and piazza. Both levels of the front piazza have turned columns and balusters, and the lower level is enclosed behind the front room. The rear piazza is enclosed with a wood-and-glass wall system behind the columns and balustrade.

The interior of 13 New Street retains its historic plan and much of its historic fabric: plaster cornices, bulls-eye corner blocks, small wood corner pediments at principal first-floor interior openings, and arched cased openings at the bay windows. A narrow back stair runs west-east in the rear wing.

Alterations: piazza enclosed, mid-20th century; enclosure reworked ca. 1995 and extended to the rear ca. 2005. Rear piazza enclosed mid-20th century, enclosure reworked to match main piazza. Interior was converted for duplex ca. 1933, and restored to single-family ca. 1995. Upper rear bathroom (formerly kitchen) retains beaded-board siding installed ca. 1933. Existing first-floor mantels are recent replacements of missing historic elements.

Outbuilding: Garage at rear west corner of the property has been reworked as a garden room. This building is shown on the 1902 Sanborn map as two stories, and a 1967 plat notes it as "two-story garage."

Statement of Significance

#13 Street is a good example of a late-nineteenth century Italianate style sidehall-plan frame townhouse. In setting, size, scale, mass and material, the building contributes to its streetscape and to the surrounding Charleston Old and Historic District. The 1973 Feiss-Wright Inventory includes 13 New Street in Group 4 (Contributory): "Buildings of architectural value without which the character of those buildings rated in Groups 1-3 would be lessened. To be preserved and retained."

Historical background

13 New Street was built in 1887-88 by Carter Brothers (William F. Carter and T. L. Carter) for merchant Joseph Thompson. It stands on part of a 291' wide lot formerly owned by Oliver Hering Middleton, whose house was burned in the fire of December 1861.

Between September and October 1887, Joseph Thompson, a Charleston merchant, purchased two 40' wide Lots #1 and #2, and contracted with the Carter Brothers (William F. Carter and T. L. Carter) to build houses at 13 New and 15 New Street. The buildings were substantially completed by February 1888.

In 1892, Thompson sold 13 New Street to Kirby S. Tupper, who occupied it until 1894 when he sold it to Eliza (Mrs. W. Perry) Murphy. The Perry family kept it as their residence, then as a rental house, until 1915 when it was conveyed to Jane H. Ball. 13 New Street was home to the I. G. Ball family until 1932.

By 1934, Sabina Elliott Wells had converted the building into a rental duplex by installing a partition wall across the entry foyers. The two flats were accessed by separate interior doors, and a beaded-board partition enclosed the stair as part of the upper apartment. After 1945, 13 New Street was held by a series of owners who occupied one apartment and kept one for rental. Edward and Bowe Pritchard, who bought the building in 1993, restored it to single-family occupancy in about 1995.
