

Constructed 1907

This late Victorian house was built by J. A. Hesse, and is now owned by the College of Charleston.

32 Coming Street

Constructed 1908

H. T. Zacharias, builder

This house was built by H. T. Zacharias, a prominent building contractor. It belongs to the College of Charleston and is used as one in a line of sorority houses.

34 Coming Street

Constructed c. 1771-78

This two-and-a-half story frame single house with a later Victorian roof was probably built by Thomas Harvey, a vintner. An advertisement for sale in 1792 mentions "a very valuable brick distillery" on the property. The house was built on land leased from St. Philip's Church, to which it belonged until 1906. It belongs to the College of Charleston and is used as a sorority house.

36 Coming Street

Charles Graves House

Constructed 1842

Planter Charles Graves built this three-and-a-half story masonry residence on land leased from St. Philip's Church. The exterior is conservative in style except for the Greek Revival piazza. The masked piazza end adds interest. The interior is typical of the 1840s. The property is owned by the College of Charleston and is used as a sorority house.

38 Coming Street

John Scott House

Constructed c. 1770

This two-and-a-half story frame house on a high brick basement was built by John Scott on one of St. Philip's leased glebe lots. The interior and the roofline were remodeled in the Greek Revival style. The College of Charleston owns the property which is used as a sorority house.

40 Coming Street

William James Rivers House

Constructed 1851

This two-and-a-half story brick house was built by William James Rivers, a notable Charleston author and teacher. His residence and academy were located here until 1857 when he became professor of classical languages at the South Carolina College in Columbia. He was the author of several works on South Carolina history. The building is owned by the College of Charleston. In the 1970s and '80s, it served as a women's residence with the college's health services center on the first floor. Today it is administrative offices.

57 Coming Street

Kornahrens-Guenveur House

Constructed c. 1884

This two-story frame house was built by John H. Kornahrens, a soda water manufacturer, who had his bottling plant in the basement and his residence in the main portion of the house. In 1925 the house was bought by Edward Leon Guenveur, a prominent black plumbing contractor who died 1969 and whose family continued to live there for several generations.

69 Coming Street

Farr House

Constructed c. 1817

This notable two-and-a-half story frame house on a high brick basement was built by Nathaniel Farr and his wife, Katherine Blacklock, whose father lived right around the corner on Bull Street. The property is now owned by the College of Charleston.

123 Coming Street

Jacob W. Cardozo House

Constructed 1839-40

This house was built by Jacob W. Cardozo, a prominent Jewish journalist, native of Savannah, editor of the Southern Patriot, published at Charleston from 1823 to 1845, and editor of the Charleston Evening News from 1845 to 1847. He was also a prominent member of Congregation Beth Elohim and an ancestor of N.Y. Court of Appeals Benjamin Cardozo. Built on a high stuccoed brick basement, the house is two and a half stories of wood with a gable roof.