Thanks for the update Karen!

I spoke to my mother in law she couldn't remember who the architect was...she kept saying Alfred Hutty, but he's a painter. She did say that Alfred Hutty and Albert Simons were acquaintances. So, the identity of the architect is still up in the air!

I did find out also, that the interior architectural detail and wood DID NOT come from an old plantation in Georgetown! I thought that's what my husband said, but he says not. Apparently I'm imagining things!

It did, however, come from an old Charleston downtown house that was demolished (possibly on Meeting Street??). It belonged to Harold Simons who owned the Chrysler dealership in the 40s on the corner of South Market and Church (?? — mother in law told me that). He was good friends with the Hansen's. He had saved all the woodwork from the house and had it in storage. He asked if they wanted it, they said yes, and he gave it to them to use in the house.

That's all I've been able to glean so far!

Thanks!
