5. Description of physical appearance:

This is a wood, 2½ story, Charleston single house, constructed on a high, stuccoed brick foundation, in the Greek Revival manner in the 1830s.

The house was altered at some point around the turn of the century and portions of the piazza were enclosed, bay windows were added on the west elevation, wooden shingles were added to the north gable, and doors and windows were replaced with late Victorian (Queen Anne). The house has three bays on its Lamboll Street elevation, and an arched window at its gabled end. There is a rear wing, which includes a portion of an early dependency, but it was joined to the main house sometime during the 20th century.

On the interior...most of the rooms were altered around 1899-1900. The principal downstairs rooms have earlier cornice detailing, but the mantels are turn-of-the-century Colonial Revival style. The door surrounds in the stairhall and the window on the stair landing have intact late Greek Revival molding. The second floor front room mantel detail and its surround, are also early 20th century, as well as most of the doors on the second floor of the house. Both the living room and the dining room on the first floor have mid-19th century gas chandeliers, which appear to be original to the house.

6. Statement of significance:

This building was constructed on a lot previously occupied by a small tradesman's house dating from the 18th century, apparently by William L. Hughes, a planter. Hughes built the house between 1836 and 1838, at which time the lot was sold to Mrs. Catherine Jenkins. It was later inherited by Catherine Jenkins' daughter, Maria, who was then the wife of the Reverend William O. Prentiss, the minister of the Calvary Episcopal Church, a church established by free blacks and slaves prior to the Civil War. The house was acquired after the division of the Prentiss estate in 1899, by Robert Tucker, a real estate broker, who apparently remodeled it in the late Victorian style. The house is an important part of an ensemble of three antebellum single houses. The house was rated as Category 3, "Significant", on the Feiss-Wright Survey.
