

this three and one-half story Regency building between 1817 and 1821. The building formerly had a Regency style tripartite window in the front gable.

(Stockton, DYKYC, Feb. 23, 1982.)

340 King St. -- This two story brick building was built after 1821 by Mathew Miller, a jeweler. The facade dates from c. 1940.

(Stockton, unpub. notes.)

342 King St. -- Mathew Miller also built this three story brick building after 1821.

(Stockton, unpub. notes.)

345 King St. -- This two story Victorian commercial building was built in 1883 by Christopher P. Poppenheim, a hardware merchant, as his place of business. His store remained here until 1892, when he built and occupied the larger building at 363-365 King.

Henry Oliver was the contractor.

(Stockton, DYKYC, March 15, 1982.)

348 King St. -- This three and one-half story brick building was built c. 1830 by Margaret Gidiere, a refugee from Santo Domingo. It was a commercial-residential structure, with Mrs. Gidiere's dry goods store on the first level and her family home above. The building was subsequently a saloon, the Lyric, a vaudeville and movie theatre, an office-shop arcade, and more recently a restaurant.

(Stockton, unpub. MS.)

363 King St. -- Architect W.B.W. Howe designed this Victorian building which was built in 1891-92 for Christopher P. Poppenheim, a hardware merchant. The front is of Philadelphia pressed brick trimmed with terracotta. The building has been rebuilt behind the facade, as a shop and apartment complex.

(Stockton, DYKYC, Dec. 28, 1981.)