BLACK LEADER OF THE CUBAN REBELLION REPORTED DEAD

Rebel Wearing Es'enz's Hat and Carrying Important Papers is Shot by Guerrillas--Body Not Fully Identified Yet

VOLUNTEERS WERE REVIEWED BY PRESIDENT GOMEZ

One Thousand Men Paraded the Streets of Havana Sunday--Young Gomez Will Not go to the Front Unless Revolution Breaks Out Anew

Santiago, Cuba, June 17.—The expected confirmation of the death of Evaristo Estenoz had not materialized up to a late hour tonight. Rumors that he is dead continued all day but the lack of confirmation has caused many to doubt their truth.

A report was received here today from Lieutenant Zapata, commanding a band of guerrillas, which may have been responsible originally for the reported death of Estenoz. Lieutenant Zapata had a fight with a band of negroes at California and killed one man. He wore a dirty Panama hat which had printed inside the words: "No. 7 Estenoz." On his person was found a list of the rebel troops and a valuable razor. His underwear was of fine quality and the conclusion was reached that he might have been Estenoz.

The surrender of rebels to the federal authorities continue. One body of 150 men notified Colonel Vallente that they wanted to come in. Colonel Vallente immediately telegraphed General Montegudo for instructions. He replied to grant immunity to all but the leaders, who must stand trial on charges of rebellion.

Captain Pablo Corrozo has telegraphed from La Maya that ten negroes from the band of Estenoz have given themselves up and that they say that they know nothing of the death of Estenoz.

The forces under Colonel Marti report having surprised a camp of the rebels at Libano, killing several and seizing twelve horses. Captain Franco of the guerrillas reports killing three negroes in a fight near San Luis.

Miguel Mariano Gomez, the son of President Gomez, will not go to the front after all. At least he will not go at present. He embarked all of his men on a special train yesterday morning and was ready to start when an order came from President Gomez instructing the volunteers to leave the train and accept leaves of absence and the expression of thanks from the president for having offered their services.

It was stated that the order of the president was due to news from Oriente indicating that the revolt is practically over and there was no need of more troops. The men who were enlisted by young Gomez were untrained and equipped without expense to the state by President Gomez and some of his personal friends.

The local guard of Havana paraded through the city streets yesterday afternoon. There were about 1,000 men in line and all things considered, they made an extremely creditable appearance. Although without military instruction the men marched in soldierly fashion and received praise all along the line. These guards had volunteered solely for the defense of Havana. No orders have yet been issued to muster these men out of the service although other volunteers have been ordered dismissed.

The guards formed at the Punta. Major Gustavo Rodriguez, of the coast artillery corps, assisted by Captain David Whitmarsh, formed the guards in companies of twenty-five. The order to march was given at four o'clock. Eight mounted men in command of Captain Estrampes led. They were followed by Colonel Avelino San Jenis, commander of the local guard of Havana, Major Rodriguez, and Captain Castro Targarona. Next came the guard's band, the bugle corps, the color bearers and the companies commanded by their respective captains.

The procession left the Punta and proceeded up the Prado as far as Central Park then took the following route: San Jose, Albu, Monserrate, Obispo as far as the palace.

President Gomez stood on the palace balcony with his family as the guards marched by in double file and applauded the appearance they made. From the palace the procession continued up O'Reilly street to Central Park, down San Rafael to Galiano, down Galiano to the Malecon, up the Avenue to the Punta, where they fell out.

The mine laying cruiser San Francisco entered Havana harbor at 8 o'clock yesterday morning. Her coming was a surprise to the general public as her arrival had not been

COCHRAN WILL GO TO TRIAL FOR LIFE TODAY

If Motion for Continuance Until Next Term is Not Sustained

At yesterday's session of circuit court, Louis Harris, attorney for Cochran, made a motion for a continuance of the trial until the next term of court. Judge Bethel took the matter under advisement, and will give his decision this morning at ten o'clock when court opens. If the motion is not sustained the trial will go on. A panel of twelve jurymen has been summoned, and will be in court this morning ready for the cross examination by the attorneys.

The grand jury spent the day yesterday in taking testimony in the case of Oscar Salgado, who is charged with killing Antonio Lemos on the eighth of last March, after which they returned a true bill charging Salgado with murder in the first degree. Nothing more will be done with this case at the present term unless Salgado is captured before court adjourns.

JOURNAL REPORTER AT REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Our "Cub" Reporter on the Spot.

"Scoop." The Morning Journal's "Cub" reporter, is at the republican convention in Chicago this morning. He made a fearful blunder just after the convention opened however; that mistake caused his ejection from the big emporium. Do you want to know just exactly WHY he was kicked out this morning? Well, if you do, just turn to page seven, look at the top of the page and you will see it all pictured out there for you. Anyway, the republicans couldn't stand the sight of Champ Clark's old hound dog in the convention hall.

MR. GALLAT TO BE MARRIED TODAY.

Miss Edna Louise Smith and brother, Edwin Smith, of New York, will arrive this morning. She will be married to Mr. N. Henry Gallat, engineer for the Key West Gas company, shortly after her arrival. Mr. Gallat is well known in the city, having been here in connection with the Gas Company's operations for several months, and he has many friends in Key West who will be delighted to hear of his marriage today.

AT THE MONROE LAST NIGHT.

The pictures at The Monroe theater last night were extraordinarily good, and especially was the picture, "A Policeman's Son," a good one. It pictured a loving father called upon to arrest his own son, for a crime which the son did not commit. Everybody present, and the house was filled for both shows, enjoyed this picture, as well as the other pictures in last night. The vaudeville, as pulled off by Hap Rogers and Ethel West in their funny (?) sketch, "Wanted, a Partner," was not so good, though. In fact, it was bum. Hap Rogers did not show that he was an actor last night. He would fit in better on a farm, where he could use his voice calling cows.

COX TRIAL POSTPONED.

Miami, June 17.—P. C. Cox, who is charged with being accessory after the fact in the murder of Hattie Parcel, will not be tried at the adjourned May term of the criminal court, which opens next Tuesday.

Solicitor Sanders announced this afternoon that no information would be filed in the case at this time and that it would not be brought to trial at this session of the court.

P. C. Cox was convicted in the circuit court last November of being accessory after the fact in the murder of Hattie Parcel, a fifteen-year-old Miami girl.

He was sentenced to serve seven years in the state penitentiary, but an appeal was taken and the state supreme court reversed the decision of the lower court and the case remanded to the criminal court for trial. Since then Cox has been out on bond.

Solicitor Sanders made no statement as to when the case would come up for trial.

position to know what changes are needed in the statutes of the state and are peculiarly well qualified to frame drafts of statutes to embody the desired changes.

COMMISSIONER LOCKE SCORES JAX POLICE

Kidnapping Going on Under Their Very Eyes Georgia Bailiff

(Times-Union.)

When W. M. New, "Bailiff of Bartow, Ga.," arrived in the city of Jacksonville yesterday morning he did not anticipate the series of experiences which he was to have and which included a hearing before the United States commissioner on the charge of peonage, his other experiences being such as starting to pull a gun on Deputy United States Marshal T. J. Brundage and having his gun taken away from him, also his trying to take a negro woman from this state to Georgia without having any extradition papers and in the final analysis bringing to light the fact that the police department of this city kept a prisoner in the city jail more than forty-eight hours without a judicial hearing and then turned over that prisoner to a stranger who announced himself as "bailiff of Bartow, Ga.," the stranger having nothing about him to indicate his right to have custody of the prisoner. Incidentally Julia Scott, a negro, escaped being taken from this city to Georgia by unlawful proceedings.

While W. M. New was not held on the charge of peonage, the case being dismissed, there was no mincing of matters by United States Commissioner E. O. Locke, who frankly and emphatically expressed his opinion of the proceedings which led up to the arrest of New and of the case being brought to his attention. There was a stinging rebuke by Commissioner Locke which was given the police department and its methods and Sergt. Detective Crawford, who was present, was most pertinently spoken to by Commissioner Locke.

AT THE FLORIDA PRESS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. F. H. Mathews, editor of The Morning Journal, is attending the Florida State Press Association in Palatka this week. Mr. Mathews left the early part of last week, making stops on the way, for the purpose of visiting old friends and acquaintances. He will return the latter part of this week.

BEAUTIFUL YACHT IN PORT.

Built of Solid Mahogany, and Cost $27,000—Will Sail This p. m.

One of the prettiest yachts that ever came into port here, came in yesterday morning and will be anchored at Sweeney's dock until this afternoon, when she will sail for New York. The yacht is the Eleanor IV., owned by J. J. Gray, Jr., of Nashville, Tenn. Built of solid mahogany, inside and out, with the exception of the decks, which are of oak, and the part of the hull below the water-line, which is Norwegian pine, the little craft is a beauty. The boat is fitted up in Pullman car style inside; it carries two 18 horse power Standard engines and can be driven ten miles an hour through a pretty rough sea. The boat cost Mr. Gray $27,000; he spends about eight months out of the year cruising on the Eleanor. The boat is in charge of a crew from Port Myers, who are taking it to New York. A stop will be made at Norfolk, Va., where its owner and a party of friends will go on board and make the trip from Norfolk to the great American metropolis.

MOBILE GETS A NEW S. S. LINE TO SOUTH AMERICA

Munson Line Will Extend Service Between Mobile and South America

Havana, June 17.—The Munson steamship company has announced that it has signed contracts with the Mobile and Ohio and the Southern Railroad companies to install a new steamship service between Mobile and South American ports. The new line is to be in operation in sixty days. After the Panama canal has been opened arrangement is to be extended to ports on the west coast of South America.

Overtures for the contracts were made by the railroads, which at present have no means of transshipping from a Gulf port. In consequence much of the traffic from the west and southwest has been diverted from their lines to the northern roads, by which it has been shipped from New York.

The Munson line, for which the Mobile and Ohio is building a new pier at Mobile, is to put on as many ships as the trade demands.

BIG PICTURE TOMORROW NIGHT

Tomorrow night the big 3,000 foot reel, "Tribby," will be shown at The Monroe, and it is a picture that will draw thousands to see it. It is a true reproduction of De Maurier's great play. Don't fail to come to The Monroe tomorrow night. The feature film will entertain you as few other films can do.

H. B. Boyer, Local Forecaster.

Washington, June 17.—The gathering of delegates at Chicago tomorrow forms the fifteenth national convention held by the republican party since its birth in Pittsburg more than half a century ago.

The first convention was in Philadelphia in 1856 and Edward D. Morgan called it to order on June 17. Robert Emmett of New York was temporary chairman and Henry S. Lane of Pennsylvania permanent chairman, with David Wilmet as head of the committee on resolutions. The platform declared against the extension of slavery into new states and territories, demanding the admission of Kansas, and advocated the building of the Union Pacific railroad. The candidates nominated were John C. Fremont—he defeating John McLean of Ohio on first ballot—and William L. Dayton of New York. The ticket was beaten by the democratic ticket nominated at St. Louis and headed by Buchanan.

The second, but in point of importance really the first, convention of the party was held in Chicago, assembling June 18, 1860. The platform declared for the preservation of the union, denounced the extension of slavery, and advocated tariff laws "which would encourage the development of the industrial interests of the country." Abraham Lincoln was nominated for president on the third ballot and Hannibal Hamlin of Maine was nominated for vice president on the second ballot. This ticket was successful in the fall, easily beating the divided democracy.

The third republican convention met in Baltimore on June 7, 1864. The platform declared for the carrying out of the war, advocated a constitutional amendment forever prohibiting slavery anywhere in the union, returned thanks to the federal soldiers and sailors, and endorsed the emancipation proclamation. Abraham Lincoln was renominated, receiving all the votes except those of Missouri, which were cast for Gen. Grant. Andrew Johnson of Tennessee was named for vice president. This ticket was successful at the polls.

The record of republican national conventions and candidates held since the close of the civil war is as follows:

Chicago, May 20, 1868—Ulysses S. Grant, of Illinois, and Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana.

Philadelphia, June 5, 1872—Ulysses S. Grant, of Illinois, and Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts.

Cincinnati, June 14, 1876—Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, and William A. Wheeler, of New York.

Chicago, June 2, 1880—James A. Garfield, of Ohio, and Chester A. Arthur, of New York.

Chicago, June 8, 1884—James G. Blaine, of Maine, and John A. Logan, of Illinois.

Chicago, June 19, 1888—Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, and Levi P. Morton, of New York.

Minneapolis, June 7, 1892—Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, and William Reid, of New York.

St. Louis, June 7, 1896—William McKinley, of Ohio, and Garret A. Hobart, of New Jersey.

Philadelphia, June 19, 1900—William McKinley, of Ohio, and Theodore Roosevelt, of New York.

Chicago, June 21, 1904—Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, and Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana.

Chicago, June 16, 1908—William H. Taft, of Ohio, and James S. Sherman, of New York.

The convention next week will be the seventh that the republican party has held in Chicago. Of the republican candidates nominated in that city, Lincoln and Garfield were assassinated. Blaine died a disappointed, if not a heartbroken, man. Arthur, who succeeded Garfield, lived to realize the full meaning of political ingratitude. Harrison, although renominated at Minneapolis, was defeated. The defeat of Grant in the convention which met in Chicago in 1880 was the occasion of a bitter feud in the republican party, and incidentally led to the defeat of the party four years later. Mr. Roosevelt was nominated in Chicago in 1904 and Mr. Taft in 1908. These two of the seven standard bearers named by the republican party in Chicago, conventions, are the only ones living.

Coffee Retailer, Attention!

Prices of Green Coffee are steadily rising, and there is no prospect of lower figures for the present. As consequence, the price of the ground article will also be raised by the different roasters supplying it. Perhaps there are many among you who are already paying this penalty. I have secured several lots, though, at such figures as to leave the price unchanged, as long as the lots last.

THE PRICE IS 25c PER POUND

for the same good, satisfactory and reliable article which has made "EL CENTRAL" famous for over twenty five years. Think of this if you want to save dollars on the coffee which you sell.

TO MAKE MOLASSES CANDY

Recipe That Comes Direct From Louisiana, the Home of This Delicious Confection.

Louisiana is rightly the home of molasses candy, for it was right here (where sugar was first raised in the United States, and molasses, sweet and health giving, was first given to the world) that molasses candy, or "candle tire," as the Creoles call it, had its birth. "Candle tire" parties, or molasses candy pullings, were among the pleasurable incidents of life among the early belles and beaux. Take one quart of molasses, one tablespoonful butter, one pound granulated sugar, two tablespoonfuls vinegar, one-half teaspoonful soda and the juice of one lemon. Boil the molasses and sugar until it becomes thick when dropped into water. Add the vinegar, lemon and butter. Boil until it hardens when dropped into water, stir in a small half teaspoonful bicarbonate of soda, and pour into buttered tins, and as soon as it begins to cool, sufficiently, pull until white. Moisten the hands, while pulling, with ice water or butter. The sticks may be single, twilled, braided or flattened, according to taste.

MAKING FRUIT FILLED CAKE

New Recipe With Full Instructions That Make Success Within Reach of Amateur.

For the layers, cream one-half pound of butter and one pound of sugar, add six well-beaten eggs, one pound and one ounce of flour, one-half pint of milk and two even teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat vigorously and bake in round jelly cake pans. For the filling boil one pound of sugar with water enough to dissolve it until it threads. Pour slowly into the whites of four eggs, which have been beaten to a stiff froth, beating steadily all the time. When all the syrup has been consumed add one-quarter pound of shredded citron, one-quarter pound chopped figs, one-half pound of raisins, seeded and cut fine, and one pound of blanched and chopped almonds, stirring the fruit into the icing gradually. When all has been thoroughly blended, spread between the layers and on the top and sides of the cake. As this is rich cake it should be cut into small slices and served with fruit punch.

FOLDING TABLE MOST HANDY

Is Great Convenience in Small Apartment When Space Must Be Economized.

For the small apartment where every inch of space must be economized, there is no piece of furniture to equal the folding table which when closed may be placed almost flatly against a wall. When opened this table shows a flat surface covered with baize or morocco, on which a tea tray may be set or a four-handed game of cards be played. Through its center this top is invisibly hinged and has two flat lids, one of which, when raised, discloses a shallow box containing an entire sewing equipment. The other side is fitted with a complete writing desk set in addition to a blotter pad next to which are sunken grooves for pens and pencils and at the two upper corners wells for ink and paste.

Poke Weed Salad.

Just as soon as the common poke weed begins to project its stout stem above the ground and open its leaves, it is in condition for an ideal spring salad. Only the tenderest tips of the weed should be used and these should be cleaned and cooked like any other green. Drain and pack the cooked vegetable into individual cups, and when it is cold, turn out the molded forms and serve with French dressing or mayonnaise on lettuce leaves. Poke weed is also delicious used like spinach. Its flavor reminds some persons of asparagus.

Tomatoes and Cheese.

Delicious are rounds of croutons—bread fried to a golden brown in butter, spread thickly with anchovy paste sprinkled with finely chopped pimientos. Another spread is a very thick stew of tomatoes, almost the consistency of a paste, sprinkle with grated cheese of the ordinary American variety. The tomatoes should be highly seasoned and quite rich with butter. If hot chocolate is liked at tea time the flavor is improved by adding a drop of vanilla or a dash of brandy.

Mexican Spaghetti.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a granite saucepan. When hot add four ounces of spaghetti, broken small, half an onion chopped fine, a teaspoonful of canned tomatoes, half a teaspoonful of salt and a little cayenne pepper. Stir till slightly browned and then add a large cupful of hot water and simmer till the water is absorbed and the spaghetti tender.

Boiled Salad Dressing.

Cream three level tablespoons of butter with a level teaspoon of mustard, a saltspoon each of salt and paprika, add the yolks of two eggs beaten and pour on one-half cup of vinegar. Set in a double boiler and cook until thickened. Cool and add one cup of beaten whipped cream.

Faded Shades.

When green shades have become faded, they can be renewed by rubbing them with a rag squeezed out of linseed oil.

Konetchy Is Indifferent.
"Why do the St. Louis pitchers persist in throwing to Konetchy when there is a runner on first? He doesn't even try to put the ball on the returning fugitive, but simply catches it, never looks at the runner and tosses back to the pitcher. Doesn't care to overwork himself, apparently," says a contemporary.

A TRUE TEACHER'S CREED.

No man or woman should go into a school room, as a teacher, who does not LOVE boys and girls; no one can be a true teacher who does not understand boys and girls, and to understand them we must first love them. When a teacher enters a school room, he or she has undertaken to TEACH the pupils in that room; and in order to teach them as they should be taught the teacher must first sympathize with them. He must sympathize with them in their youthful ambitions, sympathize with them in their difficulties, that is, difficulties of their work as pupils; he must study them individually, learn to KNOW them, and must sympathize with their varying moods, while he trains them in the way they should go. While imparting the information which it is the teacher's duty to impart, and drawing the pupil out, in the regular routine of the school work, the TRUE TEACHER will study the character of the different individuals, and will mould it so as to make of his pupils the WORTH-WHILE men and women of tomorrow and the years to follow. The teacher who does not incorporate in his creed the substance of what we have outlined, is not a TRUE teacher, and really has no place in the school rooms of our country.

A KEY WEST FOURTH OF JULY

We understand that there is a movement on foot to run an excursion from Key West to Miami, on the Fourth of July, so as to make it possible for hundreds of Key Westers to go to the Magic City to spend the day, to say nothing of the money that would be expended for railroad fare and amusement purposes while in Miami. Now, Miami is an awfully nice town, and ordinarily we would see no reason for discouraging Key Westers going on a visit to our sister up the coast; but to run an excursion from this city to another on the Fourth of July, just to give the people of Key West an opportunity to leave town on that day, is wrong. We should all stay in Key West for the Fourth, and if possible, get the people of other cities to come to Key West for the day. If we would take the money which the trip to Miami would cost, and would expend it for amusement purposes for the Fourth, the entire population could enjoy it—and they would enjoy it to the full. In addition, the money would be expended right here where it is most needed, and just as good a time could be had, as would be had by the excursionists going to the up-state town on that day. We do not propose to suggest how anyone in Key West shall spend their time and money. That, of course, is not our right; but we do think it is bad policy for hundreds of the city's people to go off on an excursion to another city on the biggest holiday of the year. Now, think about this matter; discuss it with your friends and neighbors; and we believe those who are promoting the excursion will decide to call it off. Then let's get together and plan a BIG DAY for Key West.

A DELICATE SITUATION.

This county faces a delicate situation which must be met and solved during the present session of the circuit court. During the last four months two men have been murdered in Key West, and neither of them were citizens of our city. They were men who had come to Key West, in the performance of their duty; one was a respected engineer of the Florida East Coast Railway, and the other was a sailor who had come here on board one of the nation's battleships. Each of the men killed had a right to expect the law's protection while he was here; neither of them received that protection—the laws of the land were broken, and the blood of two murdered men cries out from off the pavement of Key West's principal street, demanding that justice be meted out to those responsible for the crimes mentioned.

Two men have been indicted, one for each of the murders, and the court now in session will try these two men for the above mentioned crimes. The law presumes that the men indicted are innocent, until they are proven guilty; it is not necessary that the accused prove their innocence, but rather that the state prove them to be guilty of the crimes of which they stand charged. If the prosecution does not prove them to be guilty, then the law demands that they be set free again; but if either or both of them are proven guilty of murder, both the law and public sentiment demand that the guilty be punished as prescribed by law. The fair name of Key West and of Monroe county has been stained with blood; more than one home has been made desolate, and wherever guilt is proven, the law's demand of a life for a life is not too much.

THE KISS THAT UPSET A TOWN

"One day after school John Lewis, in the performance of his janitorial duties, mounted a step-ladder in the hall outside the superintendent's office the better to dust the transom. Obviously he had to look in. He says he saw Superintendent Barnes in the act of kissing, or being kissed, by Inez Armstrong."

THIS is the simple story of the kiss that upset a town so concerned that, as Captain Dunbar says, that half the folks don't know whether they're foot or a horseback, which, coming from an officer of the law, carries weight. The town is the snappy little village of Freeport, L. I.

Since the primary incident, and as an indirect result thereof, the authorities at Albany have been appealed to twice, the police have been called upon to perform emergency duty, four men have lost their official jobs, there has been a strike, parades through the town, a placarding of fences and barns with statements and warnings, mass meetings of citizens, men and women alike, and a general condition of such persistent turmoil that no one would so much as think of predicting what's going to happen next, according to a correspondent of the New York World.

By starting with the kissing incident, it is easier to set matters down in something like order.

Arthur E. Barnes, a Union college man, tall, angular, red-headed and given to wearing stiff starched white lawn ties bow-knotted at his Adam's apple, as superintendent of the Freeport schools had offices in the high school. One day after school John Lewis, in the performance of his janitorial duties, mounted a step-ladder in the hall outside the superintendent's office the better to dust the transom. Obviously he had to look in. He says he saw Superintendent Barnes in the act of kissing, or being kissed, by Inez Armstrong, a demure and willowy little teacher. Now, this incident, which is no part of the high school curriculum and nowhere mentioned by the regents, was communicated to the school board. But the midsummer vacation was approaching and the school authorities, having in mind the gossip which naturally follows on the very heels of a story of an indiscretion, did not take prompt action.

In the Role of Joseph.

Barnes himself admitted the kissing, saying that he was the recipient thereof instead of being the kisser. He furthermore credited it to a hysterical outburst on the part of the young teacher due to her delight at having been successful in an examination for promotion in which he had aided her.

But it hadn't looked that way to Janitor Lewis or to his assistant, Eddie Smith.

When the schools closed the young teacher went away from Freeport, and during the long summer drone the school board turned the matter over in its official collective head and finally decided that Superintendent Barnes' admitted qualifications for school direction, coupled with his several years of service, should not be disregarded. So he was re-engaged for another year.

And Barnes came back with his white lawn tie to the scene of the "incident" at the beginning of the fall term. But the young woman didn't.

Then some of the townspeople sought out Janitor Lewis and his assistant, and even an upper grade youth or two for a more detailed account of what had taken place within the superintendent's room. They got it. Smith confirmed Lewis. The boys confirmed Smith.

Trouble for Superintendent.

The next move was the circulating of an appeal to the state superintendent of education to compel the Freeport board of education to rescind its contract with Barnes.

Some of the townsfolk announced that they would withdraw their daughters from the school until such time as Barnes had been given his walking papers. Barnes stood pat when the term began. Having been exonerated by the school board and his contract renewed, he went about his duties quite as if nothing had happened. Not so industrious John Lewis or Eddie T. Smith. Their respective homes and dusts were placed in other hands, which some of the warmest supporters of the school board now believe to have been a tactical mistake. Neither man was guilty of anything except seeing the kissing, unless guilt attached to talking about it.

So, at the beginning of the school term, Barnes was very much present and Inez Armstrong was very much absent. Formal charges were made soon thereafter to Dr. J. S. Cooley, school commissioner for Nassau county, by a committee of Freeport citizens that Barnes was morally unfit to continue in village school work. The testimony of the janitors was made a part of the formal bill. It was both general and circumstantial. It was not confined to recounting one incident, but carried Barnes through a year, during which period, as set down, he had been a party to other acts not a recognized detail of school superintendency.

Testimony Contradictory.

At the hearing before Commissioner Cooley one witness testified that he had placed himself in as near as possible the position occupied by the janitor on the occasion when he had seen the superintendent and the woman teacher together, and he gave it as his opinion that Smith could not have seen the kissing or noted the manifestations of hysteria. This might have carried some weight were it not that the superintendent had admitted the kissing.

Another witness told of Barnes' excellence in higher algebra, which likewise did not seem to have any fixed bearing on the incident. There's no algebra for kissing.

The overwhelming weight of the evidence against Barnes was accepted by Dr. Cooley, who two days before Christmas declared officially that Barnes was unfit to teach.

Having been exonerated by the local school board and engaged for the new school year, Barnes promptly appealed to the state superintendent to have the county commissioner's decision set aside.

The office of superintendent being now vacant, the Freeport school board appointed Principal Roy Leon Smith of the high school to act as superintendent pending the determination of Barnes' appeal, and in the event of it being decided adversely to him to continue until such time as a permanent successor to that official could be secured.

Smith, who had remained silent during the period when Barnes was in the limelight, and having a rather pronounced opinion of the way the kissing incident was handled by the school board, made public a letter addressed to that body in which he declined the temporary appointment to the vacant Barnes post, saying he did not care to serve under the board.

This brought the row to its second and more spectacular but happily cleaner stage, which began on Jan. 5. The school board, of which Samuel R. Smith—the third of the name of Smith in the controversy—is president, dismissed Principal Smith, holding that his conduct in making public his letter was discourteous and—in-subordinate.

The board did not want to lose the principal, but it did want to preserve its own dignity. It urged him to withdraw the letter and make such an apology as the circumstances, as the board saw them, seemed to demand. But the principal couldn't see it.

On the morning of January 8, when Smith appeared opposite one of the two Spanish-American war cannon that stand on the high school lawn, his namesake of the school board appeared on the firing line and told the principal he must not enter the school. Some of the big boys and more spirited girls, having heard this, decided that they, too, would absent themselves and thus protest against the removal of the principal. Certain of the louder instruments of the high school band were heard from the basement and the scholars started a combined frolic and strike.

Enter Village Police Force.

Here Captain Dunbar of the village police force of fourteen brave and earnest men is introduced. He assumed the task of keeping the undergraduate body within bounds, which he did largely by moral suasion.

The parade swung round the corner by the house where former Assistant Janitor Eddie Smith, who, oddly enough, considering the happenings of the past year, is suffering with an eye trouble, sat fiddling at the window, and thence to the offices of the several board members.

Before nightfall they had bought all the tin horns in town and had secured banners upon which their ultimatum—"Prof. Smith or No School"—was painted.

The next day the teachers found more empty desks than before. The strike had grown. Some of the parents were sympathizers with it.

On Jan. 10 Sigmond Opera House on Main street was the scene of a mass meeting which took the double form of a protest against the removal of Principal Smith and a demand that the school board resign. There was ginger in the speeches. Almost as many women were present as men.

That very night a dispatch came down from the state capital announcing the dismissal of Superintendent Barnes' appeal. It contained the official comment, "The rule of moral conduct on the part of teachers must be held to with absolute rigidity," which every one accepted as quite in line with the town's policy.

Petitions for Principal Smith's reinstatement were displayed for signatures in four parts of town and generously signed. They were presented at still another meeting.

Whole Thing Summed Up.

In all of the doings growing out of the removal of the principal the opportunity has not been permitted to pass without a dig at Barnes and caustic comments on the way he tried to explain his indiscretion by saying a hysterical little school teacher up and kissed him.

But with Barnes somewhere in the west and the little school teacher reported as happily married, and Lewis satisfied that he did his full duty in reporting the cutting up, and Eddie T. Smith getting another job, without as much as losing a day, but temporarily confined to the house with irritated eyes and a tenuous fiddle—with these characters in the controversy eliminated the troubles will be straightened out by and by.

"Freeport people have got enough sense to handle the school question," observed Captain Dunbar, "but I'm not on the job of predicting when they'll do it. I'm a police officer. Police officers are paid for police duty, not for predicting."

FASCINATION OF THE SNAKE

Traveler Tells of His Own Unpleasant Experience With a Monster of the Species.

One of the most wonderful of the serpent's feats is the power of continuing motionless, with the lifted head projecting forward for an indefinite time. This ability is of the highest importance to the reptile, both when fascinating its victim and when mimicking some inanimate object, especially the stem and body of an aquatic plant. When the serpent is in this attitude, with its round, unblinking eye fixed on the beholder's face, the effect is most uncanny.

Perhaps no better illustration of the serpent's bewitching power could be given than that related by Ernest Glanville, a South African traveler, who describes his own experience. When a boy he frequently went out into the bush in search of game, and on one of these solitary excursions he sat down to rest in the shade of a willow on the bank of a stream.

Sitting there, with his cheek resting on his hand, he fell into a boyish reverie. After some time he became aware in a vague way that on the white, sandy bottom of the stream there was stretched a long, black line, which had not been there at first.

For some time he continued regarding it, without knowing what it was, until all at once, with an inward shock, he became fully conscious that it was a large snake.

"Presently," says Mr. Glanville, "without apparent motion, so softly and silently it was done, the snake reared its head above the surface, and held it there, with the gleaming eyes fixed on me, as if asking what I was."

"It flashed upon me then that it would be a good opportunity to test the power of the human eye on a snake, and I set myself the task of looking it down. It was a foolish effort. The bronze head and sinewy neck, about which the water flowed without a ripple, were as if carved in stone, and the cruel, unblinking eyes, with the light coming and going in them, appeared to grow brighter the longer I looked."

"Gradually there came over me a sensation of sickening fear, which, if I had yielded to it, would have left me powerless to move. But, with a cry, I leaped up and, seizing a fallen willow branch, attacked the reptile with a species of fury, and it quickly disappeared."

A Soft Answer.

A story is told of a landlord on the north shore. A guest, seldom satisfied, came to him and said: "Mr. Smith—that was not the landlord's name—'Mr. Smith, your coffee is rotten.' The landlord shook him by the hand. 'Thank you, sir; thank you. I haven't had my breakfast yet and I'll skip the coffee this time. Much

Heart Hunter

By Isola Forrester

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Russell did not look up at the schoolhouse window when he drew rein. He knew that she could see him from her desk, and the outer door was wide open. It was well after four, and all the children had vanished down the four roads leading from the schoolhouse corner. They were quite alone, if one excepted the red squirrel who was tenant for life in the elm that was king of the playground.

It was half a mile to the nearest farmhouse. All about lay June fields, rich in lush grass ready almost for mowing. The air was golden, warm, hazy, lazy, wooing one to forget duty and day's work. Russell was heavily burdened with both at present. As superintendent of schools in Laverne county, it devolved on his shoulders to let the teacher go at the little Flaxy Bend district, because of inattention to duty and general laxity of conduct.

That was exactly the wording of the charges in Mrs. Deacon Mabry's letter that reposed in his coat pocket. He didn't intend to show it to the girl.

So simple it seemed, so hard it was to do. He had fought against it for nearly a week, remembering her upturned, earnest face, so warm and tender in its brunette tinting, the big, brown eyes, and childish mouth that drooped wistfully at the corners, the dark hair bound smoothly around the small head, with a big, black velvet bow on one side. That bow had been an offense to the enemy even, at least on one side.

"She ain't stiddy enough to teach," old Mrs. Mabry had insisted. "I taught considerable after Myron and me were married, but I was stiddy. It's a known fact that she's settled four of the boys this winter."

"Settled them? You mean expelled them?"

"No, I don't, Mr. Russell. I mean just what I say. She's carried on girl-fashion with Nate Hoskins and

"I'm Afraid They Don't Like Me Very Well—Do They?"

Benny Everitt and Walter Bennings, and even with Lonnie Murray, and they've every one of them lost their heads over her and proposed, and she's refused them all."

"Well?" Russell tried to speak mildly, remembering the various attractions of the aforesaid four boys, "maybe she didn't intend to have them take her seriously, Mrs. Mabry."

"And if she didn't, then she's light-minded, and a heart hunter, if I do say it myself, Mr. Russell. That's what we always used to call them, heart hunters, and their minds don't go any further than hunting them, and letting them go as soon as they're caught."

Russell remembered the whole conversation now as he stepped into the little shadowy schoolroom, low-ceiled, cool, with fern boxes at the windows and bunches of June roses on the desks. Rose was her name, too, he remembered—Rose Phillips. She turned her head now, a quick smile of welcome and surprise on her face.

"Did you come to wish me good-by?" she asked.

Russell could not help but smile back. He laid his cap on one of the first row desks and stood looking at her as he drew off his gloves. She could not have been over eighteen. In spite of what the school committee had reported, he knew that the little school had made actual progress under her care and tuition during the past term. He knew the children loved her dearly. The little room itself bore witness to her influence. It had been a barren place before her coming. A few old yellowed maps hung on the walls. There was a wheezy melodeon in one corner, with most of the ivory off the keys and one pedal broken. The stove was a little, inadequate drum affair, with three legs to stand on.

Since her coming the whole place had been changed. The children had given little entertainments and earned money for a new stove, for new globes and window boxes, and little fresh muslin curtains at the windows. At the school examinations they had led the other township schools, and before her days, Flaxy Bend district had been a problem in education.

"Yes," said Russell, with almost a sigh, "I came to say good-by."

She waited a minute, chin raised, eyes questioning.

"Where did you tell me your home was, Miss Phillips?" he asked, leaning over the top of the tall desk, and fingering a pink rose that was nearest to him.

"Vermont. It's only a little bit of a place where the trains stop if they are flagged. We call it Phillips' Crossing."

"I suppose you'll be glad to get home."

"Not so very." She spoke reluctantly, with a little uplift of her shoulders. "You see, I have a step-father, and I am the only child from the first marriage, and there are seven little ones now besides. They don't miss me a bit, unless it's a good miss."

"Why did you come way down here in the country?"

"Because I was in a hurry to go to work. The city schools won't take you unless you've been through Normal, you know. I like it out here. The work was hard, but the victory was so much greater, and I do think the children love me."

Russell caught the little wistful touch in her voice.

"The old folks are peculiar, aren't they? Hard to get along with."

"I'm afraid they don't like me very well—do they?"

"They say you're a good teacher, but—"

Rose waited and looked up at him quickly. Her brown hair was very near, with its soft satiny braids. Before he really meant to, he had tucked the pink rose among them.

"It looks much better there," he added, and wondered why his own pulses were racing suddenly, like brooks in April.

"But what? Please—please tell me?" she pleaded, drawing back, but not removing the rose. "What do they say?"

"They say you're a heart hunter."

She leaned back her head and sighed, her hands clasped back of the rose, her eyes looking past him out of the first open window.

"They mean the boys, I suppose, Nate and the rest. Could I help it? Now, truly, could I, Mr. Russell? You know just what boys are. They'd come here every day, and bring all sorts of things to me that I didn't want. Why, Lonnie even used to bring me fox pelts for a cloak, of all things. Boys are always boys, and they get over it so quickly. I was just as nice to them as I could be."

"I am not blaming you—nor them," said Russell a bit unsteadily. "Only I agree with the deacon's wife that you are a very dangerous and disturbing influence to have around these peaceful parts."

The tears glistened in her eyes. "Oh, you don't really mean that?" she said pleadingly. "Are you trying to tell me I cannot teach here again?"

Russell stared awkwardly down at her head, as she leaned it on folded arms, and her shoulders shook with sobs.

"I've tried so hard, and the children all love me," she said brokenly. "I didn't want to go back home at all. I was going to board here all summer, and rest—"

Then suddenly it dawned on Neil Russell why he had driven ten miles that afternoon to make all fit and due explanations to the teacher instead of writing. He knew just why he had thought of nothing but her tender lips and dark eyes and low contralto voice for weeks past. He knew why he had saved every scrap of writing she had ever sent him, and why he carried in an inner pocket a little tan suede glove he had found beside her chair after a board meeting one day. Oh, yes, he knew now, and he imprisoned both her hands in his and raised them to his lips.

"Rose," he said. "Stop crying. I've brought you another heart, dear."

She stopped sobbing, but did not raise her head.

"I haven't any one in the world myself. I came up here from New York and got along well. There's enough saved in the bank to buy us a good home in the fall. I think I could make you happy, Rose, if I may wear you, dear."

"What would you tell the deacon's wife and—all the rest?" she asked faintly.

"That I had to dismiss you because I couldn't let my wife work," he whispered. "Won't that do for a good excuse?"

Youthful Bigotry.

"There is a thoughtful boy in an Antrim village who listened one Sunday to a statement made by his Sunday school teacher that God had created all things, and all men. 'Did God,' he asked, at last, 'make the Papists?' He had been taught to reverence the Almighty, and it seemed impossible that He could have been guilty of that. The teacher assured him that God had really made even them. The boy pondered the information for a minute, and then gave his opinion briefly and forcibly. 'He'll rue it yet,' he said. Higher Earnings

Proper Training of Working Force Assures Future

By H. G. SMITH, Boston, Mass.

THE establishment of a successful shipyard at Quincy has meant of necessity the application of every possible principle of scientific management in all the many branches involved. We feel that only by constant betterment of our efficiency and the consequent training of a proper working force, are we assured of a proper future.

Scientific management, to my mind, is the application of certain principles to the directing and guiding and the assisting of labor along proper business and economic lines. These principles are universally recognized in the business world today, and are necessarily becoming more evident in every American shop as the competition grows keener and the necessity for the utmost proficiency correspondingly greater.

This is especially true in a plant where so many different trades are involved as in a shipyard. Only by dint of constant attention to details and careful booking of results for future comparison can efficient results be arrived at. The difficulty of obtaining such results is greater in proportion as the repetition is less.

For some years past we have endeavored to keep careful account of work done and the time spent thereupon in every department, and the use of this information has given us a definite idea of the efficiency of our working force, and has allowed them in turn to make higher earnings, with correspondingly greater satisfaction to us both.

Specialization of the work to which this points the way, elimination of unnecessary processes, and the necessity for proper aids to efficiency are three of the cardinal principles of scientific management which we have used, and are using more and more every day in the development of this shipyard.

We have not adopted the Taylor system as such, as our work is so complex a variety that we cannot employ any such general scheme in all our departments. We are, however, as is everyone else at present, constantly striving to increase the efficiency of the labor employed, and, with very few exceptions, in every case where a systematic study of the question has permitted the introduction of premium or contract work lessened costs have meant greater earnings to the workers who brought them about, and this with no injurious results to them.

False Teeth Tend to Shorten Life

By H. E. CROSSWELL
Raleigh, N. C.

I believe that false teeth are one of the elements in modern times which contribute to shorten life.

That is one of my pet hobbies, and although I am often laughed at for holding such an opinion, I believe it is correct and I will tell you why. A man rarely needs a set of false teeth until he is nearing fifty at the earliest, and he usually manages to get along for perhaps eight or ten years before that on a few natural teeth.

He is getting old in the meantime, and finding himself hampered by inadequate teeth. He must perforce forego many ar-

COLLINS IS IMPORTANT COG

Athletic Second Baseman Signals Outfielders What Kind of Ball Pitcher Will Throw.

Eddie Collins had more to do with the success of the Athletics last year than he is generally given credit for. It was Eddie's duty to signal the Philadelphia outfielders what kind of a ball the pitcher was going to throw in order that they might shift accordingly. Eddie would get the signal from the catcher and then tell it to the outfielders with his hands, feet or body.

The other clubs knew what he was doing, but it was impossible for them to decipher his signal code. Almost every Tiger pitcher and catcher took a hand at the detective work by warming up on the edge of the outfield and behind Collins both in Philadelphia and Detroit, but they were unsuccessful.

The other clubs of the league soon got on to the fact that Collins was working this system and they all plotted to learn the signals, but he kept them guessing the entire season.

Barry Celebrates Birthday.
John J. Barry, the crack shortstop of the champion Athletics, celebrated his twenty-fifth birthday the other day. Barry was born in Meriden, Conn.

Ragtime music, it is said, is responsible for the turkey trot and other such contortions, but we are inclined to lay the blame on ragtime morality.

MURPHY SIZES UP TY COBB

Field Captain of Athletics Says There Never Was Player Like Him—Can Do Anything.

Danny Murphy has a boost for T. Raymond Cobb. Dan is apt to censure the glittering Georgian for loafing a mite when he looks like lying down on a fellow-player, but when it comes to the personal stuff it's aces and eights for Tyrus as far as Danny is concerned. Hear the manner in which the Athletics' new field Napoleon sizes up that Cobb personage:

"I don't believe there was ever one like him before, and I don't think we'll ever see one like him again."

"He can do anything. He hits, he throws, he fields, and he can run. A lot of the players in our league used to tell about his boneheaded running the bases. Well, let me tell you something. He's so fast he can take chances all the time. There isn't a club in the league that don't hate to see Cobb on first with one run needed by Detroit. He keeps the pitcher worried, he has the team bothered, he has the catcher worried, and it's almost a cinch that he'll get around. He's the greatest I ever saw."

"Brick" Owen is Landed.
"It is seldom that an umpire can give emphatic satisfaction to both the winning and losing teams, but that is what 'Brick' Owen is doing in the National league. 'He umpired in five of our games,' said Manager Fred Clarke of Pittsburgh. 'We lost four of them, but there wasn't a kick coming on him. It is hard to find fault when he is working.'

tibles of food which other people can eat without any difficulty. Now, after ten years, perhaps, of abstinence from heavy foods, difficult to masticate, and getting older every day, he purchases a set of false teeth. Immediately he feels rejuvenated and starts to eating anything and everything with the avidity of a schoolboy. But his stomach rebels, although in many cases the man feels no ill effects at the time.

But after a while he gets indigestion, dyspepsia and a thousand other complaints, and all because of his false teeth. If he had let them alone he would have continued eating easily digestible food and his stomach, to say nothing of years to his lifetime, would have been saved. No, sir, I don't wear false teeth, and I never shall.

Man Needs to Know but Three Tongues

By I. H. GEHRING

I possess the same fluency and command of German and English, but possibly I can use the English just a trifle more readily as I converse in it oftener than the other, which is my native tongue. When speaking with my father and mother I invariably speak German.

A good many years ago I had a very fair mastery of Italian and Spanish, but through disuse I have utterly lost the ability to converse in either. French I read with ease, but seldom essay to talk it because of bad pronunciation.

After all, a man nowadays needs to know but three tongues—English, German and French. The Russian matters little, for one can go all over the czar's dominions on one or two of the predominant languages.

The English will keep at the head of the procession, for many more millions employ it than any other one tongue. While a great language, it is in some respects very inferior to the German.

One can express his thoughts more clearly, I think, and convey his exact meaning more accurately in German. By reason of this the German literature is preferable to the English.

Why Allow Guilty Persons to Escape?

By E. J. MARSHALL

In many of the sensational divorce cases reported in the newspapers a correspondent is named, with dates and places. The judge hears the case and a decree is given. But is the correspondent to a divorce suit not a criminal if the trial judge finds the allegations true? Is not the one who has broken up a home, robbed another of that which is most precious and sacred, a worse robber than a burglar? Then why are the guilty ones not prosecuted after being found offenders in a divorce suit? Stolen articles can be replaced, but home ties and peace of mind never.

Could not the legislature amend the present law and grant the trial judge or jury hearing a divorce case the power at the same time of sentencing the correspondent if guilty to the penitentiary for from one to five years, at the same time making other statutory grounds punishable by penitentiary sentence? This would soon cure the divorce evil, save the home ties and protect the children.

San Francisco's three mile bridge will at least be a more tangible wonder than the Golden Gate.

Now an aviator and his bride are about to pass their honeymoon in the air. It simply had to come!

The Symphony

It was amateur night at the Gaiety and the house was packed. Never since the little theater had been built was there such an audience. The manager was beside himself with excitement, but the people before the curtain did not confuse him half as much as those behind.

The weekly prizes of $1, $2, and $5 were always contested for eagerly by the people of the Latin quarter, whose patronage the house solicited, and more especially this Friday night it seemed. The manager knew why such an unusual number elbowed and pushed each other in their eagerness to get near the door.

The winners of the coveted dollars would not squander them this week. Instead, they would send them directly to the homeland, where relatives and friends were in terror and suffering.

"They can't all go on, Steve," said the manager to his assistant, "we'll have to thin them out. See what kind of a turn each one does and take the best; get the funniest every time. The people have cried enough this week—they're paying to be amused tonight, so be careful not to get any weeping-willow acts. Hustle up, now! I'll look after the seating. The law allows us to squeeze in 100 more."

The assistant hurried behind the scenes and began sorting the performers. It was no easy task, and many were the threats and curses as one after another was refused a chance to go on. He had almost finished his selection when he came to a swarthy little man in the costume of a Sicilian peasant.

"Hullo!" said the assistant. "What do you do, Speak up?"

"Me playa de piano," said the little man, moving his fingers over an imaginary instrument. "Me playa good. Yo-es."

"No pianists," said the assistant, moving on. "People no like. Get the hook. Understand?"

"But—me playa nice. Me no getta da hook. Me maka da piano to talk!"

"No doubt you can make it walk, but I can't let you try. Next!"

The little man turned away muttering as his fellows had done, and the curtain went up for the first performer.

There was something wrong with the audience that night. It was extremely critical and hard to please. The merriest jokes fell flat and the cleverest trickster was only faintly applauded.

"It's funny," said the manager as he and his assistant met in the rear of the hall. "What ails them? That last song was well done and mighty catchy. Why don't they clap?"

"I don't know," said the other gloomily. "At the rate they're turning 'em down the whole bunch could have gone on. What! I told that fellow to keep off."

The little man in Sicilian costume was standing in the middle of the stage. He looked a bit of old Italy with his curly locks and long gold earrings. "I come to play to you of the homeland," he said in his native tongue. "I want the music that can make you see it as it lies in the sunlight. It will make you see the sea, the olive groves and the clear blue sky. Listen!"

The audience grew suddenly still as he seated himself at the piano and struck a few soft chords. Then the notes began to weave themselves into a story, and as the musician unfolded it to his listeners his face grew rapt and was beautiful.

When he stopped, the crowd broke into a frenzy of applause. Men sobbed and women screamed.

"What'll he do next?" asked the manager. "The man is a wizard. That's fine! He's playing the Italian National air. Hurry up, Bowler, and throw the pictures of the king and queen on the screen before they stop singing. The roof'll fall with their noise."

When the lights were turned on again the excitement had spent itself a little, the man who had caused it all was gone. A reporter for one of the dailies came hurrying up and seized the manager by the arm.

"How'd you get him, Davy?" he asked. "Where is he? I want to interview him. Quick, before he escapes!"

"He's gone already," said the manager. "I wanted to see him, too. He's just the man for the place."

The reporter stopped him. "Do you mean to say you don't know who he was?" he cried. "He was Lorenzo, the great composer."

"I was thinking some of hiring him at 15 per," he said. The next minute he added thoughtfully: "What do you suppose made him do it? He must have had reason."

Hurrying homeward was the little man in peasant's costume.

"Ah! they understood!" he mused.

"I knew they could. They loved it for itself alone, not because I, the great Lorenzo, played it. No other but the Italian could have appreciated it as they did. To the English—bah—it would have had to be explained in cold worlds so that they might follow. What care I if I get no gold beyond the beggarly first prize, perhaps? Appreciation is more than applause or money to a man who loves his art as I love it."

FOOD VALUE OF HONEY HIGH

Peculiarly Valuable as an Addition to the Diet of the Younger Generation.

Honey is a valuable adjunct to the housekeeper's dietary and is a valuable concentrated food for children, being more easily digested than cane or beet sugar. Recipes for various uses to which it may be put are given to the Ladies' World.

Lemon Honey Pie.—Line a pie dish with short pastry and fill with lemon, pared free from the white, tough skin. Cut the lemons as thin as a wafer and reject all seeds, or it will be bitter. Place between every layer of lemon clover honey, using one cupful of strained honey; cover with pastry rolled thin; slashing the top crust to allow the steam to escape. Bake in a moderate oven until the pastry is brown.

Honey Cream Filling.—Mix one-half a cupful each of granulated sugar and clover honey with two tablespoonfuls of clear water; then cook until the syrup will just spin a thin thread when dropped from a spoon. Remove immediately and turn in a fine stream on the stiffly beaten white of an egg, beating until the mixture is cold, when it will be ready to use.
