

240 PER CENT INCREASE IN BUSINESS OF PORT OF KEY WEST FOR THE YEAR 1911

DO ANTARCTIC HONORS BELONG TO NORWAY

Controversy Over Scott-Amundsen South Pole Discovery Waxing Warm

The question now agitating scientific circles is: Did Capt. Roald Amundsen, who headed the Norwegian expedition to the South Pole, discover it before or after Capt. Scott of the British Navy? A claim they have that honor, so the matter is an exact duplication of the Peary-Cook imbroglio which had the world by the ears two years ago.

Herbert L. Bridgman, secretary of the Arctic Club of America, expressed little surprise when he received the news that the Amundsen dash to the south pole had been successful.

"I have been in the business too long," he explained. "Nothing can surprise me very much. Ever since I knew anybody was making a serious try at the south pole, I was confident that the discovery would be made. I rather expected it would be Scott, and I should not wonder at all if we should hear in a few days that he had reached the pole, also."

"I have a very high opinion of Amundsen. He has shown before that he was a fine navigator and in earnest. As far as the comparative difficulty of the two poles is concerned, there is no question in my mind that the attainment of the south pole was much easier than the north. Europe has looked upon the south pole as her own field of exploration. It was agreed at the international conference of 1905 that the north pole should be left to the Americans."

Dr. Frederick A. Cook of Peary-Cook fame thinks it possible that Scott and Capt. Amundsen crossed each other and that both reached the pole, though which first, it is at present impossible to say.

Amundsen insists that he reached the pole Dec. 14, 1911.

REGULAR CASH PAY who lead a dash to the south pole in 1903-5 is confident 6,000 miles the Norwegian beat the English.

One thing is sure and that is that is more definite information of the Norwegian victory—if victory it is—has arrived than Captain Scott has sent.

Commander Of Ft. Monroe Puts Officials Ban On Fashionable Dances

Old Point Comfort, Va., March 9.—Colonel Strong, commandant of Fort Monroe yesterday put an official ban on the Grizzley Bear, the "Turkey Trot," "Tangle," "The Fussy Wuzzy," "Piekanninny Dandle" and others of the latest dances alleged to be so fashionable in northern cities.

Copies of the order against three dances were sent to hotels on the reservation, where hundreds of northern society people are spending the winter. The order caused a mild sensation.

IN SPORTING CIRCLES

The next pugilistic event of any consequence scheduled to be pulled off here soon is a twenty round bout between Scotch Kid and Kid Ellis. The Scotch Kid stopped Ellis last Monday night in the fifth round of what was scheduled to be a 15 round affair. Ellis says it was a chance blow and he is anxious to redeem himself in the eyes of the fans. Scotty says he'll "do the same thing over again."

It is also possible that the next two months may see a bout between Kid Ashe and Young Johnson who fought thirteen fierce rounds some time ago here.

JAMES O'BRIEN FELL AND BROKE HIS HIP

Was Working Last Night On Eaton St. When He Sustained Injury

James O'Brien who is employed here by the paving contractors sustained a painful injury last night when he fell from a machine that is standing next to the sidewalk on Eaton St. near Simonton St.

Frank Harris who drives a public hack was informed by someone that had passed a man on Eaton St. who was groaning. Harris reported the matter to some young men whom he passed on Duval St. and they investigated, finding O'Brien lying on or near the sidewalk on Eaton St. near the corner of Simonton. The young men were Gerald Navarro, Emil Kirschmeier, Kelsey Curry and Sebastian Carbrera. They rendered such assistance as they could and began to look for a physician. Mr. Jenkins Curry then appeared with a blanket and a cot which he placed at the disposal of the injured man. Dr. J. N. Fogarty arrived at 11 o'clock and took the man to the Mercedes Hospital where he found that his hip had been broken. O'Brien states that while doing some work on the machine above mentioned, he slipped and fell across the curb of the sidewalk.

JOHNNY AND ELLA GALVIN WITH "A BELL BOY" MUSICAL COMEDY COMPANY

The well known "Bell Boy" musical comedy company of New York will be the attraction at the Monroe Theatre for two weeks, commencing next Monday with the clever young light comedian, Johnny Galvin and the dainty little soubrette, Ella Galvin, as the principal fun-makers, and a large number of capable actors and a chorus that can sing and dance.

Johnny and Ella Galvin present no farce comedies nor burlesques, but every production is a high class, clean cut musical comedy full of funny situations, bright dialogues, sparkling lyrics and music that is tuneful, catchy, easily remembered and more easily whistled, the kind that everyone wants to hear. They are said to be lavish in the matter of scenery, wardrobe, mechanical and electrical effects and in every way worthy of the management and the high character of the chief comedians taking part in them. They also contain more big acts and feature numbers than any musical comedy on the road today. Everything is new and up-to-date and each solo, duet, quartette, number is given with a verve and a vim that show the best and the most artistic stage management.

Johnny Galvin himself is one of those pleasingly mannered boys, bubbling over with ginger who sings, dances and keeps things on the go very much as does his famous contemporary, Geo. M. Cohan, although he at no time imitates him.

Ella Galvin, the soubrette with "A Bell Boy" company is a most handsome as well as a talented performer. She has in these productions the best opportunity of her entire artistic career and makes the most of it.

The company this season is carrying 25 people and a special sixty foot baggage car of scenery and effects and have spent over five thousand dollars in building up a repertoire of five musical comedies including "The Man Question," "Zira From Turkey" and the "Two Masqueraders." Nothing will be repeated in any way during the entire engagement. By special arrangement with M. Carbonell, the prices will be reduced to 25c, 50c, 75c. Free list suspended for this engagement. Seats now on sale at Box Office, Monroe Theatre.

Fisher Shipp, Pauline Harrington Della Simmons, composing the Fisher Ship Concert Co., of Chicago, were registered at the Jefferson last night.

PORT STATISTICS SHOW BIG INCREASE

Figures For 1911 Show Increase of 240 Per Cent Over 1910 Figures

The port statistics for 1911 show an increase of 240 per cent over the year 1910. Following is the report for the year 1911:
Regular steamers and schooners 209,917 tonnage
Irregular steamers, sails and scows 228,829 tonnage
Total tonnage 438,746
Value of the tonnage $16,161,195.00
The above figures are very gratifying and it is well known that there is more tonnage entering this port now than ever, so it is fair to assume that the figures for 1912 when they are gathered will show another large increase over the previous year.

These statistics were gathered by Mr. Geo. McDonald and he is deserving of a great deal of credit for his efforts. The gathering of these statistics was quite a job and required much time and care. Through Mr. McDonald's work Key West now has the pleasure of boasting of a 240 per cent increase in the business of the port.

INGRAHAM'S MILLINERY OPENING

One of the really beautifully furnished and stocked millinery establishments in the Cigar City is that of Mr. H. A. Ingraham, at 822 Fleming street. Mr. and Mrs. Ingraham have gone to particular pains this season to bring to Key West a high class of millinery goods, and those who love the artistic will do well to go to Ingraham's opening, which will very probably be held this week.

MASQUERADE BALL NEXT WEEK

5 PER CENT OF SPENDING FOR FIRE VICTIMS

Garfunkel's Big Sale Offers Free Merchandise To Sufferers

M. Garfunkel's big remodeling sale, advertised in this morning's issue of The Journal, opened yesterday morning at 9 o'clock. A representative of The Journal spent a while at this big house furnishings store yesterday afternoon and watched the crowds that came to the remodeling sale. They didn't merely come to look, but they bought, and the delivery wagons were busy from about half past ten o'clock in the morning till late last night.

With every purchase made Mr. Garfunkel gives coupons or votes redeemable in merchandise at 5 per cent. These coupons are worth 5 per cent of the gross sale and the purchaser may give them to either of the three families who lost so heavily in the fire. Remember that when you purchase one dollar's worth at Garfunkel's Remodeling sale you get a coupon that will be good for five cents in trade for any of three families who were victims of the recent fire.

Read the full page advertisement on page five of this morning's Journal and take advantage of these big bargains.

KEY WEST IS A 240 PER CENT PORT

The article on page one of this issue giving the information that this port has made an increase of 240 per cent in one year in its shipping business is very gratifying. The statistics show that tonnage to the value of millions of dollars entered and left this port last year and the business is constantly on the increase. The first part of this year a large amount of tonnage has entered. Key West it is quite probable that 1912 will be the port's banner year. With the completion of the Panama Canal in another year the shipping to and from this port is bound to increase wonderfully and Key West become the most important port on the gulf.

At the Church Bazaar

Woman in Brown—How much are
these dust caps?
Girl at the Booth—Forty-five cents,
madam.

Woman in Brown—For goodness'
sake! Mame, did you hear that? Why,
that's the cheapest sort of stuff, and
so easy to make!

Mame—Why, my sister makes them
by the dozen.

Girl at the Booth—They cost me 35
cents apiece just for the goods. I didn't count anything for my time.

Woman in Brown—Oh, did you make them? Well, I suppose it does seem like hard work if you're not used to sewing. Come on, Mame, let's go over to the doll section.

Woman in Green—What are these things?

Girl at the Booth—Clothespin dolls.
They are for children.

Woman in Green—They ought to be at the doll counter. Why aren't they
in the doll booth, I wonder?

Girl at the Booth—They haven't room for them over there, so they sent them here. They sell for 20 cents.

Woman in Green—Twenty cents!
For mercy sake! Anybody can make them. Why, they're only clothespins!

The idea!

Girl at the Booth—The hair is made of darning cotton and it takes a whole morning to make one.

Woman in Green—I'd give you ten cents for one. Are these things sach-ets? Are they all pink? Why haven't you some yellow ones? I don't care for pink.

Girl at the Booth—Whoever sent
them in did not make yellow ones.

Woman in Green—They have them
just like that down town. I think I'll buy down town. Which is the candy
booth?

Child—Oh, mamma, lookit! Ain't these dolls cuning?

Mother—Yes, yes; be still, child.
What do you ask for that big picture
over there? The one with the woman
and the little boy?

Girl at the Booth—That was donated by an art store. It was priced at $3.50. Isn't it pretty?

Mother—Rather. I'd prefer a life scene, though. Haven't you any fruit
pictures?

Girl at the Booth—That's all we have. Would you like one of those calendars, Mrs. Drake?

Mrs. Drake—Oh, how do you do? Are you helping out? Do you like the work? Well, I suppose you wouldn't do it if you didn't like it. How much
are the calendars?

Girl at the Booth—Fifteen cents.
Shall I wrap it up?

Mrs. Drake—Dear, no. I don't know that I want it. Fifteen cents is so high. Why, those calendars are only tinted, and everybody does tinting
nowadays.

Girl at the Booth—The calendars
cost me ten cents uncolored.

Mrs. Drake—Oh, did you do them?
Well, they aren't bad for tinting. What on earth is that child doing? Gracious, go away!

Mother—I regret the annoyance my child seems to be causing you. She is very small, and does not understand.
She is just trying to get under the
booth, that's all.

Mrs. Drake—Oh, is that all? I don't think I shall buy just now. I'll wait till my husband comes and see what he wants. He's coming soon. I'll just look around.

Child—Honk, honk! Get out of the way! I'm an automobile.

Woman in Black—Dear, dear. Why
do they allow children to act like that?
Don't you think they ought to keep
such children at home?

Mother—Scarcely. That's my child,
madam.

Woman in Black—Too bad! I mean
of course too bad I spoke so. How much is that handkerchief?

Woman in Brown—That's my purchase, madam. I just picked it up to buy it. Please, young lady, sell me
this handkerchief.

Woman in Black—I spoke for it
first. How much is it?

Woman in Brown—How foolish! I had my finger on it when you spoke.

Girl at the Booth—The handkerchief
is not for sale, ladies. It is mine. I dropped it on the counter a moment
ago.

Woman in Blue—I'll take this blotter. When my husband comes he'll pay you for it. You know me; it will be all right. Evidently you aren't used to wrapping up packages.

Child—Toot! toot! toot! I'm a choochoo. Get out the way.

Mother—Isn't she the dearest thing!
I couldn't find what I wanted over at the other booth, so I'll take a calendar.
It wouldn't do to go away without anything, and I can give that to my laundress. Wrap it up carefully, so it will show that I bought something.

Manager of Bazaar—That's Mrs. Car-gyle over there. I'll try to shoo her over here. Make a sale if you can, for she's worth a million. Be careful,
now.

Woman in Green—Well, here I am
back again. I'll take seven of those sachets after all. They tell me that they cost five cents more downtown.

Young man—Good evening, Jean.
How are you getting on? You look tired to death. Aren't you going to let me take you home now?

Girl at the Booth—Oh, Jack, if you only would! This is positively my last appearance behind the counter.

RANK SMITH TO QUIT

"Piano Mover," Noted Pitcher, Eyes Restaurant.

Former Chicago White Sox Player Satisfied With Cincinnati Contract Loses Heart to Pittsburgh Cafe.

Frank Smith, the piano mover, former pitcher of the Chicago White Sox, has arrived home from a trip to Europe and says he probably will quit baseball for good to embark in the restaurant business. Smith has been dicker for a cafe in Pittsburgh and if he lands it says it is au revoir to the dear old game for all time, so far as he is concerned.

The Cincinnati club has returned Smith's contract for his signature, having accepted the big pitcher's terms. Smith says he intends to quit while his services are sought instead of waiting until he is kicked out. He believes, however, he could go along for a year or so longer for the Cincinnati team and that he would pitch good ball. The strenuous life of the diamond has lost its charm for the hefty piano mover, to hear him talk, and he longs for the quiet and independence of business life.

"Now, this is none of your holdout yarns, for this very day I received a contract from the Cincinnati club, which accepted my terms. This was the second contract I received from the club. The first one did not suit me and I returned it and told what I wanted. Today I got the document calling for my terms. But I will not return it until I find out where I can land the place of business I am seeking. And I want to tell you that conducting a cafe will be much easier than standing out there in the hot sun trying to foil hitters."

Frank Smith was one of the oldest members of the White Sox squad when he was traded to the Boston Red Sox in 1910 along with Billy Purtell.

Frank Smith.

for Harry Lord and Ambrose McConnell. That trade became famous in baseball history for its one-sidedness. Neither Smith nor Purtell was of any value to Boston, while Harry Lord is considered one of the greatest players in baseball, and McConnell would be nothing less than a wonder had he not met with misfortune in crippling him up.

Smith did valiant service for the White Sox in 1906, when he helped win the pennant in the American league. Like Joe McGinnity of the New York Giants at that time, Smith was considered an iron man. He could pitch every other day if necessary. With all his faults Smith had many friends among White Sox fans, who have a big place in their affections for the big fellow who at one time was one of their heroes.

O'Day Lauds Emslie. Veteran Umpire Bob Emslie, according to "Hank" O'Day, manager of the Cincinnati Reds, will be just as good a man behind the mask this year as any major league umpire. O'Day has worked with Emslie a great deal and is much amused over the reports that Emslie's eyes are bad and he may be pensioned by the National league.

"Say for me," said O'Day, "that when a man can shoot bluebirds like Bob he can umpire any game of baseball scheduled. I found him in Toronto recently wearing a diamond badge he had won in a shoot, as high gun. I saw him kill forty out of forty-five birds. This criticism of Emslie is on a par with a lot of stuff that I have had to stand during my long career as an umpire."

Hard Training Trip for Athletics. Connie Mack plans the most strenuous training trip of his career for the world's champions next spring. The Athletics will condition themselves at San Antonio, Tex., which, like Marlin, is a bath city. Mack will follow the policy of McGraw of the Giants. He will take his youngsters south about Feb. 23. The veterans will report on March 1.

Saginaw Leads in Attendance. Saginaw led the South Michigan league in attendance last season, with Lansing second and Kalamazoo third.

In Prison

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press)

"What's the matter, sir?" queried the old "trusty" who was sweeping out the warden's private office.

He asked the question of a young man who had come in from the corridor. The latter, like the trusty, wore a gray shirt—gray in Menlo prison is the badge of good behavior—though of slightly different cut. He was a personable chap, lithe, vigorous and erect, on this side of thirty. Now he breathed heavily, as if from recent exertion, his hair was rumpled, and from a cut beneath his right eye blood was flowing.

"The deputy warden hit me and I fell against the corner of the window ledge," he panted.

Neither noticed a young girl who had come to the door of the public office, and had heard the young man's answer.

Now her little hands were clenched; her expressive face wore a mingled look of pity and indignation. She came swiftly into the room.

"Pardon me, but did I hear you say the deputy warden struck you?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the young man, as he applied a handkerchief to his injury.

"And they say this is a model prison!" was her spirited comment. "I'd like your name and number—please, and a full description of the deputy's attack upon you."

"Why, ma'am?" queried the young man.

"I am my mother's private secretary. She is Mrs. Campbell Bannerman, chairman of the prison committee of the State Federation of Women's Clubs."

The young man's quiet humility changed to lively concern. "You mustn't, you know!" he cried. "That wouldn't do at all. Please don't mention a word of what I told you!"

"Why?" queried the girl.

"Oh, because I—" began the young man, and checked himself. He became the model prisoner again. "It might be better for me, ma'am," he said quietly.

"I understand. They would seek to revenge themselves if they knew you—told. But I want you to promise one thing, please."

"I'll promise you anything!" assured the young man.

"It's only this," she replied hastily, confused a bit by the look in his eyes. "If they ill-treat you again, write me at Eyedale—Ethel Bannerman."

She opened her bag, fumbled in a tiny pocketbook and produced a silver dollar.

"It's all the money I have here," timidly. "Mamma gave it to me for both of us. Please take it."

With a sudden impulse she offered her hand. He took it, gently, his warm palm met her own. She smiled faintly in farewell, but there were tears in her eyes.

"It was all wrong to deceive her that way," said the young man, to his own reflection in the mirror, when she had gone. "But I couldn't let her go and forget me. I had to get her interested. Now, I wonder if she'll forgive me when she finds out?"

"She's a good little girl, and a mighty sweet one, too. Why, she wanted to cry over my troubles." He paused for a moment, in glowing, boyish awe. "By Jove, I must see her again. Now to waylay Mrs. Bannerman."

He plunged into the making of a speedy toilet.

Two hours later the visit of the officers and prominent committee members of the state federation was over. The president, Mrs. Lucretia Lorne Hammond, rode back to the city in the same automobile with Mrs. Bannerman and her daughter.

"A visit to a prison is a saddening experience," remarked Mrs. Hammond, with the enunciation of the public speaker; "so many hopeless faces, so many broken hearts."

"I noticed one queer thing in there—and it's supposed to be a model institution. I met a young prisoner in the corridor with a bad cut on his face. He looked as if he'd been fighting. Do you suppose they still have corporal punishment here in spite of their denials?"

Ethel Bannerman leaned forward with eager, wide open eyes, her lips parted. Mrs. Bannerman smiled.

"Was he a tall young man with a gray shirt?"

"I believe he was," replied Mrs. Hammond.

"Handsomeness, brown-eyed?"

"I couldn't tell about his eyes; I suppose he might be called handsome," admitted Mrs. Hammond, austere.

"That isn't a prisoner. That's Gerald Primrose, a member of the prison board. He's here because there's a meeting of the board today. The governor appointed him because he's wealthy and can give his time and thought to prison problems. Warden Stone speaks very highly of him."

"He seems rather peculiar," commented Mrs. Hammond. "I think I saw him again, just as we were leaving. He had changed to his ordinary attire. He was holding a silver dollar in his hand, and looking at it like a miser. Why, he acted as though he wanted to eat it!"

"Ethel, you look as happy as a bride," she observed presently.

"I am happy," Ethel replied, with a sigh of content. "And this has been a delightful day!"

Something Had to Happen

If the Windlers' flat had been commensurate in size with the Windlers' popularity as evidenced by their wedding presents it would have been so big they never could have afforded to pay the rent.

It was an ideal flat for a family that was short on furniture and bric-a-brac, but it was a trial to people on whom their well meaning friends and relatives had showered ten times as much stuff as they could use up in the course of a normal lifetime. After nearly acquiring brain fever trying to dispose their possessions about the place without having their home look as though it was about to choke to death on a superfluity of furniture and miscellaneous wares they gave up and put three-quarters of their wedding gifts in the basement storeroom. Then their troubles began.

"Mercy!" Mrs. Windler cried one evening just before her aunt and uncle were due for dinner. "Jimmy, we'll have to get that carved oak hall chest up here before Aunt Cornelia arrives or she'll never forgive us! It cost a small fortune and she won't understand why—"

The rest of Mrs. Windler's remarks were irrevocably lost in the tumultuous rush of the Windlers to the basement.

Mrs. Windler's pale rose gown was soon hopelessly soiled and Windler's temper was ruined for the whole evening, to say nothing of his cuffs. The hall chest was barely thumped into place with the help of the subsidized janitor and the Windlers were still breathing hard when Aunt Cornelia and Uncle Jabez arrived. The former peered sharply at her gift.

"Seems to me you don't do much dusting of your things," she said, rubbing a finger across the chest and leaving a deep depression in the grime that had settled on it in the storeroom. "Seems to me you don't care much about my gift, Louise!" When Aunt Cornelia rebuked one in that tone the situation was serious.

After the visitors had departed the chest had to be lugged down to the basement again, because there was no other place for the bookcase.

The two large paintings were the worst. When Cousin John's folks were coming the Windlers hung up the picture of the Lombardy poplars and the sheep. Then they took it down when the Phillipses were due and put in its place the picture presented by the Phillipses showing the garden scene.

This worked all right until Sue Sanders, who could always be depended upon to say the wrong thing, burst out in the presence of all the Phillipses: "Oh, you've changed your picture! Why, you have a new one! What did you do with the cute one of the sheep and poplars that has always hung right here till now?"

That threw a coldness upon the Phillipses that never was eradicated.

"They acted," stormed Mrs. Windler helplessly after they were gone, "as though it was our fault that we didn't have five walls in this room instead of four! I hate their old picture, anyhow!"

The silver, however, created the most trouble, because there was so much of it.

However, they knew they were using the wrong teaspoons the night the Smiths dined with them by the peculiarly cold manner in which Mrs. Smith regarded the ones at her plate.

They realized that they had made the wrong selection in silver bread plates when Uncle Hiram pointedly inquired who had given them the plate that they preferred to his gift. He said he had hoped when he devoted a week to selecting it that he had picked out something they really would like. Altogether, the Windlers had a terrible time smoothing down Uncle Hiram. They thought it odd that the more money a relative had the more easily and deeply his feelings were injured.

When any of the girls gathered at her house in the afternoon for cards Mrs. Windler nearly lost her mind. If she used Sadie's tea cloth instead of Amy's when Amy was present the latter was so hurt that it was painful, and if Angeline didn't see her cut glass vase anywhere about her eyebrows speedily announced the fact.

"It isn't a home!" Mrs. Windler wailed one night. "It's the inside of a kaleidoscope! I'm so nervous for fear I'll get the wrong thing out when the right person comes—or for fear two of 'em'll land here together and pull each other's hair because one's gift is on view and the other's isn't that I'm a total wreck, Jimmy!"

"Cheer up!" said the baggard Jimmy, who was hastily changing a bronze head for a Barye lion, the Gettlers being due that evening. "It can't go on forever—something'll happen!"

It did. The building burned down while the Windlers were at the theater and they returned to ashes, glowing embers and complete desolation. "All your lovely things, Mrs. Windler!" one of the neighbors mourned. "All your perfectly lo-o-vely wedding presents gone! I don't see how you bear the blow so bravely!"

"Well," said Mrs. Windler, struggling heroically to conceal her happiness. "It is wrong to give way to one's feelings and, besides, there are always compensations in everything."—Chicago Daily News.

TUDORS' WORK GOOD

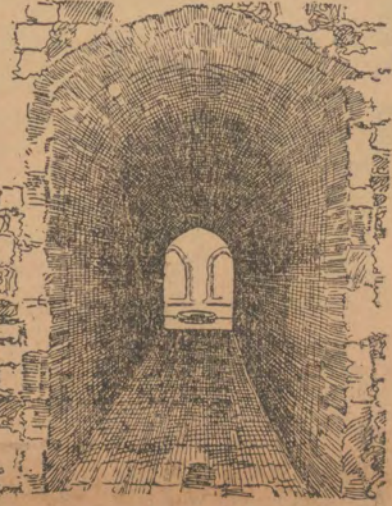

Tunnels Built Centuries Ago Are Still in Existence.

Newly Discovered Underground Workings Built by Order of Cardinal Wolsey Are Found to Be in Perfect Condition.

That the Tudors were the best plumbers in the world is attested by the fact that a tunnel built four centuries ago by Cardinal Wolsey and through which water was conveyed from a spring by means of lead pipes is still in existence. It is not only in existence, but is in practically as good condition as when it was first constructed. What good building this means may be understood when it is noted that directly over the tunnel huge trees are growing—one of them with at least five tons of timber in it—but neither their roots nor their weight have made any impression at all upon its walls.

Not so eternal have been the means whereby Wolsey had the water conveyed from Kingston hill to Hampton court. After it had made its way through a succession of wells and reservoirs, which still retain the old lead and stone, the water was taken down the hill in broad lead pipes and so on to Hampton. But, alas! it could not be protected from rapacious hands after it had served the great cardinal's purpose, for lead has a value for other and more harmful things than the conveyance of spring water. So as soon as Hampton court ceased to depend for its drinking water upon the cardinal's spring people began to lay sacrilegious hands on the pipes. A considerable amount of the lead was, it is believed, melted down for ammunition during the civil war. The rest has been pilfered from time to time for various purposes, and some of it is said even now to be lying at the bottom of the Thames.

Both the old buildings and the spring itself are still almost as they were when the cardinal had completed his work of carrying the water in leaden pipes all the way from the top of Kingston hill to his new home. Hitherto few people save the personal friends of the present owner have known of the existence of these remnants of the great man's enterprise, but a wonderful glimpse into the past is to be obtained by any one privileged to open the fastshut door of the tunnel and descend into the subterranean wonderland.

Lacked His Trick Bible.

New York.—How he fooled a jury and won his freedom with the aid of a Bible was told by George McAllister, eighteen years old, in general sessions, where he was arraigned before Judge Rosalsky for the second time in three months on the charge of burglary.

McAllister was tried last September, and as he ascended the witness stand in his own defense at that time he took a Bible from his pocket and asked that he might be sworn upon it, and not upon the court Bible. "Because it was given to me by mother, and she lived up to what it contains," he explained.

McAllister denied the charge of burglary, and the jury acquitted him. When McAllister again was arraigned, Assistant District Attorney Delehanty recognized him and asked: "Got your Bible with you today?" "Nope," replied McAllister. "I got me right this time, I plead guilty." He was remanded for sentence.

Yale Gets Three-Eyed Reptile.
New Haven, Conn.—Henry D. Baker, Yale, 1896, American consul in Hobart, Tasmania, who already has sent several collections to the Yale university museum, has added another collection of birds and reptiles almost entirely extinct on the globe. The collection was gathered in New Zealand. It includes a specimen of a wingless bird called the kiwi and of a reptile of the lizard type called a tuatara, remarkable as having a rudimentary third eye.

The museum soon is to mount a part of a dinosaur discovered by Prof. O. C. Marsh, and representing a reptile, which in life was probably 100 feet long. The fossil is much larger than corresponding parts of a dinosaur already partly mounted, which was sixty-seven feet long.

Starred Her in the Face.

Chicago.—"That waist just seemed to stare up at me from the counter and beg me to take it along." This was the only explanation given the police by Mrs. Emma Drolette, when arrested for shoplifting.

AID FOR THE FIRE VICTIMS.

An appeal having been made for aid for the Fire Victims of Saturday, March 2, we have decided to do our share towards assisting these 3 families who lost their homes. Our plan is as follows: With every purchase made we will give coupons, or votes, redeemable in merchandise at our store, these coupons or votes are worth 5 per cent of the gross sale, and the purchaser may deliver same to either of the three families, and to the one receiving the largest number of votes we will in addition to the 5 per cent give $50 in merchandise. Remember, each family is aided 5 per cent of your purchases, and the one receiving the largest amount, in addition receives the $50.

FRANK SMITH TO QUIT

Piano Mover," Noted Pitcher, Eyes Restaurant.Former Chicago White Sox Player
Satisfied With Cincinnati Contract
Loses Heart to Pittsburgh
Cafe.

Frank Smith, the piano mover, former pitcher of the Chicago White Sox, has arrived home from a trip to Europe and says he probably will quit baseball for good to embark in the restaurant business. Smith has been dicker for a cafe in Pittsburgh and if he lands it says it is an avowal to the dear old game for all time, so far as he is concerned.

The Cincinnati club has returned Smith's contract for his signature, having accepted the big pitcher's terms. Smith says he intends to quit while his services are sought instead of waiting until he is kicked out. He believes, however, he could go along for a year or so longer for the Cincinnati team and that he would pitch good ball. The strenuous life of the diamond has lost its charm for the hefty piano mover, to hear him talk, and he longs for the quiet and independence of business life.

"Now, this is none of your holdout yarns, for this very day I received a contract from the Cincinnati club, which accepted my terms. This was the second contract I received from the club. The first one did not suit me and I returned it and told what I wanted. Today I got the document calling for my terms. But I will not return it until I find out where I can land the place of business I am seeking. And I want to tell you that conducting a cafe will be much easier than standing out there in the hot sun trying to foil hitters."

Frank Smith was one of the oldest members of the White Sox squad when he was traded to the Boston Red Sox in 1910 along with Billy Purcell.

Frank Smith.

for Harry Lord and Ambrose McConnell. That trade became famous in baseball history for its one-sidedness. Neither Smith nor Purcell was of any value to Boston, while Harry Lord is considered one of the greatest players in baseball, and McConnell would be nothing less than a wonder had he not met with misfortune in crippling him up.

Smith did valiant service for the White Sox in 1906, when he helped win the pennant in the American league. Like Joe McGinnity of the New York Giants at that time, Smith was considered an iron man. He could pitch every other day if necessary. With all his faults Smith had many friends among White Sox fans, who have a big place in their affections for the big fellow who at one time was one of their heroes.

O'Day Lauds Emslie.

Veteran Umpire Bob Emslie, according to "Hank" O'Day, manager of the Cincinnati Reds, will be just as good a man behind the mask this year as any major league umpire. O'Day has worked with Emslie a great deal and is much amused over the reports that Emslie's eyes are bad and he may be pensioned by the National league.

"Say for me," said O'Day, "that when a man can shoot blue rocks like Bob he can umpire any game of baseball scheduled. I found him in Toronto recently wearing a diamond badge he had won in a shoot, as high gun. I saw him kill forty out of forty-five birds. This criticism of Emslie is on a par with a lot of stuff that I have had to stand during my long career as an umpire."

Hard Training Trip for Athletics.

Connie Mack plans the most strenuous training trip of his career for the world's champions next spring. The Athletics will condition themselves at San Antonio, Tex., which, like Marlin, is a bath city. Mack will follow the policy of McGraw of the Giants. He will take his youngsters south about Feb. 22. The veterans will report on March 1.

Saginaw Leads in Attendance.

Saginaw led the South Michigan league in attendance last season, with Lansing second and Kalamazoo third.

In Prison

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press)

"What's the matter, sir?" queried the old "trusty" who was sweeping out the warden's private office.

He asked the question of a young man who had come in from the corridor. The latter, like the trusty, wore a gray shirt—gray in Menlo prison is the badge of good behavior—though of slightly different cut. He was a personable chap, lithic, vigorous and erect, on this side of thirty. Now he breathed heavily, as if from recent exertion, his hair was rumpled, and from a cut beneath his right eye blood was flowing.

"The deputy warden hit me and I fell against the corner of the window ledge," he panted.

Neither noticed a young girl who had come to the door of the public office, and had heard the young man's answer.

Now her little hands were clenched; her expressive face wore a mingled look of pity and indignation. She came swiftly into the room.

"Pardon me, but did I hear you say the deputy warden struck you?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the young man, as he applied a handkerchief to his injury.

"And they say this is a model prison!" was her spirited comment.

"I'd like your name and number—please, and a full description of the deputy's attack upon you."

"Why, ma'am?" queried the young man.

"I am my mother's private secretary. She is Mrs. Campbell Bannerman, chairman of the prison committee of the State Federation of Women's Clubs."

The young man's quiet humility changed to lively concern. "You mustn't, you know!" he cried. "That wouldn't do at all. Please don't mention a word of what I told you!"

"Why?" queried the girl.

"Oh, because I—" began the young man, and checked himself. He became the model prisoner again. "It might be better for me, ma'am," he said quietly.

"I understand. They would seek to revenge themselves if they knew you told. But I want you to promise one thing, please."

"I'll promise you anything!" assured the young man.

"It's only this," she replied hastily, confused a bit by the look in his eyes. "If they ill-treat you again, write me at Eyredale—Ethel Bannerman."

She opened her bag, fumbled in a tiny pocketbook and produced a silver dollar.

"It's all the money I have here," timidly. "Mamma said enough for both of us. Please take it."

With a sudden impulse she offered her hand. He took it, gently, his warm palm met her own. She smiled faintly in farewell, but there were tears in her eyes.

"It was all wrong to deceive her that way," said the young man, to his own reflection in the mirror, when she had gone. "But I couldn't let her go and forget me. I had to get her interested. Now, I wonder if she'll forgive me when she finds out?"

"She's a good little girl, and a mighty sweet one, too. Why, she wanted to cry over my troubles." He paused for a moment, in glowing, boyish awe. "By Jove, I must see her again. Now to waylay Mrs. Bannerman!" He plunged into the making of a speedy toilet.

Two hours later the visit of the officers and prominent committee members of the state federation was over. The president, Mrs. Lucretia Lorne Hammond, rode back to the city in the same automobile with Mrs. Bannerman and her daughter.

"I noticed one queer thing in there—and it's supposed to be a model institution. I met a young prisoner in the corridor with a bad cut on his face. He looked as if he'd been fighting. Do you suppose they still have corporal punishment here in spite of their denials?"

Ethel Bannerman leaned forward with eager, wide open eyes, her lips parted. Mrs. Bannerman smiled.

"Was he a tall young man with a gray shirt?"

"I believe he was," replied Mrs. Hammond.

"Handsome; brown-eyed?"

"I couldn't tell about his eyes; I suppose he might be called handsome," admitted Mrs. Hammond, absently.

"That isn't a prisoner. That's Gerald Primrose, a member of the prison board. He's here because there's a meeting of the board today. The governor appointed him because he's wealthy and can give his time and thought to prison problems. Warden Stone speaks very highly of him."

"He seems rather peculiar," commented Mrs. Hammond. "I think I saw him again, just as we were leaving. He had changed to his ordinary attire. He was holding a silver dollar in his hand, and looking at it like a miser. Why, he acted as though he wanted to eat it!"

"Ethel, you look as happy as a bride," she observed presently.

"I am happy," Ethel replied, with a sigh of content. "And this has been a delightful day!"

Why

Wonderhose?

There are many reasons
why no other name describes them. For years people have paid fifty cents or more for hose that wore out in a day or a week.

Now, for twenty-five cents (four pairs in a box for a dollar) they get a stocking equally as slightly that wears four months and longer without darning in heel, toe or sole.

Fifty Cents Per Bottle,

At

KEY WEST DRUG CO.

At the Church Bazaar

Woman in Brown—How much are
these dust caps?

Girl at the Booth—Forty-five cents,
madam.

Woman in Brown—For goodness'
sake! Mame, did you hear that? Why,
that's the cheapest sort of stuff, and
so easy to make!

Mame—Why, my sister makes them
by the dozen.

Girl at the Booth—They cost me 35
cents apiece just for the goods. I didn't count anything for my time.

Woman in Brown—Oh, did you make them? Well, I suppose it does seem like hard work if you're not used to sewing. Come on, Mame, let's go over to the doll section.

Woman in Green—What are these
things?

Girl at the Booth—Clothespin dolls.
They are for children.

Woman in Green—They ought to be at the doll counter. Why aren't they
in the doll booth, I wonder?

Girl at the Booth—They haven't
room for them over there, so they sent them here. They sell for 20 cents.

Woman in Green—Twenty cents!
For mercy sake! Anybody can make them. Why, they're only clothespins!
The ideal!

Girl at the Booth—The hair is made
of darning cotton and it takes a
whole morning to make one.

Woman in Green—I'd give you ten
cents for one. Are these things sach-ets? Are they all pink? Why haven't you some yellow ones? I don't care
for pink.

Girl at the Booth—Whoever sent
them in did not make yellow ones.

Woman in Green—They have them
just like that down town. I think I'll buy down town. Which is the candy
booth?

Child—Oh, mamma, lookit! Ain't these dolls cunning?

Mother—Yes, yes; be still, child.
What do you ask for that big picture
over there? The one with the woman
and the little boy?

Girl at the Booth—That was donated by an art store. It was priced at $3.50. Isn't it pretty?

Mother—Rather. I'd prefer a life
scene, though. Haven't you any fruit
pictures?

Girl at the Booth—That's all we have. Would you like one of those calendars, Mrs. Drake?

Mrs. Drake—Oh, how do you do? Are you helping out? Do you like the work? Well, I suppose you wouldn't do it if you didn't like it. How much
are the calendars?

Girl at the Booth—Fifteen cents.
Shall I wrap it up?

Mrs. Drake—Dear, no. I don't know that I want it. Fifteen cents is so high. Why, those calendars are only tinted, and everybody does tinting
nowadays.

Girl at the Booth—The calendars
cost me ten cents uncolored.

Mrs. Drake—Oh, did you do them?
Well, they aren't bad for tinting. What
on earth is that child doing? Gracious,
go away!

Mother—I regret the annoyance my child seems to be causing you. She
is very small, and does not understand.
She is just trying to get under the
booth, that's all.

Mrs. Drake—Oh, is that all? I don't think I shall buy just now. I'll wait
till my husband comes and see what he wants. He's coming soon. I'll just look around.

Child—Honk, honk! Get out of the way! I'm an automobile.

Woman in Black—Dear, dear. Why
do they allow children to act like that?
Don't you think they ought to keep
such children at home?

Mother—Scarcely. That's my child,
madam.

Woman in Black—Too bad! I mean
of course too bad I spoke so. How much is that handkerchief?

Woman in Brown—That's my purchase, madam. I just picked it up to buy it. Please, young lady, sell me
this handkerchief.

Woman in Black—I spoke for it
first. How much is it?

Woman in Brown—How foolish! I
had my finger on it when you spoke.

Girl at the Booth—The handkerchief
is not for sale, ladies. It is mine. I dropped it on the counter a moment
ago.

Woman in Blue—I'll take this blotter. When my husband comes he'll pay you for it. You know me; it will be all right. Evidently you aren't used
to wrapping up packages.

Child—Toot! toot! toot! I'm a choo-
choo. Get out the way.

Mother—Isn't she the dearest thing!
I couldn't find what I wanted over at
the other booth, so I'll take a calendar.
It wouldn't do to go away without anything, and I can give that to my laun-
dress. Wrap it up carefully, so it will show that I bought something.

Manager of Bazaar—That's Mrs. Caryle over there. I'll try to shoo her over here. Make a sale if you can, for she's worth a million. Be careful,
now.

Woman in Green—Well, here I am
back again. I'll take seven of those sachets after all. They tell me that they cost five cents more downtown.

Young man—Good evening, Jean.
How are you getting on? You look dread to death. Aren't you going to let me take you home now?

Girl at the Booth—Oh, Jack, if you
only would! This is positively my last appearance behind the counter.
