A History of Sleij Grange

Mildred Pilchard '37

A History of Flej Grange

Naturally I was quite happy when my teachers informed me I was to be awarded the Old Home Prize. Not being especially adapted to written composition, it was with some hesitancy I undertook to fulfill a requirement - that of writing an essay on some topic pertaining to the Eastern Shore. At first I found myself in a quandary - What should I write on? What could I write on? Finally the thought dawned upon me - Why not inquire and investigate more about my home community, a section of Worcester, now more or less dormant, yet we are told was once a thriving industrial community filled with its accompanying social activities. With this objective in mind, I began to search from such material as I found available - and inquire from older persons now residing in my community some of the past of Flej Grange. My findings are interesting to me, and I as a resident am proud of my community's past. With your kind indulgence, I shall read to you the result of my investigation concerning the part of Kley Grange and I hope you may be interested in hearing them.

Kley Grange, a village about four miles from Stackton, is situated in the apex of a triangle having as its base a line drawn from Snow Hill to Paramoche City. It is on the east side of the state road between these two towns in the heart of a large farming community that stretches from Paramoche to the waters of the Linepulent Bay on the Atlantic Coast.

In the early 1800's the most prominent residents were the Lundeays. Mr. Mathias Lunday owned many farms and slaves. One of these slaves looked with longing eyes at the many jars of honey and preserves kept in one of the little shacks on the estate. As the slaves were never given such delicacies he decided to steal some. So he had a key made to the little shack. For several nights he was successful in stealthily carrying away to his fellow slaves many quarts of preserves. But finally he was caught and punished.

In 1879, Mr. Joseph Bessel from Philadelphia bought from Mr. Lindsay several farms. Because of the charm and hospitality of the people and his vision of a thriving colony, he induced several families in Philadelphia to come here and make their homes. In this way he also hoped to give employment to these new settlers. He built and furnished their homes and gave them rent and firewood and all necessities free for one year.

As the Lindsay family has been one of the most influential, this little village had been called Lindsayville, a name which clung to it for several years. It also went by such humorous names as Scratch Gravel, Tuptown, and Turkey Trap. But to Mr. Bessel none of these names seemed just appropriate. So he called a meeting and asked those present to suggest some names for this new settlement. The result was Pine Park, Dressel's Crossroads, Dresselton, and some of the older residents still adhered to the former name of Lindsayville. As they could not reach any definite decision Mr. Alexander Brown made the suggestion that they follow the Indian custom of forming a new word by combining the initial letter of several words. As Mr. Dressel's daughters names were Kathryn, Louise, Elizabeth, and Jane, the first letters form the word "Klej" to which was added Grange. In this unusual manner Klej Grange which indeed sounds romantic enough was accepted, a name that the village still bears today.

At first there was not sufficient work for the new settlers, but Mr. Dressel succeeded in persuading Mr. Alexander Brown, a well known resident of Snow Hill to move his cotton and woolen factory from Snow Hill to Klej Grange. Mr. Brown agreed to this after Mr. Dressel had guaranteed enough people to work in the factory.

The factory gave employment not only to residents of Flej Grange proper but also to many who had their headquarters at Sandy Hill, which we all know now as Stockton. In this little town there was a well known hotel which had the reputation of being one of the best on the Eastern Shore. There were also several stores in Stockton liquor could be found in great abundance, but Mr. Dressel allowed no liquor to flow in Flej Grange.

One would naturally suppose that such a progressive citizen as Mr. Dressel would have chosen either Pocomoke City or Snow Hill for his new settlement. But even at this early time there was manifested such a spirit of rivalry between Snow Hill, the county seat, and Pocomoke, the industrial center, that he selected for his colony a site in the pines, seven miles from either of these towns.

Here, several buildings were constructed: a school house, undertaker's shop, hotel, and a town hall. The town hall, now owned by Mrs. Harry C. Lewis, is still standing. The building was divided into different sections: the upstairs was used for community gatherings; the downstairs for a store and a postoffice. Later the postoffice was moved to the little shack formerly owned by Mr. Lindsay which now belongs to the Methodist Church.

Mr. John Mitchell, the postmaster, carried the mail from Sleij Grange to Snow Hill. One day some boys played a trick on Mr. Mitchell, as they noticed he had been drinking more than he should. When he arrived at the stage in Sleij Grange, he put his mail bag down by the porch and went inside for a few minutes. The boys quickly took the mail out of the bag and put a horse collar into it. Unknowingly Mr. Mitchell went on to Snow Hill, and gave the postmaster there the mail bag. When the latter opened it, what should

He find but the horse collar! Immediately Mr. Mitchell realized the fraud that had been played upon him. So he rushed back to Flej Grange, got his mail, and took it back to Snow Hill. After this episode we can imagine that he was more careful thereafter where he left his mail bag.

During this period there was a very old Protestant Episcopal Church at Flej Grange. The rector of this church, Mr. Curtis, preached here and also walked to Stockton to hold services in Holy Cross Chapel. For a long time after the main part of the building was lying in ruins, the chancel could still be seen standing in the midst of a thicket of locusts and thorns. Now the only evidence of a place of worship is the old church yard with its moss grown tomb stones. Almost all of these tombs have dates belonging to the Civil War Period. Among them, we find such names as Lindsay, Bishop, and Payne. Mr. Warren Burgh, the first Methodist ministers held a revival in the Snow hall before the Methodist Church was completed in 1891.

One draw back to this new colony
was the poor means of transportation, so Mr. Drexel planned to build a canal to Mattapani on the Sacombe River.
The canal was started and a warehouse which is now used as a barn. The colonists soon realized that the project would be impossible. The Grange, then, of course began to run down. After the factory had been in operation about three years, it was removed to Snow Hill, where it was used as a whip factory.

Within a few years a Realty Company consisting of Messrs. Zed C. Lewis, Oscar Furnell, Samuel Price, John Mason, and Charlie Slackley, bought almost all of the Drexel property. There were a few men who bought from Mr. Drexel, for instance, Mr. O. B. Jones. Several steam mills were put up which went by the names of C. Lander, Bennett, Kelly, and Fague, but none of these are in operation now.

The other individual farms were later bought from the Realty Company. Mr. Harry C. Lewis bought two of these large farms with other woodland. Work was provided for many people in Flej Grange as Mr. C. Lewis had a large saw mill built which ran for many years. He also kept a store in the building that was once the town hall, store, and post office combined. Mr. Martin Redden and Mr. Alfred Strickland also bought part of the Axel property.

After the death of Mr. Harry C. Lewis in 1928, one of the most progressive citizens in Flej Grange, the store was closed and almost all the property was sold. Since then it has remained practically the same.

Although Flej Grange is no longer a thriving industrial center, we can look back with pride upon the efforts of the pioneers of this section of the Eastern Shore. By these few and rather rambling remarks, I hope that I have been able to make relise for you the Hey Gauge of the past.

Old Homes In Worchester County

Someone once said, "The English were rather slow in coming in upon the scene, but when they came it was to stay." This fact is impressed upon me by the charm of the homes on the Eastern Shore. In all the homes visited there seemed to be such an inviting manner that one couldn't help noticing. In these old homes there are priceless mementos of other days cherished by those who live in these interesting homes. Although members of the family have lived in other sections of the country, there seems to be something calling them to seek the renewal of the life of their forefathers. As one visits these charming homes, the large old trees and the beautiful gardens give evidence of their age. Many of the gardens are overgrown with ivy and boxwood brought from England. As one enters a typical home, one sees the low ceilings, thick walls, Old mantels, fireplaces, closets to hold wood and wide doors. All of these picturesque homes are located near the sea.

In the town of Berlin is Burley Cottage, which was built by Jones and Adkins in 1834 for Captian John Selby Furness. Burley Cottage, modeled after a Louisanna home, has its bricks peculiarly laid, for each fifth row of bricks is of ends rather than sides. The pride in the construction is shown by two bricks bearing the date and name of the builders.

What was once a large formal boxwood garden, is now overgrown. As one enters the house one sees a spacious hall. In all of the rooms downstairs there are fireplaces. In one room there is an old bookcase seven feet tall that fits in between the fireplace and the wall. Captain Purnell ordered this to be made by a cabinet maker, James Wise. One can still see a large piano which was given to Nancy Purnell as a graduation present about seventy years ago. The mantels are very huge, high and hand carved and supported by double pedestals. The wall paper is of a red velvet background with white oak leaves outlined and traced in gilt. Another old-fashioned characteristic of this room is in it's very high ceilings. More charm is added by the many paned windows wnder which is deep panelling. Leading from the hall there is a large glass door where one enters the back yard. The lawn boasts of many fruit trees, Magnolia, hemlock and sycamore. On the side of the house there are twin chimneys and the entrance to the cellar where the servants once cooked. On the northeast side of the house is beautiful old English Ivy which partly covers the roof. None but the family has ever lived here. Only one child has ever been born here. This old home opposite the schoolhouse, Burley Inn, was built on the tract once called Burley Ira.

Just beyond the intersection of Nassawango Creek is the county seat of Worcester, Snow Hill, one of the most interesting and picturesque towns of the Eastern Shore. Some fine old Colonial houses are to be found here.

One of these is "Ingleside" built in 1775 by Robert Morris, registrar of wills in Worcester County. Judge William Whittington, the maternal grandfather of former United States Senator John Walter Smith, owned "Ingleside." estate. The property was later occupied for some years by his son-in-law, Judge William Tingle. "Ingleside" is now owned by Mrs. Eugene Riggin, of Los Angeles, California.

Not far from Dividing Creek, on the east bank of the Pocomoke River, is "Beverly" the old Colonial homestead of the Dennis family. The tract of land on which "Beverly" is located was patented in 1669 under the name of "Thrum Capped" to Donnock Dennis, who was the first settler of that name in Maryland. Donnach Dennis lived on Dividing Creek in Somerset county, on "Donnoch First and Second Purchases," and his son John inherited the "Beverly" or "Thrum Capped" tract and lived there. He built the first dwelling house which was of brick.

The present house stands on a site which, until recently subdivided, consisted of one thousand and seven hundred acres. The present house was commenced in 1774 by Littleton Dennis, a lawyer, but he dies in the same year, so it was completed by his widow, Susanna (Upshur) Dennis. Both of these, with many others of their family, are buried in the family burying ground near the house.

The house facing east is of the large, old English style of brick. The porch on the side overlooking the Pocomoke River is of wrought iron, fashioned by hand, and the circle in the arch was formerly the receptacle for a large iron lamp. This served as a beacon light for miles up and down the Pocomoke River, which, in the absence of good roads, furnished the only easy means of communications.

The first floor rooms are all wainscoted in whole or in part, with panels beautifully designed, and all of hand work. In every room there is a fireplace on each side of which are closets in the wall, presumably built to hold firewood. The walls are very thick allowing room for deep window seats. The framing and timbers hewn out of solid wood are still in perfect condition. The boards used in construction were sawed from the log by hand.

For years and years the property remained in the Dennis family, passing through successive generations by will or inheritance from the original patentee. Although this property does not belong to the Dennis family now, one will always associate this old Maryland name with "Beverly".

As one goes farther south, we come to the town of Stockton. The Miles House, lying east of the center of the town, is the oldest one in the town. This house was owned by John Rowley. Dr. L. Collins was the next owner of the home. Later it was bought and kept by Captain Levin Houston until it came into the possession of A.S. Bromley. It is now the home of Mr. Maurice Hancock.

The house now standing is practically the same as the original one. There are low ceilings, wide doors and small windows with tiny panes. None of the rooms is very large, but a spacious hall helps to bring the rooms closer together.

Thus, we Worcester Countians can indeed feel proud of these old homes whose very atmosphere permeates charm and good old Southern Hospitality. We, indeed, can agree with Mr. Percy G. Skirven when he writes, "Tis truly an ideal home land, and the love of home has been and now is the basis of the patriotism that has made the influence of the Eastern Shore felt throughout the length and breadth of America."
