Bauman Asks Change In Rail Bill For Delmarva

In his continuing efforts to increase rail service for the citizens living on the Delmarva Peninsula, Representative Bob Bauman (R-1st) testified last week before the House Subcommittee on Transportation and Commerce which held hearings on the Rail Amendments of 1976.

Rep. Bauman requested the Committee's consideration of legislation he introduced, H.R. 12758, which amends the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973. Rep. Bauman's bill establishes a collective bargining procedure to assure that there is no recurrence of the recent breakdown in negotiations which involved Southern Railway and rail unions over the purchase of the bankrupt Penn Central rail lines. It is intended to reform present law to attract Southern Railway or other interested parties in the hope of reopening negotiations to purchase the Delmarva lines from Conrail. The Bauman bill is co-sponsored by Representatives duPont of Delaware and Downing of Virginia.

Rep. Bauman also revealed to the subcommittee members that he had been in touch with top officials of Southern Railway and they expressed interest in reopening negotiations for the Delmarva purchase if the law is changed so as to prevent labor union vetoes.

Said Congressman Bauman, "We cannot afford a recurrence of the recent tragedy when a single rail union arbitrarily prevented the purchase of the Delmarva lines at the expense of the jobs and economy of 3/4 of a million people. We must keep the door open for Delmarva. We must change the law in order to assure the success of future rail negotiations, and my legislation was written for this purpose. Too often in these rail discussions it is overlooked or forgotten that the rail lines on Delmarva do not only constitute a business for some, but a service for many. We must do what is necessary to see the revitalization of extensive, efficient rail service for Maryland citizens who are dependent on this form of transportation."

A rock band performance will wind up the evening's activities.

Dr. Offers Repayment Of $8000

Worcester County commissioners will seek the repayment of $8,000 from Dr. Gerald Sterner for educational loans made to him during the past four years.

The loans, part of the county's medical scholarship program, were made on the basis that the student commit himself to work in the county as a general practitioner for five years after his graduation.

Sterner recently decided to take a job as director of the Calvert-Arundel Medical Facility in Anne Arundel County.

In his letter to the scholarship committee dated May 14, Sterner said "it is with great regret" after extensive review of his own career plans that he decided not to return to the county to practice medicine.

"It's not that Worcester County doesn't need more and new physicians, there are several areas which are greatly in need," Sterner said in his letter. "But after extensive review of the situation I decided the existing medical atmosphere in the county is simply not conducive to attracting a new physician to practice there," he added.

Sterner offered to repay the loan and meet with the committee and to elaborate on his feelings of the medical attractiveness of the county.

Reese Cropper, secretary of the scholarship committee, was present at Tuesday morning's commissioner

This and That

"Pickles"

by Mary Coleburn

Last week I wrote about the "world's finest car" which probably interested the men readers but here is something especially for the ladies - a delicious bread and butter pickle recipe. I was in the grocery store buying materials for making these pickles and several people asked for the recipe right then. Virginia Powell, bless her, helped me pick the cucumbers. They were the pickling variety and really pricked our hands with those little spurs they have on them but the end result was well worth it. Here's the recipe and it makes a little over 6 pints. Scrub and thinly slice 4 qts. cukes and 6 medium onions. Cover with water, ice cubes and 1/3 cup salt. Mix thoroughly and let stand 3 hours. In a large pot mix 5 cups sugar, 1 1/2 teaspoons tumeric, 1 1/2 teaspoons celery seed and 2 tablespoons mustard seed. Mix well- then add 3 cups cider vinegar. Heat this mixture to a boil. Drain cukes and onions and add to vinegar mixture, stirring carefully. Heat thoroughly. Seal in hot sterile jars.

While on the subject of recipes, I do not want to give you one for a delicious summer dessert-very little trouble and so good. It's called "Frozen Fruit Dessert". Mix until smooth 3 oz. cream cheese softened,

State Department concerning what Russia is doing, what Red China is doing and how terrible it is what Cuba is doing. But, there are problems in our own backyard of such urgency that if we don't solve these, and promptly, it's not going to matter what happens in Indochina or in Africa or in Russia! "We the people" are aware that every Communist on earth could drop dead tonight and by morning the survival of our nation would be threatened by home grown radicals, home grown freeloaders, by home grown spoiled brats, by home grown hotheads, by home grown killers! We want our Nation's leadership to give us back our own streets and sidewalks, give us back a promise we can trust, a flag we can salute and a dollar we can bite." He thinks we, the voters, will get this message over to Washington, D.C. this year.

Don't forget all the celebration going on in Pocomoke beginning this week. Dress up in your Bi-Cen costume or wear something Red, White, and Blue but do come out and participate in our part of the 1976 celebration. Our hand bell choir will play at the Cypress Festival on Friday, July 9. We're doing pretty good and are sure to improve as time goes by. We owe a debt of gratitude first inventor to pioneer Solar Propulsion and Solar Airships. He designed, built and launched flying models of this basic invention during the 1960's without publicity, and was later granted a basic patent on the original and first five species of Flying Solarthermic Airships. The first model he flew in Worcester County flew so well it got away completely and was never found. That inflatable airship was proven to be the first craft ever lifted and made to fly by Sun energy in the State of Maryland or anywhere east of the Mississippi River. He did fly some or launch some that flew in the mid-west at an earlier date. Solar Airships at this time are difficult to control in flight and are intended for use as attention getters or for amusement purposes and as a means of advertising other products. Smith's Solar Airships are far more efficient, easier to control and much less bulky than any which were later designed by University enthusiasts, and the American Balloon Association. A free-flight Solar Balloon has recently reached an altitude of 70,000 feet.

Group Plans To Send Out Letters

The Pocomoke City Health Service Co-ordinating Committee will send out letters to placement centers, colleges and medical centers as a move in its attempt to secure additional physicians for this area.

This was decided at the meeting of the Committee on Wednesday afternoon.

The letter tells of the shortage of physicians in Pocomoke and the assets which the town has to offer physicians and their families.

It tells of the municipal services and the low tax rate as well as the recreational facilities that are available in the area.

Also mentioned are the school system, entertainment and the churches.

Worcester County 200 Years Ago

EDITOR'S NOTE—The following account of Worcester County during the Revolutionary War Years was compiled by Dr. Millard Les Callette. The writer, a professor of history at Salisbury State College, is co-authoring the first book to be published on the history of Worcester County with Dr. Reginald Truitt, a resident of Kent County. The project is sponsored by the Worcester County Historical Society and the book will hopefully be ready for publication in December. The historical account which follows is not excerpted from the book, but only summarizes some of the county's history 200 years ago so our readers can learn what Worcester County was like around the time of the birth of our nation. The project sponsored by the historical society, when completed, will be much more extensive in its depth and treatment of the county's history from its earliest origins.

By DR. MILLARD LES DALLETTE

Worcester County, with an area of five hundred and eighty-seven square miles, is the only county in Maryland that borders on the Atlantic Ocean. From 1669 on many changes occurred in the boundary lines of the county, occasionally enlarging them but unfortunately generally reducing its size.

In June 1776, Virginia drew up a new constitution simultaneously indicating that she would renounce all claims to land in conflict with the Maryland Charter. In 1785 a mixed commission of Maryland-Virginia citizens assembled at Mount Vernon and drew up the Compact of 1785 which secured the boundary for the next succeeding hundred years.

In this period the agricultural scene was dominated by tobacco, prized by the planters for its innate qualities as well as its use as a medium of exchange until the American Revolution at which time trade was brought almost to a standstill. There followed a depression which lasted until after the War of 1812. Other popular but less valuable crops in the area included hemp, flax and silk.

Farmers were plagued by many problems and those of Worcester were no exception. Disease and insects have always plagued farmers. One such insect was "The Fly" or "Hessian Fly" which caused rust injury to wheat. This insect was assumed to have been brought to this county from Hesse, Germany, by the mercenary troops who fought for the British during the Revolutionary War.

Industrially shipbuilding on the Pocomoke River not only offered employment for young men but provided several ships which served in the Revolution. The schooner "Susannah," built by Littleton Dennis and commanded by Captain Zedachiah Whaley, and the schooner "Liberty," owned by John Harmonson were armed and served the Patriots' cause. Other vessels registered in Worcester County prior to the Revolution were the ships "Ryder," "Garland" and "Virgin."

Some industries were dependent on water mills which provided the power necessary for grinding corn, wheat and other grain and the cutting of lumber. At the time of the American Revolution there were a number of these mills serving Worcester County. Bishops Mill, which began operation early in the 1700's was located at the head of St. Martins River and was both a lumber and grist mill. Duffey Mill, also known as Old Mill, was built in the 1700's and was constructed about two miles east of Snow Hill on Route 113, and owned by early settlers named Duffey.

Hancock Mill, which was among the oldest in the county, is situated on Boquetenorton Creek. This was solely a grist mill. Little Mill, dating back to the early 1700's, was built on Swans Gut Creek. Old Mill, off Five Mile Branch Road, served as both a saw and grist mill. Payne Mill, located on Bachelor's Branch, originally was known as Lindsey Mill Creek and was restricted to grist production.

In architecture the settlers of Worcester County were almost solely of English origin and brought with them many of the characteristics of their native land. Worcester is uniquely blessed with many homes of pre-Revolutionary vintage. At first their homes were of very simple construction but as the family size increased and the owners became more affluent large plantation homes were built, many of which are part of the heritage of the county today.

Beverly, located on the Pocomoke River, was built by Littleton Dennis prior to the Revolution and was destined to remain with that family for over 150 years. The brick used in the construction was made on the property using English molds. The present owners are Mr. and Mrs. John Butler.

Cellar House, an 18th century structure, stands on a high bank overlooking the Pocomoke River. Noted for its simplicity both inside and outside, it is of brick and clapboard construction. Many tales are told of its use as a retreat for smugglers. Mr. and Mrs. John Graham are the current owners of this home.

Caleb's Discovery, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William P. Phillips, and situated about two miles west of Berlin, was known for many years as "Old Brick House Farm." The original section, dated around 1730, is of brick, additions have been added and all have been plastered over and marked to look like blocks. The home remained in the Tingle family for over 150 years.

Fassit House, built about 1717 by Captain William Fassitt as a wedding present for his daughter Mary, overlooks Sinepuxent Bay. The home is presently owned by Mrs. Margaret Rogers.

Golden Quarter, originally built in 1769 by Ebenezer Campbell, is situated on Ayers Creek. Built of brick its walls were eventually covered with white stucco. The name for this home came from the acres of wild coreopsis which at dawn and sunset resembled a golden blanket covering the ground. To a degree this glory of nature delights the present owner, Mr. L. Franklin Purnell.

Genesar, constructed abount 1732 by John Purnell, stands at the end of Sinepuxent Neck. Built of brick, a thin coat of stucco covered these in the early 19th century. Zadoc Purnell, the owner during the Revolution, was authorized to install a battery on the Sinepuxent to repel a British attack. It is reported that cannon balls have been dug from the fields. Today the owners are Mr. and Mrs. Donald F. Humphrey.

Mt. Ephraim, located near Public Landing, was built prior to 1724. It is believed that the name was chosen for its meaning fruitful since fruits and plants for food and medicine were in abundance. The [illegible] home stands, one of the earliest grants and on which [illegible] board Side by Lord Baltimore, was granted to Robert Richardson.

Churches, then as today, are very much a part of the life of Worcester County. All Hallows Church in Snow Hill, built between 1748 and 1756, was an official church of the Maryland Colony until 1776. The last Anglican rector to serve the parish was Rev. John Rosse. Among the treasures from the pre-Revolutionary period on display today are the Bible, dated 1701, the silver communion service given by Queen Anne and the large bronze church bell.

St. Martins Parish Church, located about three miles from Berlin, was constructed of brick between 1756 and 1759, and was the first church built for Worcester Parish. Clergymen were scarce and frequently laymen conducted the Anglican service, occasionally supplemented by a visiting clergymean. One rector, the Rev. John Bowie, a Loyalist, lived up to his oath of allegiance as an Anglican priest and tragedy plagued him.

A thriving economy and growing population led in 1742 to the creation of Worcester from Somerset County. From the outset the new county was dedicated to education. Col. I. Scarborough spearheaded a drive establishing a number of schools in 1746. In 1765 the Rev. Charles Tennett, pastor of Buckingham Presbyterian Church, established the Berlin Academy, on the east side of the Snow Hill-Berlin County Road at the juncture of the county road leading to Hay's Landing.

Naturally the closeness of the Academy and the church and the fact that the academy stood on a tract of land known as Buckingham, gave it the name of Buckingham Academy. One of the early headmasters of Old Buckingham, William McKay, proved to be a most stimulating instructor, but he provoked the wrath of one parishoner, Elder Ramsay, who complained grievously that students were discouraged by the instructor from lodging with him. Among the graduates of Old Buckingham were William Thomas Purnell and Littleton P. Bowen.

In 1770 the Maryland Assembly responded affirmatively to the petition that Worcester and Somerset might jointly operate a school serving parts of each county. That same year a school at Eden on Wicomico Creek, honoring the very popular Governor Robert Eden, was constructed but the site proved to be so unhealthy that it was relocated. Later fire destroyed that facility and the property was sold with the profits divided between Washington Academy in Somerset and Union Academy in Worcester.

Washington Academy, established in 1777 by private subscription, enjoyed a splendid reputation as an institution of higher learning on the lower shore for over three-quarters of a century. Among its graduates from Worcester County were Isaac Thomas Costen, John Dennis, Littleton Purnell Dennis and Ephraim King Wilson.

John Postley, a leading planter of Worcester County, was greatly interested in education. In his will he designated that the residue of his estate be used for the education of the poor in Buckingham and Worcester Hundred.

The American Revolution and the religious involvement seriously disrupted education in the colony, permanently impairing some institutions and modifying others in form and concept.

Methodists were in trouble because of the writings of John Wesley and the actions of two missionaries, Thomas Tankin and Martin Rodda, who denounced the colonial government and the people as traitors and insisted that Methodists avoid any action that would help the cause of the Revotuion. Another Methodist who caused trouble was Chauncey Clowe who, in 1777, formed a company of about 300 Royalists and prepared to aid England on the Eastern Shore and on the Chesapeake Bay. Clowe was unsuccessful and was executed.

Methodists became highly suspect and in October 1777 the General Assembly of Maryland passed an act requiring all free males about eighteen years of age to take an oath of fidelity and support to the State. Anyone refusing to take the oath was forbidden to teach, preach or travel. Many Methodists could not subscribe to the oath and many of Wesley's missionaries left the county, some in haste.

Worcester County, even though young at the time of the American Revolution, played a very vital role during those years. In 1774, a sum of $533 was raised to aid Massachusetts when that colony was resisting England's tax laws.

On July 26, 1775, about sixty leading men of the county met at Snow Hill and signed the Association of the Freemen of Maryland, which pledged support to each other and to America. Symbolically at Snow Hill a liberty pole was demolished and the King's health toasted by some.

Josiah Cathell, with James Disharoon and Hiram Parsons, called a meeting in Newtown on September 25, 1775 and organized the Worcester County Sons of Liberty. Worcester was also represented by several other units anxious to fight for independence. The Sinepuxent Battalion of about 300 men was captained by Matthew Purnell, William Purnell, E. Purnell and Thomas Purnell.

The Snow Hill Battalion of about 600 men had among its captains Ebenezer Handy and William Richardson. The Wicomico Battalion was captained by Charles Bennett and Isaac Houston. Many men enlisted in commands in other parts of the colony. Colonel Peter Chaille ommanded the Tenth Battalion and Colonel William Purnell the Twenty-Fourth of the Maryland Militia.

Another illustrious military leader was Colonel John Gunby who, against his father's wishes, organized and equipped an independent company at his own expense. In the Battle of Long Island this company, with others, permitted the retreating Americans to reach safety near Brooklyn and halted the momentum of the Britisb assault. Gunby also commanded the First Maryland Regiment in the Battle of Cowpens and the Battle of Guilford Court House.

The Cathell family was well represented in the Revolutionary War with at least seven and probably ten members, either brothers or cousins, who fought in the Continental Army.

North Beach, above Sinepuxent Inlet, became a defense camp in 1782 due to the passage of ships from the ocean to

ANALYSIS OF THE DRUNK DRIVER

New data has been added to the growing evidence that most persons arrested for drunken driving are basically problem people and not the occasional drinker who was unlucky enough to get caught.

An Oregon study of more than 1,000 convicted drunk drivers showed that many had a long history of personal problems, only one of which was drunken driving. The average blood alcohol level at the time of arrest was 0.21 percent - a level rarely attained among social drinkers, most of whom would be under the table at that level.

Other findings: One in four had a criminal record; three in eight had a previous charge of drunkeness in public, not associated with driving; they had, as a group, three times as many previous traffic violations as the typical driver; one in four was driving with a suspended license or none at all.
