

THE STATE CAPITAL.—We have heard of the walking philosophers—and have been interested in the history of the Wandering Jew—even “Peregrine Pilgrim” occasionally attracts our attention, but what takes us down is this wandering State Capital. For it there seems to be no resting place. Like the dove at first sent out from the ark, there has not as yet been found a spot of dry land on which to rest its foot. From Monterey to San Jose, from San Jose to Vallejo, from Vallejo back to San Jose—from San Jose to Vallejo again; from Vallejo to Sacramento, from Sacramento to Vallejo, and now from Vallejo to Benicia have the State archives been removed. How long they will remain where they are, will depend we suppose on the ideas which the members of the present Legislature may entertain of the comforts and conveniences afforded by the new Seat of Government.
