

THE KANSAS WAR OVER.

We are enabled to give this morning sufficient information in regard to the Kansas troubles to show its nature, and to contradict the idea first set forth from pro-slavery sources, that the Free State men had yielded to the intimidations of the border ruffians, who had come over at the call of Governor Shannon. It is now evident enough that the Governor has become satisfied that he has either been grossly imposed upon by his confidants, or that he found that the position of the men at Lawrence was too strong for him. At all events, the drunken crew of vagabonds who had assembled at various points to march upon Lawrence, have disbanded, swearing as they go, at the Governor, Sharp's rifles, and bad whiskey generally.—Milwaukee Sentinel, 22d
