

Newcastle Celebrates Heritage Day

Newcastle Village and District Historical Society staged a fascinating and entertaining 'Heritage Day' program on Saturday. During the day many displays had been set up in the hall including Phil Hayman's military treasures from many countries.

In the evening, there was a variety concert and one of the entertainers was Quincy Gilpin performing Scottish dances.

Draws for plants took place on stage with Charles Gray and Ron Locke picking the winning tickets.

MPP Sam Cureatz appears most interested in Jack Gordon's phonograph from early 1900s featuring the His Master's Voice dog.

The Eilbeck sisters, now Lynda MacGregor and Anne McFadden, were all dressed up in skimpy outfits, serving cold drinks.

Ron and Vi Lambert's glassware collection is admired by two visitors.

Gladys Ashton brought along a large assortment of dolls she had made, while at rear, Albert Pearce shows guests how to cane chairs.

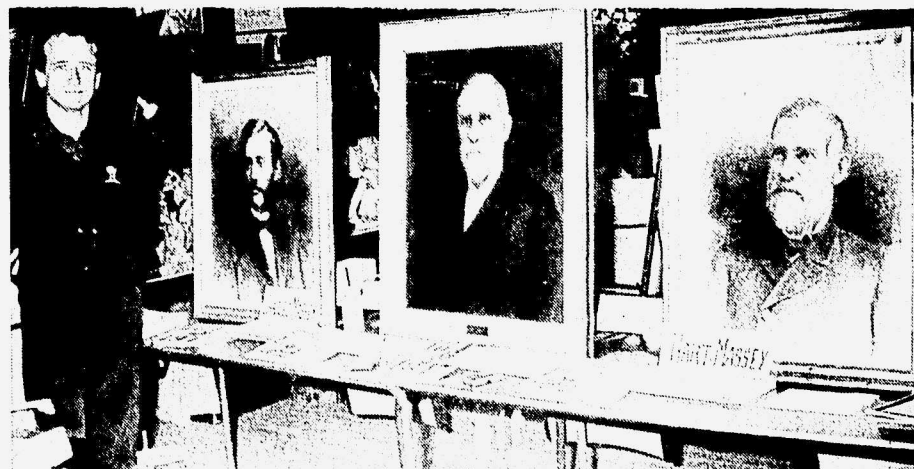

Shelley Gray was accompanied by Doug Dewell for several solos.

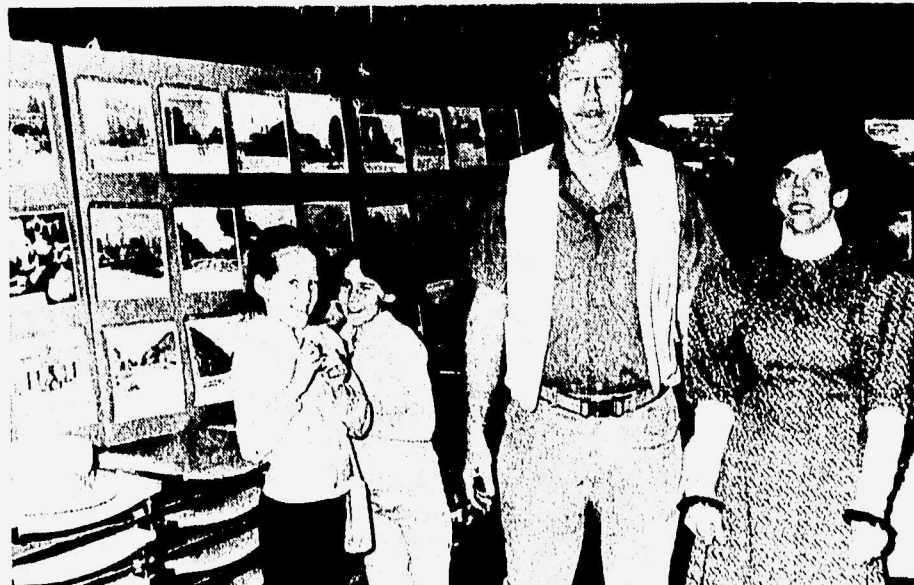

Clarke High School's stage band performed several numbers that were well received.

Bernice Bothwell, Grace Reid and May Hall of Parkview Quilters were appropriately attired for the occasion.

Trevor West of Massey-Ferguson, Toronto, brought back memories with several portraits of Massey family members, responsible for building the community hall.

Jack and Gloria Gordon had the walls covered with photos from Newcastle's past that Lisa Cobbledick and Cheryl Moulton found interesting.
