

Deft Piloting Saves Jetliner From Crack-Up in Dusty Landing

—Globe and Mail—Gabora.
Down in a cloud of dust comes Avro Jetliner, America's first jet transport plane, at Malton Airport yesterday, while one of workers, out to see their handiwork in the air, dashes to the scene. Damage was slight.

Avro workers are almost jet-propelled themselves as they hurry to the ship, which came in at 100 mph with the undercarriage locked up.

Stepping out of cabin door are James Orrell of Avro Manchester, one of Britain's leading test pilots, and Don Rogers, Toronto, his co-pilot. Best emergency landing they had ever seen, said TCA pilots who were watching.
