Before going any further, I should like to give briefly some of the background to this question of railroad construction in the north country. I am doing this because from what I know, confirmed by an examination of the records railroad development in the Peace river country has been a sorry record of neglect, delays, frustrations and broken promises. It is quite obvious that one injustice has been done to the people of the Peace river country, and I hope to see that another is not committed as well.

The Peace river country is not part of the western prairies, nor is it part of the true north, but a connecting link between the two. Many of the people who went overland to the Yukon came through the Peace river country. The first white man to cross this continent came down from the north along the Peace and wintered close to the town of Peace River, then went on the next spring to the Pacific coast. I refer to Sir Alexander Mackenzie. I know these things, sir, because from my home, four miles from the town of Peace River, I can see the hill known as Mackenzie lookout, in the shadow of which Mackenzie built his fort. Along the trail past my home went the people who travelled to the Yukon. There is a further grim reminder, possibly, that this area forms the natural gateway to the north in the fact that recently teams of archaeologists have been seeking in our country some confirmation of the fact that countless generations ago people crossed the Bering strait from Asia and so came into the centre of this continent.

In earlier times the large railway companies could or would never accept the fact that our country constituted a natural road to the north, both from the centre of the continent and from the west coast. It was necessary for the province of Alberta to construct railways into the area.

The province, of course, was limited by its boundaries and financial resources, but all during the 1920's there was a constant effort made to persuade the government of Canada and the railway companies to construct an outlet to the Pacific coast and also to build toward the Northwest Territories.

I have been able to find a great number of references to this, particularly in the speeches made by the late Mr. D. M. Kennedy, who was the member for Peace River from 1921 to 1935. He was supported by such members from British Columbia as General Clark, Hon. Harry Stevens, Senator McRae and John Fraser. These men were amongst those who had sufficient foresight to understand the necessity for the construction of this outlet.

I should like to continue, however, with regard to these promises by referring to a statement made by the then prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, speaking in Edmonton. The reference is contained in Hansard for 1926-27, page 2214:

> "It is the policy of the government of which I have the honour to be the head to introduce a vigorous policy of immigration which will people the vast areas of undeveloped country in the great west," declared the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, premier of Canada, when addressing a mass meeting of the citizens in the First Presbyterian church last night.
> The future prosperity of this country is bound up in the development of its great natural resources, and to develop these resources it is necessary to have a large increase in the population of Canada. There is to the north of this city a great tract of land that is crying out for development. The Peace river country is amongst the richest in Canada, but before the proper development of that country can take place an outlet to the Pacific coast is an absolute necessity. I pledge myself that as soon as it is humanly possible the great Peace river country will be given that measure of railway relief that will bring to the pioneers of that country the outlet they have been so long denied, and will open up the country for prospective settlers.
> "The times that we are passing through are very difficult, and I would ask you to have a little patience, and in as short a time as possible, a railway outlet will be provided for the Peace river and northern Alberta districts that will open up an era of prosperity for that country which will not be equalled by any other province in Canada."

However, this was an election speech; and since it was a promise made before an election I examined the speech from the throne of the following year with some care. I had to look through it twice before I found any mention of the Peace river, and then I found this promise had shrunk to this insignificant statement; "that in due course steps would be taken to further colonization and settlement in other fertile regions such as Peace river". This was as far as the matter went. This is typical of the treatment given to the people of that area in so far as this all-important question of railroads is concerned.

Now, as a matter of fact some survey parties were sent out, and they came back muttering about tonnage, population and economics. At that time we had only 20,000 people. Our railway tonnage was 110,000 tons going out of the country and 50,000 tons going in.

I recognize that we cannot be starry-eyed and visionary about this question of railroad construction, but I submit that railroads and their construction should be regarded as an instrument of national policy. They were considered in that way by the people who made this country, and I feel that the same consideration should be given today. If Sir John A. Macdonald and the people who constructed the C.P.R. had stopped to confer with hordes of chair-borne statisticians the C.P.R. would never have been constructed. Western Canada would still probably be a vast hunting ground for the buffalo or, more likely than that, we would have fewer provinces in Canada and there would be more stars in the United States flag.

In 1929 the Alberta government sold its railroad system to a statutory corporation created by the government of Canada. What was known as the Northern Alberta Railways was created, comprised of equal ownership by the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. By the statute of incorporation this railroad, the N.A.R., was authorized to commence construction of and given authority to build a railway to the Northwest Territories. The statute is chapter 48 of the 1929 statute. There is one particular part of the schedule I should like to read into the record because I think it has some bearing on what I propose to say. This new statutory corporation was authorized to lay out, construct, maintain and operate——a branch line from a point at or near Grimshaw in a generally northerly direction to a point that will when surveyed approximate to a point in township one hundred and eleven, range nineteen or twenty, west of the fifth principal meridian, thence in a generally northerly direction approximately parallel to the Hay river to the northern boundary of the said province.

That is precisely the route which we in the Peace river country advocate today. It follows precisely the same route which we advocate today on the question of this railroad which has been projected to Great Slave lake.

Considerable exception was taken in the house at that time by those who were interested and had some knowledge of the situation to the way the N.A.R. was formed. They said the creation of a statutory corporation of that kind comprising equality of ownership by the two great railway companies which were actually competitive was not a good thing for Peace river. Actually that is the way it turned out, because not one mile of railroad was ever built in furtherance of the suggestions made in 1929 when that corporation was created. It was actually left for the province of British Columbia to build this coast outlet, which it did when the P.G.E. was eventually completed into the Peace river country; and only a few days ago I understand the first train from the coast came up and across the Peace river at Taylor Flats in British Columbia.

The excuse of the major railway companies was that they did not think there was sufficient tonnage or population. I recall Sir Edward Beatty in Peace River saying that just as soon as our production was ten million bushels of grain, that would justify a coast outlet. Later on he was speaking in Edmonton, and I have here a quotation of his that was given in this house by Mr. J. A. Sissons, who was the member for Peace River from 1935 to 1940. Sir Edward Beatty then said what all of us knew to be correct:

That north country needs a settlement plan and needs it quickly, and together with that there should be a program of rail development.

The Peace River district impressed me most favourably. But its one major need still is that of increased settlement. I am confident that the country could absorb at least twice the population it now bears.

I certainly intend to suggest to the federal government that it embark on a broad policy of settlement for the north. Extension of rail facilities to go hand in hand with colonization. That is something that should be axiomatic.

We have reached and far surpassed all the figures that have been suggested with regard to population, tonnage and crop production. Our crop production is many times that which Sir Edward Beatty had in mind. Our population is four times that which existed at the time former prime minister Mackenzie King made his statement in Edmonton. Our tonnage going out is ten times that which it was in 1924. That argument no longer should serve as an excuse.

As a matter of fact I think we have ample confirmation of the truth of the statements our people had made earlier. As a result—and I think it is no accident that the two matters that have come to pass are linked together—of the projection of the P.G.E. to the Peace river country in the last two years, we have seen the beginnings of industrialization and growth. In the small southwest area of the Peace river country comprising part of my constituency and part of that of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) there are a large plywood plant, two oil refineries and the beginnings of a petrochemical industry probably running into $30 million or $40 million and ultimately two or three times that much.

That has come about, I submit, as a result of the fact that at long last the coast outlet was brought to Peace river. I hold no brief for Premier Bennett, but I think it is only proper to pay tribute to him for the industry, initiative and intelligence he has exercised in directing that railroad into our country. I can only assume that it was because of the years he had spent as a member of the Conservative party that he acquired those characteristics.

We now face the question or the problem of constructing a railroad into the Northwest Territories. In that regard I should like to refer to a statement by Hon. Charles Dunning, who was minister of railways in the King administration. It was truly a pertinent one. This is what he said during those debates which took place in 1929 on this bill creating the Northern Alberta Railway. Speaking about this railroad into the Northwest Territories he said:

> I believe I shall live to see the day when there will be a railhead on Great Slave lake tapping the resources of that great northern area.

This indicates what was intended at that time; and having in mind the countless numbers of people who went in there on the basis of promises of that kind, I submit it should be considered when we now come to deal with this question of a railroad into the north country.

Quite recently the government of Alberta established a royal commission known as the McGregor commission to inquire into the development of northern Alberta, which by the terms of reference was defined as being that part of Alberta lying to the north of the 55th parallel of north latitude. This commission has made a very extensive survey and I commend it to hon. members in so far as facts and statistics are concerned, though I must say I disagree very violently with some of the conclusions derived from these facts.

Included in these statistics is information relative to undeveloped agricultural area, including certain territory which the commission designates as arable and other lands which are said to be possibly arable. I checked the figures with my own personal knowledge derived from almost 30 years' residence in that country and continuous travel through all parts of it, and I agree with their views which give a maximum of 14 million acres of undeveloped agricultural land with a potential production running into some $600 million to $700 million a year.

Certainly there is no doubt that here is the last great source of undeveloped agricultural country on the North American continent. I do not like cliches, yet the phrase "great inland empire" I think could nowhere be better applied than to this particular country. But empires, like all living organisms, must have nourishment and this empire was in grave danger of destruction, of dying stillborn because of lack of transportation facilities.

Following along the Peace river, the Northern Alberta Railways and up to the Northwest Territories, are people who for many, many years have struggled against tremendous odds to try to maintain themselves in that country. I say to the hon. members of this house, particularly those who come from agricultural constituencies, think of the problems of these people who have to pay 40 cents to 50 cents a bushel for wheat in order to bring it down to the railhead, $10 a head for cattle, $3 for other stock and so on. These are extreme examples, of course, and as you approach closer to the railroad the figures become somewhat less.

There is also the reverse side of the coin, and we must consider that everything which goes into that country requires an extra toll from the people because of the cost of transportation. We have every problem and every difficulty faced by people in other parts of Canada, but we also have this immense difficulty with respect to transportation owing to the great distances involved. On the economic scale there was slowly but surely being poured into the balance, the weight of these figures and if we had continued under the methods established by the previous administration there could have been but one inevitable result, stagnation and ultimate extinction.

That is why the people of my part of the country were so glad to hear of the program of national development planned by the Conservative party, as national development of course to us means primarily northern development. We were glad to hear of the construction of a railroad to the south shore of Great Slave lake, and to learn that we had not waited in vain for this railroad which, provided it commences at or near Grimshaw and goes through the Peace river country, will bring many obvious benefits to us.

I would like to mention the mineral production of the Pine Point area of the Great Slave lake region which, since it could reach the market at a cost which would make it competitive, would be a great step forward; but this is only the beginning, and there are many other tremendous considerations. The Northwest Territories would have the advantage of obtaining food supplied from an area comparatively close at hand which would substantially reduce the cost of living. The farmers providing these supplies would have a corresponding advantage by being able to increase their sales, and the new and expanding secondary industries of our country would find their markets increasing in both area and population.

The orthodox development of oil and gas would favour the route through the Peace river country, that is to say through the western part of northern Alberta. The figures given to the McGregor commission by the oil and gas conservation board of Alberta show as a minimum that 8,000 wells will be drilled by 1980 in the area affected by this railroad, at which time there should be an annual production of 62 million barrels of oil and 230 billion cubic feet of natural gas. This is a controlled production based on market requirements, and there are very interesting tables on pages 59 and 60 of the McGregor report with regard to this aspect of development.

The proposed route would serve 90 per cent of the people of northern Alberta, including those living on the British Columbia side of the Peace river, which provides the largest concentration of people and thus potential labour north of the 55th parallel in Canada, which I must say contrasts quite pitifully with what is believed to exist in the same latitudes in Russia. There is an excellent forestry potential with respect to both timber and pulp, and there are also first class hydro power facilities in the area to be served. The cost of construction would be reasonable, since there are no bridges of any consequence nor are there any substantial grades. Finally, having in mind the diversity of potential production, the railway would not be exclusively dependent on minerals which, being non-recurring resources, often cause the abandonment of railways and of towns.

The McGregor report recommended an alternative route. If this should be adopted, which I hope it will not be, I am quite certain many of the pioneer farmers of our country may well give up the struggle, which would result in a large exodus from some areas. I have recently been receiving an average of 50 to 75 letters a day with respect to this matter, many from people I know personally as pioneers of the area, all urging me, as I hope they have urged the members of the government, to take these things into consideration when a decision is reached with respect to the route to be adopted when building this railway.

These people, and there are thousands of them, have held on grimly and tenaciously over the years in the face of considerable obstacles. They have cleared their lands, built homes and become good farmers—which they had to do in order to exist at all—and have also become good citizens. They have raised and educated their families, expanding the perimeter of civilization. So far they have done all this without too much help from government sources. They know nothing of national housing and very little of unemployment insurance benefits. For many of them some of the ordinary assistance available to agricultural producers has also been lacking. Even the benefits under the Can. Farm Loan Act have only recently been extended to some of the northern regions, and then only to a limited area close to the railroad. Despite these disadvantages, however, they have always held before them the hope that some day, somehow, at the end of the rainbow, there would be the construction of a railroad.

Many of us, of course, knew that a realistic appraisal of the national and world situation, so far as agricultural commodities are concerned, would make it difficult to justify, and indeed that it might be found impossible to construct that railroad having in mind only the agricultural aspects of the matter. We did however feel, as we still feel, that an additional incentive has now been provided by the further discoveries of minerals in and around the Great Slave lake area. We believe, therefore, that when the railroad is built it should be built through the Peace river country. We should not and we must not abandon these people. They must not be content to be second class citizens if they wish to remain in their country, or to have only one alternative, namely to give up their homes and everything for which they have struggled and move elsewhere.

If we permit them to leave behind them everything they have built up we shall be abdicating our responsibilities and failing in our duties. I suggest this railway is a fair test of what lies ahead in respect of northern development. Are we to consider human resources as being of paramount importance? Do we want to fill the country with people or are people to be subservient to the privilege and interests of those concerned in exploitation? We are confident that the Conservative party, with its history and traditions—and this government has expressed its views by actions and utterances in recent months—will recognize our position and will appreciate that railroads exist to serve the people and not people to serve the railroads.

We have been told that a highway may be constructed as a substitute for this railway, that is to say a rebuilding and extension of the Mackenzie highway which now runs over 400 miles from Grimshaw to the port of Hay River on Great Slave lake. We welcome the fact that we now have this indication of the firm intention of this government to thus develop the northland, but I say this is not an alternative for our agricultural producers, who simply cannot develop farming communities at a distance of 40 miles or more from railway facilities.

As a matter of fact I am being a little optimistic when I say 40 miles, for I have in my hand a volume entitled "The Settlement of the Peace River Country", which was written by Professor C. A. Dawson, professor of sociology at McGill University, and Professor R. W. Murchie, professor of sociology at the University of Minnesota.

Their position as a whole strengthens mine. Here is what they have to say:

> In the older settlements of the prairie provinces there are few farms more than 10 miles from the railway. Productivity fades before the twentieth mile from the railway is reached; beyond that it declines with great rapidity.

The McGregor report states that the need to stimulate agriculture in the north country remains open to question, and I assume that other people may entertain the same opinion; but if so they are not taking the long range view, as I propose to point out later. In any event I want to say that our agricultural economy is largely becoming, and will be even more in the future, one of mixed and diversified farming tailored to help us sustain our role as supplier of the Northwest Territories, as well as being geared to the exigencies of the larger world picture. Our people are realists, and the Peace river country has the necessary requirements so far as land is concerned to go into the type of production which will find and is finding markets, and we are turning away from the commodities which are surplus.

Such being the case, is it not a far better thing to do what is necessary to quicken the stirring of new life by opening this country, by establishing the many communities which will provide the necessary services along the new railroad through the country to Great Slave lake, than to accept the defeatist and narrowly pragmatic attitude which is inherent in this other type of thinking?

I believe that the appointed purpose of this land is that it should be made available for the many, a home for all who wish to come; and there will be many who will wish to do that. Any railroad construction and any development which aims at a lesser result is an abuse of the trust we have had bestowed upon us. "Without vision the people will perish" surely applies here, and this government has a vested interest in that phrase.

At this point I want to make it absolutely clear that anything I have said is not meant to suggest that the railroad should be built through the Peace river country without regard to the proper and natural aspirations and the development of the eastern half of northern Alberta. As and when, and that time may well be now, the economic development of that area and the requirements of Canada as a whole justify railway branch lines or highway construction or navigation improvement, then by all means they should be undertaken. But I submit as strongly as I possibly can that at the present time a branch line to the north which disregards the logical needs, and fails to give effect to the long held prayers and hopes, of the people of the Peace river country is wrong.

It has been said that the sole responsibility for providing communication to these people in our country rests with the provincial government, and I admit that it is a responsibility which Alberta must share, having in mind that the Northern Alberta Railways was originally constructed and operated by the province of Alberta. However, I would point out that most of the settlement came into the north country from 1912 to 1935, and that prior to the passage of the statute which implemented the agreement for the transfer of natural resources from Canada to Alberta in 1934, Canada alone had control of the land settlement. The homestead and land officers were those of the senior government, and the people who went into this northern area were encouraged to do so by the Canadian government. So the responsibility should be shared jointly among the province of Alberta, the federal government and the railway company.

Certainly the statement made by Mr. Dunning to which I referred previously with regard to this line to the north was accepted by many who went in there as a firm indication of the government's intention, and I know as a fact that many people who went into the north country did so because they honestly believed that this line would be built and that it was the intention of the government and of the railways to proceed with it. Certainly the department of northern affairs felt that way in 1956, because they presented a brief to the Gordon commission. On page 24 of the brief there was a map—I believe it was submitted by Mr. R. G. Robertson, commissioner of the Northwest Territories—which shows this railroad projected into the Great Slave lake area, and it shows it starting from Grimshaw. On page 29 of this report on the economic prospects of the Northwest Territories I find this:

> A railway to Great Slave lake will not be just another railway. It is not a railway to a lake or to open a mine or to serve a community. A railway to Great Slave lake will be one of the great development railroads of the country. It will not bring population to the Northwest Territories to the same extent that the western railroads brought it to the prairies; but it may well bring in the years ahead a comparable increase in the wealth of Canada. This railway is quite different from most of the branch lines constructed in recent years which were destined to serve one mine, or a group of mines; its purpose is to open up a whole new region.

What I have said so far may be construed as being on a purely limited and local basis, but I submit that examined against the larger background of the national interest the answer comes out precisely the same. A branch line from Grimshaw to Great Slave lake would permit agricultural and other products from the northern and the Peace river country to seek their natural markets. We hold no brief for or against any particular area, but we wish to encourage our products to flow to the Pacific coast or to the east as economics may dictate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I am sorry, but I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the hon. gentleman finish his paragraph.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Is it the unanimous wish of the house that the hon. member be allowed to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you. Some consideration must be given to the fact that the development of the Peace river country will lead to an influx of people and will to some extent syphon these people from the larger areas to which they have been attracted in ever increasing numbers in the last few years.

While I recognize that one cannot turn the clock back, and that the general tendency is toward people coming together in large cities, there is an inherent danger in this. In a news item in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of Tuesday, May 6, I observed a statement from the population reference bureau, a United States agency, that our neighbour to the south is today suffering acute social and economic problems because the population has grown quickly and concentrated in cities, and this bureau's reference points out that Canada is heading in the same direction.

I see no reason why we should not avoid this or at least minimize it, by encouraging people to go to the north country where there is the space and there could be the opportunity under the right conditions, based on proper railroad facilities. I am quite confident that there is still present in our people the spirit of adventure and the desire to make a new country that originally persuaded those from the older parts of the world to come to the new world.

Then is it not possible that in the final analysis the ability of Canada in the future to furnish food as and when required may be the deciding factor in the world struggle that envelops us? I would suggest that appeasement, not in the sense that it was used in the earlier days of Munich but appeasement of the hunger of the many millions who belong to the yet uncommitted countries, may be the answer to this struggle. We hear talk of agricultural surpluses, but I suggest that apart from wheat and one or two other products the normal increase in population, naturally and by immigration, may leave us in a position of balance in the not too distant future. In that regard the figures I have given previously indicate our potential, but you cannot make that production available as you would turn on a tap. There must be railroad construction followed by settlement, clearing and cultivation of land, providing of marketing facilities, establishment of communities to give service, and many other things. Even if the gleam in the collective eye of the Peace River people was transferred to the board of the draftsman tomorrow, I would thing that from 15 years to a quarter of a century might well go by before a reasonable percentage of the production potential is available.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit that it is not sufficient to build a railroad just to transfer large quantities of minerals out of the north country to be processed elsewhere, so that at the end of 20 to 30 years we may have only a gigantic hole in the ground in the north to show for it. I agree that mining is tremendously important and must play a great part in our development, but this development must be complete and well rounded, and will be a failure unless eventually it results in the populating of our country.

There is a phrase that nature abhors a vacuum. If we do not fill it we may well find that some other country may do so. Thus when we propose railway extensions we should think in terms of 50, 60 or 80 years; and he will be a reckless man indeed who will say that based on that consideration the building up and settlement of a country like that which lies in the north, capable of a diversified economy, is open to question. Here is a great land, a fair and fertile country, stretching from Grande Prairie and the oil fields of Valleyview in the south hundreds of miles northward to the south shore of Great Slave lake; a country which is capable of maintaining a substantial civilization and of serving as a natural and proper passage from the settled areas in the south of Canada to the great storehouse of the north. Here is a chance to deepen the present limits of settlement. We must not ask this country or the people who have helped to build it or the people who wish to go to it, to wait another 40 years.

I have good authority for this point of view, and I call to my support the statements of two great Canadians who at different times have stated their views in this house. Here is what Sir John A. Macdonald wrote in a letter to Sir Stafford Northcote on May 1, 1878:

> I shall not be present; I am an old man, but I shall perchance look down from the realms above upon a multitude of younger men—a prosperous, populous, and thriving generation—a nation of Canadians, who will see the completion of the road.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking in this house with reference to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, said:

> We cannot wait, because time does not wait; we cannot wait because, in these days of wonderful development, time lost is doubly lost; we cannot wait, because at this moment there is a transformation going on in the conditions of our national life which it would be folly to ignore and a crime to overlook.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the subject I wish to discuss today, I should like to call attention to two significant events in the history of this country, both of which are taking place this year.

First I would like to call the attention of hon. members to the British Columbia centennial. When I was president of the Young Liberals Association of Canada, I had several opportunities of visiting that beautiful province, and was always impressed by the unforgettable scenery and the charm of the people of British Columbia. I therefore ask hon. members who represent that province in this house to please convey to the people of British Columbia our congratulations and best wishes.

I would also like to recall the fact that this year we will be celebrating the 350th anniversary of the founding of the city of Quebec by Samuel de Champlain. A visit to that beautiful capital of the province of Quebec, that old historic city, is always a moving experience. As a matter of fact, it is one way of reliving the history of the beginnings of the colony. Quebec, with its monuments, houses and parks, has a charm which is equalled only by the hospitality of its citizens.

Quebec city authorities have decided to mark this occasion by impressive celebrations and, last Saturday evening, they opened the first of a series of events designed to commemorate the 350th anniversary of the founding of the city. Mr. Speaker, that occasion is such as to be of interest to all Canadians, in every part of this country, since it is on that spot that, 350 years ago, civilization, christianity and French culture were permanently established. It is from there that discoverers and settlers departed for all parts of this lovely land of ours, Canada.

After the conquest of Quebec by the English, some 150 years later, our English-speaking fellow citizens brought over with them from England those various British institutions which we enjoy at the present time, including parliamentary freedoms. On the occasion of the 350th anniversary of the founding of Quebec by Mr. de Champlain, I would like to congratulate citizens of that city and extend to them my best regards.

I would feel remiss, Mr. Speaker, in not pointing out the immense contribution made by Canadians of French descent to the life of this nation. On the eve of the feast of the patron saint of French Canadians, I should like to mention that the history of this country began under a French civilizing influence and that we are now, as I said a moment ago, participating in a larger sense in the life of this country as a whole. I said a moment ago that tomorrow we shall be celebrating the feast of the patron saint of French Canadians. We will do so in a spirit of true Canadianism, conscious of the fact that our French culture is a contributory element to the life of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, I had a good reason, just now, to speak of the celebration of the 350th anniversary of the foundation of Quebec by Mr. de Champlain. It is well to recall that on the Plains of Abraham may be found two monuments, those of Montcalm and Wolfe, who are admirably expressive of Canadian unity, that unity which binds those two great races which, in due course were joined by all those other groups of Canadians, of whatever origin they may be.

Mr. Speaker, on such important occasions as these, gifts are always in order. I would have thought that this government would have marked those two anniversaries by gifts to the people of Canada. However, the only gift they saw fit to offer us was the Fleming budget, one that will be long remembered. The first Conservative budget in 23 years, it is a deficit budget, a tradition with the Conservative system. It is the modern version of the great blackout years, and I would call it the "blackout budget".

(Text):

In his speech the Minister of Finance has repeated the same old Tory principles which have not changed and which, as always, will carry the nation in the wrong direction. As is customary for him the Minister of Finance took very long to say very little, but it did not take very long for the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River to burst the balloon which was let loose in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance. At this stage I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River for the manner in which he answered the budget speech. His remarks were solid, realistic and constructive, and were worth much more than the funny, amusing, flippant and light remarks delivered by the hon. member for Carleton. His speech was all wind—

Mr. Pickersgill: All wind and no sail.

Mr. Rouleau: —and one got the impression that he was engaging in an oratorical contest.

(Translation):

At the beginning of his remarks, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) sought to deride the opposition, stating that they were taking their roles as critics rather literally.

(Text):

I hope the hon. member for Carleton was in his seat and understood my remarks in French.

(Translation):

That is an amazing statement on the part of a member, Mr. Speaker. To speak this way, he surely failed to read the speeches of former years when members of his party sitting in the opposition came out with countless and protracted lectures, always complaining about being gagged. If he would only read them he would see that they freely indulged in the worst kind of nonsense.

He should also reread, for his own guidance, the remarks which the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made in this house on November 17, 1953, as found on page 99 of Hansard and I quote:

We are in the opposition. We have our responsibility to discharge, to maintain our constitutional system. There can be no freedom without an opposition, strong and fearless to criticize, and above all to provide suggestions and ideas as an alternative to those advanced by the government.

Again for his guidance, the hon. member for Carleton should go to the trouble of reading over—if he has the time, the patience and the courage to do so—the speeches made by the present ministers when they were in the opposition.

As for us, who sit on this side of the house, conscious of the fact that we represent at least 2½ million people who voted for us in the last election, we will continue to defend what we consider right and in the nation's interest, unheedful of anyone's toadyism.

The hon. member for Carleton who, I admit, has a certain zest, quickness of repartee and a degree of wit which would make him a first-rate comedian on the CBC, tried to take our minds off the deficit of almost a billion dollars which the Minister of Finance announced in his budget speech.

He also tried to take our minds off the monsters of unemployment and economic recession which we now have with us. He went even further, trying to give the impression that the Liberals had done nothing in the 22 years they were in power, and were responsible for the present situation.

It reminds me of the Bible picture showing a statesman who, delivering a righteous man to be crucified, was washing his hands to free his conscience.

Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for governing this country lies with the present Conservative government. Let them therefore finally accept those responsibilities which are theirs and stop acting like young hopefuls.

We, in the opposition, assume our own responsibilities. Our role is to scrutinize the actions of the government and to make constructive suggestions.

In his reply to the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) stated our approach to the situation which now faces us. He also stated what we think of the deficit budget presented by the Minister of Finance. His speech was a synthesis of Liberal opinion.

Last Friday, the hon. member for Carleton intimated that the Liberal party was a house divided against itself.

Accustomed as they are to travelling in a one-man car, with nothing to say or do but let themselves be led along, accustomed to following the dictates of their leader, without thinking or reflecting, they cannot realize that the Liberals, though inspired by the same political doctrine, are able to express themselves in personal terms without always keeping an eye on their leader to see if he approves, disapproves or even motions them to sit down, as happened here in this house.

As regards unity, Liberals have nothing to learn from the Conservatives. It is enough to remember what happened at the Conservative convention where the present leader of that party was chosen, in December 1956, when a faction of the Conservative delegation walked out in protest against the choice of the Prime Minister as leader of the Conservative party.

Mr. Lambert: Were you there?

Mr. Rouleau: I had the privilege of witnessing, on television, that unspeakable gesture, and I can assure you that it was not highly impressive either for people in politics or for our Canadian fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, there is another difference at the basis of that disunity right here in the house. One has but to appreciate the deep difference in the thinking of Quebec Conservatives whose leader is Mr. Duplessis of the Union Nationale, and of Conservatives from other provinces. One has only to compare the speech made by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion), setting out the doctrine of the Union Nationale chieftain, the doctrine which inspires the Quebec Conservatives who sit in this house, to the speech from another member— I see that my friend, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) finds this a laughing matter, although he has not yet seen fit to break in on my remarks.

Mr. Ricard: Because they are childish.

Mr. Rouleau: He is perfectly aware of their aptness and that is why he thought he had better not break in sooner, as he usually does.

As I said, one only has to compare the speech made by the hon. member for Bellechase with that of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small) a few days before the end of last session, a speech which very aptly sums up the old Tory philosophy which still haunts the Conservative mind.

As far as we are concerned, we have always stood united behind a unanimously elected leader. All of us stand united behind the same leader, whatever our racial origins, whatever our province.

Mr. Ricard: With a few exceptions.

Mr. Lambert: Ask delegates from western Canada.

Mr. Rouleau: In the leader of the Liberal party, the present Leader of the Opposition, we have a man admired the world over, a man looked up to by all his fellow citizens. We Liberals in this house, members of the Liberal party, all admire him, are happy to serve under him, and will continue to serve the country when we are called upon to do so, as we have done for 22 years, giving to our country a sound administration, in spite of anything that might be said by the member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and his friends.

Mr. Lambert: It is going to take quite some time.

Mr. Rouleau: The Liberal party took over the administration of this country in a deplorable condition, after only five years of Conservative administration and, under the leadership of Mr. Mackenzie King and the Liberals, the economy of the country was restored to such an extent that Canada was able to put up, during World War II, an effort which compared with that put up by all our allies. And, in spite of the war, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the effort we had to sustain at the time, the Liberals were able to promote the economy and trade permanently and to such an extent, that until last year, Canada was never so prosperous and Canadians had never known as high a standard of living. While engaged in that war effort, while promoting the country's economy and trade, the Liberal government of the time was able to achieve substantial reductions in our national debt, to insure full employment and to establish a national revenue that had never been equalled at that time.

In 1949, we had a surplus of $595½ million, and in 1957, a surplus of $257½ million was forecast. Under the Conservative administration which came into power in June 1957, that surplus quickly melted away.

As for employment, Mr. Speaker, there were, in June 1946, 4,738,000 full-time workers in Canada and this number kept increasing in the following years to reach, in June 1956, a record high of 5,504,000.

As for national revenue, Mr. Speaker, in 1949 it reached $2,777 million, to attain in 1957 a record high of $5,106 million. While achieving those records I have just mentioned, from 1935 onwards the Liberal party had managed, among other things, to create from scratch an air transport system unparalleled in the world; it had managed to establish a National Research Council, one of the most powerful services devoted to the well-being of our nation and country. Those are but a few examples of what the Liberal administration did both for the nation and for the country at large. And I have not mentioned yet the social security legislation which was introduced under the Liberal administration. To name but a few, may I point out old-age pensions, pensions to the blind, family allowances, et cetera.

To hear the hon. member for Carleton talk, Friday afternoon, you would have thought that all these things had come about automatically. No, Mr. Speaker, all these things did not come about of themselves, still less through Conservative action; they all came about under a Liberal administration, through men who knew how to give leadership and to think in terms of the future. And while we were thus leading the country into unprecedented prosperity, the Conservatives kept whining and carping.

Today, they sit on the treasury benches and submit, after twelve months of administration, their first budget in twenty-three years. It is a budget typical of Conservative governments as we have known them in this country. Friday afternoon, the hon. member for Carleton forgot to tell us anything about unemployment and recession. My friend, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) asked him to mention those, but the hon. member for Carleton chose to avoid assuming any responsibility for today's unemployment and economic recession, and to put the blame on someone else. I protest against such irresponsibility in this Conservative government. Since this government is managing the country's business, let them shoulder their responsibilities. They can no longer claim to be a minority government, and they often betray their lack of experience.

The result of their administration since June 10, 1957, is significant. In June 1957, there were 162,000 unemployed whereas, in March 1958, the number had risen to 600,000. Since the Conservatives took power, our national revenue has been steadily decreasing. The former Liberal administration's surplus has now become a deficit, a deficit that will probably reach a billion dollars this year.

Conservatives should not try to shift to those who sit on this side of the house, the responsibility for relieving unemployment and restoring prosperity. The government has conceived a sick child and has no right to abandon it and to disclaim responsibility for it. Let the government take care of their sick child and, if they do not know the appropriate remedy, we shall be only too pleased to prescribe one. It is up to this government to give the dose of medicine, and if it fails to do so, this government alone must shoulder the blame.

The management of public affairs is not a game, but an art, and a difficult one, that the Conservatives do not seem to have mastered. It is not a surrealistic art, which can be improvised; it is an art that requires realism and an ability to face the problems which threaten the nation, so as to solve them and to provide for the future. Any person endowed with this art cannot deny that present unemployment is more than seasonal, that the decline in our economy is abnormal and that the so-called "recession" increasingly takes on, from day to day, the look of what, in the thirties, was described as a "depression".

Thanks to the social security measures taken by the Liberal administration, we have not reached that point yet, Mr. Speaker. Those measures are now helping out our fellow citizens across the country who are in an exceedingly dangerous position in so far as our economy is concerned. We have unemployment. Consumption of our products has dropped. The volume of our finished products, here in Canada, has dangerously faltered. Our exports have also declined dangerously. Our capital investments are no longer increasing.

What could be the solution to that problem? It is to create employment immediately for Canadians by taking the necessary steps so that our plants may work at full capacity. Moreover, it is necessary to stimulate trade and construction. To that end, vast public works projects must be initiated. However, the Conservatives have brought nothing new along that line.

In fact, if we go back to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) at the beginning of this session, we see that the public works announced during the last election campaign by the right hon. Prime Minister and by our friends opposite had been provided for by the former administration. The public works program submitted by this government is but a rehash of projects already decided upon. By carrying them out, the new government brings us, in fact, nothing new. When the right hon. Prime Minister speaks about the construction of a road in the Canadian Northwest Territories—and I do not question the value of that project—I wonder how this could help solve the unemployment problem. I wonder how our workers could share in that work. I cannot picture them leaving Montreal in the morning, with their lunch box under their arm, and coming back home at night. I do not see how the construction of a road in the Northwest Territories could solve the problem of unemployment in our great Canadian cities. This means of dealing with unemployment which is proposed by the government is wholly inefficient.

In my opinion, we must expand our foreign trade, rather than divert it, as was announced in the budget speech.

The leader of the Liberal party said in Toronto, on March 21 last:

> The Liberal trade policy has been and will be based on expansion not on diversion.

Mr. Speaker, we need new markets and we must expand our present outlets. In 1947, 37 per cent of our trade was carried out with the United States whereas, in 1957, the ratio was 60 per cent. In 1939, our exports amounted to $321 million, in 1947 to $1,034 million and in 1957 to $2,819 million. We should increase our sales to our present customers, such as the United States. We should be finding new outlets. We should further develop our market with the United Kingdom and elsewhere. We should find markets everywhere in the world for our products. However, the most radical, immediate and practical way to solve the unemployment problem is to stimulate our economy and, to that end, it is important that we create purchasing power in Canada by an immediate though temporary reduction of taxes.

The Pearson plan, submitted in the last election campaign, contemplated an immediate $400 million reduction of taxes paid by Canadians. This program was approved in principle by the Financial Post, the New York Times, the Globe and Mail and even by the Prime Minister who, on March 15, 1955, in this house, quoted Mr. J. K. Galbraith, professor of economics at Harvard, as stating that a reduction of the personal income tax was the best practical way of restoring a weakened economy. And the Prime Minister added: "I believe that there must be a reduction of taxes." Besides, the Minister of Finance spoke likewise in 1956 in a speech he made in this house.

The leader of the Liberal party was in good company, because Mr. Nixon, the Vice President of the United States said:

(Text):

If the economic picture should look worse, he reaffirmed, a tax cut rather than major new spending programs would be "the fastest, the best and surest method" of government stimulus. Such a cut, he said, must give money to "investors and job creators, as well as consumers", not simply providing an election-year "handout".

(Translation):

Those then, Mr. Speaker, are the steps that could have been taken to serve the Canadian people and to put an immediate stop to unemployment. Why is it that the Conservatives, their chief and the Minister of Finance find themselves unable at this time to practise what they were preaching back in 1955 and 1956, since the present situation requires such action? Why don't they cut taxes right away and let people have more to spend on various products, thus stimulating the economy and creating employment? The government would have been well advised, before bringing down its budget, to pay more attention not only to the various briefs presented to the ministers by that important organization, the chambre de commerce du district de Montréal, but also to the Pearson plan. But instead of that the Minister of Finance chose to bring down a deficit budget, that will do little to restore the economic balance in this country. He is content with granting each Canadian a tax reduction of 49 cents per person.

Last week I read an article written by Mr. Guy Fournier in Le Petit Journal of June 22 1958. I found this article quite amusing. To my mind it is a good indication of the reaction of most of our Canadian people. Here it is:

Our 16 million Canadians will be saving 8 million dollars in taxes between now and the end of this year, that is about 50 cents per capita. That feature of the federal budget brought down Tuesday evening by Hon. Donald Fleming, Minister of Finance, has placed me on the horns of the worst dilemma I have ever encountered in my career as a taxpayer. Here I am, faced with the obligation of saving 50 cents, that is a half dollar. Never in my life have I managed to put aside such a sum and, to use words of the budget, I feel that I will be reduced to a "record peace time effort . . ."

When faced with sums of that magnitude, one has to be serious. So that I may benefit from this windfall, I have to make a choice between the various following solutions.

If I could manage to have myself knocked down by a car—which is the easiest thing in the world in Montreal, especially on Park avenue, down which I go every day—I could deduct from my income the price of the ambulance, on condition however that the medical costs involved are greater than the prescribed minimum.

This had seemed to me a fascinating solution, until it was pointed out to me that it is not easy to obtain an ambulance. I then thought of buying a "culvert for sewers" or "diesel fuel oil for use in generating electricity", two items exempt from federal sales tax.

Alas, I am using the town sewer and I should have bought a diesel motor, especially as I have been told that only municipalities may be exempted.

As a last resource, I considered for a while giving my mother-in-law some flowers, as the minister has repealed the sales tax on "cut flowers". By showering her with posies I might, at the end of the year, save my quota of $0.498 in taxes. The plan was not so bad, but I would rather wait until the government abolishes the sales tax on potted plants!

I had almost finished perusing the budget speech, —without taking a single sip of water, like Mr. Fleming,—when I discovered an item that saved my life.

Believe it or not, but until the end of the year I shall save the 49½ cents allotted to me by the budget.

In stocking up "condiments and food supplements for addition to poultry feed", which have been exempted from sales tax, I shall save 33 cents. And if I buy some material used for seed cleaning, I can add another 17 cents to my savings.

I will complete the $0.496 by purchasing some of that "rodent poison", on which the minister also abolished the tax.

That, Mr. Speaker, told in a somewhat humourous vein, must be the impression that the Canadian people had when the Minister of Finance made his budget speech and, if the situation was not so tragic, we could conclude with Mr. Guy Fournier:

Thanks just the same, Mr. Fleming!

(Text):

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to me to take part in the debate on this budget which is the first budget produced by my old friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). He and I had long worked together in the service of the party to which we belong. We entered parliament together in 1945. We shared a room for the first four years. I have watched with interest and admiration his progress to the position which he now holds which is based on industry, ability and reliability.

That was easy to say and to believe but from here on in it is not so easy. It seems to me it is difficult to support a budget—it is hard suddenly to shift oneself across the gangway—which has not been effectively criticized.

The attitudes toward the budget might really be divided into three classes. There are those who praise it and who are fairly large in number. I am referring now particularly to the press. Then there are those who are neutral, who do not wish to praise it openly but who in the phrase of a friend of mine praise it with faint damns. In their hearts they really praise it but they just do not like to come out and say so. Then of course there are those who really criticize it. I suppose they must be doing it sincerely but in the case of these real criticisms that I have run across, and to which I shall refer later, I confess that with whatever capacity I have for taking a realistic attitude they seem to be so far fetched and so wild that I can hardly believe they uttered them; though they uttered them, I can hardly believe they meant them. I shall refer to those later.

Of course it is perfectly clear that the budget was received with considerable equanimity and why not? It was merely putting into arithmetic what the people knew. The people had been warned in various ways. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had said that if it was a matter of choice between debt and deficit on the one hand and unemployment and suffering on the other hand the choice would be made in favour of the relief of unemployment and suffering. The Minister of Finance said the same thing.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might be permitted to ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Macdonnell: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. gentleman give the occasion on which the Prime Minister said that before June 10, 1957?

Mr. Macdonnell: No. I do not know that I could give the date. The Prime Minister has said that, I believe, both before and after June 10. Of course this was what Canadians voted for on March 31 last. After all, it does not make sense, with Canada's real resources, to permit a temporary world condition to condemn its people to want. As I have already indicated, the press had been pointing out that a slow-down was gradually making itself felt. Happily there are now signs of a turn-up. I should like to quote briefly from the Globe and Mail which said:

In framing his government's first budget, Finance Minister Fleming was compelled to draw a line somewhere between the requirements of an expanding national economy and a drop in revenues imposed upon the nation from external sources.

And again they said:

Instead of being a "sick budget", as described by opposition critics, it offers convalescent aids for an economy whose ills were aggravated by mistaken policies of the late Liberal regime.

Then the Toronto Star, believe it or not, gives the minister grudging praise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Macdonnell: Yes. They said that he overcame what they call "his prejudice against deficit spending in time of recession". The truth is that they had no warrant for believing that any such prejudice existed. But even that fraction of approval from the Star indicates something new.

I should now like to refer to certain signs of approval which occurred and which pleased me, certain signs that things were not as bad as might be suggested in certain quarters. I will read a few headlines, first from the Toronto Telegram on June 18:

Sharp Tightening Anti-Dumping Laws Aids Industry Here

From the Toronto Star, June 18:

Save Fifth of Mill on Sewers—Budget

The new federal budget could have "far-reaching effects" in long-term savings for Metro taxpayers on the huge sewage system program now under way,—

I read another headline from the Montreal Star:

Universities Praise Income Tax Action

I read from the Ottawa Citizen:

Removal of Sales Tax Helps City's Finances

From the Toronto Telegram again:

Applaud Move to Up Tourist Buying in U.K.

The article reads in part:

Ontario Hydro chairman, James Duncan, who served as leader of the Canadian Trade Mission to Britain last fall, today applauded the revision in duty-free purchase allowance for Canadians abroad as an excellent move.

I shall have occasion to say something more about that later. There was even a report—I cannot put my hand on it at the moment—that there was a good deal of pleasure existing or hope given to those who cannot speak for themselves. I refer to the dumb animals. Yes here it is. The Globe and Mail of June 19 says this:

Finance Minister Fleming may not have sent the farmers whooping with glee up and down the concession, but there was one section of his budget speech that seemed certain to bring joy to the hearts of the cows, pigs, chickens and the rest of the barn population.

To be specific, he said it was time the sales tax was removed from "certain agricultural, horticultural and forestry goods" such as "stock conditioners, condiments and food supplements for addition to poultry, cattle and other stock feeds.

In other words, it put a bit of flavour into things at the manger level.

I now want to come briefly to the speech of the financial critic. I rather sympathize with him because I have made some efforts in that line myself. There were the usual phrases that we have heard such as "bluff and bragging", "empty as a bird's nest". Then there was one interesting word that he used, namely "gobbledygook". I suggest that if he looks up the meaning of that word in the dictionary, he might be surprised at the word he has used and he might find it of some interest. I am not going to expose it here and I am not going to spend much time on the hon. member because I thought that the crashing broadsides from my friend the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) fairly well dealt with that speech. However, there is one quotation from the speech upon which I do want to comment seriously because the comment was made seriously, and I believe it is quite misleading. He said this:

One could certainly argue for spending and deficits, if they are not aimless but rather are planned, comprehensive and vigorous enough proposals to provide incentive, to provide lift, to perk up the economy.

Now I suppose it is fair to assume that what the hon. member had in mind when he said that was the kind of thing which was used in the Liberal campaign, and I would now like to refer to some of the promises made. I am anxious to be very clear about all these things which were promised in view of the actions which have been taken since last autumn and the obligations which have been assumed by the government and which are included in the present budget which, as we all know, produced a deficit. In other words, when these proposals by the opposition were made these government proposals were in effect and have been embodied in the budget and, what was proposed was actually an additional deficit of $400 million. These are the figures which were bandied about and I believe it is very important that we should bear in mind that those figures were, and were intended to be, in addition to the measures which had already been announced, carried out and voted upon by the opposition last autumn.

It is interesting to observe that between February, when the campaign began, and the end of March, when it ended, things steamed up a bit and the promises, I thought, became a little more remote and a little less justifiable; in fact, a little more the product, quite obviously, of the excitement of the moment. I do not propose to go into details too deeply but I would like to quote from the Ottawa Citizen of February 10 last, where there was a headline saying, "Advances Plan for More Jobs in New Boom." We were going to have a new boom! Then there were all the other things—the marriage tax allowance, the basic exemption for married couples in the first three years $4,000 instead of $2,000; lower income tax; special reduction of excise tax on cars; aid for small business; municipal loans; highways; social security and youth. I will spare you the rest of the details.

On the same day, as reported on February 11 in the Gazette we had a headline, "Crash Program for Jobless Promised". The use of the word is interesting—it might have been a different kind of crash from that which was intended, but at any rate that was the word used. This is a Canadian Press item quoted from the Gazette of February 11, and it says:

His election platform—

This is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), of course—

—outlined at a press conference was centred on an unemployment crash program—

But it included a wide range of promises from $400 million worth of tax cuts to special aids for cities and towns and outlying regions. It would appear, therefore, that my figure of $400 million was conservative, because this was to be $400 million plus. Then we get a further report on March 22 when the Leader of the Opposition was at a great party in Toronto which was described in the Ottawa Citizen of that date as a carnival. They were having a great time and, by the way, there was a really delightful and new idea at this party—six tax free weeks. A tax cut for six weeks. There is something very nice about that, something that attracts everyone. We all in our hearts disapprove of taxes and we all feel the world would be a much better place if there were no taxes. Here the Leader of the Opposition was going to give us six tax free weeks, and I am sure he felt he was really going to do something! It is perhaps fair to point out that this was done in what is described as a carnival spirit, for the newspaper said:

> The Liberal leader announced the new pledge to rousing cheers from some 2,800 party workers gathered in carnival spirit at a Massey hall rally. Clowns, horn-tooters, bands, balloons, confetti and other stage gimmicks enlivened the rally as the 18 Toronto and York Liberal candidates were introduced.

It does not say that the Liberal leader was a clown but it says there were clowns there and horns and tooters and balloons and confetti and other such gimmicks. There is a sour note at the end; the reports says in the last paragraph that only one of the 18 Liberal candidates in this area was elected in the last parliament. Perhaps it is not very kind to remember that that one member is now cold and dead, and I think it is fair to excuse the Leader of the Opposition in the midst of all this confetti and horns and tooters and clowns. We should deal very gently with him under these circumstances and not be unkind.

There is one other quotation I would like to give, this time from the Windsor Star of March 14, which is headed, "Takes Aim at P.M." This refers to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), who was calling for tax reductions to improve the purchasing power of Canadians, the immediate removal of the excise tax on automobiles and the provision of missile orders for the automobile industry. I presume these missiles were to be used in the ordinary course of warfare and were not in any sense directed against the Conservative party but at any rate this was his contribution to the situation. Some of these suggestions had as I said a romantic appeal; for instance the double exemption for young married people, and as I say, nothing was left undone to attract people.

These are the things which I presume the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) had in mind when he spoke of perking up the economy, and it therefore seems to me that we might have expected some of these proposals in the amendment proposed. But there was nothing to warrant that belief in the amendment. Where are all these ideas? They were not nailed to the mast and I imagine they have been thrown overboard by now.

Here is the wording of the amendment, which I think is rather an anaemic affair:

> This house regrets that the government, in its budget proposals, has failed to cope satisfactorily with the problems of the recession in spite of the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history and that it is moving towards greater trade restrictions at a time when other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction.

I will have a little more to say on trade restrictions in a few moments, but I feel that certain fellows of the baser sort are trying to exaggerate such matters. However, nothing in the resolution talks of any of this $400 million proposal. All it suggests is that we have failed to cope satisfactorily with the recession. They knew what we were doing and in fact they voted for many of the things we have done, so if anyone knew what was coming, they knew.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had a good deal to say about the failure of the Minister of Finance to provide what he calls anti-recession medicine. I would like to say a word about that. The Minister of Finance, I consider, outlined very clearly and simply the things which might be done. He divided them into three parts and discussed them all—tax reduction, public investment and income maintenance. Let us look at these three divisions.

Firstly, tax reductions amounting to $178 million; public investment under housing, as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) pointed out, provided for 100,000 men being employed under the far-reaching credit arrangements made. Housing, resource development, improvement in transportation; tens and tens of millions have been spent in those fields.

Then, again, there has been assistance to provinces and municipalities; and in income maintenance there have been increases in old age pensions, veterans benefits, unemployment insurance, to name only some of the things which have been done and in my opinion the Minister of Finance was justified in referring to this as involving expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars, and he went on to say —and he was justified, too—that the timing was good. I think the timing was very good. If hon. members will remember, the housing industry, which had been lagging, was stimulated last summer and the results since then have really been quite remarkable.

Other things were done at the same time which prevented the recession going further, and I think that while governments must not take too much to themselves we are entitled to take credit for the fact that the comparison with the United States, for example, is now greatly to our advantage. Retail sales in Canada are ahead of last year, while in the United States they are 6 per cent down. Production in Canada is down by 5 per cent; in the United States it has declined by 12 or 13 per cent. I think that is a fair comment on what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had to say about anti-recession measures.

Now I come to the criticism which has been made by our old friend the Winnipeg Free Press. The Winnipeg Free Press permits itself some comments on the tariff proposals which have been made by the government comments which—and I am trying to choose my words carefully—I can only regard as wholly irresponsible. There is an old adage which says that speaks of the person who given an inch takes an ell. But if you give the Winnipeg Free Press an inch, they take a mile.

On the one hand, the paper admits that "the immediate tariff changes are not large" but adds:

> Mr. Fleming left no doubt that they are merely a start of what is to come. Even so, they spit in the face—

This delicate language may perhaps result from the putting of heads together between the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River who used gobbledygook and the editor of the Free Press.

> —of the British proposal to free and increase trade with Canada; they raise our tariff against one of the things—woollens—that Britain can best sell to us.
> In one small move, the government has made nonsense of all the talk about more trade with Britain with which it attracted votes. Where we will be when it gets beyond the small beginnings is almost past imagination.

Now I should like to try to deal with these wild and irresponsible utterances in sensible language if I can. First, some comments on the facts of the tariff changes. All the tariff changes are extremely small—

Mr. Pickersgill: Like the housemaid's baby.

Mr. Macdonnell: Some are up, some are down. It is not quite clear whether the net result will turn out to be a rise in tariffs at all. As regards some important items—iron and steel, pipes and tubes and others—the result was really simplification and modification without any significant change up or down. They were also presented to the GATT signatories as a balanced package of increases and reductions and they were accepted as such.

The Free Press concentrates particularly on the wool tariff, as is to be expected. This industry had a special claim on humanitarian grounds. Yes, I repeat it, and I do not apologize for the word "humanitarian". The industry, as pointed out by the tariff board, which is not a sentimental organization, is by and large a small town industry. As the tariff board report points out:

> Very often even today it is the industrial backbone of semi-rural communities. It is currently giving employment to several thousand Canadians . . . Partly because of its long association with scores of localities, it is part of the warp and woof of Canadian life.

I suppose it comes as near to being an indigenous Canadian industry as you could get. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) smiles, but I ask him to think it over. I make that statement seriously and if he will himself inquire as to the number of these small mills there are in small communities in Canada I think he will realize there is a good deal to be said in favour of it. I continue quoting from the tariff board:

> Often in its own area it provides the only opening for skilled and semi-skilled labour.

This action is in accord with a statement made by the Prime Minister on June 5 to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in the following words:

> On the domestic front, the government of Canada cannot be content merely with a high gross national product. We are concerned, in addition, with the welfare of each individual citizen. The constant objective must be to attain for each individual his fair share of the produce of this land, and this can only come about in a condition of fullest employment.

Moreover, earnest attempts are being made to make up to the British the loss which will be incurred. A special concession to enable tourists to buy more in the United Kingdom without having to pay duty, will help in this regard.

In addition the Prime Minister said:

> The tariff board's recommendations relating to wool fabrics involve a change only in the British preferential tariff. For the time being the present most favoured nation rates, as bound under the GATT will continue to apply. But it is our intention to renegotiate item 554b as soon as possible with a view to restoring the margin of British preference.

I suggest that in these circumstances even the most convinced free trader would find it hard to resist the argument, particularly in view of the promise which the minister has given.

I should like here in answer to the Free Press and its wild statements to recall, briefly, what the minister said about the broad trade objectives.

> 1. To achieve expansion, diversification, better balance, and greater stability in our trade with all countries;
> 2. To extend and strengthen Canada's trade and economic relationships with the commonwealth;
> 3. To support and promote a regime of law, order and morality in the field of international trade; to respect the spirit and intent of international commitments; and to stand ready to defend our rights and interests if they are challenged or ignored;

And I should like to interpose here for the benefit of the Free Press to remind them that we in this party have welcomed GATT, supported it from the outset and regarded it as part and parcel of our economic life ever since. I go on to quote from the minister:

> 4. To recognize the legitimate needs of Canadian producers; and to safeguard them against unfair trading practices;
> 5. To promote the balanced growth of all sections of Canadian industry and agriculture.

Now I come to the second and perhaps even more preposterous criticism of the Free Press. In the same issue that paper charged the Diefenbaker government with what it calls "a great deception". Let us see what this great deception is. According to the Free Press, the Minister of Finance last December "refused to look ahead to the fiscal year in which the tax cuts would have their effect. Now, he says the principal tax changes affecting the present fiscal year were introduced and approved by parliament last December."

The Free Press continues:

> They were made, but, as Mr. Fleming now admits,—

I think that is wholly incorrect.

> —they were made without an accounting for the year that they, together with all the government's spending plans, actually affect. This is the great deception of which the Diefenbaker government is guilty. In the election it went to the country with its measures but without the bill for them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perfectly true.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. Macdonnell: How far can captious criticism go? On December 6 last the Minister of Finance set out the effect of the total tax reduction in a full year. In the course of his speech he also pointed out that there had been an increase of some $100 million in public service salaries. He referred to the effect of increase in old age pension, veterans benefits, dealings with the provinces, and gave the total. Moreover, the legislation involving the increases was passed unanimously in the House of Commons, and everyone was aware of what was going on. To refer to this as a "great deception" is simply a misuse of the English language. There is no foundation for it whatever. The Canadian Tax Foundation and any other intelligent observer was able to calculate with considerable accuracy the amount of the deficit before it came.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance could not calculate his own deficit.

Mr. Macdonnell: Oh, come now.

Mr. Pickersgill: He said there would be an $80 million surplus and there was a $40 million deficit within three months and if that isn't deception—

Mr. Macdonnell: Well, things happened within those three months—

Mr. Pickersgill: They certainly did.

Mr. Macdonnell: —and they were events outside the control of even such an august person as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the privilege?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said, "If that isn't deception—" referring to statements of mine in this house. That is not a proper remark to make. It is not parliamentary and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. Chevrier: Picayune.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest pleasure in withdrawing the remark and substituting "an egregious error".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is at least parliamentary.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): And it is 53 years old, too.

Mr. Chevrier: You should not interrupt your colleague's speech this way.

Mr. Harkness: Nor should you.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, I am enjoying this.

Mr. Macdonnell: The third criticism I wish to mention, Mr. Speaker, is taken from a publication for which I have great respect, the Financial Post, in these words:

> One of the most astonishing assertions in the budget speech is that which, by implication, declares our export industries to be of little or no importance. And here we refer to Mr. Fleming's satisfaction with the continuing premium on the Canadian dollar over the American dollar.

The Financial Post attributes by implication what they call a most astonishing assertion by the Minister of Finance that he "declares our export industry to be of little or no import". All that the minister did was this. In the course of his statement on the financial situation he naturally had to deal with the Canadian dollar. He gave a simple, straightforward statement pointing out the advantages and disadvantages to exporters and importers of the premium on the Canadian dollar. Here are some of his words spoken on June 17, 1958, as recorded at page 1234 of Hansard:

> —a change in the external value of the Canadian dollar brings gains to some Canadians and losses for others. The exchange rate is determined by the interplay of forces operating in the exchange market through their effect on the supply of and demand for United States and Canadian dollars. While our exchange fund is used to limit the effect of short-run fluctuations in these forces, we do not attempt to reverse persistent market trends.

Could a more matter of fact, detached, realistic statement of the situation be imagined? And yet the newspaper permits itself to read into this statement a declaration that our export industries are of little or no importance.

I wish to add a word about the Canadian dollar. The Canadian dollar was set free in 1950 without any serious question being raised either inside parliament or out. The compelling reason was that with the heavy influx of money from outside Canada it was found extremely difficult to control speculation in Canadian funds and the financial authorities felt in these circumstances it was in Canada's best interest to set the dollar free. So far as I can ascertain, since then there has been no request from any responsible Canadian quarter that the dollar should be again pegged. I leave the matter there. I can only hope that the Financial Post for which I have great respect will recede from the position it has taken.

And now just a word or two about the recent speech of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). What a grand time the hon. member had the other day in speaking in the budget debate. What free wheeling, slashing and swashbuckling! He really had a gale behind him with all the sails full and drawing well. I am sure he enjoyed himself. If I may mix sail and steam I would comment that he was under such a full head of steam that I shall not attempt to follow him in his headlong career. I will quote only one of his hyperboles as recorded at page 1470 of Hansard of June 20, 1958:

> I had expected until a very few weeks ago . . . that the government would continue for some time on the road it took last session, a road of progressive legislation, a road to improve the economic lot of the ordinary people of the country.

I must thank the hon. member for Assiniboia for those kind words. I think I should read that sentence again:

> I had expected until a very few weeks ago . . . that the government would continue for some time on the road it took last session, a road of progressive legislation, a road to improve the economic lot of the ordinary people of the country.

I regret that the hon. member for Assiniboia is not in his seat to accept my thanks for his accurate description of the legislative program of this government. However, he went on to say:

> But I have been fooled. They have now halted that forward progress. . . . Last session we saw the progressive face of the Progressive Conservative party but now we see the conservative face, the Tory face with the mask off.

What fun the hon. member must have had saying that. The name of our party is a double-barrelled name and the hon. member could not resist the temptation of making a contrast. I am sure it pleased him and his colleagues.

Mr. Deschatelets: What he said is quite true, you know.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am coming to that in a moment and after you have heard what I am going to suggest I believe you will change your mind about that.

I am glad that the hon. member for Assiniboia felt that last autumn we were on the road of progressive legislation. I would suggest to him that this change which he describes so dramatically is a change only in his own mind. Let the hon. member go and read the speech from the throne delivered on May 12 last. He will find that it is still full of progressive legislation, that it is still the intention of this government to improve the economic lot of the ordinary people of the country. As I have said, I suppose our double-barreled name intrigued him and drew him on to make that statement in which he really accused us of having a split personality. The Conservative party does not have a split personality. In spite of his fulminations the hon. member does have moments of realism and I suggest that if he will take the cure I have prescribed for him he will come back and say that his wild statements were not justified.

I have been advised that my time has almost expired—perhaps I have become too enthusiastic, too,—but I wish to speak about the commonwealth conference about which a great deal has been said in this house. I want to recall that on March 27, 1957, the present Prime Minister asked the then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, who had just returned from a meeting in Bermuda with President Eisenhower and Mr. Macmillan—and I think Sir David Eccles and Mr. C. D. Howe the then minister of trade and commerce were in attendance too—if there had been any discussion of a trade and economic conference and the answer was highly unsatisfactory. The then prime minister indicated that apparently Mr. Macmillan had some idea concerning a conference to be called in London but as far as one could judge from reading the record it had not greatly excited Mr. St. Laurent. It did not seem to mean very much to him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): His time is almost up.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the hon. gentleman recalls that that proposed prime ministers' conference was not an economic conference at all.

Mr. Macdonnell: I tried to make clear what Mr. St. Laurent said about the views of Mr. Macmillan and I submit that no one reading the record would come away with the feeling that Mr. St. Laurent was interested in the proposal for the holding of a commonwealth economic conference. But what about our present Prime Minister? The present Prime Minister was sworn in on June 21 and on June 23 he went to London to attend the prime ministers' commonwealth conference. I would like to recall what Mr. Macmillan said in this room just ten days ago as recorded at page 1150 of Hansard of June 13, 1958. Addressing the Prime Minister, the prime minister of the United Kingdom said:

> —you came post haste from a general election to the commonwealth prime ministers' conference. I shall always admire the way in which you arrived almost at a day's notice.

That is quite true. He continued:

> Nor can I forget that at that conference by your inspiration and persistence there were sown the seeds of the commonwealth trade and economic conference to which we are looking forward with such high hopes.

Although my time is short I want to say that the preparations for that conference are being pursued with the greatest energy. The Minister of Finance has been holding meetings of ministers and senior civil servants. There has been a preliminary meeting in London at which civil servants from all over the commonwealth have been taking part. There is no doubt but that this proposition has been considered in the most serious way. I am sorry I have not time to say more about it but I would like to go on to my conclusion.

I believe this is a good budget and when people look back on it they will realize that it was a compound of cautious realism and temperate and constructive courage. That is what I believe and I believe in their hearts that is what other people believe. I would suggest to hon. gentlemen opposite that they realize it was a very good thing that their promise of a $400 million larger deficit was not taken up by the Canadian people.

I would also like to say that in this budget there is optimism but there is also wise warning. The minister said in his closing paragraph at page 1250 of Hansard:

> But we live in a world of realities.
> Moreover, I confess my concern over costs of production and prices in Canada. Only by keeping our costs of production in line with those of our competitors can we hope to achieve expanding employment and progressive improvement in our standard of living.

Farther on the minister said:

> I echo the warnings issued by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to all sections of the Canadian people in appealing to all, whether employers, employees or self-employed, to have regard for the general interest in the returns they seek for their services and products. One must depend upon the sense of responsibility of free men and women not to demand more than their fair share of the national income.

He then went on to proclaim the fact that the role of government is limited, and that in a democracy the burden comes down squarely on the shoulders of every individual citizen. I believe the Minister of Finance has shown us the way to work through our present difficulties and to emerge on a new level where we shall be able to resume the advance temporarily interrupted.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, before I deal with some of the matters that are contained in the address of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) I want to take half a minute to say something else to the minister. I express the hope that before he grants any further financial aid to this fair capital city of Ottawa, or to the federal district commission, he take serious note of the warning that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) and I sounded in this house last week when we appealed for the abolition of firetraps in this city. I regret very much to read in this morning's newspaper that yet another human life has been lost because of fire in the slums of Ottawa within a stone's throw of the beautiful parliament hill. I feel it is very poor policy indeed for the minister to want to spend millions of dollars to build a beautiful green belt around Ottawa when the heart of the city is in such urgent need of redevelopment and renovation.

On Monday last I had the privilege of spending a day in the most beautiful part of Canada, the lower mainland of British Columbia. Because of the kindness of the soviet ambassador in Ottawa a number of members of parliament were finally put on a par with the members from Ontario and Quebec in that we for once were able to spend a weekend at home. However, when I was at home I was profoundly shocked to find, at this very early date after the election, the extent to which this government had already lost the confidence of those who had voted for it as late as March 31 last. We have previously warned in this house that this new government which was elected with such an unprecedented majority was in this position. The expectations of action on the part of this government were higher in the minds of the people than they had ever been in any government in Canadian history. Because those expectations were so high therein might lie the reason for some of the disappointment of the people at the present time. Now that they have read about the budget the disappointment will be even worse. Perhaps it was reflected in the results of the election on Monday last in the province of Manitoba, where the Campbell government held much firmer than most Canadians had expected it to hold, where the C.C.F. representation in that house was increased by more than 100 per cent and the Conservative vote in the course of 11 short weeks was sliced in half, and all this despite the very hard efforts of all the Manitoba members in this House of Commons, who left the ship of state at Ottawa to take part in that election campaign. I know they will faithfully record their absenteeism when they collect their wages at the end of this month.

While in British Columbia I spoke to the farmers there. They are disappointed. They are disappointed because as a floor price is established for one commodity after another it is becoming obvious to them that they are going to be guaranteed 80 per cent of the income they had been receiving. The government's promise of last session that the greatest regard would be paid to the cost of production seems to be entirely ignored in the floor prices that are being set up. Our unemployed are still unemployed. I believe this week the supplementary insurance benefits expire. Our unemployed are now faced with the unpleasant and humiliating task of becoming wards of public or private charity, or of becoming a burden on their local municipal relief officers. It is no longer good enough for this Conservative government to say that the Liberals are to blame for the present high level of unemployment.

This past week the Tory party celebrated its first year in office, and after one full year in office the unemployed of Canada are no longer satisfied with the Tory government blaming the Liberals for the plight in which they find themselves. For a married man with a family, with monthly payments on his home and taxes on his home which are growing each year, with payments for furniture, medical bills, and so on, there had been some hope in the Diefenbaker announcement that no one would suffer because of unemployment. However, they have been unemployed since last fall and if our government members think that unemployment insurance over a course of six or seven months in the case of married families will prevent suffering, then maybe they ought to attempt to exist on that measly weekly allowance for six or seven months and I am sure they would agree that they had suffered.

If those unemployed cannot find work in the summertime—and we are now nearing the middle of summer—what will their lot be next winter? The prosperity corner of the late R. B. Bennett is becoming very round indeed for the unemployed of Canada.

The small businessmen to whom I spoke were also filled with great expectation. We are told that the small businessman is now receiving the consideration of this government. According to newspaper reports it may be that the small businessman is going to be able to receive advice—I presume advice as to how he can run his business, how he can get more hours of work out of his employees or out of his family in the grocery store. At any rate, advice is going to be given, I understand, by a special branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The workers who are now employed, and they still constitute the vast number of Canadian people, are living in constant fear that their services may no longer be needed. We see lay-offs in many industries involving thousands of men with many, many long years of service. I refer to railway workers especially. Some years ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) claimed in this house that the lay-offs of men in railway yards were completely unnecessary and yet now, time after time, he tells us that nothing can be done to help the unemployed railway workers.

Other workers are finding each day that the taxes on their homes and other costs of living are rising month by month. They note the net earnings of their employers, and yet when they ask for a share in the earnings of the corporation to meet these rising costs of living and to bring their wages in line with their growing productivity, they have not only the bosses to contend with across the bargaining table but they now find that even the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), at Winnipeg, has told them to hold the line. Even the Minister of Finance said in his budget speech, as recorded at page 1250 of Hansard.

> I echo the warnings issued by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to all sections of the Canadian people in appealing to all, whether employers, employees or self-employed, to have regard for the general interest in the returns they seek for their services and products.

Now labour is fully aware of what that warning of the minister means. The minister, however, nullifies his own plea with the preceding remark to this statement when he says:

> —but to an important extent prices are the result of competition among the various economic groups which compose our nation, each striving for a greater share of the national product.

Then, later on he says this:

> This budget has been born of confidence in Canada's future, not blind wishful thinking, but unshrinking realism.

I wish the government would use a little bit of this unshrinking realism when it advises labour to hold the line in its dealings with employers. When labour is at the bargaining table they have to consider whether the corporation with which they are bargaining can pay higher wages and remain in business. Labour has to consider the effect that a strike might have on their own immediate families and on their communities. Labour has to consider the public inconvenience that might follow if they withhold their labour. Labour has to consider what bargaining power the organization really has. However, let us use some of this realism and admit that as long as we maintain our present economic setup the employer will charge all that the traffic will bear. If he does not, in modern day circles he is considered an inefficient businessman. All these people, our unemployed, our workers, our farmers and our small businessmen expected action to be outlined either in the speech from the throne or in the budget speech.

This budget is a typical Harris budget. I would not go so far as to say it was an Abbott budget. Somewhere along the line a few years ago the Liberal party lost its way and it became an ultraconservative party. Possibly Mr. Harris was the perfect example of that. I find very little difference between the language of the first Conservative budget and the last one introduced by the Hon. Mr. Harris, the last Liberal minister of finance.

There is nothing in the budget that is really of any major significance for these people. Oh, yes, in the budget there is an announcement that we are going to borrow more money. The government is going to borrow $200 for every man, woman and child in Canada during this fiscal year. They are going to borrow an unprecedented amount. We do not oppose deficit financing, but at the same time we recognize it as a tool with which the capitalistic system can occasionally give itself a shot in the arm. We allow excess profits to be taken year after year. We allow the farmers and workers to be denied the fruits of their labour, and then things come to an end. Then we turn around and have to borrow this money back from these people who wrongly took it from the farmers and the workers in the first place. All that is left of the farmers and workers is that they must pay back the money and pay interest on that money which is rightfully theirs. Deficit financing is very decidedly not a socialist approach. If you did not keep denying the workers the fruits of their labour you would not run into this snag where you have to borrow back this money in order to get it back into circulation.

Before asking labour to offer any co-operation in the solution of our problem let us consider what has been done to labour over the past several years. I am always a little surprised at some of our Christians who wonder why the task of the missionary amongst the coloured races of the world is so difficult. The answer is not very difficult to find. The Christians entered the areas of the world inhabited by the coloured peoples, they exploited them to the hilt and then, by way of the Christian church missionary societies, used a tiny fraction of their ill-gotten gains from the sweat of the coloured man in an attempt to reform the coloured man to the Christian faith. If labour is supposed to hold the line, they certainly expect a little more than pious appeals to the employers of Canada that they hold the line. Pious appeals are just laughed at by these people when they meet in the board rooms. It is a sign of weakness today for a business administrator to exercise any compassion, to respond to an appeal of this type.

I should refer specifically to what the minister did say. I should like to compliment the minister upon the goodly number of admissions that he made during the course of his speech. On page 1231 of Hansard, he said, referring to the past 18 months:

In Canada unemployment emerged as a serious problem—

The minister says that over the past 18 months unemployment has emerged as a serious problem, a fact that they were denying in this house last fall. In fact it was not until after New Year's that government benches began admitting the emergence of some unemployment. For many long months they intended to label it, and did label it, as merely seasonal or regional. Now the minister in his budget speech says that for 18 months unemployment was becoming a serious problem in Canada. Why did the Prime Minister not tell the electorate that before March 31, instead of informing the electorate he could assure them we were past the peak so far as unemployment was concerned. If anyone ever deliberately, at election time, misled the people of Canada, it was the Conservative party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has just allowed himself to say that the Prime Minister deliberately misled the Canadian people. This is an entirely offensive expression. It is untrue to begin with, but quite apart from that it is completely unparliamentary and I ask that the hon. member be required to withdraw it.

Mr. Chevrier: If I understand the hon. gentleman rightly, the statement was made outside of the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. He just made it right now.

Mr. Chevrier: The statement was made concerning activities outside the house. If he is referring to a statement made concerning activities outside of the house, then it is not unparliamentary language, I submit.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was not paying attention. In any event, he has completely missed the point. I am referring to something that has just now been said in this house and it has been said in terms that are not permitted in this house. It is not permitted to one hon. member to say of another hon. member that he deliberately misled. That is unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the point of order is this. The minister objects to the expression used about the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) namely that he deliberately misled the electorate.

Mr. Regier: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that if the Minister of Finance had not been so hasty in rising to his feet he would full well have heard that what I said was that this was deliberate deception on the part of the Conservative party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That does not help the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is perfectly proper and normal.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. gentleman who has been asked to withdraw certain words now says that he did not apply them to the Prime Minister but to the Conservative party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But, Mr. Speaker, he did say that of the Prime Minister. He used the expression "the Prime Minister".

Mr. Argue: You have to accept his word for it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not accept his word as to something that was said in this house. He has used the words "the Prime Minister deliberately misled the electorate". Those words are not parliamentary and, Mr. Speaker, I ask that you direct that he withdraw them.

Mr. Speaker: Let us understand clearly what is the point of order and what we are discussing. As I understand it, the point of objection that was taken was that the words complained of referred to the Prime Minister, that he had deliberately misled the electorate. The hon. member now says that he did not say that of the Prime Minister but that he said it of the Conservative party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, he can say that he wishes to withdraw earlier words and substitute something else but he did use the words that the Prime Minister had deliberately misled the Canadian people and I ask that they be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that if the hon. member used the words or that if they could have been taken as referring to the Prime Minister he withdraws them with respect to the Prime Minister and that his reference is to the Conservative party generally? Is that the position?

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I said that, in the Prime Minister assuring the people that we were past the peak in so far as unemployment was concerned, that was a deliberate deception on the part of the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Regier: The minister was rising and did not listen to the last half of my sentence.

Mr. Speaker: From what the hon. member now says it is clear that the imputation is that what the Prime Minister said was a deliberate misleading of the electorate. That is the point I shall have to consider, as to whether or not that is an infringement of the rules of this house.

Mr. Chevrier: May I say a word, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I shall be glad to hear hon. members who have some views on this matter because it is a rather important one.

Mr. Chevrier: All I want to say is that if Your Honour rules that this expression is unparliamentary, I am afraid that many similar expressions will have to be eradicated from Hansard because on more than one occasion it has been stated that an hon. member has deliberately misled the house. While I am sure that those who state it refers to the Prime Minister do not like it, nevertheless my submission is that if it applies in this case then surely the words should be withdrawn in so far as the other cases are concerned which have come up from time to time in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear in the decisions that have been made in similar situations that the use of the word "deliberately" makes the expression "mislead" completely unparliamentary. It imputes to an hon. member a dishonourable course of conduct and that is the essence of the point that is now before you. The statement was not that a member of this house had misled someone. It might be argued then that that statement is not unparliamentary because it does not necessarily impute that it was done deliberately. But the hon. member said that the Prime Minister had deliberately misled the people, and that was his expression. No kind of argument on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite will change the fact that it has been the clear course of decisions in this house that to say that an hon. member has misled someone deliberately is imputing to him a dishonourable course of conduct; and that language has been ruled to be completely unparliamentary and in similar situations has been directed to be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of any specific precedents I should like to give some consideration to this matter. I think there is a clear distinction between the imputation of an unintentional act and the imputation of a deliberate intention. Certainly if the expression used had been "misled"—and I recall that expression has often been applied or used from both sides of the house—there could be little objection. Unless the hon. member wishes to modify his statement, I shall have to take it under consideration and deal with it later.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I will say that what I meant to say, and what I still believe I did say, was not that the Prime Minister deliberately misled the people but that the Conservative party, in having the Prime Minister make that statement in Vancouver, deliberately misled the Canadian people. If that statement is unparliamentary, I withdaw it; but that was the intent of my statement.

An hon. Member: That is even worse.

Mr. Speaker: I shall have to give this matter some thought because I am not sure but that the point is well taken, even as the hon. member has re-expressed it. If he left his allegation as one against the party generally I would not feel it necessary to deal further with the matter. Perhaps he will modify his statement to that extent. But if he will not do so I will consider the matter and give a decision on it later.

Mr. Regier: In order to save you time, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw any implication I may have made as to the integrity of the Prime Minister of Canada. However, my challenge to the Conservative party remains.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for making my course easier.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue my remarks and to turn to something the minister had to say as reported at page 1231 of Hansard in reporting on agriculture. He said this:

> There was a moderate gain of one per cent in the volume of non-agricultural production, but agricultural output declined as a result of the smaller western grain crop.

We in this section of the house greatly regret the decline in our production. In the last week we had in this city a guest from India. In speaking to the people in Ottawa he again sharply reminded us that one-third of the world is always undernourished, that a further third of the world is usually undernourished and that only one-third of the people have enough of the things of life at most times. As long as such urgent need exists for the labour of our hands we ought to be engaged in all-out production.

At page 1232 of Hansard I notice another admission of the minister when he says this:

> Following the recession of 1953-54 there was a new period of expansion—

And then he goes on to say this:

> As a result, world capacity in metals, fuels and forest products was enlarged much more rapidly than demand, and Canada, an important source of these materials, experienced the full force of this expansion.
> Early in 1957 many commodity markets moved into a position of over-supply. The doubts created by these particular developments began to affect the plans for further expansion. In particular, this began to make itself felt in the resource industries, and as a mood of caution began to develop it spread to other industries. By mid-1957 the value of large capital projects being started began to run behind the value of projects being completed.

And then later on he says:

During 1957, however, the competition for loan funds became less active as the year progressed—

Here is another lie of the Tory party. The Tory party has claimed that they were responsible for relaxing the tight money policy when this was not so. The minister in his own words at page 1232 gives an honest appraisal of the situation when he says there was a decline in investment for which he gives reasons, and that there was a decline in capital expansion. Then he sums it up in one sentence when he says:

During 1957, however, the competition for loan funds became less active as the year progressed.

The net earnings of Canadian corporations began to decline and there seemed to be an over-supply of goods produced. Alarm was beginning to be felt and there was hesitancy to further the productive capacity of the Canadian nation. Therefore money became available for other social needs of the people, and that is the basic reason why it is now easier to obtain money for the municipalities. It is also easier for individuals wishing to do business with their chartered banks to obtain money, and all this big hullabaloo of what the Tory party has done to break the tight money policy stranglehold ought to be thrown out of the window by anyone who knows anything of the movement of large masses of capital. I do not believe the minister can cite one single fact with respect to any action of his or of any other member of the government which has had any effect on the relaxation of the tight money policy.

On page 1232 of Hansard the minister has something else rather significant to say, which is as follows:

Expenditure on durable goods, however, showed practically no increase over the previous year, reflecting in part the slower growth of incomes—

This is an admission that labour's income is not the reason that labour's productivity was increased.

—but also the rapid expansion in 1955 and 1956 which was based upon large increases in consumer credit.

In various debates in this house we have attempted to warn the government that the consumers of Canada were being oversold in that their buying was putting them into the position of accepting goods for which they did not have the money. We warned of the dangers, and the minister now admits that the market in Canada was oversold as far as the supply of money in the hands of the consumers was concerned. He said at page 1233:

Corporate profits declined by 11 per cent as costs rose and markets became more competitive. Other investment income, which includes rentals and bond interest, rose by 11 per cent.

When we compare the plight of Canadian corporations with that of the unemployed we must recognize that the costs of the depression are not being borne equally by the people of Canada.

Then the minister does an amazing thing; he completely brushes aside the old Tory concept that progress within our country is the result of the personal savings of individuals. At page 1233 he refers to such things as depreciation allowances and undistributed profits as being part of total savings. He says that in 1957 business saving—according to his definition that is depreciation allowance and undistributed profits—as a whole was little changed from 1956, accounting for about three-quarters of total saving. Personal saving was down about 5 per cent and, he said, accounted for almost one-quarter of total saving.

The money for the industrial expansion in Canada does not come from the poor widow's mite. This money, by the admission of the minister himself, or three-quarters of it, comes from depreciation allowances and undistributed profits. For the benefit of the readers of Hansard, that means after the payment of dividends there was left depreciation allowances and undeclared dividends of some $4,500 million last year, three times as much as the savings of individuals.

On page 1234 of Hansard the minister says:

The rise in consumer prices offset about half the increase in average wage rates so that advance in real income during the year was about two per cent.

In this connection I would refer to a speech he made, I believe in Waterloo, some weeks ago, when he admitted that labour productivity has risen by 3 per cent per annum in each of the last ten years. Now he says that the advance of real income has been about 2 per cent, which means he is admitting that labour is not receiving its share of the increase in its productivity.

We in the C.C.F. group place the welfare of the people ahead of the welfare of our political organization. It is therefore with a great deal of regret that we see so many warnings which we have made in past years emerge as fact. These facts are now admitted by the minister. We would much rather have been wrong in our analysis of what has been happening in this country in order that our people should not be suffering today. We do however appreciate that throughout the budget speech the Minister of Finance repeatedly admitted the correctness of our position and we hope before long he will begin to apply a number of the remedies we offer from time to time.

The falling off in the domestic and world markets has caused serious unemployment which has been realized by the minister, who has admitted that while we have expanded our productive capacity such expansion has not been accompanied by a corresponding growth in markets. The minister has also admitted that our social investments have not kept pace with and have been sacrificed to the rapid industrial expansion.

The minister further admits that any inflation we have had is still very much with us and that the danger can be a very real one if there should be an upswing in economic activities. He has also brushed aside the old concept that individual savings bring about the growth of our industrial society. While we appreciate his honest analysis we regret that the budget seems to be completely bankrupt of any proposals for successfully meeting our perplexing problems. In fact nothing is offered which is of any significance. The government offers to borrow in this fiscal year $200 per capita, and then turns around and offers by way of aid to the municipalities the grandiose sum of 35 cents per capita. In fact, all it is offering to the Canadian people, if added together, amounts I believe to $1.65 per capita. The huge corporations brush aside the minister's pious appeal and continue to charge all the traffic will bear and so far as the farmer, the worker and the unemployed man is concerned, there is nothing in the budget that will help them very much. The people sacrificed nothing when they elected this government but it is perhaps characteristic of human nature that people do expect to get something for nothing.

At this time of uncertainty, when a bold and imaginative program on the part of the government is so badly needed to restore public confidence, the people must surely realize, after looking at the budget, that this government is nothing but the lackey of big business; that the Conservative party found itself a good advertising agency, organized its circus, had a real clown as leader—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I ask you to take notice of the fact that the hon. member has referred to the leader of the government as a clown. I ask having regard to the decencies of parliamentary procedure in this house you ask him to withdraw that term.

Mr. Speaker: I have no doubt that the term is offensive, and standing order 35 says no hon. member may use offensive words against either house or against any member thereof. However, it is not the sort of word I feel I should ask the hon. member to withdraw, because it is among the order of words which do not reflect upon a man's character or motives. Nevertheless, I hope the hon. member will observe the rule, though if it were interpreted in its literal sense rather than its meaning as it has been applied it would rule out a good deal of what is said in this house. I do not feel I can ask him to withdraw the term, but I would ask the hon. member to remember that the debate is on principles rather than on personalities.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the part played by the right hon. gentleman during the election campaign.

For the unemployed, for the workers, for the farmers, and for the only real free enterpriser, the small businessman, there is no tax relief of any significance, no full employment program, no restoration of the domestic markets, and no program for expanded trade. The minister, in the budget, has admitted the evils that beset us. It is unfortunate for all of us that this government is either unable or unwilling to apply the remedies that are necessary. We do not want an economy planned for us by monopolistic corporations, we do not want an economy planned by any one political party, but we do want an economy planned for and by the people of Canada through the medium of a freely-elected parliament and government.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, after the chilling socialist snow which has fallen in this chamber perhaps a little sunshine from Alberta will serve to dispel some of the gloom. It is a great privilege to stand in this chamber and take the time of this house to tell you something of that fine constituency I have the honour to represent. It is called Athabasca, a name which comes from the great Cree language, and which means "the place where there are reeds."

Athabasca has an area of 60,000 square miles and is situated in the northeast corner of Alberta. To give hon. members an idea of the size of the country, it is approximately the same size as England and Wales. The population, however, is only some 65,000. But these people are some of the finest people in the world. In the first place they are Canadians and in the second place they are pioneers. They are still pioneers. They discard socialist gloom and they look forward to capitalistic expansion. Three-quarters of our people are engaged in agriculture, and they live in the southernmost portion of this vast area.

I do not wish to dwell on agriculture this afternoon, because it is well known that agriculture is the backbone of Canada's economy. The main trouble facing the people of Athabaska today is the lack of transportation. In this vast area we have very few roads, and the roads we have are very primitive. When I tell you we only have 24 miles of hard-top roads in this great area hon. members will understand what I mean. Athabasca is the gateway to the north, and if we are to bring about the future of Canada in the way it should be brought about, we need roads and railways. We also need air strips.

During my election campaign I found it necessary to fly to some parts of my constituency; there are no roads in the northern half, and the northernmost section has not even a railway. My returning officer was killed; he flew into a frozen lake in a white-out. A week later we followed him up into the same country and flew into the same weather conditions. That is not exceptional. The great bush pilots who serve this part of the country do this almost daily. Wop May, to mention one of such men, has gone to the great beyond, and today men such as the Berry Brothers, Milt McDougall, Shoemaker and dozens of others who serve this great northwest possess the pioneer spirit to its ultimate extent, and the people who are coming behind them on the surface of the earth also have this pioneer spirit. Men like this need our help, and they have needed it for a long time.

The people I represent come from every country in Europe and from every ethnic group in Canada. A great section of the country is still populated by those noble Indian tribes, the Crees, and the Chippewas. It is to these people that we who pioneer this country turn to lead us across its frozen wastes and across its melting muskegs in the summer. They still retain the skill of the redmen; they still retain all the hardiness which mixed with white blood has created that sturdy race of people the metis.

The metis are principally Scottish and French in ancestry. They pioneer beyond the roads; they trap, hunt and fish and today, with the development of the mineral resources of the north, we look again to them to man the canoes, to man the freight boats, to cut the timber and care for the white men who live among them. But they ask no handouts. Indeed, they scorn handouts. They are not looking for socialism. They are looking for a new capitalism, a capitalism which has had, as my hon. friends opposite say, a shot in the arm from the Conservative vision. This vision is not a new vision, but it is a rejuvenated vision. We do not welcome the scorning of this vision. We should like to see all hon. members in this house getting behind this movement to give the northland the attention it deserves.

I said before that transportation is the main need of the north today. The first consideration is airports. We require airstrips throughout the north country and we need them now. I suggest that this may be one way in which we can provide immediate work to many unemployed men this year. We have airstrips at Athabasca, McMurray and Fort Chipewyan. When I last visited Fort Chipewyan during the winter we landed on the lake but during the break-up season, a period of six weeks in the spring, and for a period of six weeks in the fall there is no proper place to land at Fort Chipewyan. Fort Chipewyan serves a local population of approximately 600 persons and for three months a year the only method of transportation, air, is cut off from them. If a bush pilot wants to land in this period he is forced to land in the main street of the village where the children are playing. The space in which he must land is no larger than the floor of this chamber and only a bush pilot could land there. When he takes off again he does so at great risk to life and limb.

The railway ends at Waterways which is some three miles from McMurray. It is a joint venture of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways called the Northern Alberta Railway and most of the heavy freight not carried by air is brought over this line. It is proposed to extend this line roughly straight north to a point on Great Slave lake called Pine Point. At Great Slave lake the standard method of transportation to the deep north is by water.

It is not proposed at present to extend the railway further. You heard my colleague making a strong plea that this railroad should start in the Peace river district and go to Great Slave lake and I make a similar plea that the railway should be extended north from McMurray to serve this same area. It is not just a question of whether the railroad should go north out of Peace river or north out of McMurray if we take into consideration the future of the northland because the Peace river district needs a railway and so does the territory north of McMurray. My own suggestion would be to extend the railroad north to serve those portions of the Peace river district which already require a railway and to construct a bridge across the Athabasca river at McMurray and extend the Northern Alberta Railway northwards. I see no reason why northern Alberta cannot support two such railway lines. At present the railway companies admit there is enough tonnage going in and out of the north to justify the construction of one of these lines. I think it requires little imagination to see that this great territory could support two railway communications into the north if indeed not more than two.

Just north of McMurray there are tar sand deposits known as the Athabasca tar sands in which nature has deposited not less than 200 billion barrels of oil. This oil is not commercially available at present to compete with oil produced from wells but scientists have found the secret of releasing this oil and there is no doubt that in the near future this will prove to be one of the most valuable oil reserves in the world. Some sections of these sand deposits contain asphalt in a state where the asphalt can be rolled directly on the road surfaces prepared for black top. I have seen places where this has actually been used for sidewalks and short pieces of pavement and it has withstood the ravages of time and wear for 20 years. The asphalt was merely dug directly out of open pits and rolled on the ground. It might be that the government would put money into the development of tar sand for these purposes and build the roads that are needed in that part of the country outward from the tar sand deposits instead of building expensive roads inward from southern industrialized areas of civilization.

The Athabasca constituency is served by the mightly Athabasca river, one of the finest sources of fresh water on the North American continent. It is safe to say that the Athabasca river can supply any type of industry with water it might require in any amount for many many years. A fine fresh water supply is something that is required by industry today. The town of Athabasca is ideally situated for expanding into the chemical, oil and gas refining industries.

Roads are needed throughout the constituency. The great airport of Cold Lake is situated at the eastern edge of the Athabasca constituency where there is located Canada's only weapon trained range for aircraft and guided missiles. This great airport employs 5,000 personnel. It is in many ways the most up to date airport in the world and need I say that the personnel who operate this base are the finest air force in the world. We depend on these boys for the safety of this whole continent. It is here they are trained and here they live. Canada's pioneers of outer space will be trained here.

We need a road between Edmonton and Cold Lake. In fact, I would take up even more time than did the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) if I were to detail the roads that are required in this area because they are as numerous as the requirements for wharves around the shores of Newfoundland. We do not ask for all these roads. Roads are principally a matter of provincial jurisdiction but roads which lead to the north and to great centres of national defence may well be considered projects worthy of assistance from the federal government.

Athabasca is rich in her natural resources but her greatest resource is the people who live there. They are not discouraged by any difficulties they encounter. They have the same thrust and desire to carve out individual careers for themselves as had the first pioneers to this country. They are not whiners but workers. Again I say they look to us for help. Before them is the great north country and behind them the rich plains of Alberta. I know they are not going to be disappointed in the help we give them. There is one last great frontier in Canada, the north. We who live at the gate to the north challenge the youth of Canada to move in and possess that great northland.

There will be no handouts; there will be work; there will be struggle. I assure you that there will be great reward.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should like to begin by congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) upon one aspect, and upon one aspect only, of his presentation of the budget the other evening. I do think that the Minister of Finance gave evidence the other evening of what might be called the first stage in the education of Donald Fleming. I contrasted it, as I am sure every other hon. member who was here a year ago did, with the forecast of this first budget that he gave to the press and which appeared in the Ottawa Journal on June 26 last, almost a year ago. That was the day the minister, after five days in office, said that a new budget to reduce taxes and increase old age pensions would be brought down in the fall. This was in black type, as it was obviously considered by the reporter to be the most important of the many important forecasts that the minister made at that time. I will not use a word that might cause commotion in the house, Mr. Speaker, but we all know that we never saw that budget. We also know that—

Mr. McGee: You saw tax reduction.

Mr. Cardiff: You saw increases in old age pensions.

Mr. Pickersgill: We saw the increase in old age pensions; we saw a lot of things. We have seen the most phenomenal increase in deficits in the history of Canada in peace time.

I may say, sir, the minister also promised us at that time that he had declared war on waste and extravagance. We have seen the results of the first battle—I suppose that is the first battle of the war on waste and extravagance—we have the greatest estimates for expenditures ever presented by any Canadian government to any parliament.

Mr. Pallett: Which one are you opposed to?

Mr. Pickersgill: The next thing that I would like particularly to refer to is that we heard none of the things in the minister's speech that we heard so frequently in the past from the minister and this is why I say it seems to me that the minister's speech represents a stage in the education of a minister of finance. There is not a word in his speech about how he had changed the tight money policy; there is not really anything about that policy at all. There is not a word about the savings the minister had effected by the elimination of waste and extravagance. There is not a word about the so-called over-taxation which was one of the most appealing—I suppose one of the most appealing—features of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) great appeal a year ago when the Prime Minister told us that we were overtaxed by over $500 million a year. Presumably, if we were overtaxed—and not "presumably" because the Prime Minister worked it all out arithmetically—that $500 million was going to be reduced. Well, of course, it has not been; it is not going to be. There was not a word either about that so-called hidden report that the Prime Minister made such a fuss about here last January in the previous parliament.

Indeed, we find that the Minister of Finance attributed the unemployment to something entirely different from the policies of the Liberal government. In his speech he attributed the unemployment to world causes. Indeed, nothing is more remarkable, it seems to me, in the minister's speech than the remarkable tribute he paid in the first part of his speech to the accuracy of his predecessor's economic forecast. In order to make sure that my memory was not playing any tricks on me I sent for Mr. Harris' budget speech, and I have made a comparison of that section of his speech with the minister's speech and the amazing thing is that practically the whole of Mr. Harris' forecasts were borne out by the experience of the year which has now been completed. His estimates of the gross national product, his estimates of the probable decline, which he very honestly forecast, in the rate of advance and his estimate that there would be an advance all through the year were completely borne out; his estimate that there would be an increase in employment was borne out. Indeed, it would have been hard to conceive of any more completely accurate vindication through the year 1957 of the forecasts made in Mr. Harris' budget than are found in the accounts produced by the minister in certain paragraphs of his speech.

It is evidently the strategy now to leave all these political arguments to the lesser lights. We had all the claptrap that we used to hear from the minister regurgitated by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell). It is apparently no longer quite respectable for a minister of finance to talk such nonsense but for an aspirant to that office it was apparently regarded as good coin.

Perhaps you will call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had just paid a compliment to the hon. member for Carleton. I was astonished at the pattern which seemed to appear in this debate from the other side of the house this afternoon, when the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), followed the same extraordinary line taken by the hon. member for Carleton the other day. This extraordinary, and I might say rather belated interest of hon. gentlemen opposite in the program of the Liberal party in the last election, is very touching to us on this side of the house. The only conceivable reason I have been able to think of for this extraordinary interest in that program at this stage is that hon. gentlemen opposite are executing still another diversion in this debate. They realize the damp squib that this budget is turning out to be, and they are trying to distract public attention from the budget to something else. I do not intend to pursue them in this diversionary line.

I am much more tempted to pursue another line, but I intend to resist that temptation, too. The line I should like to pursue if the clock was not working against me is the line about unemployment. The hon. member for Carleton repeated all the old pre-election explanations about unemployment. However, the minister was honest enough in his budget speech to say nothing whatever about any of those so-called explanations. The minister instead said that we did not have as much unemployment as other people had but that unemployment was a world-wide condition. I am not surprised that he did not use the old line, because if he did not remember it himself his officials probably reminded him that as late as November he was telling people there was no serious unemployment.

I would, rather, deal with two specific points in connection with this budget. The other day the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), in a display of candour and naivete that was, I think, very entertaining and interesting, admitted, and I give him credit for his honesty, that he had been fooled by the progressive face, I think he called it, of hon. gentlemen opposite. He later used the word "mask". Now we in this party never thought it was a progressive face; we always knew it was a mask and we were at no time deceived. It does seem to me, that the progressive mask on the Tory face is better illustrated by the trade proposals in the budget than by any other aspect of it, although I think almost any aspect of it could be taken to illustrate the same point.

There does seem to be something peculiar about this country. Once in every generation it seems to be necessary for the people of Canada to learn the same lesson. We had it in 1911; we had it in 1930; and we had it again in this dual effort of 1957 and 1958. Every so often it seems to be possible, I suppose because of the fallibility of human memory, to excite the people of this country by stirring up feeling against the United States and by parading a great affection for Great Britain. Now we had that in 1911; we had it in 1930, and we had it again in the last two years. In every case, sir, it is always followed by the same thing. The affection for Britain proves to be purely verbal and when it comes to policy, those of us who remember 1932 and what followed from it; those who remember 1911 and what followed from that, will have no real doubt about what is going to follow again. The pattern does seem to go on.

It starts, of course, with this wholly fallacious doctrine that it is a wicked thing to have a lot of trade with the United States. It never seems to occur to a real Tory that trade is an advantageous thing for any country. It never seems to occur to a real Tory that, other things being equal, any person engaged in trade will try to sell what he has to sell for the best price wherever he can get it, and buy for the lowest price wherever he can get it. I can assure you that is one thing which the British, including the British Tories, never forget. But it is not long after the Tories come into office on any occasion when this same old reaction occurs.

It is, I think, interesting that, even though the mask is off, as the hon. member for Assiniboia has said, hon. gentlemen opposite, with the exception of the hon. member for Carleton, seem to be a little ashamed of the face. In 1930 I think you could say Mr. Bennett approached this whole problem boastfully. We had Mr. Bennett boasting about raising tariffs and blasting his way into the markets of the world. We watched for five years while the trade of this country shrank steadily and the prosperity and well-being of the people disappeared.

We have a rather different situation this time. If Mr. Bennett was boastful, I suppose the only thing we can say is that Mr. Fleming is furtive. The Minister of Finance tries to sneak this change in trading policy in by the kitchen door. I use the word "kitchen" advisedly because the hon. member for Greenwood this afternoon said these tariff increases were so small. Of course, they are small in exactly the same way as the famous housemaid's baby was small, as I reminded the house this afternoon. But a rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

Mr. Pallett: You are mixing your metaphors.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, and with a certain deliberation which the hon. gentleman will perhaps comprehend later in the evening.

This proposal about dumping is the nicest example one could find of this furtive approach. The Minister of Finance, in a statement which was literally true but I hesitate to say, sir, calculated to mislead, and which perhaps may have had the effect of misleading, suggested he was going back to 1948. It is true, of course, that in 1948 Mr. St. Laurent came into the house and said, let us take off the statute books this provision that has not been used for thirteen years. The fact is that this dumping provision, this Bennett provision—I do not know that I should call it a Bennett provision because Mr. Meighen tried it before him and it was repealed once before by the Liberals before Bennett—is, of course, of all the protective devices, the most insidious and the most dangerous.

I well remember, in the year 1933 driving through Chicago and having two flat tires—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Kucherepa: You still have them.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and having to replace them. Naturally, I bought in the cheapest market I could find, which was Sears-Roebuck. When I came to the Ambassador bridge at Windsor, the Canadian end of it, there were five different imposts put on before I was through, and when I had got finished I had paid more in duty than I had paid for the tires. One of these imposts was described in such a way—I forget the precise words now—as to give the impression that the Canadian government was collecting it for the United States. I said to the customs officer, "You don't mean to say this is going into the United States treasury, do you?" He said, "Oh, no, but a lot of people think it is." I said, "If I were an organizer of the Liberal party"—and I may say that in those days I was a lecturer in history in the university and had only an academic interest in politics—"or if I were a member of the Liberal party, I would set up a booth at the end of this bridge and nobody that crossed it would ever vote Tory again." I had already been converted prior to that time, but if I had not been converted I certainly would have been by that experience.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Why didn't you buy the tires in Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman was not old enough to remember that in Saskatchewan in those great days of the Bennett government there were many people who had to travel around on the rims and have their cars pulled by horses.

An hon. Member: Bennett buggies.

Mr. Pallett: He will not sell his politics for two tires.

Mr. Pickersgill: The thing that astonished me most of all in the astonishing speech made by the hon. member for Greenwood was his suggestion this afternoon that the woollen industry was an industry indigenous to Canada. I really want to say something about this increase in tariff on wool because it seems to me that in many ways it is the most fantastic thing in the whole budget. Here we have a government headed by a Prime Minister whose main appeal to the Canadian people was that he was going to divert a great part of our trade from the United States to the United Kingdom. If anybody doubts that the Prime Minister gave that kind of impression, not merely in this country but elsewhere, I should like to read a brief extract from the monthly bulletin of the commonwealth and empire industries association published in London. It is commenting on the Prime Minister's great success in March of 1958, something which we all remember. Here is a sentence or two:

In 1957 the Conservative leader, Mr. Diefenbaker, roundly declared that he would like to see a switch of 15 per cent of Canada's trade with the United States to the United Kingdom. On assuming office he had not a majority sufficient to allow him to put his plans into effect and so he went to the country again in 1958 having made no concessions or abated one item of his intentions. The result we know,—

The result, Mr. Speaker, we know. The first result was this. The first time the Prime Minister has had a chance to do anything about it, what does he do? He puts on a tariff on what is—if any single item is—the classic export from Britain to Canada. It is true that the government say it is only a small duty, that it really will not increase the cost of what anyone has to pay very much. But I say, sir, that small or large, the symbolic significance of this increase is tremendous. In the first place, it is an evidence of the trend, the direction in which this whole tariff section of the minister's speech pointed. It is the first faltering step; but I suspect that, if the minister is able to get away with this one, there will be many longer strides following.

This is no matter of mere academic interest to anyone who represents a constituency where the majority of the electors make their living out of what is an indigenous industry and what is the oldest industry in this country, namely the fishing industry. Not only do my constituents have to make their living by selling in the markets of the world at world prices practically everything that they produce, whether it be wood products or fish, but they have to buy practically everything they consume in a market, which is in the essence of things—and always has been since confederation, since 1949—protected to a degree. It was not protected to the same extent before confederation. This tariff on British woollens will have the effect of increasing their cost of living, perhaps not very much but some.

But what I think is much more serious to Newfoundland is the second part of the minister's proposal, namely the proposal that he is also going to increase, if he can worm out of our trade agreements, the most-favoured-nation tariff. Everybody knows that outside of Britain the one country that has made real progress in getting into the Canadian woollen market is Italy. Perhaps everyone in the house does not know that Italy is without exception the best market for Newfoundland fish on the continent of Europe. There has been a risk, ever since the common market was established, that this market for Canadian fish may be lost to some degree because of the combined tariff around these six nations, because France is included and because France has fishing grounds at St. Pierre. But if we are going to kick the Italians in the teeth as we have already indicated we are going to kick the British in the teeth—I should not say "we"; I should say as the government has already indicated it is going to kick the British in the teeth—we are going to jeopardize even more that market for our fish and that will affect the interests of every fish producer, every producer of cod fish on the east coast. It is true that it is only Newfoundland fish that goes to Italy. But if that market should be diminished or lost, it simply means there is going to be that much keener competition for the markets that remain. We simply cannot afford to jeopardize any of our external markets.

I want to take the rest of the time I have at my disposal to refer to a great gaping hole, a great chasm, in the budget. I notice that the minister said the other night that he had—he interjected this when my friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was speaking—made some reference to federal-provincial relations in the budget. Of course the minister was right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; I did not.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister did so, anyway, whether he said it or not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Stick to the truth.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will read what the minister said. Perhaps that will be the best evidence that he did say something. As recorded at page 1234 of Hansard the minister said this:

(Translation):

Additional financial assistance being given to the provinces will enable them to proceed with needed capital improvements in the provincial and municipal fields.

(Text):

That is the whole of what the minister had to say about this important subject about which, when he was boasting about what he was going to do in his budget, only a year ago he had this to say—this is from the Ottawa Journal, the same reference I used this afternoon, namely June 26, 1957:

Mr. Fleming said on this point that a new dominion-provincial conference will be called, probably this year,—

That was 1957.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was called.

Mr. Pickersgill: I continue the quotation:

—to revise the basis for division of the joint fields of taxation—

I emphasize those words "to revise the basis".

—and to provide the provinces with increases in these revenues.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

And what did we have? We had a two-day conference in November when the provincial governments were not allowed to discuss the main subject, they were diverted into other fields which most of them had not come there to discuss and about which the premier of Manitoba—and he is still the premier of that province for a few more hours—complained.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, the hon. gentlemen may laugh, but it may be that they will not be laughing for very long for unless the minister does something about this gaping hole, it will not be very long before that gentleman is again premier of Manitoba. I say this because I have made some computations and, like the Minister of Finance in his early days as minister, I have had to do my own arithmetic. This is not because I do not trust my officials but because I have no officials to do it for me. The result of the best computation I can make indicates that it is highly improbable that out of this dole—the money doled out by the telegram last January— the provinces will in fact receive any additional revenue whatsoever in the year 1958-59. I may be wrong, but the minister did not make any attempt anywhere in his speech or in his papers to give any indication of any kind as to what that figure would be.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that there was a debate on this subject on June 2?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I am perfectly well aware of that fact and I am also aware of the fact that on the day of the budget speech the Prime Minister tabled a letter which the Minister of Finance wrote to the premier of Saskatchewan and which was, I think, the most arrogant communication which I have ever seen addressed by any federal minister to any provincial premier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: In this letter he said he was very sorry that it was not his business —I am paraphrasing now—

Some hon. Members: Read the letter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Please read the letter. Let us have no more of these misleading misquotations.

Mr. Pickersgill: —to prepare the budgets of the provincial governments. Hon. members will find the letter in Hansard of that day.

Some hon. Members: Read it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have very little time and I am not going to oblige the minister by reading the letter in full, but I think perhaps to satisfy him I will read a sentence—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Read the letter.

Mr. Pickersgill: —to which I have particular reference. The minister said that in the circumstances he could hardly be expected to assume responsibility for the budget estimates of the provinces. That was the nice, tactful approach, the new approach, the conciliatory approach about which we have heard so much, and the rest of the letter is in exactly the same tone.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Go on. Read the next sentence.

Some hon. Members: Read it all.

Mr. Habel: They are trying to divert you.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister, I believe, has the right to speak at any time. He can read the letter to his heart's content but I have some other things to say.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Just read one more sentence.

Mr. Pickersgill: In January Mr. Lesage and I did our best to get the Minister of Finance to state that he would stabilize his extra 3 per cent, and he pretended not to understand the argument.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He didn't pretend any such thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Now he has admitted that there is no stabilization whatsoever for the extra amount. Mr. Greenlay, the provincial treasurer of Manitoba—according to my best information he is still the provincial treasurer—is reported to have said, according to the Winnipeg Free Press of June 20 last—I might say incidentally that when Mr. Greenlay entered the government in Manitoba he was generally considered to be a member of the party of the hon. members opposite, but he has learned something—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He certainly has.

Mr. Pickersgill: What he is reported to have said is as follows:

> The claims of Prime Minister Diefenbaker and Tory MP's who campaigned here during the provincial election—that Ottawa was giving Manitoba an extra $3.4 million in tax-rental payment—are misleading and probably false, Hon. C. E. Greenlay indicated Thursday.

The fact is, of course, that if the revenues from these great fields of taxation do diminish—as they are diminishing, and as the minister himself indicated in the table he put on Hansard he expected them to diminish—I suspect that he gave as optimistic estimate as he dared to give of that diminution—it could happen that this whole $62 million would be out of the window. Certainly the minister is not paying on the basis of the extra $62 million at the present time, or anything like it, and he knows that. He has never given us any estimate of what in his opinion it is that the provinces really will get, in the light of revised figures of which he and his officials are aware but of which this house is not aware. We do not know what they are likely to get, but it is perfectly clear that it is not going to be anything like the $62 million and my suspicion is that if there is any addition at all when the accounts are in at the end of the year, it will be a very small one.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It will be 3 per cent more than they would have received had there not been a change from the Liberal administration.

Mr. Pearson: Did you use stabilization?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is quite wrong even in his last observation, if I caught it correctly, because if they do get anything out of this $62 million it will be because Mr. Harris' stabilization comes into effect, and furthermore it will be only because of that and not because of anything done by the present government, if they do get as much as they got last year.

We have been told absolutely nothing about the future. We know that this famous dole, the unilateral dole by telegram, is for one year only, and we do not know what is going to happen after March 31 next. The provincial governments have been told nothing whatsoever and they certainly did have the right to expect that they would at least be told in the budget, because they were not allowed to discuss the matter at the conference. I must confess I do not believe the government has the slightest intention of meeting the provinces again in 1958. Alternatively, they should know what it is proposed to do when the present statute expires on March 31.

I predict that what will happen is that at the beginning of next session we will have another of these telegrams—I hope the arithmetic will be correct this time—covering another interim arrangement. This method will be used because the government has been too busy with other things to bother with the provinces.

If the government has different plans, if the government really intends, when they have disposed of parliament, to call some kind of a conference, or if they intend to work out some kind of hole-in-corner deal with the government of Ontario—as Mr. Macaulay, the new minister, seems to be hinting every few days with, I suspect, a little prodding from behind from the premier of that province—then surely this parliament is entitled to know, as it was always given the opportunity to know under the previous government, what is the policy of the government. We have not the faintest idea; there is no indication whatsoever in this budget as to what the provincial governments may expect after March 31, what they are really going to get, or even what the department thinks they are going to get or what the minister thinks they are going to get between now and March 31.

The minister said with great exuberance last June that the government was going to hold a conference last year to revise the basis for the division of the joint fields of taxation. There has been no such division. The government did not decide anything at the conference, but they sent out this telegram, just taking the formula of Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Harris and giving the appearance of adding to it another 3 per cent, but they left in the joker about stabilization so that the 3 per cent could disappear, as it is indeed disappearing and as I suspect it will disappear more and more as more realistic estimates come to be made as to what, in fact, the proceeds of these great fields of taxation will turn out to be.

It does seem to me that on these two grounds alone the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) and which I had the honour of seconding is amply justified in both of these particulars. The minister has said he has given this extra money to the provinces. That is a free translation of what he said in French as I read it a little while ago. He said he gave it to them so that they could embark on big spending programs. But he did not tell them he had done it all with mirrors, and that they would probably not get any more at all. In fact, he left them in a worse state than before he started, because they do not know what they are going to get, whether it will be more or less. My hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River set out the other day what was done with respect to the public works program and the national development program. There again, it was all done with mirrors. There is nothing whatsoever which will give us any hope of effective action being taken to meet the recession.

Of course, the minister talked a lot about the tax reductions he made last December. I have been looking at that, and I have added to the $178 million the $26 million allowed in the present budget, and it comes to a little over $200 million. This is all we got in tax reductions as compared with the half a billion dollars which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance promised just a year ago would be the amount of the reduction.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what they promised, and this is what they offer. When you contrast that sum with the $128 million by which Mr. Harris reduced taxes a little over a year ago at a time when there was virtually full employment in this country, at a time when the boom was continuing, it is a sad spectacle that we are confronted with.

Turning to the second part of the amendment, about which Your Honour expressed some qualms the other day, I should like to say now what I should have liked to say then, that I did much appreciate the courteous attitude of the Minister of Finance. I think his attitude was wise and just. He suggested that this motion really was about something new, and that was our intention. It was our intention to relate this amendment quite specifically to this disastrous policy, this back-to-Bennett policy of regarding trade as a bad thing, the attitude that you must have a little, but the less you have the better. That is the essence of Toryism.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Dreadful nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: At least when I was a young man the Tories were proud of it. I remember Mr. Arthur Meighen in the Winnipeg rink in 1925—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are sick.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it was 1925. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say 1926. I said "you are sick".

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I remember Mr. Meighen making that famous brick by brick speech which lost vote after vote.

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member. His time has expired.

Mr. Rene Letourneau (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great honour for me to be given the privilege of speaking in this house on behalf of my constituents, and I want to thank each and every one for the support they have given me, and for the confidence which they have placed in me by this mandate.

At the beginning of my speech I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) upon his wonderful address in presenting the budget. I also want to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his cabinet for bringing new hope for greater prosperity to the country by doing everything possible to check the recession, which was brought about by the laissez-faire policy of the previous administration.

I wish also to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to a man who once represented in this house the riding that I represent today. Many of the older members here will remember the late Senator John T. Hackett. Senator Hackett was a great Canadian. I only wish that I may serve my country as well as he did, and with the same devotion.

Mr. Speaker, I represent the beautiful county of Stanstead, the nicest of them all, in spite of whatever my hon. colleagues in this house may say. The county of Stanstead contains a population of 45,000 inhabitants of whom 33 per cent are English speaking and 67 per cent French speaking, and both these groups live in the best of harmony, in spite of racial issues which were introduced in the last two election campaigns by our Liberal opponents in Quebec. I really think that under the present government and our present Prime Minister there will be greater understanding and unity.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, may I give to the house a picture of my constituency, both from a geographic and economic standpoint.

In the extreme western part of my constituency, there is the fine city of Magog, a tourist centre dominated by Mount Orford and endowed with a national park bordering superb lake Memphremagog, where tourists take pleasure in visiting regularly. Furthermore, Magog has one of the most modern and largest textile plants in Canada. Here I should like to thank the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for all the consideration he kindly gave to the textile problem, and I am sure he will continue, along with the government, to bring new remedies to that industry which is vital to the economy of the province of Quebec and the eastern townships in particular, as well as to that of the country as a whole.

The eastern part of the riding comprises the town of Coaticook, with a population of 7,000. This town also has various industries including a textile plant, though not so large as the one in Magog. Coaticook is, more particularly, a shopping centre for the people of the surrounding fine farming communities.

In the northern part of my riding, Mr. Speaker, there is the town of Lennoxville. It differs from the others in many respects, especially because of its people, who are mostly English-speaking and have a culture very much their own. This is easily understandable, because a nationally known university is located in this area, i.e. Bishop's University, where I had the honour and pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to see an honorary degree conferred on the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Now, Mr. Speaker, coming to the southernmost part of the riding, we find what is called the Three Villages—in French les Trois Villages—which form but one town with the unique distinction of being administered by three different municipal councils. There is first the village of Beebe whose granite quarries are known all over the country not only for the quality of their products but for the modern way in which they are put on the market. I am therefore happy to draw to the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) and of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) to the fact that they can provide all the stone required for the construction of federal buildings in the different parts of the country, even for those which the Minister of Public Works will have to build for my hon. colleague from Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who, a few days ago, asked the Minister of Public Works to build more harbours and post offices than the preceding government has constructed during its whole mandate.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not correct.

Mr. Letourneau: That's the way I took it.

We now come, Mr. Speaker, to the American border where we find Rock Island with its various industries among which is a very large tool manufacturing plant, the only one of its kind, called the Union Twist Drill. This plant has been constructed half on American territory and half on Canadian territory and employs Canadian and American workers who work under the same roof in perfect harmony. This should be an example for the whole world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a problem which affects Rock Island as well as the whole area of the Eastern townships and the whole province of Quebec. I mean the construction of a customs and immigration office in that town.

(Text):

Regarding the problem I must tell the house that the Liberal administration has talked about building the customs port at Rock Island for the last 22 years and especially in election years. My predecessor to my personal knowledge used it at least three or four times in order to get himself re-elected, but this time it did not work.

The Rock Island customs port is one of the oldest in the province of Quebec. I wish to quote from a publication called "The Customs and Excise Examiner", issue of November 1956:

Prior to 1821, when a port to collect His Majesty's customs was established in Stanstead Plain, there was as far as I have been able to find out, no Canadian customs house nearer than St. Johns, Quebec. So it is no surprise to read in the same Gazetteer of 1824, under the heading of Derby, Vermont, that "This town (Derby) was a port of entry in the late district of Memphremagog, and a collector's office is still kept here by David M. Camp, Esq., Deputy Collector".

This item points to the fact that customs houses may well have been opened first in the United States across the border from this location. This may be further borne out by the fact that Joseph Bouchette, surveyor-general of Lower Canada, in his report of 1815, said:

In the southeast part of the township is the village of Stanstead, which though small has some good houses in it; the main stage road from Quebec into the states of Vermont and New Hampshire, etc., passes through it from which, as bringing a continual influx of strangers some little consequence is derived. From hence the same road leads to Derby in Vermont: at that place communication to almost every part of the United States is easy. To take care of this great traffic a Canadian customs office was opened in 1821 in Stanstead, the first such office anywhere near this area, though another customs office was opened later in East Hereford, Quebec, to cover another stage road up the Connecticut river route.

I have cited these quotations to indicate that for 22 years under a Liberal administration we have in Stanstead, Rock Island, a customs port which has been a disgrace to Canada. It has been shameful to see tourists to Canada having to wait for two or three hours before they could enter the country through this port.

I have some interesting statements concerning the Rock Island customs immigration highway office gleaned from various sources. The first of these is a statement to be found at page 7 of a publication entitled "Travel Between Canada and the United States" for the calendar year 1957 as follows:

Rock Island is one of the largest customs points for the entry of vehicles, in the province of Quebec.

It is the customs port in the province of Quebec having the greatest number of commuters and is the only port in Quebec issuing commuters stickers to speed this traffic. Set right on the main street of the centre of the town and some 100 yards from the international frontier, the customs and immigration office at Rock Island has frequently a tangled web of traffic in front of it during the heavy tourist season or when several trucks awaiting clearance are being held. On some occasions, as with a log jam, some one car has to be released to let things move.

A few years ago—and this must have occurred in an election year—the plan to relieve this congestion was to take the automobile traffic east of the Tomifobia river and, while this was under consideration, three properties were purchased by the Department of Public Works on the east bank of that river. These were the Morel, Clarke and May properties, the latter two being on Church street, Rock Island, and the Morel property being on a lane running from Main street to Church street. The properties were never used for the purpose and have since been resold for a ridiculous amount. During this period at least three suggestions were made and considered to take the traffic off Rock Island's Main street to a customs—immigration office on or near the properties acquired but none managed to meet with the approval of all the municipal, provincial, state and federal authorities involved in the relocation. I have in my hand a brief presented to Mr. Ernest Gohier of Quebec city which outlines this development.

The passage of the national system of interstate highways by the United States in 1956 with a designated throughway, limited access, from Boston and New York to Derby Line, Vermont, adjacent to Rock Island, Quebec, presented a complete change of planning regarding the relocation of the Rock Island customs-immigration office. The period 1956 to the present has seen a closer drawing to agreement of the many governmental agencies concerned in the relocation of the United States and Canadian customs and immigration offices at this key border point.

Automobiles entering Canada on some holidays have lined up in the United States for more than a mile from the port of entry and quite often during the summer months have to be policed both in Derby Line, Vermont, and Rock Island, Quebec, to keep the main streets in both towns open for local business. The traffic varies greatly but I have here exact figures taken from the official records for inward traffic only. As many or more people would be leaving Canada on the same dates. On June 30, 1956, 7,296 persons entered Canada through this port; 6,682 on July 1, 1956; 7,934 on July 2; 7,482 on September 1 and so on. I have placed these few representative figures on the record to indicate the heavy volume of traffic that passes through this port. Year by year the traffic has steadily increased and a large new trucking firm is making arrangements at the present moment for entry of its vehicles through this port. Special chartered buses regularly enter Canada through this port in the summer and it is not an uncommon sight to see anywhere from 30 to 70 people from the buses seeking to use one public toilet now found in the present customs immigration building.

With the new interstate throughway to Derby Line, Vermont, presently under construction in that state and it being understood that the state is ready to complete its section of the throughway from near Newport, Vermont, to the international boundary, it is hoped that the traffic difficulties which have beset the Rock Island customs-immigration officials may be ended before long. I am sure the government will give consideration to my request and that its humble servant will not have to go back to Rock Island and make promises to this effect in order to be re-elected next time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the government take every opportunity to help the war veterans. The government could do that by improving the Veterans' Land Act, the Pension Act and by giving the veterans better hospitalization care and attention. I feel that no government will ever be reproached for giving more attention to these men who defended our freedom and liberty.

And now, I would like to suggest to the government that early provision be made for the pegging of family allowances to the cost of living, so that our children may continue to attend school at least until the age of 18. This would not only be of assistance to large families, but would increase the purchasing power of heads of households.

Mr. Speaker, I could hardly refrain from saying a word about the farmers of my constituency, who are an important class there, in numbers as well as in quality. As you know the Eastern townships are particularly suited to dairying, as well as to hog and poultry raising. In the constituency of Stanstead, more particularly, are high class farms of a type rarely seen in other parts of Canada, except out west. There let me congratulate the government for the concern it has shown for the position of the farmer in its agricultural prices maintenance legislation. I am sure that it will soon find other ways of improving agriculture not only in our area, but throughout this country.

I would suggest to the government to revise the Canadian farm loan act so that the farmer may borrow substantial amounts of money in order, first, to expand his farm and then mechanize it. It should be realized that today a man can no longer support his family on a 100 or 125-acre farm because with farm mechanization, the farmer needs at least 300 to 500 acres. To that end the farmer would require more credit, on more favourable terms and with a longer period of reimbursement.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot let go unnoticed the feast of Saint John the Baptist, patron saint of French Canadians, which is celebrated tomorrow. On this occasion I extend my best wishes to all the French-speaking Canadians of my constituency, of the province of Quebec and of Canada as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude with these words which I often like to repeat: "Oh Canada, my country, my love, where it is good to live in peace and prosperity!"

(Text):

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I must confess I am forced to limit my praise and congratulations to the delivery only of the budget speech. In doing this I can see where I am in complete agreement with the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. I can agree also with the first words spoken this afternoon by the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), when he said that nothing spectacular or that no surprise came out of this deficit budget. In fact, he told us that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had warned the Canadian taxpayers about the coming deficit. As I will mention later in the course of my remarks, this warning was certainly not given before March 31 of this year and even before June 10 of last year.

Tuesday, June 17, 1958, will remain as a blue Tuesday in the history of the Canadian parliament, but it will be a blue Tuesday written in red letters. We had before us after the call of the bells at eight p.m. on that date a Tory Minister of Finance wearing a blue suit, a blue tie, a blue carnation in his lapel, delivering to the astonishment of his blue colleagues and to the other hon. members another one of the historical Tory government deficit budgets.

If the Conservative members of this house sometimes have the blues when it rains, they definitely had the blues after the Minister of Finance completed the delivery of his first budget presentation. Mr. Speaker, never in the history of the Canadian parliament have so many words been spoken to take away so much from the taxpayers and give so little in return. In fact, it took 46 long pages of Hansard to let the Canadian people know that rat poison would be cheaper and even the ambulance if required could be used at a reduced cost.

An hon. Member: How about glass eyes?

Mr. Robichaud: Glass eyes come later. And having close relations with poison and the ambulance, we were told that even the flowers would cost less; and I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether the pied piper of the Tory party is aware that under a Conservative administration an increasing rodent population is inevitable and could easily invade our idle factories, our closed mining pits and our depressed manufacturing plants to such an extent that a cheap poison would be needed to prevent a disaster resulting from such an undue plague.

After listening the other night to the Minister of Finance and also after listening on Friday afternoon to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) who was trying, in vain I would say to carry the ball for the government but who unfortunately for them dropped and missed and fumbled, one cannot help but reach the conclusion that the Conservative party may have fooled some of the Canadian people some of the time but all of the Canadian people will not be fooled all of the time.

The 1958 budget will remain in history as a great disappointment to the nation, a budget where the main problem of unemployment has been practically overshadowed by a cloud of mist and uncertainty, a budget where many words were spoken, numerous figures were tabled, but still a budget where confusion, disappointment and unrest prevailed, a budget where even the hopes of the Minister of Finance himself had vanished in illusion and in imagination. It is a budget inconsistent with the policy advocated by the minister and by his colleagues; it is a budget in fact, which by its nature is inflationary and which offers no measure whatsoever to curb or slow down the present trend of inflation which is still threatening the Canadian economy. On page 2009, volume II of Hansard for December 6, 1957, we find the following words:

> Having previously forecast a surplus of revenue over expenditure for the year ending March 31 next of $106 million, we may now expect a surplus of $80 million after giving effect to the tax changes that I have proposed.

Those were the words pronounced in this house on December 6, 1957, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). At a later date, on page 4019 of Hansard for January 30, 1958, only two months before the closing of accounts for the last fiscal year, the same minister answered a question addressed to him by the former member for Okanagan-Boundary in the following words:

> It is not customary to answer questions of that kind or to make interim statements during the course of the fiscal year as to what the expected end result may be of the government's financing for the year. There is not any statement as of May 31, as the question seems to assume. I did give the house a statement on December 6 as to the expected surplus at the end of the current fiscal year.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

I want the minister to listen carefully to the next sentence.

> I have no reason to depart appreciably from that estimate, and I think at March 31 government operations for the year, thanks to prudent management, will show a respectable surplus.

Mr. Hardie: He knew then there was going to be an election.

Mr. Robichaud: On Monday, June 16, the minister tabled the budget papers covering the government's accounts for 1957-58 or the highlights of government financial operations in the last fiscal year. In this way the house and the country learned that the great hopes of the Minister of Finance had vanished and his predicted surplus of $80 million three months earlier had been transformed into a $39-million deficit, a deficit to which we can add another $102 million to take care of the deficit on the old age security fund which is now covered by a temporary loan and for which parliament will be asked to authorize a regular vote for expenditures.

An hon. Member: Were you opposed to increasing pensions?

Mr. Robichaud: It must have been rather embarrassing, and I could add almost humiliating, for this great believer of balanced budgets, for this self-appointed protector and custodian of the nation's rights, to have been selected to present the 1958-59 budget, the largest deficit peacetime budget in Canadian history. We are now told by the minister that he is forecasting a deficit of $648 million for the fiscal year. How about the $165 million being liquidated from the national defence equipment account and which, when added to the government's deficit, will make a total of $813 million? On December 6, 1957 the minister predicted a surplus of $80 million, and even as late as January 30 of this year, as I have cited earlier, he stated, and I want to repeat his words:

> I have no reason to depart appreciably from that estimate, and I think at March 31 government operations for the year, thanks to prudent management, will show a respectable surplus.

The minister must have had personal and political reasons for his optimism. Those words were uttered when a general election was in sight, and at a time when the minister was refusing to bring down a budget; at a time when it was in the best interests of the hon. gentleman and of his party to hide from the Canadian electors the true facts about Canada's financial situation. After returning to power, and during the last three months, the same government, the same Minister of Finance, this same gentleman who on December 6 last informed this house that no previous minister had ever faced as heavy a volume of work as that which faced this minister; this same hon. gentleman who on that date very humbly told about the 17 or 18-hour work-day and his 100 hours of work per week; yes, the same minister in the most frank and flowery exposure within the memory of parliament, delivered to the nation the results of his labours, the results of his ambition for power at all costs.

The 1958 budget will remain in history as the Diefenbaker vision at its best. It is a budget which will result in the Canadian taxpayers being asked to supply a total of $1,400 million of new cash for the present fiscal year. I want to warn the hon. gentleman that this could result in the present government advocating, before long, measures and policies quite different from those which they have so far enunciated. We have in sight what could shape up as the biggest year for new government borrowings since the war years, and the present government may be gradually heading into a situation in which they will not be in a position to practise what they have preached and having to put into effect policies which they claimed to have been so strongly against in past years, particularly since taking power in January of last year. At this advanced date in the present session the whole country is still waiting for the exposure of this so-called vision of the Prime Minister, a vision which may coincide with the definition of the word itself and could well be nothing else but an illusion. We may find that the utopia existed only in the minds of the members of the government of the day.

Where is this so-called additional money that was to be available for stepping up the program of public works? The estimates of the Public Works Department have been before this house and the larger portion of those estimates have been passed. What did we find? We found nothing but the normal increases of previous years, accentuated it is true to a slight extent, but far from representing the great national development policy about which we heard so much during the last campaign. Where is the huge public works program to be inaugurated, in the words of the Prime Minister, to ensure development of the country and to provide help to Canadians, work to Canadians and an opportunity for the better things of life?

On Friday evening last the Conservative members got together to celebrate on the eve of their first anniversary in government. While gifts and praise were being showered on the man—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: Hon. members can applaud, but while gifts and praise were being showered on the man they said made this Tory political era, while Conservative members, senators and organizers were jubilantly celebrating, what was going on outside? What was taking place in the country from Newfoundland to British Columbia?

Mr. Montgomery: What was taking place?

Mr. Robichaud: It is sad to state and sad to realize what was taking place; in fact after 12 months of Tory power history repeats itself. The first budget of a Conservative government was one of gloom, one of disappointment and one which represented too high a cost for a democracy to pay for a change of government. After 12 months of Conservative power, at this late date in June, 1958, we have to admit that there are over 500,000 men and women seeking jobs, hungry for food. This is happening in a young, growing country in which, according to the minister's own words: "Providence has blessed us with vast resources and in which its people are vigorous and enterprising." To this the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne), if he were in his seat, might add "So what!"

An hon. Member: What would you do?

Mr. Robichaud: You may find out before I am through with my remarks what I would do. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had a great vision, a northern vision full of promises and expectations. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Prime Minister once again of the pledge which he made to his people of Prince Albert on February 14 last when he said this:

> As long as I am Prime Minister, no man or woman is going to suffer from unemployment so long as public works will provide them the assistance they require.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: Very few of the hon. members opposite are applauding. I realize why there are so few, Mr. Speaker.

There are today in the country—and the Prime Minister is aware of it; and I repeat it—over 500,000 hungry Canadians seeking work. Must this be taken as an evidence that the present government's program has failed to reach its objective and has proven to be ineffective. To those members who were applauding I want to repeat what I said in this house on May 19 last:

> Is this the right time to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to open new roads in uninhabited areas, to help discover new mineral deposits at a time when our own already populated areas need new roads and at a time when our people are urgently in need of employment?

Day after day, week after week, mines are closing down or are curtailing their operations. Only last week the last mine operating in my constituency of Gloucester had to close its doors. There was vanishing the great hopes and opportunities of the years 1953 and 1954 when northern New Brunswick was credited with the greatest mining discovery of the year. Only four years later our population cannot recover from this shock; they are forced to admit that their great faith and optimism, their yearning for years to come; have disappeared almost overnight. Again last week it was the Dominion Coal Company announcing that its coal mining operations will for "several months" or "until new markets can be found" operate on a short-time basis.

Mr. Morris: On a point or order—

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member will have plenty of time to make his remarks.

Mr. Morris: May I speak on a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Morris: The hon, member has been a member of this house for some considerable time. Surely he is aware of the fact that the reading of speeches in full is not permitted. We on this side of the house are not even sure that it is his own speech.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, if I have notes at my disposal, I can say that they are the result of the homework I have been doing in the last few days. This statement may not apply to the hon. member and to his colleague the member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) who may need the help of his father-in-law at times to prepare some of his remarks as he is an expert in interjections in this house.

When I brought this problem to the attention of the government at the opening of the present session—in fact it was on Friday, May 16 last—the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) bluntly denied having any knowledge of such curtailment being contemplated by the coal company. Today, one month later, the same company cannot carry on with its present scale of operation. With a stockpile of 1,400,000 tons on hand growing from day to day, and with market prospects far from bright and promising, it is forced to close down for an indefinite period. After such a decision how can the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) justify the statement he made a few weeks ago to the effect that the entire stockpile of coal was sold and waiting to be moved to destination points at a later date? How can he justify the reply which he gave to my question this afternoon when he said that no proposal had been put before the government for aid of the coal companies of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Morris: Oh, oh.

Mr. Robichaud: I realize that the hon. member for Halifax does not like the remarks I am making at this time. What did we hear about this situation from members on the government side of the house, including the hon. member for Halifax? Only on Friday last, after the company's announcement was an accomplished fact, did the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys for assistance for the 8,000 to 9,000 miners affected by this temporary lay-off.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, the burst of applause and rejoicing from the members on the government side in listening to the presentation of the budget on Tuesday last, must well have changed into serious thinking and more realistic understanding after they had a chance to realize fully how little relief the Canadian people can expect from these 20,500 words, splashing more red ink than satisfaction. Let the hon. members realize that their party has been in power now for over 12 months and let them have a serious and unbiased look at the situation in their respective constituencies and compare conditions with those existing a year or so ago.

An hon. Member: It is impossible for you to take an unbiased look.

Mr. Robichaud: My hon. friend will be like many of his colleagues. He as well as they will be unhappy to find that the number of unemployed has increased by almost 100 per cent in almost every region and in almost every constituency. He can also listen to this statement. The line-ups awaiting them when they visit their respective constituencies are for them more sickening than heartening. These are the conditions existing today in the Atlantic provinces as well as in other areas of the country.

I still well remember how scandalized the members of the Conservative party were when the preliminary report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects was made public in January of 1956. This report of the Gordon commission had reserved special chapters to the economy of the Atlantic provinces and included many strong recommendations concerning the area.

Mr. Morris: Including deportation.

Mr. Robichaud: May I say this to my hon. friend. You will admit, if you want to be unbiased, that in certain sections of the maritimes, in certain communities of your own constituency as in mine and as in that of the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne)—and he would admit it if he were in his seat—we have a certain percentage of our population which should be removed to more progressive areas.

Mr. Morris: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Get that on the record.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he indicate what section of the constituency of Gloucester he believes ought to be deported?

Mr. Robichaud: My friend I do not want to take too much time with my remarks but I want to tell the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) that in my own constituency of Gloucester in certain settlements back of Nicholas Denys and in certain sections of Allardville parish a certain percentage of the population would be better off if they were removed to a more highly populated area in my constituency where they could find work or employment.

An hon. Member: You had better stick to your written speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Robichaud: I notice two bells ringing, the Saint John bell and the Carleton bell but I will carry on just the same.

In his budget presentation in March of last year the then minister of finance, Mr. Harris, included some of the main recommendations of the Gordon report and the government was called upon to proceed with the necessary legislation required for the actual implementation of this particular program.

In the few minutes left at my disposal I should like to deal specifically with some of the problems of the Atlantic provinces where the basic need is business together with a diversified industry and a diversified system of economic activities.

The improvement of an integrated basis of transportation facilities, a new application of a land use classification scheme with wider and more practical assistance to small farmers, a more effective and modified system of encouragement towards the greater use of Nova Scotia coal are some of the solutions to the economic problems of the Atlantic region. Some hon. members on the government side will say, "Why did you not do these things when you were in power; why did you not speak about these things when you were sitting on the government side?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: "Hear, hear". I wish to advise those hon. members that they have the privilege of looking over the record of discussions which took place in previous sessions of parliament and they will find, probably to their great disappointment and surprise, that my remarks were not limited to congratulations to the government of the day but included constructive suggestions, some of which have resulted in the realization of some of my hopes. Many of these today are accomplished facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: Hon. members must recall that it was during the last Liberal regime, from 1935 to 1957, that the Liberal party led this country with great glory through world war II and it was the Liberal party which, in the post-war period, gave to Canada the greatest decade of expansion and prosperity in its history.

I have just mentioned the improvement of an integrated basis of transportation facilities as an important factor in the solution of the economic problems of the Atlantic region. General recognition of the transportation problem which exists in the Atlantic region is required, as is a long and most complete study of the whole situation. This problem cannot be easily assessed; it could involve rather serious difficulties. It is in fact directly related to the economic development of the whole area and higher government subsidies may not be the answer. Consideration should be given to a more efficient and better integrated system of transportation based upon the economic possibilities of the entire Atlantic region.

On October 18 last the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) said that the bureau of transportation economics operating within his department had been instructed to carry on studies with respect to the transportation problems in the Atlantic region but, on January 30, the only information I could obtain from the minister was that very satisfactory progress was being made with this study. Knowing that the minister never makes exaggerated statements to this house, I inquired of him on May 15 last, seven months after he had announced the study was under way, as to when we might expect a report on the findings of this study. The reply was short and to the point—the study had not been completed. However, on June 10, in reply to a similar question, I received a rather more ambiguous reply from the minister and I will quote his own words as follows:

> As no time was set as a target, and as this investigation is a study, it will be carried on until conclusions are reached. It is impossible to give a direct answer to the hon. member's question.

Here is a problem which deserves the immediate and most serious consideration of the government and it is a problem that is considerably aggravating and is substantially contributing to the slow and too modest start in the development of our natural resources.

In view of the immediate importance of this matter, I would suggest the appointment of a special agency, comprised of full-time government officials, which would have specific instructions to study our Atlantic air, water and land transportation systems. Representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Transport, the Department of Public Works, the Canadian National Railways, the national harbours board and the Department of Finance could share in the work of this agency. Other problems such as the government's purchasing policies, coal policy, the problems of agriculture and fisheries, could also be assigned to this special federal agency. In other words, this would be the group responsible for the co-ordination of the work of different departments, including matters of research, with respect to the Atlantic region.

Such an organization should be assisted by a special Atlantic provinces fund to be assigned for the economic development of the region. The government could set aside the sum of $75 million to $100 million, which at the initiation or suggestion of the provinces concerned, could be used—for say a five-year period—to promote major projects which could in turn ensure the economic progress of the area. A joint capital projects commission under the jurisdiction of the four Atlantic provinces could recommend to the federal authorities or to this agency those projects requiring financial assistance on a priority basis, and the whole Atlantic region would be isolated as a single unit for such a purpose, which would provide for a wide range of federal intervention within these provinces.

I want to make it clear that our oldest provinces should not be regarded as just another Colombo plan area for which the federal government should be asked to vote emergency subsidies. It is furthermore not another area where large interests in the central provinces can look for secondary outlets for their consumer goods or for good market prospects for the disposal of surplus production. What we want in the Atlantic provinces is a fair share of and a participation in the economic growth of Canada; we want to participate through a more diversified system of business activity in the industrial expansion which has so obviously taken place in the last decade in most sections of our country.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

There is no doubt that the Gordon commission report, which was followed by concrete measures instituted by the prior administration in co-operation with the efforts of local authorities, created a great psychological effect on the maritime population, resulting in the generation of the confidence and initiative which is so essential for the development of our resources and the expansion of new industries.

The special agency I have suggested—possibly operating under the direction of the Department of Trade and Commerce—could be either a departmental division or a crown corporation whose primary responsibility would be to promote economic development. It has been recognized that the Atlantic provinces do not share the expanding frontiers of other parts of Canada and that something should be done to bring the economy of this vast area in line with those regions.

Once again I wish to remind hon. members that my suggestion should not be regarded as the introduction of a second Colombo plan for the purpose of helping to subsidize a particular emergency program. On the contrary, the people of the Atlantic provinces and the people of other provinces of Canada have witnessed other federal programs such as P.F.R.A., the construction of the trans-Canada pipe line, the St. Lawrence seaway and other projects which have helped certain regions far more than they have helped the Atlantic area. I might say some of these developments have even been detrimental to the Atlantic region, particularly from an economic point of view. The special assistance I have suggested, far from being considered a handout or a charity, could be an effective method of balancing out certain disadvantages which could have resulted from federal intervention in other regions.

Such interventions were needed and have proven beneficial to the areas concerned and the same effects would apply to the Atlantic provinces.

I am not discounting the special grants of $25 million awarded for a period of four years to the four Atlantic provinces as per a formula forming the basis of the equalization principle and being effective as of April 1 of this year. Let us not, however, arrive at the conclusion that these special grants will by themselves solve the problems of those provinces. I hope also that hon. members on the government side are not of the opinion that this particular measure was the first move by Ottawa towards recognizing the needs and requirements of the Atlantic provinces. In looking over the estimates for the fiscal year 1958-59, I find very little in new projects of major importance which could have favourable and influential reaction in relieving our present unemployment situation. In fact, the largest items in public works estimates are votes specifically designed for the completion of projects originated under the previous administration. It may be advisable to remind hon. members opposite of such projects as the Canso causeway, the Macdonald bridge, the Chatham air base, a number of airports, and the $100 million Camp Gagetown, all projects of major significance which have taken place in the Atlantic provinces in the last ten years.

Mr. Morris: What has the federal government got to do with the Macdonald bridge?

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member has something to learn before he will find out.

The northern vision of the Prime Minister could well be revised, and a second look at the Atlantic provinces might right now be suggested by all members from the provinces by the sea.

I am not against the development of the northern section of our country, but again I want to say let us think twice before we launch now, at this crucial period, a vast expansion program at Baffinland, and let us concentrate on areas where the people are unemployed, on areas where vast natural resources are already available and where its development could immediately contribute to the economy of the whole country from coast to coast. Opportunity exists in New Brunswick, and why should the attention of the government be leaning towards the north when our own mines, one of our own basic industries, lie dormant waiting for better days to come. It is important for the maritimes that concrete action be undertaken soon in order to meet the needs of our population by taking full advantage of the possibilities offered from our great untapped reserves.

Mr. Speaker, it may not be too late for the Minister of Finance and the present government to reconsider its attitude and to give practical recognition to our particular problems. Time does not permit me to elaborate further, but in closing I wish to emphasize once more the immediate need for a more concrete study of our transportation problems, for special consideratoin of the possibility of better land use by our farming population, for the creating of a special agency for promoting the development of our natural resources and, finally, the fulfilment of a program which could bring the Atlantic provinces back in a position comparable with the rest of Canada, sharing equally in the country's growth and expansion.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should first like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for having done a job which would have stumped any of his predecessors. Previous budgets were rather easy to make because it was only a question of finding a rug large enough to sweep the surplus under. But this budget, where there has to be a careful plan of pump priming and also a continual watch in case of inflation taking over, is a job for an expert and I congratulate the government on having a minister of the calibre of the Minister of Finance.

As the Minister of Finance has stated, we have a paradoxical situation of having at one and the same time a period of recession and a danger of inflation. In this regard I should like to echo the words of the minister when he said that this country must depend on the sense of responsibility of every man and woman not to take more than their fair share of the national income; that increases in income can only be justified by increased productivity, and by increased productivity alone; and that only by keeping our cost of production in line with that of our competitors could we hope to achieve expanding employment and a progressive improvement in our standard of living. The Minister of Finance also emphasized—and this, perhaps, is something new to the members of the opposition—that in respect to all public expenditure we should continue to search for economies and eradicate inefficiency and waste wherever we find them. He asked all members of parliament, regardless of party, to assist him in tracking down waste in every way possible.

We all know how diffidently our friends on the opposite side accepted the offer of the chairmanship of the public accounts committee, which is one major method by which a check can be kept on public expenditure. We also know that on the estimates committee a free rein is given to all members to check as deeply as they wish into the estimates that come before that committee and that is the first time that the committee has had the power, as a standing committee of the house, to do the job that it should be doing.

The budget speech also emphasized that the budget had taken energetic steps to combat the recession. We know that interest rates have declined substantially and that the banks for some time now have had plenty of funds with which to meet all credit requirements. We have been informed that treasury bills are now at their lowest interest rate for many years, and this easing of funds, this change in our monetary policy, has been of tremendous benefit to the country in combatting this recession. Although present investment intentions of business for capital outlays in 1958 are 11 per cent below the 1957 level, planned outlays for housing, expenditures by government departments and institutional services on the other hand are 14 per cent higher.

I contend that the government acted, and that it has acted with decision. As a result of this action—the measures taken with regard to housing, the increases in pensions, veterans benefits and unemployment insurance—the present recession has taken a much more moderate course in Canada than in the United States to whose economy we are so closely linked. For instance, on a yearly adjusted basis our retail sales are running ahead of last year, while in the United States they are down about 6 per cent. Industrial production in Canada has declined about 5 per cent from its peak, while in the United States the drop is 12 or 13 per cent. Total labour income in Canada has hardly declined at all, while in the United States it is down about 3 per cent. We do not take any satisfaction in the somewhat greater declines in the United States, for nothing could benefit Canada more quickly than an early resumption of business expansion in the United States. But this government is entitled to some credit for the relatively stronger economic position in Canada.

The Minister of Finance expects revenue to be down $387 million and more than half of this reduction, as he pointed out, is due to tax reductions made by this government. However, it is of interest to note that the remaining half of this reduction comes almost entirely from a falling off in corporation profits. Further tax reductions submitted in this budget total $26 million in a full year and these combined with previous tax reductions brought in by this government give a total of $200 million in the way of tax reductions in this government's first year in office.

Although the budget anticipates a record deficit of $648 million the relationship between the net debt as estimated for 1958 and the gross national product is practically unchanged and in fact is lower than the percentage relationship in 1955 or any previous year according to the table included in the budget speech. This percentage relationship was 37 per cent in 1958, 42 per cent in 1955, 44 per cent in 1953 and 47 per cent in 1951. With the exception of the years 1956 and 1957 this is the lowest percentage of the net debt expressed as a relationship to the gross national product.

At this point I would like to express appreciation to the Minister of Finance for the steps that were taken with regard to the revision in the tariff on wood products.

[Mr. Broome.]

I wish to quote from the budget speech as recorded at page 1248 of Hansard where the minister said:

> Another change relates to the duty on certain lumber products. A recent decision of the tariff board had the effect of classifying many kinds of worked lumber as "manufactures of wood" carrying a higher rate of duty than had generally applied previously. Canadian lumber interests have expressed serious concern about the possible implications of this change for their important export interests and they have been urging that the earlier position be restored.

This budget restored the earlier position which gave United States exporters equality with Canadian exporters to the United States. Considering that we ship more into the United States than we import from that country this is the measure which we on the west coast really desired.

The lumber industry on the west coast accounts for at least 25 per cent of our total payrolls and in certain areas it is the mainstay of entire communities. The position of the lumber industry is dependent to a large extent on transportation costs. Transportation costs to eastern Canada have been skyrocketing in the last few years according to the brief submitted to the transport board by the British Columbia lumber manufacturers' association. This association points out that between April 8, 1948 and January 1, 1957, freight rates have increased from 85 per cent to over 100 per cent. The effect of this has been that rates per 100 pounds Vancouver to Toronto which were 88½ cents prior to April 8, 1948 rose to $1.55 on January 1, 1957. If you transfer these rates from the basis of 100 pounds to 1,000 board feet measurements on the basis of 2,600 pounds per 1,000 feet board measure you arrive at a freight rate from Winnipeg to Vancouver which prior to April 8, 1948 was $14.70 increased to $34.60 on January 1, 1957. If it had not been for the action of this government in refusing the latest increase asked by the railways that figure would have risen to $35.90. On the same basis of comparison, Vancouver to Toronto, the rate prior to April 8, 1948, was $22 and on January 1, 1957, it had risen to $40.30.

While freight rates have gone up by over 100 per cent the average selling price f.o.b. mill on coast lumber has on the other hand decreased from $74.28 per 1,000 feet in 1948 to $70.13 per 1,000 feet in 1957. The brief goes on to point out that the British Columbia coast producers being the farthest from the Canadian consuming markets in the prairies and in eastern Canada have of course been hit hardest by these freight rate increases. They point out that in 1948 British Columbia shipped to the prairie provinces 4,330 carloads of lumber. They shipped 1,760 carloads of lumber in 1957 to this market. They shipped 5,660 carloads to eastern Canada in 1948 and only 3,530 carloads in 1957.

The reason for this of course is that the railroads are caught in a squeeze. A great portion of their traffic comes under bound rates which they cannot change or they will lose the revenue. Also the Crowsnest pass and related rates on grain constitute 27 to 30 per cent of the railroads' volume of traffic and comprises less than 10 per cent of their revenue. In brief the railroads have to have more revenue and they have a limited number of commodities on which they can get that revenue. The answer is not to take away from the grain grower the rates which were given to him at the time the Canadian Pacific railway was put through. It is also not the answer to make a relatively small volume of traffic carry all the extra cost as far as railway operations are concerned. It may be that the railways will be able to hold the line through increased efficiency and complete dieselization. I believe that the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian National Railways are about 50 per cent dieselized at this time.

The lumber industry on the west coast had several other requests of which I will mention only one and that is with regard to forestry expenses. They request that these be made allowable expenses in the calculation of income tax. With respect to depletion they request that it be based on realistic replacement values for the depletion of lumber resources, that is the replacement of timber as it is cut down. They request that it be placed on the basis of the value of the timber at the time of replacement rather than at the time of acquisition. Two of the largest forestry economies in the world, the United States and Sweden, have both realized the significance of this problem and allowed depletion on this basis. I hope the government will take a look at the request of the lumber industry and that it will see fit to meet some of their requirements.

The lumber industry submitted briefs to the tariff board with regard to the proposed increased protection on Canadian steel and steel products and with respect to woollens and worsteds. I took the time to check very carefully into the changes that were proposed by the tariff board. I can assure the hon. member that the changes made in the iron and steel schedule were such as to increase the British preference, if anything, because the previous government had through a multiplicity of end uses—and by that I mean specifying certain end uses of steel imported for that purpose—so changed matters that no tariff would apply. Therefore, in effect, the tariff for a great part of the imports was ineffective. Again, the tariff was based on steel at, I believe, six cents a pound. This tariff was set up 15 or 20 years ago. Steel has increased in value to such an extent that the tariff rate at present is not even equivalent to what it was supposed to be at the time it was put on.

As far as woollens are concerned, the increases granted are purely nominal. As far as I can see, the major victory is that we have kept a ceiling of 55 cents to 60 cents a pound and that limits the amount of the tariff that can be paid. I believe the figures given indicate that it will amount to something in the neighbourhood of 20 cents or 30 cents extra cost in the material that goes into a suit of clothes.

While I am discussing our lumber industry, I should like to make reference to the harbour of Vancouver. It may be that some changes should be made in the charges by the national harbours board. In the year 1957 the Vancouver harbour board had a surplus of $1,214,000. Montreal had a deficit of $679,000; Halifax had a deficit of $285,000; and Quebec had a deficit of $1,152,000. Therefore, the deficit of these three ports combined amounted to something over $2 million as compared with an operating surplus in Vancouver of almost $1,225,000. It may be that the charges in Vancouver harbour are perhaps a little excessive or else our operation is a great deal more efficient.

I should like to thank the minister for the changes made in section 35 of the Customs Act which has to do with dumping. In explaining this the minister had this to say, as reported at page 1246 of Hansard:

> The present dumping duties section of the customs tariff together with the valuation provisions of the Customs Act are adequate to deal with some forms of dumping. However, they do not deal with cases where goods are being imported into Canada at less than their cost of production and are also sold in the country of export below cost.

The minister said that section 35 was to be amended along the lines of the legislation in effect prior to 1948, requiring that, where appropriate, the value for duty of imported goods shall not be less than the cost of production plus a reasonable advance for selling cost and profit.

I can assure hon. members that this change will be of tremendous advantage, not only to the textile industry of Canada for whom it was developed but also to such people as the Canadian association of equipment distributors who are in the contractors plant and machinery field. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Financial Post, and which reads as follows:

> Threat of millions of dollars of cut-price, used U.S. construction equipment flooding the Canadian market grows.
> Until now Canadian machinery men have worried mainly about:
> Surplus equipment at U.S. bases in Canada.
> A build-up in the U.S. itself of privately-owned used equipment.
> But now comes word that middlemen may try to unload in Canada huge government-owned stocks under bond in Los Angeles and other cities.
> Much of the equipment has come from U.S. foreign defence bases and is prohibited by law from being sold in the U.S.
> From U.S. Pacific coast cities: Strenuous efforts are being made by bulk purchasers of government-owned equipment, now under bond, to unload it in foreign markets.
> A large movement of it into Canada can be expected if it is not made illegal.

I expect this change in section 35 will take care of something which could completely disrupt the machinery industry on the west coast and, for that matter, throughout Canada.

Would you call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

On motion of Mr. Broome the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what the business will be tomorrow?

Mr. Green: A continuation of this debate all week.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING LOANS

Question No. 65—Mr. Meunier:

1. How many loans were made in each province by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation from June 10, 1957 to date?
2. What was the total amount in each province?
3. During the same period, how many such loans were made in the area of (a) Montreal; (b) Quebec; (c) Sherbrooke; (d) Three Rivers; (e) Abitibi; (f) Hull; (g) Lake St. Jean; (h) Rimouski; (i) St. Hyacinthe; (j) St. Jean?
4. What was the total amount of such loans in each of the above areas?

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CIVILIAN DISMISSALS

Question No. 84—Mr. Deschatelets:

How many civilian employees have been dismissed from the staff of the Department of National Defence since March 31, 1958 (a) in the Montreal area; (b) in the Quebec area; (c) in the Toronto area?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

The number of dismissals, i.e. action following a breach of regulations, in the Department of National Defence since March 31, 1958:

IMPORTS FROM UNITED KINGDOM

Question No. 85—Mr. Deschatelets:

1. What was the total value of imported goods from Great Britain to Canada (a) from June 1, 1956 to June 1, 1957; (b) from June 1, 1957 to June 1, 1958?

2. For the period June 1, 1957 to June 1, 1958, what was the total value of imported goods from Great Britain in the following categories: (a) footwear; (b) textiles; (c) automobiles; (d) machines and parts?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

INSURANCE PAYMENTS TO FISHERMEN

Question No. 88—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What amount has been paid by fishermen on (a) lobster trap insurance premiums; (b) fishing boat insurance premiums, by Nova Scotia and New Brunswick fishermen respectively?

2. What amounts have been paid out under the insurance plan for loss and damage to lobster traps and fishing boats to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick fishermen?

3. What are the numbers, respectively, for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, of fishermen who have insurance coverage for lobster traps and fishing boats?

Answer by: Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries):

As at April 30, 1958:

1. (a) Nova Scotia, $47,751.82; New Brunswick, $563; (b) Nova Scotia, $60,601.23; New Brunswick, $14,664.49.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 24, 1958

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUNGARY—STATEMENT ON CANADIAN PROTEST RESPECTING EXECUTION OF FORMER LEADERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I said that a note of protest would be sent to the Hungarian government expressing the strong disapproval of the Canadian government and the Canadian people of the execution of former Premier Nagy of Hungary and his associates. I now wish to inform the house that today a note was delivered to the Hungarian representative at the United Nations, the material portions of which are as follows:

> The revulsion and shock manifest throughout the world at the news of the execution of Imre Nagy, former premier of Hungary and his associates, is shared by the government and the people of Canada. The fact that the victims were taken into custody after assurances were given by the Hungarian government that no sanctions would be taken against them and that they could proceed freely to their homes makes their execution the more reprehensible.
> It is greatly to be regretted that the Hungarian government has seen fit to carry out these harsh reprisals which flout the principles of justice and worsen the international climate. In 1956 and in 1957 world opinion expressed itself unmistakably on the tragic events in Hungary through debates in the United Nations and in the report of the special United Nations committee of investigation. These executions are therefore considered by the Canadian government as part of an unjustifiable terrorist policy which is abhorrent to the people of Canada and which makes it difficult to maintain the hope that the Hungarian government, along with other governments of eastern Europe, will be able to move forward towards a more liberal dispensation for their peoples.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to associate the official opposition with the protest which the Prime Minister has made in such fitting terms on behalf of the government in respect of this horrible deed.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this group wishes to associate itself with the protest made on behalf of the Canadian people by the Prime Minister and to express our total lack of comprehension for this unnecessary cruelty and foolishness.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED CUTBACKS AND MINE CLOSURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, based upon a communication I have received from local 4527, United Mine Workers of America, and upon press reports indicating further cutbacks and mine closures in Nova Scotia. Would the Prime Minister state what action is proposed by the government to restore employment in the coal industry?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the situation in Nova Scotia is concerned, there has been such an overproduction of coal that it has required action on the part of the coal producing companies. The suggestion was made that the federal government might place itself in the position of a guarantor in respect of certain advances to be made to the coal companies, thereby providing a continuance of production until such time as the accumulation of more than 1 million tons of coal has been sold.

This represents the situation at the present time, but consideration has been given to the representations which have been made. As yet, however, I am not in a position to say whether it would be appropriate from a constitutional point of view for the national government to take the action suggested. In addition, the whole situation is being canvassed with a view to ameliorating to the greatest possible degree the discomfort caused to the workers and their families through the temporary discontinuance of production.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR FURTHER EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to ask parliament to extend the seasonal benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, or whether he is taking any other steps to maintain or provide incomes for unemployed persons in this country?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): In so far as the earlier portion of the question is concerned, it is not the intention to extend still further the already extended period of seasonal benefit payments. In so far as the balance of the question is concerned, I would say that the question of unemployment generally is one which is receiving constant consideration, and when further measures are to be introduced parliament will be made aware of the government's intentions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED DELAY IN MAKING SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether, in connection with the statistics given out this morning by the dominion bureau of statistics regarding the level of unemployment in Canada, the minister can say whether or not it is the case that there was a delay in making the survey on which these figures are based and, if there was such a delay, can the minister explain why the delay was possibly as long as 10 days?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge with regard to the assumption made by the hon. member. I will look into it. I thought the figures came through at the regular time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

USE IN MAGAZINE ADVERTISING OF PHOTOGRAPHS AND MESSAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs based on the growing irritation of a number of prominent and well known Canadians at the intrusion of a form of American commercialism into the public life of this country.

Is it the policy of the government to permit United States controlled magazines published in Canada to exploit the good looks of members of the cabinet and the intelligence and knowledge of senior civil servants by the publication of photographs of and messages from any of these persons, in what is obviously a form of overt advertising on the part of the magazines concerned?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as this question relates to the Department of External Affairs, I would make the observation that pulchritude is very frequently an effective medium in international affairs. I am wondering whether the hon. member is suggesting that less attractive pictures of the class to which he refers should be published.

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF ANNUAL VACATIONS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have a question for the Acting Minister of Labour. In view of the desirability of having guaranteed holidays as provided by the Annual Vacations Act available to employees during the present holiday season, can the Acting Minister of Labour say when the government will proclaim the Annual Vacations Act which was passed by parliament during the last session and given royal assent on January 31?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the actual date has not been set yet for the proclamation. My hon. friend will realize that this is a rather complicated act. The regulations are still being reviewed, but I can assure him that an announcement will be made within a relatively short space of time, a week or 10 days.

TRADE

URANIUM—REPORTED SALE BY UNITED STATES TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the signing on June 6 of an agreement between the United States and Japan for the supply of 2,700 kilograms of uranium by the United States to Japan over a period of 10 years. My question is, does this agreement mean that Canada will not be called upon to supply uranium in commercial quantities to Japan during that period?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I would have to look into this and see what quantities of uranium Japan is likely to require over that period—what their program is with regard to the development of power plants. I have not that information with me at the moment.

AUTOMOBILES—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY U.S. IN CANADIAN EXPORTS TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in a position now to give the results of an investigation which was to be made into the sale of Canadian-manufactured automobiles which were destined for export to China, and were precluded because of action taken by another friendly country.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this problem has exercised my hon. friend for some considerable time—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It has exercised my community.

Mr. Churchill: —and I hope I can give him a satisfactory answer. I cannot say that there is any direct proof that the order was placed or that it was cancelled by action of another government. There is a law in the United States supported by regulations which prohibit subsidiary companies trading with communist China, and that law and the regulations have apparently acted as a restraint to trade on the part of Canadian subsidiaries.

With regard to what can be done about it, we are looking into the matter very carefully and we hope by negotiation to have some relaxation of this restraint in so far as Canadian companies are concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Can my hon. friend say whether or not representations were made by this government to the government of the United States?

Mr. Churchill: Some preliminary conversations have been held. The question of official representations from government to government is a matter to be considered.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—PUBLIC OWNERSHIP POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a news report in this morning's Globe and Mail.

In view of the support of the principle of public ownership of the trans-Canada pipe line expressed both by the present members of the cabinet while in opposition and by Premier Frost of Ontario, and in view of the resolution of the association of Ontario mayors and reeves convention opening in Stratford tomorrow, backed by the municipalities of St. Thomas, Owen Sound, Stratford, Welland—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —Woodstock, Peterborough, Simcoe, Paris, Ingersoll, Barton and Waterford, could the Prime Minister now assure the house and the Canadian people that the government still supports the principle of public ownership for the trans-Canada pipe line and so encourage these Ontario municipalities in their efforts?

Mr. Speaker: That question poses a number of problems, including a problem for the Speaker. In so far as it deals with municipalities and their mayors and reeves it is obviously a matter of provincial jurisdiction. In so far as it asks whether the government supports legislation which is on the statute books, it seems to me an unnecessary question to ask.

TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON REPORTED CANADIAN OPPOSITION TO U.S. PROPOSAL RESPECTING GREAT LAKES PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Port Arthur addressed a question to me which I took as notice. This question concerned representations that had been made by the Canadian government to the United States state department in connection with certain pilotage legislation now being considered by a congressional committee. I would interpolate here, Mr. Speaker, that there was no opposition to the principle of the bill expressed by the Canadian government. With the permission of the house I desire to table the text of the aide-memoire on this matter that was delivered to the state department by the Canadian ambassador in Washington on March 20, 1958.

I should like for a moment to comment on the nature of this representation. The aim of the legislation now before congress is to provide a means of ensuring the safety of navigation on the great lakes. The Canadian government strongly supports this objective. It is the view of the Canadian government, however, that for the attainment of that objective it is not essential for vessels to carry an accredited pilot or qualified officers during the passage through of the open waters of the great lakes, but that the interests of safety would be served by requiring vessels to carry pilots in certain designated areas.

May I have permission to table this aide-memoire?

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I gather from reading the transcript of the proceedings at the recent committee hearings that Senators Bricker and Lausche expressed the view that they were agreeable to a joint commission to study this problem. Has the Canadian government at any time suggested that there should be a joint commission to study this particular problem?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): Not to my knowledge, and the Minister of Transport concurs in that answer.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that in order to put this legislation into effect on the portion of the St. Lawrence which is international, similar legislation will be required in Canada? Does the minister know whether or not such legislation will be forthcoming?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, I would think it probably would be necessary, Mr. Speaker; and when we find out what the United States government does intend to do in this regard, then we will give this matter very serious study.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. Is this not a matter about which there should be agreement between the two countries before legislation is passed in either country?

Mr. Hees: We are not aware as yet exactly what the United States government does propose.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Port Arthur inquired if my department had received any proposals from the shipping federation of Canada asking us to intervene to delay legislation proposed by the United States coastguard and now before the United States congress. Assuming that this question had reference to the matter of pilotage on the great lakes, I answered it in the negative.

I realized later, however, that while this answer was literally true it may have been misleading to the hon. member. In fact, while no recent representations have been received from the shipping federation we did receive representations from them several months ago. Those representations were not so much a request for us to seek to delay the United States legislation as an expression of opinion with regard to great lakes pilotage to the effect that pilotage, while necessary in restricted waters, was not essential on all the open waters of the great lakes. These representations coincided with our own views, and accordingly they have been brought to the attention of the appropriate United States authorities.

Mr. Fisher: As a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport on the information he gave, I understood him to say that when the Americans complete their plans or their ideas in this regard the Canadian government will consider them. At the present time a bill has passed through the House of Representatives and is due to be reported out of the Senate today. Since this legislation does provide for pilotage in areas that the Canadian government would consider unrestricted, what protests are planned to be sent?

Mr. Hees: I am not clear on the last part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Fisher: What protest is Canada planning to make to follow up the aide-memoire mentioned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, since the effect of the bill that is about to be reported out of the Senate is to have unrestricted pilotage?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, after we have examined the American position I will be in a better position to advise the house of what our action will be.

WATER POLLUTION

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON REPORTED DUMPING OF OIL IN ST. LAWRENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres referred yesterday to the reported dumping of oil by ships sailing below Montreal, and asked if any action has been taken by the department.

The Canada Shipping Act was amended in 1956 to deal with the oil pollution problem, and the oil pollution prevention regulations were made pursuant to the new provisions of the act. These regulations forbid the dumping of fuel oil from ships' tanks into the domestic waters of Canada. Notices bringing the requirements of these regulations to the attention of ships' masters are distributed on board ship by our pilots during the course of their duties.

The department is presently arranging for a boat to carry out patrols on the St. Lawrence river in the Sorel area. This boat should be in operation July 1, and it is the intention to institute proceedings against the owners of any ship involved in contravention of these regulations.

BROADCASTING

KITIMAT, B.C.—STATEMENT ON GRANTING OF LICENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Skeena inquired regarding the recommendation of the C.B.C. board of governors made at its December meeting for the granting of a private radio station at Kitimat. Final action on this application has been delayed pending a clarification of matters which one of the owners concerned has before the department and the C.B.C. board of governors relating to another radio station.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YUKON—REPORTED THREAT OF DAMAGE FROM FOREST FIRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I am sorry I have not had the opportunity to give him notice of this question; he may wish to take this as notice. Can the minister inform the house of the action, if any, being or to be taken by his department to alleviate the very serious threat of extensive damage to private and public property and natural resources arising from four serious forest fires burning in the areas of Whitehorse, Liard, North Stewart and Takhini hot springs in the Yukon?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, all I can do is inform the house that we have been in conversation with the commissioner of the Yukon, who has informed us that the firefighting crews in these four areas are doing a fairly good job. He has also asked for extra assistance, which we are attempting to provide him by flying in four people from the parks department who have experience in fighting fires in mountainous areas, particularly where coniferous forests are involved. They will be leaving Edmonton this afternoon at 4.45 p.m. I have not had time nor has the department, I believe, to consider the question of damage to the sawmill on the Stewart, I think it is, or any damage that may have occurred in the neighbourhood of Whitehorse itself. I think the house will be relieved to know that the fire is checked within two and a half miles of Whitehorse. I have no information on the others beyond what I have just told the house.

Mr. Nielsen: Where are these engineers or forestry people coming from who are being dispatched to the Yukon?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think we are taking two from the park at Banff, one from Yoho and one from Jasper. They are being brought together today in Edmonton and will be flown to Whitehorse this afternoon.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHEVRIER—REFERENCE TO ST. JEAN BAPTISTE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I want to draw your attention and that of hon. members to the fact that today is the feast of the patron saint of French Canadians and that, in various centres of this country, celebrations are taking place to commemorate the anniversary of our national patron saint.

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I followed what my hon. friend had to say, and while I cannot express myself in the French language I do want to associate myself with his remarks and to say on behalf of the government and the people of Canada that this is indeed a great day in Canada's history.

FINANCE

CUT FLOWERS—REPORTED PRICE INCREASE EQUALLING TAX REDUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance on the reduction or removal of taxation on certain goods, can the Minister of Finance explain the situation in his department if, when he announces in the budget speech the removal of a tax, we find the next day that suppliers of goods increase their prices to the same extent as the reduction of tax? Will he explain any action to be taken by his department?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the effective date of any changes in commodity taxes is normally midnight following the introduction of the budget. That is standard practice. The bills to follow have the effect, and this year will have the effect, of making the changes effective from midnight following the introduction of the budget proposals. If my hon. friend has any knowledge or any information concerning any particular changes that have been made in prices I should be glad if he would communicate that information, because he is aware that no increases were made in these commodity taxes. Decreases were made.

Mr. Winch: I have a supplementary question. When the Minister of Finance spoke on Tuesday he announced a reduction or removal of the tax on cut flowers. On the next day—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Winch: I am asking a question. As I say, on the next day in British Columbia cut flowers supplied by retailers did not have the tax, but the price of cut flowers was increased by the amount of the reduction in tax. Can the minister take any action in that regard?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Obviously that increase had nothing to do with the budget. I can assure my hon. friend that in many other places one can point to evidence where the price of cut flowers was reduced on the morning following the introduction of the budget.

Mr. Winch: I am asking the minister this question. If in the morning the price of cut flowers was increased by the amount of the reduction in tax, can he not take action in the matter?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not aware at the moment of any action to be taken. I would have to know a great deal more about the circumstances surrounding the alleged increase. But certainly the alleged increase has nothing whatever to do with the budget, because the effect of the budget was contrary to the action which the hon. member says was taken by the florists to whom he referred.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR DEDUCTION OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO BENEFIT FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue with reference to the death of 18 men, 16 of whom I understand were married, in the recent bridge collapse at Vancouver. Considering that workmen's compensation pensions will, I understand, allow only $75 a month pension for the widow, plus $25 for each child under 16, and in view of the fact that a Vancouver newspaper has started a fund for the benefit of these families, will the minister give consideration to all contributions to this fund being allowed as charitable contributions deductible for income tax purposes?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member spoke to me about this matter earlier in the day. I have not had an opportunity to review the situation. As the house well knows, donations to charity which are deductible for income tax purposes—and there seems to be a host of them these days for which such deductions are sought—must first comply with the law with respect to charities as defined by the English common law and our law, and also must meet the requirements of the regulations of the Department of National Revenue. I certainly will take this matter under consideration, I hope later today or at the latest by tomorrow, and be able to give a definite answer to the hon. member with respect to this matter.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, June 23, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam took exception to the stand taken by the Minister of Finance with regard to his request that all sections of the Canadian economy try to hold the price and wage line, and that increases should be based upon increased productivity. As the hon. member must have known, because it is detailed in the budget speech, the minister expects a drop in revenue of $387 million, of which more than half or some $200 million is due to tax reductions made by this government, but almost all the remainder is due to a falling off in corporation profits.

Today I received a bulletin which gave the results of a survey of 1,069 manufacturing companies employing more than 441,000 people in 1957. It shows that profits dropped from 5.8 cents on each dollar of sales in 1956 to 5.2 cents last year, that is 1957. Of this 1957 profit, 2.3 cents went to shareholders and 2.9 cents were plowed back into the business with, of course, a resulting increase in employment opportunities. Over the last ten years, according to this survey which has been made, the average profits have been 5.72 cents on each dollar of sales, so the profits in 1957 were 10 per cent below the ten-year average.

Mr. Speaker, this government has turned this nation into a world trading nation, as compared with the inclinations of the previous government to limit us to a hemispheric trading nation. For instance, in 1957 we had the highest exports on record in Canadian history, and these include the highest exports ever known to the United States. This year, in the first five months the total exports achieved an even greater height than in 1957. In fact this year our total exports for the first five months are $1,952.9 million as compared with $1,936.4 million in the first five months last year. This year United Kingdom and commonwealth figures are up from $378 million to $420 million and the United States figure is slightly down, by 1.8 per cent. But imports from the United States are down by $300 million and imports from the United Kingdom are up by $5 million. The effect of this will be corrective to a limited degree on our balance of payments deficit, which amounted to $1.4 billion last year.

The minister has pointed out that the chronic nature of our massive trade imbalance with the United States requires energetic corrective measures. These huge trade deficits, accompanied as they are by heavy increases in our long-term indebtedness to the United States, carry serious implications for the future health and economic independence of our country. The heavy concentration of our foreign trade on the United States means that the Canadian economy is extremely vulnerable to the United States economic and political climate, and to shifts in its trading policy.

I believe the minister pointed out that the proposed European free trade area represents a market which is equivalent in population to the United States. In that regard we must do our best to maintain our trade position with that area as it comes into being. I believe the government is doing a job which will have lasting and beneficial effects on our Canadian economy, as we will be less subject to the sudden fluctuations in the United States, although they will always remain our best customer, the customer who buys most of our goods and from whom we buy most of our goods.

We will, however, develop a very large trade with the rest of the world which will act as a balance wheel for this rather overwhelming north-south trade pattern as it exists today.

I would like to say a few words with respect to the increases in pensions brought forward by the government, and also with respect to the indication that the civil service pensions are to be reviewed. It has been mentioned that some time during this parliamentary session some such measures will be introduced to this house. The condition of the superannuated civil servant who retired in 1948, or any time prior to that year, is rather unenviable, because the previous government did not keep the wage scale of the civil servants anywhere in line with that of industry. For instance, in 1946 a letter carrier received a salary of $150 a month whereas in 1957, ten years later, he received $300 a month. In 1948 a clerk grade 2 in the customs department received $1,860 a year, whereas in 1958 he will receive $3,150 a year. Because pensions are tied to earnings, the resulting pensions are proportionately low for those earlier years. With the consent of the house I would now like to place on record a table which I have prepared indicating the differences between 1946 and 1958.

Mr. Benidickson: What is the source of this material?

Mr. Broome: The official record.

Mr. Benidickson: From whom?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member submits a table which he has personally prepared from official records, would he please indicate the extent of the table?

Mr. Broome: About 15 lines, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this be inserted at this point in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broome: The table is as follows:

In regard to our trade pattern, the fact that our population increase was the highest on record, partly as a result of natural increase and partly as a result of the heavy immigration program, has tended to make our unemployment problems more acute, but at the same time is building up the domestic market which will in turn have a levelling and balancing effect on our internal economy. Because of our rapidly increasing population we should endeavour to have more manufacturing done in Canada. In 1957 the total production of passenger cars in this country was 340,016, while in 1937 the figure was 153,046.

In the 1930's the tariff schedule allowed the importation of parts from the United States on the basis that if total car production was 10,000 units or less and had a commonwealth content of 40 per cent, then the imported parts would be duty free. If it was 20,000 units or less the commonwealth content would have to be 50 per cent, and if it was over 20,000 units then the commonwealth content would have to be 60 per cent.

I would suggest that a review of the importation of parts used in automobile manufacture might very well show that there is room for a greatly expanded operation by the automobile companies on this side of the border, if they so desire, with a consequent increase in employment opportunities in this country. It may be that the content requirement might be increased, at least by some percentage; but in any event I feel some study of this question should be undertaken to see just what is involved and what can be done to increase manufacturing in Canada.

The hon. member for Essex East has bitterly complained time after time about the importation of United Kingdom cars and the fact that opportunities for employment in this country have been thereby decreased. I have checked into this matter, and I find that the importation of complete passenger and truck units during last year from the United States totalled about $75 million and the importation of European cars totalled around $54 million. There was a total of 15,298 passenger car units worth $46 million imported from the United States.

The sum and substance of this is that as we increase manufacturing in Canada we promote jobs; and because of the control of our manufacturing set-up—54 per cent of control being outside of Canada, mainly within the United States—there is a tendency on the part of the companies to concentrate their manufacturing operations in their parent plants, leaving the Canadian companies as assembly operations and distribution and sales organizations. This tendency to treat the Canadian company as a branch plant takes away from it the opportunity to develop foreign trade. It also minimizes the possibilities of expansion within this country. In other words, it is being operated in many cases for the benefit of the parent company, not only with respect to sales and how they should be carried on but also with respect to employment opportunities.

I am rather familiar with the field of engineering, and have been most distressed to find that wherever one goes one finds that many Canadian companies, besides a great number of the foreign-owned subsidiary companies and also some municipalities, seem to feel that Canadian engineers and architects do not have what they require and that they must go to the United States to secure these services. I believe that in all government contracts a clause should be inserted to the effect that such services shall be supplied from within Canada. We should take the lead, thereby influencing our junior levels of government to follow along the same lines.

I have in my hand a clipping from the Toronto Telegram of April 15, 1958, in which it is stated that individual engineers, who insist on remaining unnamed, are being replaced by United States engineers. It also mentions that the contract for the improvement of the city approaches to the skyway just outside Hamilton was let to engineers from outside the country. There are undoubtedly many engineering problems which require specialized skills not available in Canada, but in general the Canadian engineering and architectural professions can take care of the great bulk of our requirements.

I could not close without making at least one or two references to the benefits which I believe will ensue from the appointment of the Borden commission on energy. I attended several of the hearings in western Canada, and I can assure the house that the commission is doing a tremendous job. This is a job which needed to be done and will, I am sure, result in a much healthier atmosphere in the oil and gas industries. The problems of commercial preference, of markets in the northwest, of the Montreal market, are all being investigated to the end that there should be greater markets for Canadian oil and a greater utilization of petroleum resources through manufacturing carried on in our country.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance has done a job which was incomparably more difficult than that which faced any of his predecessors, and that he deserves the thanks of this nation for having brought forth a budget which I feel is so clearly tailored to meet the needs of this country.

Mr. H. J. Michaud (Kent, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, the budget is the instrument by which the commitments made by the party forming the government are translated into concrete form. Envisaged in this aspect, never has a budget sounded more paradoxical than that presented by the Minister of Finance on June 17. Indeed, we all have vividly in our minds those broad and glowing commitments which were made by the present government during the recent political campaign.

Here are a few of those commitments: the lowering of the general level of taxation; a special public works program; increased assistance to municipalities; guaranteed prices to fishermen for their fish; full employment to all; reduction of the gross national debt; a balanced budget and the stimulating of trade.

Just how many of these commitments are to be implemented following the forecast made in the context of the budget now before this house? Very few and scanty budgetary items are there toward the fulfilment of those countless promises. To the average wage earner of the country, to the Canadian taxpayer, to the industrialist and the businessman, to the farmer, the fisherman, the miner, to the hundreds of thousands of unemployed, visions of yesterday have become the delusions of today; dreams of the past have dissipated, to make room for anxiety and concern in the future.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that too much time has been taken by the individual members of this house to speak of the needs of their respective constituencies. Little wonder, in the light of the economic conditions prevailing in every section of the country, that individual members feel it their duty to voice to the responsible legislative body of the country, that is the government, the wants of their constituents. As the representative in this house of the people of Kent county, I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to tell this government of the uncertainty, in some cases of the distress, of my constituents at the present time.

While the government lays great claim to its so-called huge public works program to create employment, I respectfully submit that the sources of employment in my own province of New Brunswick have drastically declined as compared with immediate past years. Hundreds of workers who secured employment at Camp Gagetown during the last four or five years are idle, unable to secure further work on that project. Hundreds of workers who in the past were employed on government projects at Labrador are tediously waiting for recalls which are not forthcoming. Hundreds of woodsmen who found gainful employment in the flourishing pulp and lumber industry in the immediate past stand idle in the face of this sudden stagnation in that industry.

While the Minister of Public Works loudly proclaims that thousands and thousands of people have been put to work under a special works program, the number of unemployed workers in our province remains at unusual heights. I ask the government to give immediate attention to this crucial situation before a full-scale depression such as we have already had in this country again fully develops.

I do not hesitate to state what has already been stated often in this house; that if it were not for the various social measures brought in by the preceding Liberal administration, such as old age pensions, family allowances, unemployment insurance and so on, we would now be living in economic conditions as depressed as those of the early thirties. It is all very well for the government to maintain its attitude of self-contentment when these critical situations are called to its attention. The people are no longer content with this display of inertia and indifference on the part of the government, and with its failure to act as promised to remedy this depressed state of affairs.

Surely there are projects to be initiated in the maritime provinces which could provide employment at the present time. I indicated one which, I submit, is of major importance, in the course of my speech during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, namely the Chignecto canal. If this project was important enough to warrant the Prime Minister's attention during election time, surely it should warrant that same attention as a means of relieving unemployment. There are many other useful projects of a similar nature, and with the same usefulness of purpose, that should command the attention of this government in the present circumstances. What our working class expects is nothing less than what it has a right to expect and what was solemnly promised to it by this government—work which will permit them to sustain themselves and their families. I urge the government to act now.

I should like to take advantage of this budget debate to deal specifically with one of the most important sectors of our economy, agriculture. During the last two election campaigns our farmers have been led to believe by the Conservative spokesmen, and particularly by the Prime Minister, that they can expect a completely new deal from the present government and a solution to all their many problems. It is still too early to judge the record of the present government in this regard, but I want to say to the hon. ministers opposite that we will be watching their activities very closely and will do our utmost to see that they live up to their election promises. In addition, anything we can do to force the hand of the government in this matter we shall certainly do.

Representatives of all parties agree that the situation in which the Canadian farmer finds himself today is not satisfactory. In many parts of the country our farm economy has not kept pace with the progress and development of some other aspects of our economy. Many of the problems with which farmers are faced today are extremely complicated; and some of them, such as the marketing of surplus products, have international complications.

In the area which I represent, the problem which concerns us most is the preservation of the family farm. The family farm is the very basis of our society in New Brunswick, and indeed in most parts of Canada. But today the family farm is in danger of being wiped out in the face of competition from large scale industrial methods applied to agriculture. Let me give you but one example. In many parts of Canada today, broiler chickens are being produced in vast numbers by commercial organizations under conditions and in quantities with which our farmers cannot compete. There is a tendency on behalf of these large commercial companies to get control of all phases of agricultural production and marketing. This is a real danger for our farmers, and that is why I feel everything possible must be done to assist the family farm to survive.

All those who are sincerely interested in the welfare of the Canadian farmer are aware of the many steps taken by the Liberal government in recent years to assist the farmer. I think we have reason to be proud of the system of price supports, credit facilities through the Canadian farm loan board, the freight rate assistance on feed grain and the assistance through the maritime marshland rehabilitation administration, and so on. These measures, and the efficient administration of our economy which brought it to such a level of prosperity, are amongst the main reasons why Canadian farmers, helped by the Liberal government, were able to pull themselves out of the depressed conditions which existed under the last Conservative government from 1930 to 1935.

During the last campaign our Liberal leader, the hon. member for Algoma East, outlined further steps which the Liberal party would strive to take on behalf of the Canadian farmer. This program included a system of deficiency payments to supplement our price support system under wheat, oats, barley, flax and rye. The hon. member for Algoma East also outlined his plan to create a farm loan bank which would take over the whole matter of farm credit financing on the federal level. This farm loan bank would make available at reasonable rates long-term, medium-term and short-term credit to assist the farmers in purchasing the necessary equipment or land to establish healthy economic units. It would have as one of its principal functions the assistance of young farmers in getting established on their own, just as the Veterans' Land Act did, which was established by the Liberal administration in 1945 and which made credit available to ex-servicemen returning to the land.

I think most hon. members with any knowledge of farming will realize that this is one of the most important steps that could be taken to keep our family farms intact, and to assist young Canadians who want to remain on the land. It is also one of the most efficient ways of enabling the farmer to produce at prices which will enable him to compete both on the home market and abroad.

Another item in the Liberal program toward which we are working is legislation to make it easier to improve farm homes. Under the National Housing Act much has been done to assist Canadians to build or purchase adequate housing, but unfortunately for the farmers most of this housing has been constructed in our towns and cities. It is for this reason we feel it is very important now to take specific steps for the purpose of assisting our farmers to improve their homes or to build new ones if they desire. I am not suggesting specifically how it could be done, but I think either the National Housing Act or a farm loan bank, such as I have outlined, could undertake this task.

Of course one of the most important things a government can do for the farmer is to maintain and expand our markets abroad. I am convinced that the free trade policies outlined by my leader are more likely to assist the farmer in this regard than the return to high tariffs and protection, which is obviously the policy of the Conservative government. We all know that our Canadian farmers—

Mr. McGee: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Michaud: After I am through, if you do not mind. We all know that our Canadian farmers can only survive and prosper under conditions of the freest possible international trade. If the present government is going to lead us into a war of restrictions and counter-restrictions with our United States neighbours and other good customers, then it will be our farmers who will suffer. In the maritime provinces assistance should be provided to promote and facilitate the establishment of vegetable canning factories to meet our maritime needs, thus helping to keep for our local farmers an industry which properly belongs to them.

During the 1957 campaign the present Prime Minister proclaimed from one end of the country to the other that he was going to introduce a bill of rights for the Canadian farmer, and that he was going to assure to Canadian farmers a level of income comparable to that of other Canadians. Of course this is an ideal we all want to realize, but I suspect that the Prime Minister is already finding it is easier to make a statement like that on the election platform than to back it up by action. While the Agricultural Stabilization Act introduced at the last session of parliament has not been in force long enough to assess its true value, we do know that it is not meeting the needs of the Minister of Agriculture or doing what the Prime Minister said it would. There have been many complaints from both farm organization and farmers about it. The recent announcements of support prices under certain agricultural products indicate that the government intends to do nothing more than put a distress price under a few agricultural products, and that these distress-price supports are likely to be of little value in the face of rising costs.

I was rather surprised when I read that the Prime Minister, speaking in Summerside on February 27, during the last election campaign, said according to a report in the Toronto Daily Star of February 28, 1958, that there is a distress price in Canada below which all agricultural prices cannot fall. Of course all hon. members who have read the Agricultural Stabilization Act will realize that only nine agricultural products receive this support. Producers who want other products protected must convince the government of the need to do so. One such product which is not adequately protected is potatoes. If the Prime Minister believes that this act covers all agricultural products I invite him to announce a price for this year's potato crop which will assure the farmers of New Brunswick a fair price in relation to other products. I would apply these remarks to the potato growers of other provinces, such as Prince Edward Island.

As was said in an editorial in the Charlottetown Guardian on June 7, when the price supports on soya beans were announced:

> Surely, no one would claim that soya beans, which have been given protection, mean more to the Canadian economy than potatoes.

In view of the constant fluctuations in the market price of potatoes it is particularly important for producers of this important crop to have some assurance that they will receive a fair price for their crop each year. The Minister of Agriculture is quoted as saying he wanted to be sure that a potato surplus did in fact exist before giving his approval to a floor price. The editorial in the Charlottetown Guardian, to which I referred, concludes:

> That ought not to be a difficult thing to ascertain. Our understanding is that the officials who went from here to Ottawa to discuss the problem, told officials that there is a surplus. What need is there for further inquiry?

Earlier this month a delegation from Prince Edward Island, headed by agriculture minister Eugene Cullen, came to Ottawa to urge the government to have potatoes placed under this act. I hope the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues will soon meet this request. While I am on the subject of price supports I should like to draw the attention of the house to a quotation from the Prime Minister's speech of February 26 last in Rimouski concerning price support for pulpwood. I quote from the Toronto Daily Star of February 27, 1958:

"I hope (Mr. Diefenbaker said) that the advisory committee and the stabilization board (which administer the price support act) will give consideration to including farm produced woods, so that they will know the lowest price they will receive in a year, in advance."

I am sure all farmers who cut pulpwood on their farms during the winter months will look forward to an early announcement by the government on this subject, especially since the Prime Minister stated in his speech at Rimouski that representations had already been made by the producers to have such price support established.

It is because of the professed interest of the Conservative spokesmen during the election campaign in the welfare of our farmers that we have awaited with interest the government's pronouncements on policy. We were surprised and disappointed to find a contrast between the great promises made on the election platform and the very brief references to the farm economy in the speech from the throne and in the budget address last week. As a matter of fact, the Canadian farmer is certainly the forgotten man as far as this budget is concerned. All this budget means to him is higher prices through protectionist policies, and because the government is doing nothing to fight rising costs.

We had hoped that the government would announce a plan to put into effect its promises concerning the extension of credit to farmers. It is true that there is a bill before the house for the purpose of increasing the resources of the Canadian farm loan board by some $2 million. Is this the completely new deal Canadian farmers have been promised to assist them in obtaining long-term, medium-term and short-term credit? This step is all the more surprising in view of the fact that Conservative candidates throughout the country stated during the campaign that the farm loan board was not the answer to the farm credit problem, and that new steps would be taken.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture must be very disappointed as well. In their brief of June 2 to the government they urged that loans under the farm loan board should be increased to $20,000, and the loan period increased to 40 years. They also urged that the percentage of appraised value of real estate available as a loan be increased, and they urged a reduction in the rate of interest charged. Another recommendation was on a specific system of supervised loans for young farmers and marginal farmers. They also urged that farm improvement loans be made available at a lower interest rate, namely 4½ per cent, and that longer periods for repayment of loans on farm machinery should be provided.

Furthermore, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture urges a specific program of emergency loans to help farmers stricken by natural disasters. Such loans should carry no interest unless unnecessary default in payment is shown. Surely this step will recommend itself to the government, because they are on record during the campaign as favouring immediate adoption of a nation-wide system of crop insurance, a policy incidentally, which has also been advocated by the Liberal party.

In the same brief to which I have referred the Canadian Federation of Agriculture expresses the hope that something will soon be done to set up such a system of crop insurance. I have stated that the problems facing our farmers are complicated. It was because the former prime minister, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, realized this that he took the important step of having set up the Senate committee on land use. Mr. St. Laurent hoped that the recommendations of this committee would serve as the basis of a new national policy to assist in the preservation of the family farm and to assure the best possible use of our land resources. Unfortunately the Conservative government has shown little enthusiasm for this committee, which has so much to offer to the Canadian farmer. At the last session of parliament I believe it was set up very late in the session and met only a few times. I urge the government to do everything in its power to assist this committee to arrive at its conclusions as early as possible.

In conclusion, I remind the government that it has a solemn commitment to the Canadian farmers, and it is our intention to see that they live up to that commitment.

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member permit a question now? When he was reading his speech—I think he will find it about at page 8—he mentioned Liberal free trade policies of his party. I was wondering whether he would like to elaborate on this and tell us what they were?

Mr. Habel: It is no use; the hon. member would not understand it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Where were they expounded? Is there no answer?

Mr. Harris Rogers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, as I rise today to make my first contribution in this House of Commons I do so with a deep sense of humility, pride and responsiblity. Responsibility goes with the appointment. That is what I like to call legal authority, without which one's representation would be passive rather than active.

Today as I stand here, Mr. Speaker, I am thinking of a different type of authority, something that is achieved by hard work, built up brick by brick, day by day, the mutual confidence between my constituents, this assembly and myself. This is what I like to call earned authority. It is something we have earned; it cannot be taken away from us. By the same token, you can take it with you as recompense for service performed.

Now, inasmuch as this is my first effort, I would like to take this opportunity to add my warm congratulations to Mr. Speaker on his appointment. I would also like to add my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker and, moreover, to the two gentlemen who moved and seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne. They did so with dignity and substance, and I think set a standard which has been somewhat difficult to follow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I look upon this effort of mine today as a sort of prelude to something more at a later date. Since I have been in the House of Commons I have got the impression that a member of parliament coming from a constituency must adopt a different outlook, a national outlook, a broader outlook. I agree, sir, in principle because the heart of parliament is right here in Ottawa. However, we cannot forget the fact that a heart must have arteries, and those arteries must be kept open. If people are to have a say in the government of the day they certainly must be kept in contact.

As a little background, I come from a province which made a clean sweep in the last election. I think it might be of interest to make some deductions on just how the people were thinking and how that achievement came about. Primarily I think we westerners decided that the time had arrived when we must try to keep in tune with the rest of Canada. I think, too, that the Prime Minister had a lot to do with it. His sincerity and ability certainly made the election easier. On top of that, I think the people decided that we must have a strong government nationally and internationally.

To add a little more to the background, I should like to say a few words about my constituency. Red Deer is a city whose growth has been accelerating and continues to do so. It is the centre of one of the most progressive and productive mixed farming districts in Alberta. The constituency encompasses such towns as Innisfail which, incidentally, got a post office last year; Olds, where the school of agriculture is located; Didsbury, which needs a post office; Three Hills, which also got a post office last year; Sundre, the gateway to the west where there are fishing, lumbering and oil interests; Rocky Mountain House, farther west again, the gateway to a lumbering region; and Sylvan Lake, a well known summer resort. In passing may I say that I am very happy that the Department of Public Works is spending $40,000 on the pier at Sylvan Lake.

I said that the constituency of Red Deer is a productive and progressive mixed farming district. We are quite proud of some of our breeders who are well known right across the dominion and certainly take their share of honours at the Royal every year. The economy of the constituency is definitely dependent upon agriculture. It is supplemented, it is true, by some oil, lumbering and tourist activities, but basically we are only as prosperous as is agriculture.

Agriculture is the foundation of our country. Western Canada has the distinction of not only growing the highest quality wheat in the world but of being able to produce it at the lowest cost. On the other hand, the wheat growers find that they are dependent on the export market, and in that market they have to compete with countries where the growing of wheat is subsidized. Unfortunately the export market sets the domestic price as well. Today the wheat growers are selling wheat at away below the cost of production, and something certainly has to be done by way of deficiency payments.

The agricultural game is so mixed up that it is very difficult to explain. Our farmers are versatile, and when they cannot get a fair price for wheat they go into the raising of stock. But the situation boils down to this fact, that if we do not do something for the wheat grower we will have to do something for the beef producer, and certainly we will have to do something for the dairy producer immediately.

The government has moved rapidly to meet the problems of agriculture by providing advances on farm-stored grain and setting up the price stabilization board. These are steps in the right direction but, as I said before, they are not enough and some consideration must be given to the wheat grower. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the western wheat growers are the only group who have made any contribution toward meeting inflation. It has been forced, it is true; nevertheless that is a fact.

Apart from the wheat problem, dairying, which plays a very important part in our constituency, would appear to be in for some trouble. Unless additional markets are developed or subsidization is provided, the industry is going to be in serious trouble. There are some bright spots such as the beef and swine situations. This is due mainly to the United States market for beef; but with the exception of a group of well to do and more strongly established mixed farmers, agriculture is experiencing one of the most difficult periods in its history. The rural population is urban bound. New, young farmers, caught in the price squeeze before becoming firmly established, are either hanging on by their boot tops or giving up the struggle. Furthermore, older farmers who should retire are unable to do so, and their sons are adding to the difficulties of the unemployment situation.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that measures such as that outlined by the government to provide long term credit, with a minimum ceiling of at least $20,000, would serve a dual purpose. It would give a number of young farmers an opportunity to become firmly established and would put them back on the farms on a full-time basis instead of being in urban centres looking for employment. Long-term credit would give the older farmer enough cash to move into a town or city and permit his son to carry on the farm.

In this connection I contemplate supervised credit and, if I may be so bold as to say so, in the interests of economy and sound administration I suggest that such credit facilities should be administered by the director of the Veterans' Land Act administration. I have a reason for making this suggestion. I worked with the Veterans' Land Act administration for a number of years, and I can say first of all that they have field men strategically located across our great dominion. A second factor is that the work under the Veterans' Land Act has reached its peak. I think it will go down from now on, and there is no reason why the staff should not be maintained.

No better job could be given to them than that of supervising such credit. The important factor about such a move is that these field men are experienced. They are accredited appraisers, but above all they are willing and anxious to work as a team with the borrower and his family. They are not merely men interested in routine. They give everything they have to their job. They are interested in citizenship and not simply the farm. I could not be stronger in my recommendation that when a supervised long-term credit scheme is established it should be administered by the Veterans' Land Act officials.

I was amazed at the preceding speaker expounding what the former Liberal administration had done for the farmers. I think this government can take a lot of credit for what has been done. I should like to read a few extracts from The Organized Farmer, the monthly publication of the farmers' union of Alberta. This is the organ or the mouthpiece of the Farmers' Union of Alberta, a non-political organization, an organization that likes to think it represents the farmers and in the main does so. I quote:

> About one year ago now the farm union sent a large and representative farm delegation to Ottawa to press for government action to help solve the farm problem. The welcome mat was not noticeable when we arrived. The then Prime Minister was too busy to see us. I think that when we left Ottawa it was the opinion of most that we had convinced members of parliament that there was a farm problem, but few of us believed that we would see much done about our program in the near future.

What does this say? This is speaking of the Conservative government:

> Yes, it has been a year of solid accomplishments. Those who took part in the delegation, those who served as information officers in Ottawa, those members of parliament and of government who supported our program, those local people who helped design the program, and those who have canvassed year after year and worked hard to keep our organization going, and the plain ordinary member who contributed only money—all these deserve credit for the job that has been done—
> Despite long hours in the house, in cabinet meetings, and in the administration of their departments, we have always had an opportunity to present our case. Sometimes it has been late at night and other unorthodox hours, but always we have had a hearing. It would have been easy for them to have avoided these sessions but they did not choose to do so—
> It is in such an environment that farm problems can be solved. If government and farmer continue to work hard, and work together, as they are learning to do, then the great problems of agriculture can be solved and we can have the kind of agriculture that we farmers have been working for these many years.

I submit that that is a different attitude from that of the previous administration. It is not the whole answer. The trend is there. There is a definite indication that this government is preparing to work with the farmers, the backbone of this country. I may say they saved us in two wars and will probably save us in another one. That is why we must look after this industry.

There is another problem that is facing this country. I refer to the burden of taxation on our municipalities. I believe that the municipalities in the province of Alberta have the second largest per capita debt in the Dominion of Canada. With the accelerated growth in certain cities the burden of replacing and extending facilities has reached a point where something must be done to equalize the tax structure. I am pleased to note that the budget offers some relief in this regard. However, I am sure that the ordinary land owner and the ordinary taxpayer are looking to the proposed conference of the municipalities with the federal government in September when it is hoped that, after a full analysis has been made, a way will be found for a fairer and sounder equalization of taxes.

Since I have been in this House of Commons unemployment has been the key subject of discussion. I submit that this is a problem that affects us all. However, I do not know whether talking about it is going to do much good. The funny thing about unemployment is that it seems to create a fear in people who have work. They want more work. I think this is not only a problem of the government and of the opposition parties but of every Canadian as long as one fellow Canadian is without work. It will not do much good to tell the government about the unemployment situation. This is the responsibility of every Canadian in Canada and I am not so sure that every Canadian in Canada is doing too much about it.

For instance, I know of certain Canadians who have three jobs and whose earnings are increased to the extent that they are earning more than their boss, in the amount of $8,500. There seems to be a grabbing fear that strikes Canadians when unemployment hits and they seem to say: "Let's get all the money we can get". I maintain that if we can provide one job for one household we shall be doing a fairly good job. If we have any feeling at all for our fellow Canadians, I think that is what we should try to do.

Public works are going to set a pattern to help out the unemployment situation. But I think it is up to the leaders of industry and the leaders of labour to make a survey in order to find out just how people are working; and if they have three jobs or two jobs when one is sufficient, I think we shall have to take a stand somewhere and say, "One job for one".

Certain things can be done by the government. In Red Deer our number of unemployed was the largest in history last year; at that time some 2,100 were unemployed. The situation has improved considerably since that time and I am told that it is expected that the situation will be rectified. However, as far as my constituency is concerned, I am not so much disturbed about this summer because I believe most people will be put to work. On the other hand, we are all worried about the recurrence of unemployment next fall.

As I said before, our economy is dependent upon agriculture. If agriculture goes down, then the rest go down with it. If it is prosperous, we prosper as well. In other words, we farm the farmer. We need secondary industries. We have growing suspicions that many of these small industries coming to this country are sidestepped to the east when in fact they should be sent out west where, in respect of living conditions, they would have much more in common with the place they left. I know that we must have secondary industry. No matter how we get it we shall have to get it. That would help.

The second factor is this. The government, through their public works, could be of assistance. This has been put up to me by construction contractors because I made a survey before I came down here. They say that if public works would let their contracts in the fall for spring contracts it would mean employing a number of men because these same contractors would have something firm on which to work. They could hold more of their staff, get their machinery in shape and do certain things such as brushing, moving rocks and so on. In any case they have staff there which they are reluctant to let go and if they have any excuse at all they would hang on to them and give them something to do whereas, under the present plan, where they have not a contract and do not know if they are ever going to get one, the work does not start until about the end of June. There are many measures which could be taken to improve this situation.

The unemployment situation has caused great concern to the people of Canada and this problem is not going to be settled merely by talk. We have to do something about it and if we face the facts I think we must do something about it.

So much for local problems, and now I would like to commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on his presentation of the budget. The minister's ability to formulate and present facts in proper sequence was indeed a revelation to me. No thinking Canadian expected much tax relief and it was therefore refreshing to witness the courage and wisdom of the minister in bringing down a realistic budget well suited to the difficult problems which exist in our country today. One of the most important functions of government is the bringing down of the budget and I believe that the minister, in bringing down his budget as quickly as he did, has provided a much needed stimulant for our economy.

It was simply not possible to provide more relief by way of tax reduction, but it is only human nature to hold back from making purchases in the hope of such tax relief being afforded. The budget does, however, offer some relief to the ordinary Canadian in respect of assistance to municipalities and to farmers and has provided an incentive for exploration and development to be carried out by the oil industry. There are many other smaller concessions and some measures which should appeal to all Canadians. I particularly have in mind the estate tax replacing the present succession duty. This measure will provide great relief to widows, allowing them an exemption up to $60,000 with an additional amount for each of three children. Estate duty has been a matter of great concern to many of our countrymen and as a matter of fact before the budget was brought down I had received five letters on this subject.

The proposed amendment to section 35 of the Customs Act in order to stop unfair dumping of foreign goods will also relieve much hardship. Of course it is true that our industry must stand up to reasonable competition. Competition is the lifeblood of trade but to allow dumping is an entirely different question and is certainly unfair to industry and labour in Canada.

The amendment to the Income Tax Act in order to allow corporations to make gifts of up to 10 per cent of income, the intention being to increase the flow of money from these sources to higher education, will I know considerably help the universities. Their need is most apparent and this will provide an overdue boost for them.

As a new member of the house I must say the criticism advanced thus far by the opposition has been totally unreasonable and is just a smoke screen to hide the facts. Opposition members condemn the deficit budget but imply, on the other hand, that the budget does not go far enough in order to get industry in motion and thus relieve our unemployment situation. Of course you cannot have it both ways. It would not be courteous or, for that matter, prudent for me to say too much with respect to this criticism but so far as I am concerned nothing can beat democracy. However, to judge from the proceedings in this house democracy is certainly a slow grinding process. I suppose one gets accustomed to it and I hope I will. We have reached the point in our history where we must decide whether we will continue to be a producer of raw materials or whether we shall process those raw materials.

This is no time for complacency; there are vital problems to be solved and an appropriate part must be played not only by the government but by the opposition parties and the leaders of industry and labour in the solving of these problems and in the advancement of our culture. I submit that anything less is a betrayal of our fellow Canadians.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the various presentations in this debate and I think the greatest commendation of the proposals advanced by the C.C.F. group, outlined in our subamendment, came from those sitting on the government benches. There was one slight exception, but as I have listened to the speeches and have read Hansard I have not found one instance of any government member opposing the subject matter contained in that subamendment. The exception, of course, was when the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell) in a very gracious way made reference to the speech of the leader of the C.C.F. as free-wheeling, gassy and windy. However, he did not go into any detail with respect to his remarks.

It is therefore obvious at least from the silence of hon. members opposite, that there is plenty of support for the subamendment which we placed before this house. I predict, of course, that if and when a vote is taken the government will not dare to allow a free vote on it. In fact, following the lead of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) when he was in opposition, I would go so far as to challenge the government to undertake that there will be such a free vote, and if that is done, it should not be considered a motion of want of confidence. I make this request just as the Minister of Finance used to do when he sat on this side of the house, but I am sure that neither he nor the government will undertake to accept this particular challenge, for they know just as well as I do the surprise that would be experienced when the result of the vote was made known.

Before we get into too much detail on the budget itself, there is one subject I should like to mention; one that may be considered rather a delicate topic for a member to raise publicly, especially so soon after an election. But I understand from reading newspaper reports that some of the newly elected members of this house, members who were elected under the auspices of the Conservative party, have expressed some ideas and opinions on this matter, though so far in this house I have not heard much about it. I refer to the indemnity structure provided for members of parliament. While this may be considered an impractical thing to discuss, and while it may also be a politically unwise subject to discuss, because certainly we are one of the few groups in society which could be accused of increasing its own salaries, I should like to pursue this matter a little further.

I am not dealing with this question of increasing the indemnity. I should like to deal with the inequalities which at present exist in the structure of the indemnity as it relates to members from urban areas as against members from rural areas. As any hon. member knows who represents a rural constituency—one which covers many, many square miles; in some cases, thousands of square miles—great cost is involved in attempting to get around such extensive areas and in keeping in touch with the various organizations in the small communities throughout the constituency either personally or by telephone. Skeena, for instance, has an area of about 127,000 square miles, which constitutes almost one-third of the entire area of the province of British Columbia. In fact you could put the whole three maritime provinces twice over into the constituency of Skeena and still have room for a fairly large area for an hon. member to represent.

Mr. McCleave: Is that what the Gordon commission meant by deportation?

Mr. Howard: What did you say?

Mr. McCleave: I asked the hon. member somewhat frivolously if that was what was meant in the Gordon report by deportation?

Mr. Howard: If you ask frivolous questions you will get frivolous answers.

Mr. McCleave: Right. Let's have the frivolous answer.

Mr. Howard: There is no need for an answer. You gave it yourself.

In any event, it is necessary to travel these vast constituencies by all available means of transportation; automobiles, boats, planes and, as some people have facetiously said, by dogsled. This applies to the Mackenzie constituency, to Yukon and to the Cariboo and to a good many others. In my opinion the indemnity structure should be equal in its application to all hon. members and I believe an adjustment should be made based on the geography of the constituency. I have no great opinion as to the amount of the difference, one way or another, but I hope that as a result of this suggestion the government and the Minister of Finance in particular, will be encouraged to provide some more decent arrangement whereby members would be enabled to keep in touch with the large constituencies they represent.

In the course of last session we had what was classified as a baby budget in which a few changes were made in the fiscal policy of the government. I should like to deal with one of these in particular. During that session the Minister of Finance introduced an amendment to the Income Tax Act to provide for some relief for construction workers as far as income tax is concerned. That in itself was a fair and just change to have made, but I would say that all it did was merely to aggravate what was already a discriminatory provision of the Income Tax Act and worsen it by making a change affecting one group of workmen and not others who are similarly placed. I refer, of course, to the logging section of the lumber industry on the coast of British Columbia, to loggers in other parts of the country and to other employees who are in exactly the same position as construction workers inasmuch as they have to leave their places of residence and go to some other part of the country to realize an income.

When this matter was raised last session the Minister of Finance said at that time that the only representations that had ever been made to the government for changes in this respect related to construction workers. Of course, it was brought to his attention that such was not the case and that other representations had been made to the previous Liberal administration about this matter, and the hope was expressed that the minister would look at the representations which were made to the previous administration and bring in additional changes to the act this year. That is one of the major complaints I have to make concerning the attitude of the Minister of Finance as compared with the position he took last session. I have the honour to be a member of one of the locals of the International Woodworkers of America in British Columbia which over the years has been greatly concerned about this discriminatory feature in the Income Tax Act and which has made continuous representations not only to the Minister of Finance but to members of the House of Commons in previous parliaments about the changes which were thought necessary.

As some hon. members may be aware, loggers, particularly on the coast of British Columbia, spend seven, eight, nine or ten months maybe, depending on the area in which they are working, away from their homes. Weather conditions on the coast of British Columbia necessitate at least twice during the year the loggers being laid off from their employment and having to pay the cost of transportation back to their own homes, and these homes are normally in the lower mainland. When conditions allow for the resumption of work in the logging industry they have to pay their fares back to camp in order to start work again. In the winter time heavy snow on the coast of British Columbia tends to shut down work, and in the summer, because of the hot dry weather—as is likely to be the case this year, and as was the case particularly in 1951—other shut-downs take place. So the men have to pack their bags or suitcases, pack their hard hats and caulked boots and head back to Vancouver.

In terms of the money a man has to expend out of his own pocket for fares to get to these logging camps, that varies from $1 to $2 for logging camps near Vancouver up to $100 or $125 for logging camps farther up the coast.

The board and lodging charges are also extra burdens. We have been asking for years and years to have changes made in the Income Tax Act to allow loggers to deduct the amount they spend for board and lodging charges in camps, especially when these loggers are maintaining a home and family in some other part of the province. This means they are maintaining a second home in the bunkhouse where they live while they are working. Some adjustment should be made in the income tax provisions as they apply to this type of worker. I mention loggers particularly because I know them. I have worked in the logging industry and I know the problems that they have quite intimately. The mere fact that I have not mentioned in detail other working people who are similarly situated does not mean that I do not have the same amount of sympathy for their problems as I do for the loggers. I can only hope at the moment that some time in the future the Minister of Finance will undertake to make this long overdue and very necessary change.

There is another question of discrimination which arises out of this particular budget, and which has been in effect for many years. I have often wondered if there was any connection betwen the word "Tory" and the word "discriminatory". I see by looking at this budget that it is quite easy to draw that inference, and that is probably how the pseudonym of "Tory" came about in the first place. For many years the coast of British Columbia has been discriminated against, as compared with the Atlantic coast, when it comes to assistance for shipping facilities, for passenger and freight services. I am not implying in any way that the assistance given to the Atlantic provinces for shipping facilities should not be given. I am merely pointing out the great difference in attitude that has been evidenced in past governments, and this one as well, in connection with shipping on the British Columbia coast as compared with shipping and passenger facilities on the Atlantic coast.

How many millions of dollars have been spent in years past in either acquiring or building vessels for the east coast, and in payments of subventions to shipping on that coast, I do not know. The amount could be determined, I imagine, by totalling the figures in the various estimates during the years past. However, the amount of money that British Columbia obtains for the same type of service, passenger service and freight shipping facilities, is a mere pittance when compared to the amount which has been given to provinces along the Atlantic. This year, for instance, in direct payment from the Department of Transport for the construction and acquisition of vessels for use along the Atlantic coasts and for subventions or subsidy payments to Atlantic shipping, the Atlantic provinces are obtaining a little less than $5.25 million, compared with the amount allocated for subventions for shipping on the British Columbia coast of about $332,000. This means that about 15 times more money has been allocated to the same service on the Atlantic coast than has been allocated to services along the Pacific coast.

Passenger service by ship along the coast of British Columbia has deteriorated. Some years ago the service was not too bad. There were adequate facilities serving the small communities and logging camps. However, the attitude of the government has been to leave coastal shipping service along the coast of British Columbia in the hands of some fly-by-night, two-bit ship operators who are not concerned with providing service but merely concerned with travelling to the most lucrative areas and charging whatever rate they can get. These shipping companies in British Columbia gradually deteriorated and many of them have gone out of business because they were trying to cut corners on costs or because they did not know what they were doing which resulted in ships piling up on rocks, with loss of lives and the ships themselves ruined beyond the possibility of reconstruction. I am not referring to the strike that is now in effect against the Canadian Pacific because it only covers a small portion of the shipping lanes along the coast of British Columbia, the area between Vancouver and Vancouver island and one run up the coast. This strike is something which arises out of labour-management negotiations. However, if subsidies are necessary in order to maintain the operation of these vessels, then subsidies should be granted just as they are granted in many cases to shipping companies along the Atlantic provinces.

The only solution to this problem, and the one which we have advocated for many years now with regard to shipping on the coast of British Columbia, is operation by a crown corporation. In this way we would ensure that adequate facilities are provided and that service could be curtailed or increased when necessary. If the shipping facilities along the coast of British Columbia were under one crown corporation, the entire operation could be co-ordinated so that the profitable runs would be able, to some degree if not completely, to offset the non-profitable runs and the runs which must necessarily be put into effect in order to provide service first. We could worry about profit and loss statements afterwards. We are asking for fair treatment in this regard.

An important deficiency in the budget, apart from the fact that the major problem throughout the nation is one of unemployment, is the failure of the budget to take any cognizance of the high personal taxation that is in existence today and which has been in existence for some time. Some of us had the privilege of hearing about unemployment today from a delegation of unemployed who appeared in the railway committee room and who came from various parts of Ontario. I refer to this high personal taxation not because it affects everyone but because it reflects the insincerity of this government. If one wishes to arrive at a decision in this regard, he only has to compare the many speeches and the pages of Hansard that hon. members opposite used to fill when they sat on this side of the house and the election promises that they made both before this last election and before the one in 1957 as to what this Tory group would do if they ever got into office when it came to reducing income taxes or increasing exemptions, and compare that with the budget. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, that is the subject matter of the subamendment now before us.

Whenever I want something amusing to read I can always find it by reading the annual presentation the Minister of Finance made when he was sitting on this side of the house. I am sure if he has a few hours to spare from his regular 18-hour day, if he would re-read some of these speeches he made when he sat over here they might prick his conscience a little bit and make him realize the necessity for making this adjustment in the personal income tax and increasing the exemptions, which course he so loudly espoused not many months ago, to $1,500 for single people and $3,000 for married people.

We know that election promises are easy to come by. We know that prior to 1957 the Conservatives had all sorts of fanciful promises to make; we also know that it is now quite obvious they had no intention of keeping them. Whether I can, I do not think I should make any reference to the integrity of the Minister of Finance because I know that even though he appears to be reading he has one ear cocked on the words that are issuing forth from this corner and would be only too quick to jump to his feet—

Mr. Pallett: He would not miss much if he could not hear a word the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Howard: I thought there was going to be some interjection loud enough for me to hear.

Mr. Pallett: I merely said he would not miss much if he could not hear a word the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Howard: It is obvious that he would not miss very much because I am referring only to what he said two years ago. In any event, promises are easy to come by. The Minister of Finance, before he was Minister of Finance and while he was Minister of Finance during the last election campaign, made many of them, most of which were irresponsible. When it comes to looking for action arising out of those promises of tax cuts, what do we get? Nothing. There is no reference to relieving the burden that has been resting on the shoulders of the taxpayers of this country for many years, placed there originally by what he used to classify as the high tax party, the Liberal party. When we look for action we do not get it. The only action we get reminds me of the Saturday night wrestling matches that we see on television once in a while, a mixture of comedy, errors, drama, foolishness and deception.

There is a little blue book that I like to refer to once in a while. I am sure every hon. member opposite has seen it. It is called "the new national policy". It contains verbatim quotations from speeches of a fellow called John Diefenbaker. I do not intend to go into all of them today; I just want to point out—

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Howard: What I would do would be once again to point out the deliberate deception that has been perpetrated upon this country by that party—

Mr. Bigg: Read from it and you will be reading some sense.

Mr. Howard: There is lots of sense in here, Mr. Speaker. This is an example:

> The government seems to think that it is good for the souls of the Canadian people to overtax them and to have honest Canadians pushed around and pilloried by income tax snoopers.
> Furthermore, we believe that a major reason for the serious trade situation is that we are being taxed out of the markets of the world by unnecessarily high taxation.

The same Prime Minister who made these sensible comments made this sensible comment when he spoke to the Canadian Congress of Labour convention recently in Winnipeg. He told them that we were pricing ourselves out of the trade markets of the world because the working man was getting too much in wages. You cannot be sensible in two ways. If you are going to be progressive and if you are going to use one of those words "Progressive Conservative" and try to be a party that goes ahead by going backwards or going backwards by going ahead or whatever "Progressive Conservative" means, then we have an example of it today. But it is absolutely necessary to make those adjustments in taxes just as was advocated by hon. members opposite, obviously in an insincere way because they did not believe it or do not adopt now the same type of attitude they adopted when they were in opposition.

We have heard comments or questions or interjections occasionally on this question of tax adjustments or reductions in personal income tax from the other side as to where we are to get the money from. I have heard that on two or three occasions. It seems to me the only obvious way to attempt to get out from under an embarrassing position is to attempt to ask embarrassing questions such as, where are we to get the extra money from? If you raise income tax exemption obviously you are going to cut down on the income of the federal treasury. We have to find the money somewhere to provide those social services. Well, of course, I thought that is what a Minister of Finance was employed for, to find answers to those questions; but if you want the answers from the opposition we are more than willing to give you the benefit of our knowledge, knowing full well that one of these days the party opposite will become as desirous of pilfering sections from the program of some other parties as the Liberals were when they were in office. When that time comes we shall be pleased to give you more suggestions and pleased to see you accept them.

But there are one or two inequities which exist in the taxation legislation of this country which have been brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance on many occasions. It would not do any harm to have them brought to his attention again today. In the first place, this is the most iniquitous one. It relates to the portion of our income tax which goes into the old age security fund for the payment of old age pensions, the so-called 2-2-2 formula. The two per cent personal income tax has a ceiling of $60 placed on it. This is one place where we suggest the minister could get the additional income. He should connect the all-inclusive payment of old age pensions, which means that they are received without any means test, with payment without any means test and remove the ceiling of $60 payments to the old age security fund. Based on the 1955 taxation statistics this would probably mean an additional $20 million.

If we were to return to the percentage of corporation tax that was charged a few years ago we could realize an additional $112 million to $115 million of income based on 1955 statistics. The 20 per cent tax dividend which gives a legal tax dodge to some people who get their income in a certain way should be done away with and it would give us even more. So far as the capital gains tax is concerned I know the minister opposes it if he has not changed his mind since he was in opposition. He has changed it on a great many other things, but I doubt whether he has changed it on this. How much money we could receive in income from a capital gains tax is more than I know. There are no statistics available. There is no breakdown in the taxation statistics or anywhere else, at least that I have been able to find, as to the amount of income available from a capital gains tax.

One of the most perplexing things that I have tried to do is to attempt to classify this budget and what terms we could apply to it.

An hon. Member: Glowing.

Mr. Howard: I have not used the word glowing in this anagram that I have drawn up, but I have picked another word starting with "g" that makes it even more acceptable. But there is a better way to immortalize the name of the father of the budget and that is by using the initials of his last name in drawing up a number of adjectives to apply to the budget. Let us run down the letters which make up his last name. We find that we can very easily define it as "fleecing", "limp",—

An hon. Member: Lovely.

Mr. Howard: "Empty", "mean", "mercenary", "insincere", "nauseating" and the last one is "greedy"; "iniquitous" is another one for you. Fleecing, because it continues to exact a heavy toll from individual taxpayers and still robs the man in the lower income group; limp, because the natural milk of human kindness, which farmers particularly need, has been left out of the recipe; empty, because it is empty of any principle or philosophy except the principle of meanness, meanness to old age pensioners, retired civil servants, retired railway employees and others in similar fixed income groups; insincere, because it obviously abandons and has no connection whatsoever with election promises or with the comments hon. gentlemen used to make when they sat over here; nauseating, because it rebuffs the legitimate request for food in the stomachs of the unemployed and their families; greedy, because it obviously means more and more cost without any concomitant amount of services related thereto.

Incidentally, if some hon. members had attended a particular meeting held today at which a presentation was made to the cabinet by a number of people who used to be workmen but are now unemployed they might have been able to participate in a more sensible fashion instead of adding to the nausea created by the budget by making equally nauseous interjections.

Mr. G. C. Fairfield (Portage-Neepawa): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like through you to convey my best wishes, and I hope the best wishes of the house, to the Canadian nursing association for the successful convention they are holding. I should like to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on his most difficult task in explaining so clearly the economic aspects of the country resulting in the budget we have had presented to us. To inherit the very difficult mantle of the finance ministry even at the best of times assures one of some unpopularity with the taxpayers, no matter how generous the minister in question may be, but to have assumed this role during a time of economic recession makes the task even more arduous since the minister must walk the knife edge between recession and inflation.

The opposition members, particularly those who so recently occupied this side of the house, have called the budget a blue budget and they have criticized the minister for not reducing taxes more as they would have done, so they say. I would think they would be more grateful in that they now may write off their expenses for eye glasses because that party has had a reputation for shortsightedness for some time. I should like to assure the opposition that the Canadian people are not too easily fooled by these cries of distress. If there were an opportunity in the very near future the result at the polls might be even more devastating than it was on March 31.

What I wish to say now does not in any way reflect the opinions of this party or any other individual but myself. I do not think the Canadian people are cognizant of the increasing peril under which they live. I should like to forestall opposition comments by saying that it is not a political peril but one which became obvious to me when, last October, the first sputnik was successfully hurled into its orbit around the world.

Since time immemorial, whenever a tribe or a state under the domination of at least one person has felt assured of its superiority in weapons it has struck without mercy at its neighbours and other tribes and nations either to enslave them or to obviate any real or imagined dangers of counter-invasion. We have had instances of that in the last half century, particularly in the last two decades. Despite the opinions expressed by some people that an all-out nuclear war could not be visited on us merely because we cannot bear to contemplate it without panic is to dodge the issue rather than to face it.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, and I must repeat that it is mine alone, no greater danger has ever faced the Canadian people than at the present time. The target is not now Europe but North America, and again I sincerely believe that there is a very real possibility of nuclear attack within the next year. Let us not imagine that because missiles have their origin thousands of miles away their accuracy is in any great doubt. I think those of us who were in London at any time during the V-2 barrage of the last war will remember the destruction caused by those earlier and very much simpler weapons.

I had the privilege at one time of being selected, along with other Canadian doctors who were veterans, to attend a course at Washington on atomic bombs and warfare some time before the H-bomb was exploded. The effect of the A-bomb was considerable but the effect of the H-bomb is overpowering. When one considers the effect of one ton of high explosive—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to standing order 15, paragraph 3.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As there are a number of bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that all these bills be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EVELYN GRACE BLAKELY MULLINS

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-17, for the relief of Evelyn Grace Blakely Mullins —Mr. McCleave—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, before the committee considers these divorce bills I should like to point out a matter which was raised in the standing committee with reference to Bill No. SD-17. According to the evidence presented to the committee of the other house or rather from a transcript of the evidence as it appears before us, the age of a child was given as five years. In that particular case this would have meant that the child had been born after the petitioner had been deserted by her husband. On investigation I find that this "five" was a misprint and that the child's age is actually eleven years. This would have meant that the child was born before the couple separated. I thought the house should have that information because one of the members of the committee, namely the hon. member for Brantford, had raised the matter in the committee.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): When shall the said bills be read the third time? Now?

Mr. Chevrier: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Is it agreed that all the divorce bills be passed in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: On division.

Mr. McCleave moved the third reading of Bills Nos. SD-1 to SD-27 inclusive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): By unanimous consent Mr. McCleave, seconded by Mr. MacEwan, moves that bills numbered SD-1 to SD-27 inclusive, being divorce bills appearing on today's order paper as items Nos. 34 to 60 respectively, be now read a third time and do pass. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Chevrier: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bills read the third time and passed.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR SECRECY AND DESTRUCTION OF REPORTS, ETC.

Mr. Noel Dorion (Bellechasse) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-20, to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

He said: As stated in the explanatory notes, the purpose of the amendment suggested by this bill is to provide for the absolute secrecy of reports, files and records in connection with the trial of juvenile delinquents and to provide further that such records and files be destroyed after a period of five years from the date of such trial. I do submit, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment meets a social need and, in addition, is in accordance with the spirit of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. Indeed, subsection 2 of section 3 is enacted in the following terms:

> When a child is adjudged to have committed a delinquency he shall be dealt with, not as an offender, but as one in a condition of deliquency and therefore requiring help and guidance and proper supervision.

Section 38 underlines still more the legislature's intent in the following terms:

> This act shall be liberally construed to the end that its purpose may be carried out, namely that the care and custody and discipline of a juvenile delinquent shall approximate as nearly as may be that which should be given by its parents, and that as far as practicable every juvenile delinquent shall be treated, not as a criminal, but as a misdirected and misguided child, and one needing aid, encouragement, help and assistance.

These two sections are all the more important as they are inspired by the factors and conditions which contribute to juvenile delinquency.

Obviously these factors are numerous and manifold. But one of the most important is surely the family's conditions. In a work entitled "The Juvenile Offender", published some years ago, Professor Clyde B. Vedder, of the University of Florida, stresses the influence of home and family in the following terms:

> It cannot be overemphasized that a child's family is the most important influence in shaping his personality and character. In this profound primary group the child acquires his basic ideals and a sense of right and wrong. Here he first experiences social interaction and becomes conscious of standards, goals, values and the formulation of judgments. Here he is a member of the all-unit of society, the first stage upon which he learns to imitate his elders as he begins his awakening into a fuller knowledge of the world about him.

The general purpose of the Juvenile Delinquents Act is precisely to give to the child who is the victim of his environment the help and guidance and the proper supervision which he did not find within his own family. In his very interesting work entitled, "Belief and Action", Viscount Samuel recalls the psychological fact that:

> Among the ordinary supports of morals in everyday life we may see that habit is of the first importance. The normal person is not constantly reflecting whether he shall be honest or not; he is honest by habit and as a matter of course.

In order to root this habit in his conscience, the juvenile delinquent should be treated not as a criminal but as a misdirected and misguided child. In its summary of recommendations, the committee appointed to inquire into the remission service of the Department of Justice of Canada recalls this fundamental rule with respect to the administration of justice:

> Some means should be found whereby the courts, at all levels, may be made more conscious that the purpose of punishment is the correction of the offender and not mere retribution by society.

This truth is especially to the point when the offender is a youth and, generally speaking, is not truly the only one responsible for his conduct. It follows that society has no right to give him harmful publicity and still less to make him carry a police record through his life like a millstone around his neck.

In my professional practice I have sometimes had the opportunity to note how unscrupulous are certain organizations. I have in mind particularly those companies whose business it is to make investigations for the benefit of certain finance or insurance corporations. Even in the army it does happen that an old record of a former juvenile delinquent is a handicap to his promotion in spite of the fact that his present conduct and qualifications are excellent.

Twelve years ago in the district of Quebec there was formed a social service to work for the rehabilitation of juvenile delinquents. Since that time this organization has rendered great services to our society and in October of 1956 at the conclusion of a symposium, many resolutions were passed, two of which I would like to quote as follows:

(Translation):

> 3. This meeting wonders whether an adult considered as rehabilitated, who has given proof of good behaviour during a period recognized as long enough to dispel any fear of relapse, should benefit from a privilege on the part of the authorities, concerning the existence of a police record.

And then, number 7:

> 7. Dr. Gauthier suggests that the records of young delinquents do not constitute in any way for them a true police record and that they should not be revealed to any individual nor any society.

(Text):

My suggestion to this house was in fact inspired by those resolutions. As a result of the proposed amendment anyone not engaged in the administration of justice or in the rehabilitation of juvenile delinquents will be denied access to existing records. Moreover, after a period of five years from the date of the trial of any juvenile delinquent his or her records and files would be destroyed so that he or she will really feel a normal citizen who henceforth has the right to a free and complete existence in society, rather than being considered as some sort of untouchable.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I feel I have some justification in rising to speak to this bill because I have spent some five years in juvenile and family court work. I am entirely in favour of the principle of the bill which would make the records of juveniles inaccessible to the general public, to the magistrates' courts or indeed to any persons other than to officials of the juvenile courts themselves.

There are two principles involved in this bill, as a matter of fact, firstly with respect to the availability of the records to other authorities and, secondly, with respect to the destruction of those records when they have completed their usefulness to court authorities.

Many juveniles appear before juvenile courts today who would not formerly have done so. Many offences brought before juvenile and family courts are of a very minor character and the authorities take this course in order to draw the attention of parents, teachers and the juveniles themselves to the fact that these children have got slightly out of line with the accepted practices in the adult world.

As the member who introduced the bill has stated, the juvenile delinquent is no longer treated as a criminal but is now treated as a person having need of special care and assistance in the hope that he or she will eventually become a useful citizen.

Before the Juvenile Delinquents Act came into effect juveniles who got into difficulties were brought before magistrates, with some very undesirable results. In the first place the provisions of the Criminal Code stated that juvenile cases must be heard last and that the court must be cleared. This resulted in many instances of juveniles, brought to court for minor offences, having to sit in court for at least part of an afternoon listening to the sordid stories told in magistrates' courts. This may have resulted in the juvenile's education having been widened but I believe the knowledge of adult delinquencies would be harmful to these children.

Since the Juvenile Delinquents Act has been in force and its application has become more widespread throughout the country, it has been proclaimed throughout the different jurisdictions and people are now becoming more familiar with the procedure in bringing children before juvenile and family courts. The jurisdiction of the magistrate was very limited before the introduction of this legislation. He was limited to dismissing the charge against the child or placing him on suspended sentence or fining him. In these circumstances, a large number of very minor offences were never brought to the attention of the authorities and as a result the juvenile felt he had got away with whatever he was doing and was left with some disposition to try it again. Perhaps on the second occasion it became a much more serious affair and the very benefit of what he might have received in the first instance was gone.

I would turn up, if I may, section 20 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act as it now stands to indicate the type of punishment, if it can be called that, which a juvenile court can now impose on a juvenile. First, it can suspend final disposition. This type of disposal of a case is most often used where a juvenile has become involved in some very minor offence. Suspending final disposition shelves a matter as effectively, in fact as it is sometimes shelved in this house by sending questions to committees or some other place. Suspension of final disposition is used quite often, but there is nevertheless a record that a particular juvenile has been brought before a court and found guilty of some offence even though that offence may be minor in character—it might be nothing more serious than riding a bicycle on a sidewalk contrary to some local by-law although it could also be something more serious in connection with the transgression of a provincial or federal statute. But regardless of these distinctions it must be a minor matter, and the whole affair is passed over, and as far as the courts are concerned, forgotten.

This, I think, is the main type of case which the hon. member who introduced the bill is trying to protect. These are the children who have stepped out of line once, as all of us have done at some time before reaching maturity and becoming acquainted with the standards which the people of this country expect from adult persons. In these circumstances I think it would be most unfair for a record of such a juvenile to be kept and held against him as what one might call a criminal record.

These children are brought before the juvenile courts nowadays at any age after they have reached the age of understanding. I have known them to be brought before the courts at the age of eight or nine years where there has been a serious infraction of the law. The law would not normally expect these children to understand the seriousness of their acts, nevertheless it has been something sufficiently serious to make it necessary for some action to be taken. In this particular type of case I think it is only fair that two things should happen: first, that the record should eventually be destroyed and, secondly, that the juvenile involved should know that the record is being destroyed.

One of the things which cause second offences as far as many of the authorities are concerned is the fact that when a person has been found guilty and convicted of some offence he feels that that is against him for the rest of his life, and for that reason he may not find it very difficult to go out and commit another offence. But if he could feel that though he had transgressed to some extent the laws of the country while he was small, he had been forgiven by the public; if he could feel that there was that much understanding among the authorities of this country, and that his slip would never be held against him when he had reached maturity, then I think there would be a much greater incentive for that juvenile to try to forget his little slip completely, having in mind that it is not engraved permanently on the court records.

Another thing. Quite often I have found that these juvenile court records were being improperly used by police, magistrates and other persons concerned with the administration of justice. The basic idea behind the Juvenile Delinquents Act is that these juveniles shall be considered as persons in need of help. There are very strict rules governing juvenile courts which say that no names shall be published in the newspapers and that no publicity shall be given to juvenile cases. This is all intended to serve one end, namely that a juvenile who has committed a minor offence shall be allowed to recover without the stigma of a record. Yet there have been many instances where police have gained access to these records in some way or another and have immediately become prejudiced against a particular child, even though he might have been only 11 or 12 years old at the time he committed the offence.

Likewise, as the law presently stands, there is nothing to prevent a record being passed from a juvenile court to an adult court and there held against a defendent. This, again, is not what was intended by the Juvenile Delinquents Act. In some provinces magistrates are men with legal training, but in many provinces they are not, and these records are very important as far as the security of cases is concerned. I am not sure, offhand, that there is any province which requires that a magistrate should be a man with legal training, but in any case, having before him the record of a juvenile who has been in trouble before might give a magistrate the feeling that perhaps the boy has a predisposition for getting into trouble and that therefore he should be taught a good lesson. I say that these records should not pass into the hands of an adult authority once a boy has reached the age of 16, at least in the province of Ontario—it is 18 in some other provinces—the age when he becomes an adult in the eyes of the law.

There are several other dispensations that juvenile and family court judges may make of a juvenile court case. They may adjourn the hearing for an indefinite period. So far as the criminal law is concerned this is a definite departure from previous well-established principle which states that no criminal case can be adjourned sine die. Under the Juvenile Delinquents Act this can be done, and in many cases an adjournment without a further date being specified is a form of suspended sentence.

Then, thirdly, the judge of the juvenile court may impose a fine not exceeding $25 which may be paid in periodical amounts or otherwise. The use of a fine is quite common. In some cases it is found to be quite useful punishment if a child is made to pay for some damage he has done, that is malicious damage to property such as breaking windows or even knocking the glass insulators off telephone and telegraph poles. They do not realize that these things cost money. However, if there is a fine imposed and the child is ordered to pay that fine himself within a stated period he can often be persuaded, with the co-operation of his parents, to do a certain amount of extra work and by the time he has paid off a fine of $25 for breaking windows he may not find that a suitable occupation in the future.

However, Mr. Speaker, these are things that all of us have done, but we have not all been caught. All of us during our youth I think, have been involved in some such things as breaking windows, and even more serious vandalism, when involved with a group of people or a gang that is bent on making trouble. Yet the Juvenile Delinquents Act recognizes that these boys are not basically bad and that when they have reached the age of maturity they will learn better. It is with that in mind that the limitations have been placed on what can be done with children.

There is another penalty that the juvenile courts can impose, and that is to commit the child to the care of a probation officer. This practice is becoming more and more prevalent in the provinces of Canada. I can speak mainly for the province of Ontario because that is the province in which I was involved. This province is building up a very effective probation service, both for juveniles and adults. It has come into being within the last seven or eight years. I believe that the person most responsible for it was the Reverend Dan Coughlan, who was taken into the department of the attorney general and given a job to do. He has done that job. The probation service in Ontario is now at its peak. Probation is provided for both adults and juveniles, but at the moment we are concerned with juveniles. If a judge believes a child is running into difficulty because of the neglect of his parents, he can place him directly under the control of a probation officer. In most such cases the probation officer requires reporting and so forth, and keeps an eye on the boy to see that he does not get into any trouble.

In most cases, these children are left in their homes and they are ordered to report to the Children's Aid Society or to a probation officer. The court can also place such children in foster homes, if these children are not being properly looked after at home. They may be placed in the care of the Children's Aid Society.

Again in this case the court is recognizing the fact that it is not the child's fault but the fault of the parents when he is taken from his own home and placed with some one else or with the Children's Aid Society. It has often been said that there are more delinquent parents than there are delinquent children, and I think there is a lot of truth in the statement. A good many children find themselves in difficulty before they reach an age of understanding because the parents have merely neglected to give them any assistance, rather than by reason of the fact the parents have led them into any path of misdoing. Regardless of whether it is the result of neglect or malicious bad example on the part of the parents, it is recognized that it is not the child's fault. In such a case, again, we come back to the same principle that when the child reaches an age of understanding he should not have all these childhood things to cope with and have prejudice created in the mind of the public.

In closing on this question of penalty, I might say there are some cases of a very serious nature. There are cases of boys, of the age of 15, who have not reached adult age, but who have become involved in armed violence. There have been a few involved in cases of murder. In these cases, no matter how serious the offence, they are still within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court. If the juvenile court feels that these cases should be dealt with in the adult court, then the judge has authority to send the case on. Having sent it on to the adult court, it then becomes a matter of record in such adult court. In that case there is no particular reason for holding back the records. This particular section of the Juvenile Delinquents Act would not apply.

With that background, Mr. Speaker, I would just take a couple of minutes to deal with the two principles involved. The amendment to section 12 of the act provides in general terms that no one who has had the custody or control of a juvenile delinquent, and no one who has charge of the records, shall communicate the contents of those records to any other person not a judge, magistrate, probation officer, superintendent or other officer connected with the administration of justice. I think, to a large extent, this practice is now followed in most of the courts, but that is purely an administrative matter. In other words, those people who have had experience in juvenile work are well acquainted with the fact that some agencies would use these records to the disadvantage of the individual, particularly in so far as employment is concerned. If a young lad were to apply for employment and his employers were permitted to go into the juvenile court record and find he was involved in something serious,—at the moment it is up to the judge to decide whether or not that information should be released. Under this amendment there would be no such jurisdiction and the records would remain private.

Then there is the other principle involved in the later destruction of the records. Again, I feel that is a good provision. The child who has been misled or who has got into difficulty must have the feeling that he did it when he was a boy, that he has been forgiven and that he may now go ahead and live a normal adult life, without the stigma of a childhood prank being held over him for the rest of his life. For all of these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favour of this bill.

Mr. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who has preceded me, the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), I have had some experience in dealing with juvenile delinquents in my capacity as crown attorney for the county of Pontiac, which position I held for eight years. As crown attorney, juvenile delinquents were a constant problem and decisions had to be reached concerning those persons. I find that among police officials there is always—and rightly so—a very great reluctance to initiate any kind of proceeding against a juvenile. By that I mean should a complaint be received against a juvenile and that juvenile had never been the object of a complaint before, the police will in most instances, unless the charge is extremely serious, go to the home of the young person involved and question him and his parents.

If the offence is not serious, and if there seems to be satisfactory evidence that such an offence will not be committed again, then the police officer, the social welfare officer or the juvenile delinquent's court officer will simply shelve the complaint and recommend to the parents that closer supervision be kept of the youngster concerned and also the youngster himself in most instances will be reprimanded. Unless the youngster has a long background of delinquent tendencies he will have learned his lesson and never again will he be the object of police investigation.

In other cases the police must proceed to lodge a complaint under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, or even under the Criminal Code, if the offence is more serious. There are two types of juveniles who appear before the courts and they may perhaps be classified in three broad categories. The first are offences of violence, I might say, such as assaults, fights, damage to property. The second category is the juvenile who indulges in petty thievery, and the third type deals mostly with delinquents who have been guilty of some sexual perversion.

In the first type of delinquent we find more or less a complex of violence; it is a matter of a young bully who wishes to impose his will by violence upon other youngsters or even in rising against established order and destroying property.

In the case of petty thieves, they are mostly drawn from a background of underprivileged families whose parents may be drunkards or may have separated and who have domestic difficulties and who have developed a resentment against society. They have come to the point where they cannot distinguish between right and wrong, in that they believe that they should have the same share of the good things which their school companions and others enjoy.

The third type, the sexual pervert, develops from some type of maladjustment which cannot be clearly defined and it is a matter that should be referred for proper psychiatric treatment.

When these youngsters, most of whom are simply misguided, appear before a juvenile court judge and the other court officials, they are always, at least in my experience, treated with the greatest consideration. First of all, the law provides that the hearings shall always be secret and in chambers. The youngsters are accompanied by their parents, by their guardians or by other social workers. It is not a court at all in any traditional sense of the word; rather it is simply a heart to heart talk between the judge, who adopts a very fatherly attitude, and the youngster who has diverted from the straight and narrow path. Most of those youngsters appear before the courts very bewildered and a few questions will soon dissipate the camouflage of self-assurance which they may have and they will generally answer docilely the questions that are put to them by the judge and the judge will truly discover what is the thing that has led them astray. In most instances a few words by the judge, the placing of the youngster on probation for a definite period, either to his own parents, to a court official, or even to a police officer, with definite dates upon which the youngster should report, have the desired effect of changing the youngster's attitude and preventing perhaps the criminal tendencies, which are more or less inherent in all people, from being developed and those youngsters do become very good citizens later on.

I am absolutely in accord with the spirit of the bill presented this afternoon. I approve it, mostly for the same reasons that have been expressed by the previous speaker. There is no doubt at all that even if the greatest precaution is taken to assure that the court records do not fall into hands that should not have them, they will do so and as a matter of fact they often do, and they may be used in much later years, perhaps 10 years or even 20 years later, by unscrupulous blackmailers or other persons against the youngsters who for many years have become respectable citizens of the community.

Even under the present law, although records are secret, although none of the names in the proceedings may be divulged, the record of a juvenile may be used later if that same person, now grown to adulthood, is again before the courts. I believe that is most iniquitous, because surely the youngster when he was a juvenile could not distinguish between right and wrong to the extent that he could do it later when he is no longer in that category and yet, despite that, in certain instances those records are used.

More important perhaps than any other reason is the fact that these records may be destroyed, after five years, as suggested by the bill, gives to the former juvenile a feeling of absolute security and that feeling of security is most necessary to complete his rehabilitation.

For all these reasons I endorse the bill. I believe it is another step forward in the rehabilitation of juveniles and it serves a very useful purpose.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this bill I should simply like to say that one very relevant fact has been brought to my attention, namely that in relation to the population of Canada today there are far too many prison sentences and, in fact, far too many charges being laid. I say that for one reason. If we compare the population of Canada with that of England we find that in Canada far more people are receiving jail sentences and far more people are being charged, be they juveniles or otherwise.

I should like to go from the general to the particular. I wonder how many hon. members realize how very serious it is for a young person not only to have been charged but sentenced to prison. First of all, when people apply for jobs most companies ask whether they have a record. If they do not ask, then in some unknown way they seem to be able to obtain that information quite easily. I do not know whether I am entirely correct but I make the suggestion that even in many government departments and agencies the question is asked whether the individual has been charged or sentenced to prison. I simply say to the house that most private companies and most government departments and agencies ask this question. But suppose they do not. Here is what usually happens.

I have had a little experience in trying to find work for ex-prisoners. A young fellow may come to your office and say, "Sir, will you help me get a job?". After you have canvassed all the companies that do not ask about a record you may finally get the man a job. But he is then under a serious handicap with respect to whether or not he should inform his employer. Invariably the lad will come to you and say, "Should I inform my employer?". Therefore, irrespective of whether the company has any rules regarding the matter there is always this Damocles sword hanging over his head.

I bring up this matter in order to convey to the house what a very serious proposition we are dealing with. I feel that the records should certainly be destroyed but on the other hand I believe there are certain parts of them that should be retained. I do not mean that part indicating that the person has been charged and sentenced to jail, but that part dealing with the case history of the individual which might have some future relevance and use for psychiatrists. I think such information contained in the records would be useful and as long as the bill guarantees that they will be kept in strict custody I think the bill should receive our approval and support.

In my opinion gross injustice has been done to many young people who have to go through life with this handicap hanging over their heads. For that reason I express my hearty approval and support of the bill. Before taking my seat I wonder whether I might have permission to ask the mover of the bill if it contemplates the destruction of the whole record. Would he inform the house whether that part of the record that might be of future use for psychiatric purposes in helping the young person would still be retained in proper custody? May I put that quesiton to the mover of the bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Does the house give consent to having this question answered without the hon. member closing the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, if I understand my hon. friend's questions correctly, he would like the record to be divided into two parts, one of which would be retained and the other not. I must say to that that my proposal is quite simple; it would do away altogether with the juvenile delinquent's record, thereby giving him a chance to rehabilitate himself.

I must say there is nothing new in this proposal. As a matter of fact, in France and Belgium, there have long been legal provisions of this sort which have given excellent results and made it possible for juvenile delinquents to rehabilitate themselves and to become good citizens. In this country however, the existence of the record is an extremely serious handicap. I therefore remain convinced that, in those circumstances, my proposed legislation should be adopted in its present form.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. Fairfield: Mr. Speaker, before I was interrupted at five o'clock I was relating some of the effects of nuclear bombs and how the effect could be related to the accuracy, as some people have stated. As everyone knows, the effect of the nuclear bomb is related by its co-relation with the effect of one ton of high explosive. When one considers the effect of one ton of high explosive during world war II, one can roughly gauge the effect of the megaton bomb which is the equivalent of one million tons of high explosive. I want to read to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this house an excerpt from the History of the Second World War, in the volume "Problems of Social Policy", page 329. This is what it says:

> In general terms, one ton of high explosives delivered on the built-up areas of London and other large cities destroyed or damaged beyond repair ten houses. Another twenty-five were rendered temporarily uninhabitable, and eighty were slightly damaged. On the average, therefore, one ton affected 115 houses, made eighty people temporarily homeless and caused another thirty-five to lose their homes permanently.

In that event, where then is the need for great accuracy when one considers the effect of the megaton bomb or H-bomb which is the equivalent of one million tons of high explosive? Despite the fact that the prime targets are in the United States, the effect in Canada of short rounds, as the artillery man would say, could be devastating. What then of defence? I am not going to take part in any debate on defence tonight, Mr. Speaker, or of what role our active services or active forces would take in defending us against such a barrage. Let it suffice to say that no matter what the defence, many people will suffer unless we take steps immediately to offset the old-fashioned policy of survival set in operation by the previous administration.

I should like to give to this house and to you, Mr. Speaker, some of the history of civil defence. A planning committee was first set up in Great Britain on May 15, 1924. Its terms of reference were "to inquire into the question of air raid precautions other than naval, military or air defences". Even at that time this committee recommended that while those concerned with maintaining vital services and activities could not be evacuated from important centres such as London, those whose functions were dispensable should be asked and encouraged to leave the target areas. As a result of numerous tests and consultations, the air raid precaution act or, in other words, civil defence act was passed in November, 1937. It imposed on local authorities the duty to take precautions for the protection of persons and property from injury or damage in the event of hostile attack from the air. However, Mr. Speaker, despite the impending catastrophe presaged by Hitler's annexation of Austria, the traditional spirit of local independence vis-à-vis both the central government and other local authorities persisted. It was only after the outbreak of hostilities that great numbers of volunteers came forward to serve in the civil defence. Some 320,000 of these volunteers were paid, but despite this fact there was all too often dissension among the members as to the role and routine which they were asked to perform.

The Canadian civil defence division is set up under much the same plan as that barely outlined for England. This division was set up in 1948 under the auspices of the Department of National Defence. The terms of reference were to study the requirements of civil defence and make recommendations to the minister as to preparatory and other methods that should be taken to meet a possible emergency. In August, 1950, a dominion-provincial conference was held in Ottawa to determine the division of responsibilities in connection with the building up of a civil defence organization in Canada, and these are the conditions as outlined in that conference.

First of all, the federal government's responsibility was to assess and keep under continuous review the forms and scales of attack to be anticipated in the event of war, and to initiate and guide planning of appropriate civil defence measures; to organize federal services for civil defence; to co-ordinate plans and activities of the provinces and municipalities.

The provincial government was to prepare regional plans and be responsible for preparatory and other measures within their area; to co-ordinate activities of municipalities; to organize provincial services for civil defence.

Third, the municipality's responsibility was for local planning and for organizing municipal services for civil defence; to be responsible for co-ordinating all services and for implementing all civil defence measures in the municipal area.

In February, 1951, the responsibilities relating to civil defence were transferred to the Department of National Health and Welfare. Since that time, much work has been done and many plans have been developed by federal and some provincial and municipal committees, all predicated on the assumption that sufficient warning will be provided by our radar screens.

As I have stated before all this has been changed in the few short months since October of last year. No longer can we depend on warnings of even a few hours. Our warning time has been cut tremendously. Proof is flying around in the skies today that the Russians have ICBM's capable of carrying H-bomb warheads.

The civil defence division has done admirable work under the most difficult conditions of public ennui and sometimes of complete non-participation by local and provincial authorities. A policy has been announced by this government that a fund will be set aside for research into this problem. However, I feel it is imperative that action of a different kind be taken immediately. I cannot impress on this house too strongly that this is no longer a question of civil defence but rather one of civilian survival.

We have at the present time throughout this country a body of men and some women who can, if given the green light, immediately go into action as the optimum means of the survival of our people in the event of a nuclear attack. I speak, of course, of the militia organization in Canada. This organization built around a hard core of veterans, whose survival during the second world war speaks well of their training, I am sure is ready and willing to undertake this task. It is a complicated task, Mr. Speaker. Not only does it require a great deal of training but there is a great basic need of discipline which is too often absent to an alarming degree in groups of civilian volunteers, as was experienced in England during the formative phase of their civilian defence organization.

By granting to the militia the responsibility of this task we would have already shortened the elementary training in discipline, liaison and leadership. Even at the present time 50 per cent of their time is being taken up by civil defence training. I know that there have been protests from some quarters with respect to the militia being relegated to this role but, so far as I know these protests are few indeed. Many militia men have stated to me that they now realize the importance of this training and are prepared to go all out to train their units for duty in the event of disaster. By widespread organization of these units we could bring into the plan those areas which thus far have ignored the appeals of the civil defence division to form active units. Incidentally, the name civil defence in itself does not carry the same weight or meaning as I think it would if it were called home defence.

There have also been objections to having the militia take over civil defence on the grounds that, in the event of war, these units would be mobilized to carry on their normal roles as infantry units, artillery units and so on. In the event of a nuclear attack there will indeed be no time to mobilize units, as the war may well be won or lost in a period of four days.

The wheel has now turned a complete circle. As in the past, the local militia must now be responsible for local survival in the case of a sneak attack. I know that this would require that responsibility for civil defence would have to be assumed by the Department of National Defence but this does not indicate any lack of faith in the Department of National Health and Welfare. It would, however, guarantee to a greater degree the co-operation between both active and passive lines of defence. The active training centre for civil defence could carry on the training of militia members. Those who have already been trained in certain aspects of civil defence would be urged to enrol in the militia, thus increasing the capabilities of the organizations which are at present topheavy with officers and senior non-commissioned officers. The militia must realize that this is the role they would be asked to assume and that it is a role which would compare, if not exceed, in importance, at least in the event of nuclear war, those services performed by the active forces.

I would urge the government if such a course is adopted to see that every facility is placed at the disposal of the militia and that its importance with respect to defence should be considered second to none. I realize the expense may be considerable but it would be minor compared with that involved in active defence and would be in no wise comparable to the accruing benefits. The estimated cost of civil defence and of the militia is at the present time in the neighbourhood of $25 million, which is of course a very small part of the total national defence expenditures.

May I repeat that in my opinion passive defence in this day is perhaps even more important than active defence. Certainly from the viewpoint of survival it is of far greater importance. I do not think it would cost this country a great deal more to implement the scheme outlined but even if the costs were doubled—and I am sure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) will not thank me for this suggestion—the need for reorganization and modernization of our civil defence set-up is so great that it can no longer be ignored.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on the budget. First of all I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), who has at last given us an accounting of our national affairs. His budget speech was longer than that of any previous minister of finance to whom I have listened and my first thoughts were that he would surely end the 1957-1958 budget year with a surplus. He had announced in December and also later in the last session that he would have a surplus and I have in mind the ringing words of the minister when he was in the opposition, as recorded at page 2555 of Hansard for March 21, 1957:

> We wish to see a balanced budget because we believe in a balanced budget.

I felt sure then that the minister would want to complete at least one year in the black. If he had just waited a month or two longer before meddling with the budget of his predecessor he would indeed have had a surplus. Now we have a deficit. Never again do I expect to see the Minister of Finance, or for that matter the Conservative party, come so close to a surplus. You might wonder why I should say that. It is interesting for hon. members to note that only twice since confederation has any Conservative government brought in a surplus budget of as much as $1 million. This government seems to be getting right into step.

I quite agree that we should budget for a deficit if our economy requires it. We should budget for a purpose and we should certainly budget to put our unemployed back to work. However, there is so little design or purpose in this budget that the minister has slipped into a whopping deficit through default and he has been very modest in stating the amount of that deficit. In one two-hour speech the minister was able to reveal to the people of Canada that he would collect and spend all the taxes he could this year plus everything that has been saved over the last decade for a rainy day. In one swoop he has swept us back to our debt structure of 1948. I look with apprehension toward his next budget speech in eight or nine months' time.

I listened to the budget speech finding it hard to associate the words of the minister with the words he used not long ago to the effect that the Canadian people were overtaxed by $500 million, and that each family was overtaxed by $120 per year. He said furthermore that this amount of $120 could be returned to each family and we would still have a balanced budget. I could hardly believe my ears, remembering as I did that the minister had always claimed that the people should always have their own money to spend and that it was their right to have their own money to spend. Yet I heard him state in his budget speech that if it is left with the people it is neither wholly spent nor put into productive investment. The budget indicates to me that the minister will certainly see it is wholly spent.

The minister announced with some finality last fall that the rise in the cost of living had been checked, only to have it reach a new all-time height since that time. We all know that money rates depend largely upon the old law of supply and demand, but if we follow the minister's own pronouncements we are led to believe that he and he alone loosened up tight money when in fact the demand for money has fallen; even now interest rates on bonds are beginning to tighten up in anticipation of the minister's insatiable desire for new money.

The Minister of Finance was always very critical of his predecessors in office because they were not more accurate in their forecasting. With about three-quarters of the 1957-58 budgetary year already elapsed, the minister estimated a surplus of $80 million, and it turned out that he had a deficit of $39 million—a difference of about $120 million in three months. What might we expect from his prediction for a whole year? Even with the budget he brought in the other night the Minister of Finance had an advantage over his predecessors to the extent that the budget year 1958-59 was already under way. His real test will come in budget No. 2, presented we hope before the next financial year begins on April 1, 1959.

The Minister of Finance should be adept at mathematics. I suggest that if he knows anything about addition and subtraction he was misled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) who last year refused to face the facts of life in connection with mathematics. The Prime Minister travelled from coast to coast telling the people of Canada they were over-taxed by $500 million, that each family was over-taxed by $120 and that the government was reaching into the pockets of each man, woman and child and taking out $30. He said at that time he would give more money for pensions—

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. McMillan: —more money for municipalities—

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. McMillan: —more money for the provinces—

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. McMillan: —and that he would give more money to almost everybody else in Canada and yet have a balanced budget.

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. McMillan: No, he did not. If we turn to a report of a press conference given by the Prime Minister in Saskatoon, as reported in the Montreal Gazette on May 28, we find this:

> John Diefenbaker stated today the Progressive Conservative government would carry out its declared policy, reduce unnecessary taxes and still do it on a balanced budget.

Then in a radio broadcast on September 24, 1957, he said in part:

> The Liberals tell you it is not possible to lower taxes and raise pensions at the same time. Give us a chance and we will show you.

The people gave them a chance, and the Minister of Finance put on the show. What a show it was! In the galleries here there was standing room only, but I heard some of the people muttering on the way out. I heard one taxpayer talking to himself. No wonder he talked to himself. I will say that in the financial papers, and in talking to business people and others, I have heard very little good said about this budget. I have heard the budget described in such terms as "insipid", "lousy" and "putrid" and in other terms, Mr. Speaker of profanity which might cause you to rule me out of order if I were to venture to use them here.

The Minister of Finance has many admirable personal qualities but I think it is right that I should give the house a little of the financial background of the author of this budget, because the author of the budget himself, speaking in a debate on a former budget on March 21, 1957—in fact, he was speaking of the budget of his predecessor—said:

> And in the words of holy writ, ye shall know them by their fruits.

I think we will all agree now that the fruits of this budget are green and bitter. I have met many business men and workers from my own riding—some of them are unemployed, and some of them were here today—and they certainly find the fruits green and bitter.

An hon. Member: And sour.

Mr. McMillan: The early fruits are lack of confidence, unemployment and insecurity. I hope the later fruits will not develop into something even worse. Now when a physician has a patient who has little or nothing wrong with him he gives him a placebo, a little sugar and water; but when the patient is really sick, he treats him vigorously. Our economy is sick but the Minister of Finance does not think so.

Mr. Grafftey: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that the hon. member is reading his speech. Would you make a ruling in this case in particular, and explain it to the house?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I am not reading my speech, I am referring to notes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is quite true that hon. members should not read their speeches, but they are permitted to refer to their notes. However, I believe that referring to notes should not become the reading of speeches. Consequently, let hon. members please refer to their notes occasionally but not all the time.

Mr. McMillan: I am not going to say that I did not refer to my notes occasionally, but I would add this: that the figures in the budget are so illogical that you have to refer to notes or you will never get anywhere.

Now, I said a while ago that our economy is sick, and that the Minister of Finance does not think it is sick because the other night he said, after all, this is a fairly mild recession. I think you will find those words in his budgetary speech. I suggest that the minister has given our economy a placebo pill when more vigorous treatment would have been desirable. I understand that if Mr. Harris' budget had been carried through until March 31 we would have had a surplus. It looks as though this government is costing the people a billion dollars in the first fiscal year, not counting the million lost to this country through unemployment. It is true that money rates have fallen since they got into power, but these lower rates were not given to the people buying homes. They were not given the advantage of these lower rates. I say that when the government's demand for money hits the market, the rates will rise.

The gross national product was $31.4 billion last year, an increase of 4 per cent over that of 1956. The minister is basing his revenue on $32 billion this year, a 2 per cent increase. I have heard and read accounts to the effect that the minister is taking too high a base. I hope that he is low and that our gross national product is more. However, from observations, and from seeing the number of people who are being added to the rolls of the unemployed, I would doubt this very much. I think this figure might well be high. I have no doubt the minister put forth the most optimistic figure he could obtain. The government will not make any confidential reports available to the members of the house, on anything. Even if we accept the $32 billion as the minister's base, he is admitting a bad year because we need an expanding economy to take up the number of new people coming in to the labour market. The increase last year was 4 per cent, but we still had a large number of unemployed.

I should like to ask the minister if he does not expect the number of unemployed will be greatly increased because we are only having a 2 per cent increase this year in the gross national product. I will admit that here I shall have to refer to notes a little bit in order to quote these figures accurately. The minister admits his budgetary expenditures for the year ending next March 31 will be $5,300 million, up $215 million, and his income will be $4,660 million, down $387 million. He will have a budgetary deficit of $640 million. I was interested in the financial acrobatics utilized by the Minister of Finance to grab off $165 million from the defence equipment account in order to avoid showing a deficit of $800 million or more.

I understand that this money is just a set of figures in the government books. The amount is one of the non-budgetary accounts and will now be transferred to the budgetary account. The fact is that this money does not exist. By liquidating this account the minister spends $165 million in the budgetary accounts and borrows it from the Canadian people as money for capital account. This is like the merchant who made money last year, but lost money this year. In order to make up his losses this year, he goes to his profits of last year, but he is down. This $165 million has to be borrowed before we can use it. It is not there now. This is somewhat like a little game of pretence. A man might owe $100, but he has no money. He used to have a bank account, but there is nothing in it and there is nothing in his pocket. He is pressed for this $100, so he writes a cheque for the $100. Then, he rushes around and borrows $100 from some one which he puts in the bank before the cheque is presented. Certainly, he has paid, one account. but he still owes $100. However, that is Conservative financing.

The point is that the Canadian taxpayer will owe an extra $165 million which was not debt before, no matter whether you call it a budgetary or non-budgetary account. We get returns from most of these non-budgetary accounts such as those in crown corporations and the St. Lawrence seaway. This money will eventually be paid back, but the $165 million is just going to be heavy debt. There are other amounts to be included in this year's expenses, such as the final supplementary estimates and further statutory expenditures on which the minister does not show a very bright light. Then, there are the final payments to the provinces, and the minister himself said that those already made were only interim payments.

On page 1240 of Hansard the minister says that the house has before it the estimates and supplementary estimates amounting to $5,237 million. According to his own figures we will be paying out close to $70 million under the provisions of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, plus $190 million for increased deficits in the old age security fund, plus a Canadian National deficit of at least $55 million, bringing the total expenditure to $5,552 million. It is at this point that the minister neatly subtracts $165 million from the national defence equipment account, bringing the amount down to $5,387 million, and calling it approximately $5,300 million—the $87 million does not amount to much. I maintain he had no right to do this.

If we take this $5,552 million, before this subtraction is made, we have yet to include in our expenditures for the year the increases to the civil service, the increased payments to the provinces and the further supplementary estimates. As the minister states in the budget, his estimate of income is $4,660 million. This only allows him $108 million for those three and other items, after which his deficit is $1 billion. To all intents and purposes, this is a billion dollar deficit budget, and I will not be surprised if it is well over this amount. The minister's baby budget turned out one year later to be a deficit. This baby is a billion dollar bouncing deficit. "Bouncing" is probably the wrong word because it is a dead weight.

The minister is very obscure about the figures in his non-budgetary operating accounts. For instance, he states that other non-budgetary costs and requirements, including the liquidation of the defence equipment account, will be of the order of $240 million. We know that the defence equipment account amounts to $165 million, so what of the other $75 million? Is $75 million so small an amount that the minister does not feel it is worth mentioning? What is it for? I heard the minister talk much about "What's a million?" I would like to ask him what is $75 million? What is it for?

After looking at all the figures one finds that the Minister of Finance depleted the cash account by $163 million last year, and he will be going to the people for $1,400 million of new money. This is the amount of money the government must borrow and this amount will be added to our public debt. This is equivalent to a debt of $80 for every man, woman and child in Canada. This amount is equal to a debt of $325 per family of four, and to this we must add the interest over the years.

I was interested in one of the government accounts, namely account No. 33, which shows a depletion of $131 million in the unemployment insurance account. I know this amount has nothing whatever to do with the budget, but it shows how the government has succeeded also in getting this account into an actuarial mess.

The minister always complained about the waste and extravagance of former governments. I remember him saying that we had too many civil servants, and he could have been right. But, according to the blue book, I notice—and I have added up the figures in the blue book—that in his own department, and in his own department alone, the minister has 70 more civil servants working for him than his predecessor had last year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not true.

Mr. McMillan: I am not saying they are not required but I wonder how he justifies this with his previous statement as contained in Hansard of May 3, 1955, at page 3397.

I want to say a few words on unemployment and the effective measures this budget may contain to overcome or cure it. In the Welland area there are about 3,000—or there were 3,000—unemployed. We have had official reports today and last week of the closing of the Welland Tube mills and of the Reliance Electric, so that another 500 men will be added to that 3,000 unemployed.

We have heard of many projects but I would like to ask the government whether there is one project in the Niagara district to put men back to work? I would like the government to name one man among these 3,000 people in the whole Niagara district whom they have sent back to work, or in St. Catharines or in Niagara Falls. In that area about 11,000 or 12,000 men altogether are unemployed. I would like to know from the government whether they have sent one man back to work in that area. In fact, I would have no quarrel with this deficit financing if our men were returning to work. In fact, I would be in favour of greater deficit financing if we could only put men back to work. In respect of unemployment, this budget has accomplished nothing, since the ranks of the unemployed are still growing and this is absolutely true in our area.

Mr. Charlton: It is not true.

Mr. Batten: Of course, it is true.

Mr. McMillan: It is rather interesting to examine a table entitled "Summary of Standard Objects of Special Expenditure and Special Categories". It is contained in a separate sheet attached to the back of the estimates book this year. Without, of course, including the supplementary estimates, the table gives the proposed expenditures of each department of government under 22 "standard objects" and "special categories". This classification makes it possible to compare and to see how the expenditures change in the different departments from year to year. Under objects 1, 2, 3 and 21, which include civil salaries and wages, civil allowances, pay and allowances, defence forces and R.C.M.P. pensions, superannuation and other benefits, we find the estimates up $108 million. This increase seems general to all departments. Item No. 4, professional and special services is up $10.2 million, but items 5 and 12 show an over-all decrease because of the reduction of expenditures in national defence; but the totals of all these items for the other departments have increased.

When we come to item 13, under the heading "Building and works, including construction and acquisition", it is here that we find all works of a capital nature to be paid out of the budgetary estimates. These latter estimates are increased from only $358.7 million last year to $380.3 million this year, an increase of $21.6 million. This seems a small increase, particularly this year, having in mind the Prime Minister's promised works program of $1,185 million for unemployment. Included in this amount—that is the increase of $21.6 million—is an increase of $8.1 million for Northern Affairs and National Resources, which is hardly in keeping with a great northern vision.

The minister lays considerable stress on the increased payments under the welfare measures initiated by the former government. Desirable as these payments are—and I agree with them—they are not productive of wealth. We must get our unemployed back to work and get them producing. They would prefer work to unemployment insurance benefits that are now running out.

This government seems to have an idea that it can spend the country out of a recession. This cannot be done without providing work for our people. This government seems to have the mental complex of a man who came to my office some time ago. He had an issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail in his pocket which carried an article on the amount of liquor that had been sold in Ontario in the previous year. It went on to tell how much had accrued to the coffers of the Ontario government through the sale of this liquor. I know the sum was considerable; I have forgotten the exact amount. This man made rather a peculiar observation. He said, "I believe we will drink ourselves out of debt yet". This is much the same type of reasoning this government uses in thinking it can spend the country out of this recession when so many of our people are unemployed and not engaged in productive industry. I feel sorry for these people. They have commitments to meet; they have payments to meet. They want to own and live in comfortable homes and Canada owes them more than just a mere living. They have hopes and aspirations as the rest of us have, and they should work and be able to have a standard of living commensurate with that of their fellow Canadians.

Let the government get back to the idea of expanding trade instead of diverting it. When the buying commission went to Britain we had much unemployment in this country while employment was fairly good in Britain.

The first order was a good-will order by the Ontario hydro consisting of some millions of dollars for the purchase of generator equipment. I was told in the house that generators were being ordered by the Ontario hydro which had never been made in Canada in that particular size; they were very large. I found out afterwards this was true but I also found out that they had never before been made in England.

I know of one industry at least in the Niagara district which was figuring on supplying some component parts of these generators. If that order had been placed in Canada there would certainly not be so many electrical workers unemployed in the Toronto, Hamilton, Niagara and Peterborough districts.

During the election campaign the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) was in Port Colborne and at that time he said that the government was going to divert more trade. Up to that time they had diverted quite a lot of trade, and I think the people of my constituency elected me because they did not want to see a lot more trade diverted. I am afraid that our government in its zeal to divert trade has taken jobs from Canadians in that British manufactured goods are coming into Canada more and more to compete with the output of our own industries.

Following the start of the trans-Canada pipe line the Welland Tubes plant was built at a cost of many millions of dollars to make large diameter pipe for trans-Canada and other companies. I would hope that the government would insist on all-Canadian pipe since the government is guaranteeing part of the cost of the trans-Canada line through northern Ontario.

Some of the unemployed in my area voted for the government because the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) said that unemployment would be cleared up by summer. Summer has arrived and this coming week we will have 500 more unemployed in Welland. I appeal to the government to help the unemployed get back to work. I agree with Premier Bennett of British Columbia who is reported as having said in the legislature on March 7 that it is time for the federal government to quit playing politics and to get down to the business of government.

Surely time is running out when the government can continue to blame unemployment on the former government. Never in the history of a Liberal government have we ever had so many unemployed in any corresponding month as we have had this year under the present government. Surely it is time to give more thought to a budget than just to raise the cost of government in each department without doing something at the same time to provide work for the unemployed. I should like to see the Minister of Finance use his own imagination in drawing up a budget rather than to follow the dictates of the Prime Minister. It seems to me that he is enough of a financial wizard to do some adding and subtracting and not present us with such a deficit.

I regret that there is nothing new in the budget for higher education. I thought the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) was probably giving a lead to the Conservative government when he promised students in Vancouver that there would be more money for higher education. I admire the minister's ability as an educator and I agree with his statement as reported in the press that we as a free western nation should make a concerted effort to help technological education. The Minister of Finance is just making a pretence of helping higher education by granting corporations a ten per cent exemption for educational donations instead of five per cent of their net profits. Contributions thus far have only been a fraction of the five per cent. How does the minister expect to get more by raising the exemption to ten per cent?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is with regret that I interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I can remember that all the clocks in the chamber have stopped at the same time. I do not suggest any particular reason why it has happened but it may be that it is creating additional difficulty in the timing of speeches. This is the first major debate for some time in which I have taken part. I want to extend congratulations to the new members who have spoken so nobly. With the great talents that many of them have, it is easy to see why the rest of us are beginning to fade away.

But I have also risen to take part in the debate because in recent years it has become traditional for maritime members to put on record some of the economic facts of life of the maritimes during the budget address. The other evening the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) went back into history to 1911 and 1930 for comparisons with the present budget and our economic situation. I went back a little bit farther, Mr. Speaker, to 1867. This came to my mind when I was reviewing the history of a distinguished gentleman who many years ago represented the constituency I now represent and who in the first parliament was minister of customs and in the second parliament minister of finance. One could not help but note the comparison of economic conditions at that time and those that exist today although I admit there are similarities in the case of the other two years I have just mentioned. One thinks that at that time there was the national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald and today we have the new nation-building, national development policy of the present Conservative government. At that time there was a railway to be built to the west. Today it is roads to the north. There is a similarity also in that at that time and also today young men and a new government were involved. There was an expanding economy and there was need for reasonable protection.

We all realize the dangers of tariffs. They are something like the sailor's tattoo. They are easy to put on but hard to get off. But I think it is within traditional Conservative policy to have some reasonable protection. Of course, the question may be asked: What were the Liberals doing during this post-confederation period and what are they doing today? There was not much evidence of activity at that time just as there has not been any evidence of constructive criticism so far in the budget debate. However, after looking for some hours I found a reference in the Montreal Gazette from the almanac of 1891 in the form of a very interesting poem which has some application here. It is in these words:

See the faces of the Grits,
Grizzly Grits,
What a woebegon expression at present o'er them flits.
They are thinking, thinking deeply
How to run this country cheaply
And they wonder
How in thunder
It is going to be done.
But the people—they who vote—of their twaddle take no note,
For they know the dismal, dreary, direful dole Of the Grits
Of the moribund, morose and melancholy Grits, Grits, Grits, Grits,
The greedy, grubby, garrulous old Grits.

I do not suggest that times have not changed a bit.

Mr. Pickersgill: They changed at bit after 1891 too.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): But there is some comparison if one wants to search for it in the fact that we have here a very courageous budget that meets the circumstances of the country, and I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on bringing it forward.

Mr. Denis: He might have been shot. That is why it is courageous.

[Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert).]

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) has become extremely vociferous in these past few days. We shall be pleased to hear his long awaited contribution to this debate.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): To get back to recent history I want to mention matters which concern me this evening. I should like to refer optimistically—if I dare to do so in face of the opposition, the gloomsters of today—to the maritime provinces. We have recently taken on a new look of which we are extremely proud. It centres around the symbol of the APEC organization which is a body made of the four Atlantic provinces. We have opened at London for the first time in many years an office for an agent general who will be making trade contacts with the United Kingdom and Europe in an effort to increase and expand the trade of our Atlantic provinces with those countries. Recently a very distinguished banquet was held in London which did honour to this fact, and we are looking forward to the future when once again the maritime provinces will be able to get into their traditional markets, the markets that were lost to us during the 22 years in office of the dead Liberal administration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Robichaud: You are dreaming.

Mr. Pickersgill: Which markets are those?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We are also proud of the fact that we in the maritime provinces are realizing that we ourselves must supply more of the goods that we need. Through APEC we sponsored an organizational meeting in Moncton which resulted in a food show. In that way we hope we shall be able to promote the growth of agricultural and other necessary primary products for our own economy. It is a sorry sight when we must import 78 per cent of the food that we use into that region. This is another example of the unified effort of which we are so optimistic and proud.

I think also of a fine magazine which is now in publication and which is going out to the entire North American continent. It has its origin in Fredericton. It is called the "Atlantic Advocate". It deals not only with the interesting history and traditions of the maritime people but it also attempts to promote their interests and their future. We look forward optimistically also to the West Indies federation. We hope that this new branch of the commonwealth will enable us to increase our trade to traditional markets there.

Mr. Regier: But you give our farmers only 80 per cent of what they had been getting.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I think the hon. member misunderstood me. I simply said we are attempting to grow our own agricultural needs within the region because we have been obliged to import 78 per cent of them from other parts of Canada to the Atlantic provinces.

But, Mr. Speaker, I refer optimistically also, if I may be permitted to do so this evening, to Saint John and the area that I represent. It is fitting that I should mention that famous old city today because this is the anniversary of the discoveries of Champlain in North America. In fact, four years before Champlain arrived in the St. Lawrence, we had the discovery of the Saint John river by Champlain, and of course named after St. John the Baptist, on June 24, 1604. We have development in the area that I mention of over $120 million coming up in the next year or two. We have an oil refinery, a thermal plant, a new cement plant, a new pulp mill addition and we are optimistically taking part in all of the endeavours of the provincial government and the federal government in that region. I think also of the new federal works projects that are being built there, particularly the new customs building which will mean new revenues to the coffers of the federal government.

Mr. Robichaud: Who started that building?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —and which also will preserve the separate identity of the customs department within our framework of government. I understand that there has been a trend within the government to include this honoured branch of government in other federal buildings; but in Saint John there is being built a separate customs building which is carrying on the tradition of the ways and means of this parliament to maintain sources of revenue for the federal treasury.

In that regard I think anybody from the maritime provinces can be optimistic about their future in the development of this country. The other night the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) mentioned certain matters affecting the province of New Brunswick which were well taken in many cases, but I think the speech was more noteworthy for the fact that the one important matter was left out. Everyone knows that the two historic disabilities of the Atlantic provinces have been power and transportation. On checking his speech in Hansard I find not a word about power.

Mr. Robichaud: There will be another opportunity.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I will tell you why the hon. member did not mention the word "power". It was because he was a member of a government which lasted 22 years, for some strange reason,—

Mr. Pickersgill: Because the people voted for them.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —but which did absolutely nothing to correct one of the major historic disabilities of the maritime provinces.

Mr. Robichaud: You will hear about power sooner than you expect.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It is fitting that on June 28, this Saturday, we shall be honouring the completion of the Beechwood project in New Brunswick. Hon. members who are new to this house may not be as familiar with the word "Beechwood" as are some of us who have been here for the past few years. Briefly, the history is that we in New Brunswick realized that in order to take our place in the economic sun of this great nation it was necessary for us to have cheap power. Our, premier, Hugh John Flemming, in the days of the old Liberal administration, made many trips to Ottawa and was always met with the cold shoulder. His efforts to obtain some sort of financial assistance did not meet with success. In spite of a few weak-kneed promises before the election of 1957, financial assistance did not come about until the new Conservative administration took over. I am here this evening to pay testimony not only to Premier Flemming but to the new Conservative government. They made power possible in New Brunswick. The Minister of Finance also had a very important part to play in that matter.

An hon. Member: Turn over to the next page.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have two pages of notes. If the hon. member wants to come over, he can see them. He can even take them with him and use them in his own speech.

I have mentioned the two disabilities. One is power. Nothing was done about it by the old administration. On completion date this Saturday we feel that we have sufficient power at least to be able to offer new industry some attraction in locating in New Brunswick.

Mr. Robichaud: No industry.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have just mentioned the new industry which has located in my own city of Saint John. I can go all through it again if the hon. member wishes or, if he would like to visit Saint John I would be very glad to show him around.

Mr. Robichaud: How many unemployed are there in Saint John. You do not wish to answer that question.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): If the hon. member had looked at the figures for these two days from the dominion bureau of statistics—

Mr. Robichaud: 56,000.

An hon. Member: Oh, you are a "gloom and doomer".

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —he would have seen that the figures for Saint John are very encouraging and are only slightly higher than the figures for last year but they compare very favourably with the dominion average.

Mr. Robichaud: 56,000.

An hon. Member: Not as many as you would like.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): There are 56,000 unemployed in the Atlantic Provinces. I know it is a little disheartening for the Liberal party not to be able to have these high figures about which to make their gloomy speeches.

However, I would like to turn to the second disability suffered by the Atlantic provinces ever since confederation. I hope to make some constructive suggestions which might be considered in order to improve the future for the area.

Secondly, there is the problem of transportation. We had a meeting of the maritimes transportation commission in Saint John about two weeks ago and the officials of the commission said in their report that matters showed some improvement but that we need continuing vigilance due to the changing state of the transportation system, not only in the Atlantic provinces but in the whole of Canada. Transportation everywhere in this country is in a state of flux; it is in a state of transformation and in the Atlantic area particularly we have to watch every movement of transportation.

First of all with respect to road transportation I do hope that the government in their roads program will be able to find some formula to enable improvements to be carried out in the Atlantic provinces. It may be that a method can be found to make these improvements by means of tourist access roads or it may be that roads for the development of our resources can be combined with roads for the tourist industry. The tourist industry is, of course, extremely important and I can think in my own constituency of a very definite need for a road along the coast at the bay of Fundy. We have no trail such as the Cabot trail in Nova Scotia or the Gaspe trail in Quebec. There is certainly room for a lovely Fundy trail to enable us to build up the tourist industry which means so much to us in terms of dollars. Such an undertaking is a tremendous one for a provincial government but perhaps a formula could be worked out jointly between the federal or provincial authorities. Similarly the resource development programs could be assisted by the means of new roads helping to balance out the economy of our country.

Secondly, with respect to water transportation we have been watching the movements of the St. Lawrence area, not only so far as tolls are concerned but also with respect to continued efforts to keep the seaway open further down the St. Lawrence each year. We feel that we may have to give our trade and export business during the winter months a new look. This St. Lawrence seaway program appears to be a very prosperous undertaking and perhaps it will be possible to include the development of the Chignecto canal in conjunction with the seaway, thereby further balancing out our problems as the seaway expands and as the economy of this country is concentrated further inland and our transportation disparities increase.

Thirdly, there is the matter of air transportation. In the maritimes we have a climate which creates more problems than that in many sections of this country and therefore our air transportation undoubtedly takes on a new importance. It may be that more competition is necessary with respect to air transportation in our area, even though revenues would not at first glance be so great.

Fourthly, and perhaps most important is the problem of rail transportation which is still very serious in our area. A nation as great as ours must, of course, always face great difficulties in this respect. In 1926 we received the benefit of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. These benefits have, of course, assisted us to some extent but the horizontal increases since this time have tended to cut down that assistance and today the agreed charges which at the time seemed fair have, in fact, worked out against our interest because our manufacturers are not large enough and cannot take sufficient advantage of them. I think we have only about 30 agreed charges out of the 400 which are in effect.

I have attempted to point out the disabilities under which we are living with respect to power and transportation. While we feel that a good start has been made with respect to the problem of power, our problems with respect to transportation still have a long way to go. The hon. member for Gloucester made the suggestion the other day that perhaps an agency should be set up as a continuing body to look after our transportation problems. While I am not sure that in these changing days a continuing agency is necessary I do feel his suggestion has a lot of merit. We must watch the movements which are taking place in a modern world, but we have an optimistic approach to the future and look forward to taking our proper place in the economy of Canada.

Someone has said, very unkindly, that as far as the maritimes are concerned, the smart fellows moved out west, and the smarter they were the quicker they moved. We who have stayed in the maritimes, however, believe that the smart guys left because they could not stand the competition. As far as we are concerned it is a fine budget and we in the maritimes look forward to a continuing development under the new administration.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my first words will naturally be directed to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) with regard to his truly remarkable performance in this house on June 17 last. Now, that evening the minister revealed some hidden talent he had not displayed before and I refer to his considerable ability as a magician. The minister must surely have gone through several rehearsals before he delivered this masterpiece in the house. As it contained little substance in the way of tax deductions for the working people, we understand perfectly why he chose to unfold much emphatic eloquence to make up for this lack of substance. As far as eloquence was concerned, and solely from that angle, I associate myself with the hon. members of the government in congratulating the minister.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into the details of what the minister told us in lieu of a budget speech. I was struck by several points of which no mention at all was made in the speech of the minister, but there is one, more particularly, with which I would like to deal during the few minutes I have at my disposal.

I must say to you in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, that, along with the great majority of my electors and of the people of this country, I was shocked by the anti-family nature of the budget. Even though Conservative candidates during the last elections in the province of Quebec had a great deal to say about a future increase in family allowances, there is absolutely no mention made of such an increase in the so-called budget which was so eloquently brought down by the Minister of Finance. That is the matter with which I would like to deal for a few minutes, but I do feel I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I do so in all humility, being neither an economist nor an expert in social legislation. If I raise the subject, it is only to urge improvement of a social security measure which lies very close to my heart and to the heart of thousands of our fellow citizens.

There are several ways of increasing the purchasing power we all lack at the present time. One of the most efficient ways would certainly have been to reduce income tax collected from wage earners.

But in his masterpiece the minister totally ignored that proposition. However, along with many other people, I was expecting him to do so in some other way. An increase in family allowances would have been a very efficient way of increasing that purchasing power, but the minister ignored that also.

If he deliberately chooses to ignore the possibility of increasing family allowances, it is perhaps because he was not particularly interested in helping large families in this country whose breadwinner happens to be out of work. As I mentioned a moment ago, many fathers at this time are quite incapable of providing their wife and children with the bare necessities of life. This is a most unfortunate situation, one which should not exist in a country as rich as ours.

When I think that, in the last election campaign, the government gave the Canadian people the impression that a new era of prosperity was about to be launched throughout the country, I have no hesitation in saying that it was seriously remiss in its duty toward the Canadians in failing to cut income tax and in wilfully ignoring the numerous requests for family allowances increases.

It is certainly not because the need is not there, since family allowances were instituted in 1944, under a Liberal regime.

The text of the act may be found in chapter 40 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

As everyone knows, that act provided for the payment of allowances for each child, as follows:

From birth to age 6, it provided for $5 a month; from 6 to 10, $6 a month; from 10 to 13, $7 a month; and from 13 to 16, $8 a month.

That legislation also provided a decreasing rate of $1, $2 and $3 for the 5th, 6th, 7th and other children.

In 1949, the Liberal government, following numerous representations, found that this decreasing rate was detrimental to large families and decided to remove that decreasing feature from the act.

This had the happy effect of placing all children on the same basis.

I must say that the former Liberal administration deserves credit for having understood that large families are the thermometer of the living force of a nation.

The former government also understood that large families contribute to the increase in the population of our country, and that they deserve special attention on the part of its government.

In a word, it had understood that the financial budget of large families is much more difficult to balance than the budget of bachelors or married people without children.

That is why I do not hesitate to say that the 1944 Family Allowances Act can rightly be considered a measure of distributive justice, a family policy which to a large extent helped improve economic conditions for the Canadian family by providing it with a fairer share of the natural wealth of our country.

Like many others, I am convinced that the Family Allowances Act, specially in periods of economic recession to which we have grown accustomed under Conservative governments, should be flexible enough to provide for new and urgent needs of families, and so become very effective in offsetting fluctuations in the cost of living.

If the government had been bent on fulfilling its promises and its duty to the Canadian family, it would have made it its duty to consider this human and distressing problem and to find a happy solution that would have allowed large families to enjoy the necessities of life under a Conservative regime which, if things continue this way, will end up by being synonymous with a famine regime.

When family allowances came into effect on July 1, 1945, the cost of living index was much lower than it is now.

Barring the improvement of the decreasing rate of allowances in 1949 and the increase of approximately 16 per cent in 1957, we may conclude that the rate of family allowances, in 1958, does not take into account the substantial and gradual rise in the cost of living.

When the family allowances act was passed, there were many heads of families in cities as well as in rural districts who earned hardly enough to support their family.

It can be safely stated today that the continuing rise in the cost of living is even more considerable than has been the rise in salaries since 1945. That explains why, even nowadays, many large families have not enough income to merely exist, while others are almost reduced to poverty.

In my opinion, a situation like this is shameful in a country as rich as Canada.

The present rates of family allowances, in spite of the considerable benefits they brought to large families, are now inadequate and do not meet the needs of large families in 1958. They do not even help families enjoy a decent standard of living, and that, in my opinion, constitutes a social justice problem in respect of which no enlightened society can remain indifferent.

To illustrate this statement I shall say that the mothers in our country know very well, from their own daily distressing experience that the family allowance for a child under six years of age does not even pay the daily quart of milk recommended by doctors as a minimum in order to ensure a child's normal development.

When looking up the figures of the federal bureau of statistics, it can easily be seen that the cost of living index in 1945, with regard to food, was 66.3 per cent, whereas today the F.B.S. informs us that it has gone up to 122.7 per cent.

The rent item, which was 91.4 per cent in 1945, has now reached 137.9 per cent. The same applies to clothing, the cost of which amounted to 66.9 per cent in 1945, and reached 110 per cent in 1958; in 1945, the cost of upkeep of the home was 74.9 per cent and reached 120.7 per cent in 1958; the cost of services, which represented 74.9 per cent in 1945, now represents 130.9 per cent in 1958.

I do not mention the ever-increasing school costs, as well as the cost of a great number of other living facilities.

In the light of those facts, one surely does not have to be an expert nor an economist to come to the positive conclusion that in 1958 family allowances no longer have the same purchasing power as in 1945 when they were initiated by a Liberal government.

If the Tory government had really been realistic in dealing with the economic recession it has brought on, it would certainly have had an excellent opportunity to remedy this painful situation by pegging family allowances to the cost of living.

It certainly appears that the Minister of Finance deliberately chose to ignore this important question in what we are agreed to call, in parliamentary terms, his budget. He has demonstrated the sympathy he feels for the sufferings of the Canadian family in 1958, the first anniversary of the coming into power in Ottawa of a Conservative government.

To sum up my feelings on this whole matter, I have no hesitation in saying that this 1958 budget is a true Tory budget, one directed against the family and ignoring the great number of needs of the Canadian family.

On the whole, I must admit that I am not particularly surprised by this attitude of the Conservative government with regard to family allowances. This attitude is but a continuation and a confirmation of the words spoken by certain of its leaders and members on this subject.

No further proof is needed than the statement made in the House of Commons, on July 25, 1944, by Mr. Gordon Graydon, leader of the Tory opposition of that time. In fact, as shown on page 5,342 of volume V of the 1944 session, Mr. Graydon had these sympathetic words to say about the Family Allowances Act:

> It seriously endangers the setting up of minimum wage standards in Canada, and may be accepted in many instances as a substitute for better wage levels. It is a thrust at the power of collective bargaining and of minimum wage principles. Labour has always looked with a doubtful eye on such legislation as this bill envisages and not without good reason.

That is how ridiculous one can get when opposing without any valid reason an act designed to improve the standard of living of small wage earners.

A little farther down, on the same page, this same Tory leader, a great friend of the family, said this:

> It adds a further strain on our national unity. There is but one province which has maintained the high birth rate and large families which were so characteristic of Canada's pioneer strains. The provinces contributions to the general revenue will be out of proportion to the heavier deflection of payments that will have to come from other provinces to pay that province's heavier share of these subsidies.

This same Mr. Graydon was certainly not struck by the same long term vision of our Prime Minister because, 13 years later, statistical data proved that, in the last fiscal year, the province of Ontario received $136.8 million in family allowances, while the province of Quebec received $136.1 million.

We therefore have good reason to hope that, in the face of such a situation, the Prime Minister will no longer have any scruples about increasing family allowances, which at the same time would allow him to pay part of his election debt to Mr. Frost and to prove to the province of Quebec that, in the last election campaign, Conservative candidates were not misleading voters when loudly promising such increases. Even after the elections, at that time when a certain Mr. Mercier pointed out to him that the enthusiasm of the Minister of National Health and Welfare seemed somewhat lessened with regard to an increase in family allowances, the valiant member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Brassard) stated with quasi ministerial firmness:

> I have not yet met anybody from the Ottawa government. In any case, if they do not want to go ahead and do something, we will tell them a thing or two.

According to the same Mr. Mercier, the same hon. gentleman stated, before as well as after the elections, that the family allowance should be $18 per child and paid up to age 18 if the child carries on his studies until that time.

Now, as far as I know, the hon. member for Chicoutimi is a not a Liberal member.

As for the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Parizeau) he was no less energetic. He appears to have stated, following the elections:

> We have had a meeting of all Conservative members from Quebec, and we have all agreed to stand as one for family allowances. We are with you. You may count on me. We will not let Ottawa back out on this matter.

The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Letourneau) has not been less generous; he is reported to have said that we would indeed have that increase in family allowances. And, here again yesterday—and I wish to congratulate him for it—he put forward his request.

And, on top of it all, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) is reported to have said—again to that same Mr. Mercier—that he would use his influence to obtain that increase during this very session.

Mr. Comtois: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not know that Mr. Mercier and I have never met him.

Mr. Racine: I should like to point out to the hon. minister that I have here the press report in question and that I shall be pleased to table it.

Mr. Comtois: I does not mean it is true.

Mr. Racine: In any event—

Mr. Comtois: What paper?

Mr. Racine: In any event, it does not seem that the hon. minister has made a great deal of use of what he calls his influence with the Minister of Finance.

However we do find some consolation in the fact that latter day Conservative members do not seem to be opposed, in principle, to family allowances.

When, for instance, their attitude is compared with that of the former member for Parkdale, Mr. H. A. Bruce, in this house, the least than can be said is that they themselves credit the Liberal party with doing a genuine service to Canadians in introducing this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Racine: On July 25, 1944, as can be seen on page 5363, volume five of the official record for that year, Mr. Bruce stated when discussing family allowances with regard to the province of Quebec:

> That province, because of its large families will derive the greatest benefit from this measure, at the expense of the other provinces, particularly Ontario, which pays one half of the taxes in Canada.

Fortunately, the feelings of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), with reference to the same paper and the same interviewer, bring a much more encouraging answer than the statements of Mr. Bruce. The hon. member for St. John's East, here in Ottawa, after the elections, is said to have stated to that same Mr. Mercier that he was in favour of pegging family allowances to the cost of living. He is even reported as adding that he could not imagine any member of the house being opposed to this.

From what I have just said, it is obvious that an increase in family allowances is imperative at this very session.

The Minister of Finance will perhaps say that it is too late, now that he has introduced his budget. After reading the official report of last year's debates, I will reply that he seems to forget that at one time he was a champion of budgeting by resolutions. There would therefore be no objection to taking advantage of that practice to announce an increase in family allowances.

I have been in my constituency recently, and most of the electors I have met have asked me to take advantage of every opportunity to ask that allowances be raised this year.

I sincerely hope that the Minister of Finance, inspired by the good intentions of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, without forgetting the promises of Conservative candidates in the province of Quebec, will soon grant the wishes of all Canadian families in that connection and will agree to raise family allowances in proportion with the cost of living index and will extend them up to the age of 18 as was advocated by the Liberal party. I hope that thus a greater number of our families will be in a position to live not in wealth but in decency.

(Text):

Mr. R. S. MacLellan (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my constituency comprises the counties of Inverness and Richmond and one-third of Cape Breton county on the island of Cape Breton in Nova Scotia. It includes about 275 miles of coastline and encompasses almost two-thirds of the island. My constituents earn their livelihood chiefly as fishermen, farmers and lumbermen. Like a great many Atlantic coast people, their incomes are far from close to the Canadian average.

At the same time my constituency has great natural resources. In the county of Inverness there are great coal reserves for the most part lying idle. There are also substantial deposits of gypsum, so far undeveloped, which we hope will be opened up before too long, large amounts of fertile agricultural land and extensive untapped timber reserves. We have many fine harbours among them the great natural all-winter ports of Louisburg and Port Hawkesbury. Our greatest resource is the sea. We are very close to the best deepsea fishing grounds in the world and in fact the only industrial employment in my constituency is that provided by fish processing and packaging plants at Louisburg, at Petit de Grat and at Cheticamp.

My constituents do not enjoy the standard of living and security of employment I would like them to have. It is a rather sad commentary that they do not, when such rich resources are available to them that could be developed.

Parts of my constituency have memories of the earliest days of white settlement in Canada. For example, as hon. members all know, the fortress town of Louisburg was founded as early as 1713. It was built by France to guard the entrance to the St. Lawrence and was at one time the gate to this nation. In its day it was one of the finest fortresses in the world and its high walls were regarded as unconquerable.

This year marks the two hundredth anniversary of the siege of Louisburg in 1758. Extensive bi-centennial celebrations have been planned, and I wish to extend an invitation to all hon. members to visit one of Canada's most important historical monuments. It would be well worth the time of any person interested in the history and memories of this nation to visit Louisburg during the bi-centennial celebration this summer. There is perhaps no place else on the continent where there is such an opportunity to examine the structure of a great eighteenth century fortress and the tools and implements of the wars that marked the turbulent birth of Canada. The anniversary ceremonies are scheduled for July 26, 27 and 28, at Louisburg Old town. Again, on behalf of the mayor and the bi-centennial committee, I invite you all to join in one of Canada's most important birthdays and to be our guests at fortress Louisburg.

The Atlantic provinces are among the oldest in Canada. It is tragic to consider how little we have developed across 250 years or more. As hon. members know well, the Atlantic provinces have fared the worst of any region of Canada in the 91 years since confederation. While other regions have seen great growth in population and wealth, we of the east coast have fallen steadily behind the national development level. I do not wish to cite statistics of agricultural, manufacturing and trade decline to prove the existence of a situation already well-known to all of Canada. The royal commission on Canada's economic prospects cites our position clearly.

The per capita income of the maritimes and Newfoundland is 37 per cent below that of the other six provinces. A large percentage of our people eke out a precarious livelihood as subsistence farmers, combined with part-time fishing and logging. Great numbers of our children must leave home as they reach maturity to find work in other parts of this continent. A larger percentage of our population consists of children and older people than in any other region of Canada. Across the last 30 years over a quarter of a million maritimers have had to leave home to seek a livelihood elsewhere.

As I have said, Canada has long been aware of the problem of the maritimes. I am sure it is no stranger to this house. But no realistic attempt has ever been made to correct the situation. Perhaps one of the greatest defaults of the Liberal administration was its failure to face and try to meet the difficulties of the Atlantic region. These difficulties have grown worse year by year. I do not say that no contribution has been made to the Atlantic area during that time. It is true that we have had some essential public works allotments, limited freight rates assistance and such grants in aid from time to time as would allow our provincial governments to survive and to provide a minimum of social welfare, education, and so on. As a matter of fact, if it were not for these special considerations our average income in the Atlantic region would indeed be very much less than even the present poor level.

We have had such help as would carry us from crisis to crisis. When our impoverishment reached the ultra-serious stage we were thrown sufficient crumbs to support us for another few years. But the great default of the Liberal party to the maritimes was that there never was at any time in all those years the slightest suggestion of a positive program to give the Atlantic provinces a new start to aid us in developing a self-supporting economy. The approach was always negative, a little charity from time to time to keep the poor relatives of the east coast from the final pangs of starvation.

One of the best illustrations of this negative, nothing can be done policy of the previous administration is to be found in the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. The Gordon commission catalogues Atlantic problems in cold, frank statistics. It recites the problem with clarity and just as clearly declines to suggest a solution. Of what use is it to have discovered our troubles if they would not try to recommend a cure?

The Gordon commission closely adhered to the negative philosophy of the government which sponsored it. It apparently had not the courage to question that philosophy and make the recommendations for rebuilding our provinces that should have been obvious to anyone. Instead of facing the problem, the commission finessed it. It hid behind the falsity that seems to have inspired thinking in regard to the east coast provinces since confederation, namely that we are poor because we lack natural resources and there is nothing that can be done about it; that we are doomed to marginal farming, fishing and logging and nothing can be done about it. Out of this thinking comes the suggestion that if coal miners are displaced due to lost markets, more federal grants in aid should be provided to move them to greener economic pastures.

Nothing could be more wrong than to presume that the Atlantic provinces lack natural resources. It is true that we do not have the oil pools of Alberta or the timber or minerals of British Columbia or the farm lands of the prairies. But we do have rich resources, indeed, the same type of resources that made Britain the foremost commercial nation of the world for a century and a half.

We have great resources of coal and iron ore, enough perhaps to supply this continent with steel. We have great timber resources and one of the fastest rates of coniferous timber growth in the world. We have great resources of gypsum and minerals of all kinds. Above all, we have tidewater at our feet and some of the finest harbours in the world. If we are poor, we are poor in the midst of plenty. Suggestions that we are bankrupt in resources were the excuses of the previous administration for its neglect to afford an opportunity for development of our Atlantic provinces.

What is the basic problem of the Atlantic provinces? The Gordon commission cites it. Atlantic business investment per capita is only one-half the Canadian average. For example, as the table on page 406 of the report shows, in the years 1954 to 1956 investment per capita in manufacturing was only 35 per cent of the Canadian average. By comparison, the per capita investment in Ontario in the same period was 137 per cent of the Canadian average and in British Columbia it was 154 per cent. In other words, our problem is that we do not have sufficient industrial production to maintain and support our population. We do not produce enough goods to enable us to earn proper and sufficient incomes.

In my province of Nova Scotia we have only two major manufacturing industries, the mill of Dominion Iron and Steel Company Limited at Sydney and Mersey Pulp and Paper Company's pulp mill at Liverpool. Aside from these we must live on our marginal fishing and farming, a few small factories and on our precarious coal industry. We have not seen the start of a new major industry in Nova Scotia since 1925. The only possible road to the rescue of the Atlantic region is in the development of manufacturing and processing industries. Only the establishment of industry can provide us with a stable self-supporting economy and provide us with the chance to find employment for our people.

We in the Atlantic area, are grateful for the special grants of 1957 amounting to $25 million. Our provincial governments are using this money to meet the interest on our substantial indebtedness, to build schools for our children that we would otherwise have to do without, and to improve our highway systems, welfare benefits, and so on. We are grateful for the thermal power program and the coal subventions that we hope will save our Nova Scotian coal industry upon which 130,000 of our people depend for a living.

But grants in aid, public works projects and subventions can never provide the solution to the economic ills of our provinces. Such measures are stopgaps. They do meet our most urgent social needs and unemployment distress. They do not meet our basic problem. The present position of our coal industry shows what a failure a policy of grants in aid alone has been across the years. Our great need is productive development. If our resources were harnessed and our industry given a fair chance to compete in this nation, we would not require special grants in aid and ever higher special subventions. A parent educates his child to earn his livelihood or capitalizes him in an income producing business to support him in life. He does not plan to feed him through life with minimum living allowances. What we need is an ability to produce and earn, an opportunity to industrialize. We need income producing investment in manufacturing and processing industries.

The Atlantic provinces are making a valiant effort to develop industry. The government of Nova Scotia has established Industrial Estates Limited to interest investors in business opportunities in the province. Long term credit is offered by all governments to prospective new industry and every possible incentive to attract investment is being provided. Nova Scotia is now negotiating the establishment of a pulp mill at the strait of Canso which would be a third major industry in the province. Since confederation Newfoundland has invested about $30 million of public funds in several manufacturing and processing projects. We are making every attempt to help ourselves out of the economic cellar, and the thermal power program to provide subsidized cheap power is a great help to us in this attempt to improve our lot. Before this program was launched it was almost hopeless to expect a manufacturer to locate in our area of high cost power.

But, Mr. Speaker, even with cheaper power our provincial governments do not have a very attractive proposition to offer to industrial investors. We will have cheaper power, we have natural resources, we have an abundant labour supply, and if profits could be shown we feel we would have no problem to find capital to industrialize. Our big handicap is one we cannot do much about. It is geography. We are in the worst geographical position of any region of Canada in terms of development.

Before confederation the Atlantic region enjoyed a quite favourable trade location astride the water route from Upper Canada to New England and the West Indies. Our ships and goods could move in two directions, south to the United States cities and west up the St. Lawrence. Confederation, with its tariff system necessary to protect infant Canadian industries, halted this trade. Commerce moved henceforth east and west across the continent. The centre of manufacturing and business, and therefore the centre of population, became Ontario and Quebec. The successful manufacturers were those who could sell east and west from the centre. It might have been different if the St. Lawrence river did not supply a water route deep into Canada. Without the St. Lawrence, Halifax, Saint John and Louisburg might have developed into Canada's gates to the Atlantic as Vancouver became a great port, on the Pacific. Vancouver, founded about 1888, has over half a million people today. The city of Halifax, founded 139 years earlier, is a city one-fifth this size. Canadian overseas export cargoes embarked from Montreal and while that city flourished and grew the great natural ports of the east coast became quiet still waters confined to winter traffic.

As far as industrialization today is concerned, it is obvious why it is difficult to attract industrial investment and technical capacity to the Atlantic region. The simple fact is that the manufacturer on our coast is at a distinct disadvantage in competition, both in the local Atlantic market and in Canadian markets generally. In many cases it is just not good business to open up a factory in our region.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. The assistant clerk has advised me that it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Deschatelets: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, would you permit me to point out that since the delivery of the budget everything seems to be upside down in this country, even the clocks of the house.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The Liberals stopped the clock.

On motion of Mr. MacLellan the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I presume that we will proceed with this debate tomorrow as the house leader announced last night. Is there anything he can say about the business of the house for Monday?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I am not yet in a position to say but I am hoping that it will be possible to reach an agreement to have a one-day supply motion on Monday. We are also hoping that on Tuesday it will be possible for the house to meet at 4.30 instead of 2.30 in order that members may attend the ceremony which is to take place on parliament hill. We would then plan to go on with government business for the rest of Tuesday, take the seventh and eighth days of the budget debate on Wednesday and Thursday of next week and then have estimates on Friday. This is subject to being able to reach agreement with the two opposition parties.

Mr. Chevrier: To use an expression which is very dear to certain members of the house, we on the opposition side will be very happy to co-operate on Tuesday.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Question No. 58—Mr. Argue:

1. What sections of the trans-Canada highway have been completed in each province?
2. What was the total cost of the completed sections of the trans-Canada highway in each province?
3. What was the federal contribution towards the total cost of the completed sections in each province?
4. What mileage in each province remains to be completed, and what percentage of the total mileage in each province is this?
5. Of this, what mileage in each province is now under construction?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Mileage completed in each province under the trans-Canada highway agreement to April 30, 1958:

Newfoundland	—
Prince Edward Island	67
Nova Scotia	—
New Brunswick	78
Ontario	434
Manitoba	246
Saskatchewan	406
Alberta	214
British Columbia	262
Total	1707

2. Information covering the cost of completed sections is not available. The estimated cost of all work for which approval has been given, together with the estimated amount of Canada's share, is as follows:—

	Total commitment	Canada's share
Newfoundland	$ 27,438,223.30	$ 17,166,350.22
Prince Edward Island	7,336,758.99	4,385,739.50
Nova Scotia	11,245,837.20	6,807,398.60
New Brunswick	33,479,012.85	23,271,942.83
Ontario	117,832,008.33	66,551,524.15
Manitoba	28,877,966.55	15,181,295.68
Saskatchewan	27,759,207.27	15,864,748.65
Alberta	34,179,330.14	19,686,515.47
Br. Columbia	94,356,081.85	51,660,139.12
Total	$382,504,426.48	$220,575,654.22

3. Payments to provinces December 10, 1949, to May 31, 1958:

Newfoundland	$ 9,777,397.16
Prince Edward Island	3,272,532.20
Nova Scotia	4,792,713.50
New Brunswick	12,385,775.21

CUSTOMS OFFICES, ACTON VALE AND WATERLOO, QUEBEC

Question No. 100—Mr. Boivin:

1. Have representations been made to the Minister of National Revenue or any officials of his department asking for the establishment of customs offices at Acton Vale and Waterloo, Quebec?
2. If so, by whom?

Answer by: Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

1. Yes, in 1954.
2. Representations made by Mr. Marcel Boivin, M.P.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—VAULT CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 108—Mr. Rouleau:

1. Have tenders been called by the government for the building of a vault at the national film board in St. Laurent, Quebec?
2. If so, has the contract been awarded, to what firm and at what amount?
3. If not, when will tenders be called?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2 and 3. Tenders are due on June 25, 1958.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 25, 1958

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

APPROVAL OF REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State) moved:

That the report of the civil service commission concerning the staff of the library of parliament, laid upon the table of the house June 20, 1958, be now approved.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HUMANE SLAUGHTER OF ANIMALS

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-32, to amend the Criminal Code (slaughtering of animals).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that during the last parliament a bill dealing with the subject of the slaughtering of animals was introduced and given first reading. At that time attorneys general and all interested organizations were invited to make suggestions and comments. A good many have been received, and as a result the bill now being introduced represents some slight change from the form in which it was previously introduced. The changes, we believe, will make it more effective to accomplish its object.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

STARRED QUESTIONS

PIPE LINE CONSTRUCTION PERSONNEL—NON-RESIDENT APPLICATIONS

Question No. 15—Mr. Benidickson:

Since July 1, 1957, how many applications for the privilege, or for extension of the privilege, to work in Canada on pipe-line construction from or on behalf of non-residents have been approved by the government?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is 2,480.

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES, ONTARIO

Question No. 20—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Has the government reached an agreement with the government of Ontario regarding the expenditures made by the provincial authorities to assist in the settlement of Hungarian refugees?
2. If so, what is the basis of the agreement?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 of the question is yes.

In answer to part 2 I will outline the basis of the agreement, which is as follows:

1. The federal government will pay to the Ontario government the sum of $3 per day for each Hungarian refugee given board and lodging in the Toronto reception centre.

2. The federal government will reimburse the Ontario government for any disbursements made for board and lodging for refugees in accommodation outside the reception centre where such arrangements have been necessary and where the refugees have been in Canada less than one year.

3. The federal government will absorb all the costs of transportation of refugees from Europe to Canada and, within Canada, to the place of destination and/or place of employment.

4. The Ontario government will absorb the costs of medical examination, X-ray and vaccination of Hungarian refugees, which may have been made upon arrival of the Hungarian refugees in the province.

5. For those Hungarian refugees who require hospitalization, medical treatment, nursing assistance and social assistance, the federal government will reimburse the Ontario government for expenses incurred during the first year after arrival in Canada; for those Hungarian refugees requiring these services beyond the first 12 months after arrival, these services will be provided by the Ontario government at no cost to the federal government.

6. The federal government will reimburse the Ontario government for the purchase of clothing on behalf of Hungarian refugees.

7. The provisions of the existing agreement regarding language and citizenship classes will apply in the case of Hungarian refugees.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the term "Hungarian refugee" for the purpose of this agreement means a Hungarian national who fled Hungary as a direct result of the revolt in that country of October, 1956, and who has been brought to Canada at the expense of the federal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, has the hon. lady the date of that agreement?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, I do not appear to have that date, Mr. Speaker, but I will be glad to procure it should the hon. member wish it.

OPEN PLACEMENT IMMIGRATION

Question No. 21—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. What are the occupations for which immigrants are admitted for open placement at the present time?

2. How many open placement immigrants have been admitted to Canada since January 1, 1958?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the actual reply to this question is not very long, but it is supported by a copy of the occupational counselling guide, which is rather voluminous. I would suggest, if the hon. member agrees, that this be made an order for return.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. lady could not give the answer to the question. I would be quite happy to have the supporting document tabled.

Mrs. Fairclough: Surely. The answer to the first part of the question is that an open placement immigrant under present selection criteria must have to a high degree the personal qualities of suitability, adaptability and determination, and in addition be highly qualified in a trade or occupation in which opportunities for placement or establishment exist and which will permit him to become satisfactorily established in Canada within a reasonable time after his admission. The attached schedule, which is amended from time to time as may be required, is used by selection officers abroad as a general guide in the selection and counselling of prospective immigrants.

The answer to the second part of the question is that 5,608 open placement immigrant workers were admitted to Canada from January 1, 1958, to April 30, 1958.

Mr. Speaker: In order that the answer and the supporting document may all be in one place is it agreeable that the answer and the document be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TERRA NOVA NATIONAL PARK, NFLD.

Question No. 22—Mr. Pickersgill:

Have instructions been given by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or any member of his staff or official of his department to the park engineer, park superintendent or any member of the staff of the Terra Nova national park that applicants for jobs in the park must be interviewed or recommended or approved by Mr. Carson Stroud of Glovertown?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is as follows. No instructions have been issued that applicants for jobs at Terra Nova national park be interviewed by Mr. Carson Stroud of Glovertown. Instructions have been issued that Mr. Stroud's advice be sought. Terra Nova is a long distance from the nearest office of the national employment service, and advice from officers of this service is, for practical purposes, unavailable.

We have made it a point to ask the advice of all those who are qualified in those areas and who know the needs of the people and the local skills. An example in Cape Breton is that we have accepted advice from local members of the clergy. The department welcomes recommendations from persons who are well qualified to make them. As a matter of interest I might mention that I just recently received a recommendation from the hon. member who asked this question, and I at once asked the department to consider the person recommended just as soon as a suitable vacancy occurred. I did this because I knew the hon. member would not make such a recommendation unless he knew the person was well qualified and in need of the work.

C.B.C. SATELLITE TRANSMITTERS

Question No. 24—Mr. Benidickson:

1. At what locations is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation providing any transmission of T.V. programs by satellite transmitters?

2. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation commenced construction of any such satellite transmitters? If so, at what locations?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the answer to the first question is none. With regard to the second question, the corporation has not commenced construction of any television satellite transmitters, but is currently carrying out studies and surveys on proposals for satellites, or relay stations working by connection to the microwave network or by television recordings, at Corner Brook, Liverpool-Shelburne-Yarmouth, Moncton (French), Kenora, St. Boniface (French), Trail.

MINAKI-KENORA ROAD—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

Question No. 25—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Has the federal government been asked by the government of Ontario to contribute to the construction of a road between Minaki and Kenora?

2. Has the federal government made a contribution to costs of road construction since February 10, 1958, between Kenora and Minaki? If so, what was the amount of the contribution?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question, no specific request has been received from the government of the province of Ontario relative to the construction of a road from Minaki to Kenora. The province has, however, indicated its interest in obtaining assistance under the roads to resources program for a road leading south from Minaki toward route 17.

Mr. Benidickson: Which is the same thing.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The hon. member, knowing the district as well as I do, knows it is really the same thing. I should also point out that negotiations between the government of Ontario and the federal government are still under way concerning a roads to resources program in that province, and it is possible that when the details of this program have been agreed upon it may include roads in the region in which the hon. member is interested. No decision, however, has yet been reached. I should also mention that under the forest access roads program, which began January 2 and ends June 30, the province of Ontario has been constructing certain forest access roads in the Minaki region. These roads are not, of course, part of any provincial highway system.

In reply to the second question I should point out that between January 2 and March 31, 1958, the federal government's share of the cost of forest access road work in the Minaki area was $24,421.75.

Mr. Benidickson: Why did it stop on March 31?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Final payments will not be made known to us until the end of this month, and at that time I will give the hon. member a full answer. But under the roads to resources agreement, no payments have been made because no agreement has yet been signed.

WELLAND CANAL—FINES ON FOREIGN SHIPS

Question No. 26—Mr. Fisher:

1. Have the Welland canal authorities fined any foreign ships for breaking canal regulations since May 1, 1958?

2. If so, what foreign ships, when, and for what breaches?

3. Did these ships have pilots? If so, what were their names, addresses, and qualifications?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The answer to this question is that no foreign ships have been fined by the Welland canal authorities for breaking canal regulations since May 1, 1958.

REMOVAL OF U.S. PILOT, CARDINAL, ONT.

Question No. 27—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did a Department of Transport official have an American pilot removed from a ship at Cardinal, Ontario, during May, 1958?

2. If so, did the American authorities make any protest about this occurrence?

3. What form did this protest take and what reply was given by what Canadian authorities?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is that an unlicensed pilot was superseded by a licensed pilot at Cardinal, Ontario, on May 11, 1958, as provided by the Canada Shipping Act.

Regarding parts 2 and 3 of the question, the answer is no.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

OPEN PLACEMENT IMMIGRATION

Question No. 21—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. What are the occupations for which immigrants are admitted for open placement at the present time?

2. How many open placement immigrants have been admitted to Canada since January 1, 1958?

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES DIRECTORS

Question No. 23—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited any contractual relationship with the government or government corporations?

2. Who are the directors of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited?

3. Are any directors of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited directors of Quebec Natural Gas Corporation?

4. If so, which of them?

PROHIBITED EXPORTS TO COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Question No. 54—Mr. Argue:

What commodities and materials are on the prohibited list for export to (a) the U.S.S.R.; (b) China; (c) Bulgaria; (d) Czechoslovakia; (e) Hungary; (f) Poland; (g) Roumania; (h) Yugoslavia; (i) East Germany?

CANADIAN PURCHASES IN U. K.

Question No. 77—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. What purchases have been made by the government of Canada in the United Kingdom, since June 25, 1957?

2. What purchases were made by the government of Canada in the United Kingdom for the 12 months' period prior to June 25, 1957?

GAGETOWN CAMP, N.B.—EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 103—Mr. Michaud:

1. How many persons were employed in connection with construction work at Gagetown camp, New Brunswick, on June 1, 1957?

2. How many persons were employed on this work as of June 1, 1958?

Motions for Papers

INDIAN AFFAIRS—FIRES ON RESERVES

Question No. 113—Mr. Howard:

1. In British Columbia during the years 1956, 1957 and 1958 to date, have any fires occurred on Indian reserves or to schools, hospitals or other buildings on Indian reserves or to such buildings which are used by Indians and which are near Indian reserves?

2. If so, (a) how many and upon which dates did such fires occur; (b) on or near which reserves were they; (c) how many fatalities, if any, occurred to Indians as a result of each fire?

3. Have any instructions been issued by the Indian affairs branch to Indian superintendents or to others regarding measures to be taken for fire prevention and protection?

4. If so, (a) what were the instructions; (b) when were they issued; (c) what developments arose out of such instructions?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

HEALTH INSURANCE—CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Motion No. 14—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged between the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the ministers of finance and labour or any officials of the said departments with any minister of any provincial government or officials thereof in the matter of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, since January 1, 1958.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this with the hon. member and pointed out that to give the complete information requested would entail quite an expenditure of money. I have also suggested to him that if there are any particular items of correspondence we would be very pleased to have them provided.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the minister is quite correct in saying that he did discuss the matter with me. Unfortunately he did not fully understand my immediate reaction. I thought we had agreed that correspondence and documents exchanged between the minister and/or the ministers of finance and labour, or any correspondence with any members of the provincial governments, would be passed as an order, but we would not require exchanges between the officials of the various departments of government.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, that is quite all right.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion as amended in accordance with the agreement between the mover and the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Michaud.]

WAREHOUSE ON FEDERAL WHARF, LEVIS, QUE

Motion No. 18—Mr. Bourget:

For a copy of all telegrams, correspondence and other documents exchanged since July 1, 1957, between the federal government and any of its departments or agencies and the municipal councils of Quebec, Levis, Lauzon, and other public bodies and persons, relating to the request made by Industrial Freighting Limited for the construction of a warehouse on the federal government wharf at Levis, east of the landing place used by Levis Ferry Limited.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—REPORTED REQUEST TO UNITED NATIONS FOR EMERGENCY POLICE FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would care to comment on the reported request made to the United Nations by the head of the Lebanese government for an emergency police force to be sent to that country to patrol its borders with Syria.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the uncertain situation in the Middle East, and in Lebanon in particular, and the fact that Mr. Hammarskjold is there at the present time on a mission on behalf of the United Nations, I think it would be untimely to make any statement at this time. However, as soon as there is any degree of certainty respecting the situation and the nature of the alleged request has been made clear, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will make a statement.

RUSSIA—SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS FOR CANADIAN EMBASSY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he has any comments to make about published reports on the character of the security arrangements being made with respect to the Canadian embassy in Moscow?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have nothing to observe in that regard except that we have learned that additional police protection has been offered by the Soviet government.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED FEATHERBEDDING BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the serious implications of featherbedding and oversecurity of tenure in the civil service which have been raised by the statements of the head of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in stressing why his organization was able to fire staff and reduce its budget, would the minister call senior officials of the civil service associations and the head of the civil service commission before a commons committee to present the civil service side of the matter?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): I will take that question as notice.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR

BRUSSELS—REPORTED RESIGNATION OF CHAPERONE OF STUDENT GUIDES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question or, in his absence, the acting minister. The question is based on a story published in the Toronto Star on June 24, to the effect that the Canadian pavilion at the world's trade fair at Brussels suffers from lack of money, lack of administration and lack of morale.

My question is, has the minister, as alleged in the newspaper story, curtly accepted the resignation of Madame Valmore Bienvenue, chaperone of the university students who are acting as guides at the Canadian pavilion, and would the minister comment on the whole situation?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will see that this is brought to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce so that a reply can be given later.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister tell us whether or not he has received the letter alleged to have been written to him by the guides, according to the same story?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I do not know what the story is, but I know that this morning a letter was received by me written by certain university students who affixed their signatures, in respect of this matter.

Mr. McIlraith: Will the Prime Minister tell us what action is being taken on the matter?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As my hon. friend will realize, having received the letter this morning and having had a cabinet meeting as well this morning, there has not been any time to give any consideration whatever to this question. As I recall the letter, it refers to the resignation of Madame Valmore Bienvenue, and in general to the matters to which allusion has been made by the hon. member for Levis.

FINANCE

LACK OF APPLICATION TO QUEBEC OF GIFT TAX EXEMPTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In making the proposal to permit a husband to give his wife, or vice versa, up to $10,000 as a tax-free gift, did the government give consideration to the fact it would not benefit a taxpayer in Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Does not the hon. member think that matter would more properly be brought up in the budget debate? It concerns an item about which an announcement was made in the budget speech, and which will be under discussion during the consideration of the budget resolution?

Mr. Chevrier: The matter is of some urgency, and the resolutions may not be debated for another ten days.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is no urgency so far as anybody is concerned until the matter has been decided by the house. It seems to me it would be more appropriately dealt with at that time.

FRUIT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR SUPPORT PRICE FOR RASPBERRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the extremely low market price of 6 cents per pound paid to British Columbia raspberry producers, will the minister consider bringing raspberries under the price stabilization act to enable these producers to take off their present crop?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I am very pleased to see the interest shown in the British Columbia raspberry growers by the hon. member for Mackenzie River. I think perhaps he has been back in the northern fastness too long, because this matter was dealt with last week. Assistance was provided under the stabilization act for the raspberry growers in British Columbia which will ensure that they will be paid a minimum of 9 cents per pound for the poorest type of raspberry which is produced there. I should perhaps add that of course more will be paid for the better varieties.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the same principle apply when floor prices are established for B.C. tree fruits for the 1957 crop?

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member, by saying "the same principle," means the principle of doing the best we can in order to improve the position of the fruit growers and assist other farmers of this country, certainly that is the case.

OIL

SUGGESTED MEETING TO DISCUSS GREATER CANADIAN MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I address a question to the Prime Minister, arising out of the continued cut-backs in Canadian oil production. Is a meeting scheduled between the government and the heads of the integrated Canadian oil companies to see whether a larger part of the Canadian market may be made available for Canadian oil production?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such projected meeting.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a supplementary question: whether any consideration has recently been given by the government to the advantages which might accrue from the pipe-lining or the shipment of crude to the Montreal area?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That question is always receiving attention and consideration as between the experts in various departments of the government and the provincial representatives. When a decision is arrived at, the house, of course, will be made aware of it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED INABILITY OF CANADA TO OBTAIN U.S. NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Canadian government has made representations to the United States government concerning amendments to the United States atomic energy act, approved by the Senate in Washington on Monday, which would prevent Canada from obtaining United States nuclear weapons of any kind, and would make it illegal for the United States even to supply the information to enable Canada to design such weapons for use by our navy, army or air force?

[Mr. Harkness.]

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the Leader of the Opposition for having sent a copy of the question he has just addressed to me. This I received at 1.45 p.m., and as the answer will involve several departments I will take the question as notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF ELECTIONS ACT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I ask the Secretary of State a question of which notice has been given. In view of the fact that there are five public bills on the order paper indicating desired changes in the Canada Elections Act, in addition to two notices of motions by government party private members indicating a similar desire, will the minister undertake to recommend to the house that the Canada Elections Act be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections in order that proposed amendments may be studied by that committee?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. In view of the very heavy program of legislation on the agenda for this session I can only say at this time that the government has given consideration to this problem, and intends to refer the study of the Canada Elections Act to the committee at a later date.

TRANSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): With reference to the points regarding pilotage which were raised yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Port Arthur, I believe I can now offer some clarification.

We are contemplating certain amendments to the shipping act which would give us the necessary authority to deal with pilotage matters within Canadian waters on the great lakes. The United States also has certain legislation pending in this regard, and it would therefore be premature to discuss the situation in further detail until we know exactly what legislation will be approved by the United States.

I can, however, state that there have been several discussions between Canadian and United States authorities with respect to this matter. Each is fully aware of the views of the other and it is expected that satisfactory reciprocal arrangements can be worked out. Although the exact situation with regard to pilotage requirements in Canadian waters and in United States waters may not be necessarily identical, provision would be made for each to recognize the licence or certificate of competency issued by the other authority, and for continuing liaison in the matter of technical standards and requirements.

With respect to the international section of the seaway, our jurisdiction would apply only to Canadian waters, of course, and here again while we now have in existence a pilotage system covering this portion of the St. Lawrence river up to lake Ontario, if the United States should impose any new requirements in regard to United States waters in this section of the river we would of course have to make appropriate reciprocal arrangements with them along the lines of the foregoing.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the minister as a supplementary question if he thinks it is possible to have mandatory pilotage on the United States side, for instance, and voluntary pilotage on the Canadian side of the international section?

Mr. Hees: That is something we will have to work out when we discover what the United States is going to do.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Could the minister inform the house of the dates when these discussions between the United States and Canadian officials took place?

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker. There have been several discussions in the past few months, and I do not see any particular merit in the question of the hon. member as to the dates of those discussions. They were informal but very full and useful discussions.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I had a supplementary question as to whether the Canadian government had made representations during the last few months, and the date given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was March 20. I was seeking to find out whether more recent representations had been made.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, we have made no representations. The discussions between our authorities and those in the United States have taken place as a means of getting information, on both sides, as to what each country had in mind. We have made no representations.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

LEAD AND ZINC—PROPOSED GLOBAL PLAN FOR MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I address a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. In doing so may I say that I have not been able to give him notice as early as I would have liked—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have something quite legitimate to explain. My messenger came back five times this morning because the minister was not in his House of Commons office, and I feel that some arrangement should be made so that a minister will get a question in good time when we send him notice.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Herridge: I am making a suggestion which I feel is to the advantage of the ministers.

Mr. Pallett: About as useful as your other suggestions.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind hon. members that the hon. member for Kootenay West has the floor.

Mr. Herridge: Has the minister been informed of and has he given consideration to the possibilities and implications of the proposed global plan to regulate the flow of lead and zinc to world markets, supported by the state department of the United States? If so, could the minister inform the house of the government's attitude to this proposal?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will bring this question to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce for an answer at a later time.

TRANSFER OF CF-100 AIRCRAFT TO BELGIUM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): May I ask a question of the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce based on a press dispatch in the Toronto Globe and Mail of June 25, 1958, but before doing so I would mention that I had a somewhat similar difficulty to that related by the hon. member for Kootenay West with respect to notice. In view of that fact, perhaps this question could be treated as notice and dealt with tomorrow.

Would the minister give the house the cost to Canada of the transfer of CF-100 jet aircraft to Belgium, and would he also indicate what part of this cost is included in the export figures for the month of May which were yesterday released to the press?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): On behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I will take that question as notice.

AUTOMOBILES—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY U.S. IN CANADIAN EXPORTS TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question, notice of which was sent to his office just before noon, as to whether or not he can enlighten the house as to the nature of the preliminary conversations, and on what level they were held, mentioned in the answer made yesterday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce when asked whether or not representations had been made to the government of the United States with regard to the attempt on the part of someone in Canada to sell Canadian-manufactured automobiles to a country in Asia.

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. In view of the reply that was made yesterday by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, he has undertaken to answer this question. In his absence I will accept this as notice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. My question was: what was the nature of the conversations to date, and on what level were they conducted? What the Minister of Trade and Commerce undertook to do was to give consideration as to whether or not representations would be made from government to government in the matter.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I have nothing to add to my answer.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON REVISION OF TERMS OF UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): May I ask the Minister of Finance if the government has yet received the report of the royal commission on the revision of the terms of union with Newfoundland?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

(Translation):

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED NEW POLICY REGARDING APPLICATIONS FOR EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question—I thank hon. members for this applause. I see that our Cerberus is properly minding his job in this house, keeping tab of his colleagues who are present and of those who are away. Personal freedom is such a small thing, after all, or the respect of—

Some hon. Members: Question! Question!

Mr. Denis: I should like to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) a question. I am sorry I failed to give him notice that I would do so, but as it concerns a matter of which I was not informed until this morning, it was then too late.

Is it true that the civil service commission no longer accepts applications for employment unless there is a vacancy.

If so, could the Secretary of State comment on this subject? We have made recommendations to the civil service commission on behalf of persons who wish to work in a post office or elsewhere, but their application forms were returned with the statement that no more applications were being entertained, for the reason I have mentioned.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): I am not aware of the situation referred to by my hon. friend, but after due inquiry, I shall be pleased to reply later.

(Text):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN METHOD OF DEALING WITH DIVORCE QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): May I ask the Minister of Justice if it is the intention of the government, either at this session or during other sessions of this parliament, to take the necessary steps to remove divorce cases from this House of Commons?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have not made any plans in that connection.

CANADIAN PACIFIC STEAMSHIPS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I address a question to the Acting Minister of Labour. I regret not having been able to give her notice, but I am sure that in view of the seriousness of the situation she has her fingers on the pulse of this matter.

Has the minister received any report from industrial inquiry commissioner Taylor with respect to the dispute between the S.I.U. and the C.P.R. on the coast of British Columbia?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the final report has not yet come in and I have no report to make to the house at this time, but I constantly hope that an amicable solution will be reached.

Mr. Howard: When is it to be expected that the commissioner may be able to give us some details of his experiences out there on this trip?

Mrs. Fairclough: I believe the commissioner makes just one report, that is his final report, the report for publication. I do not anticipate that it will be received within the immediately foreseeable future because I hope the report he will make will be to the effect that he has been successful in promoting a settlement of the dispute.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister say whether the government is prepared to follow the example set by the government of British Columbia in its dealings with the Black Ball ferries, in that it might consider taking over the operation of the Canadian Pacific ships until a settlement has been reached?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is asking for a declaration of policy, and he can hardly expect his question to be answered extemporaneously.

Mr. Regier: In that case may I reword my question. Has the government given any consideration to the adoption of the course I have mentioned?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am not prepared to answer that question at the present time.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder if the house could be brought up to date on the progress being made toward the signing of an agreement for the construction of the South Saskatchewan river project, and told what consideration is being given to the Saskatchewan application for a loan for power development.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member and the house that excellent progress is being made in regard to negotiations leading, we expect, in the very near future to the signing of an agreement.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might have an answer to the question concerning what progress has been made with regard to the Saskatchewan application for the loan for power development. This question might be answered by the Minister for Northern Affairs and National Resources. Perhaps I might ask the Prime Minister whether such an application is before the government and, if so, what consideration is being given to it?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an application was made in that connection, and there has been an exchange of ideas in reference to that application. I think a final decision will be made in a letter to be transmitted to the premier of Saskatchewan within the next couple of days. In so far, however, as the request for financial assistance is concerned, whether it is granted or not I am sure I can say, with the Minister of Agriculture, that we expect to secure shortly the execution of that agreement to which the people of Saskatchewan have looked forward for so many years.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 24, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. R. S. MacLellan (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last evening when the house adjourned I was speaking of the necessity of establishing industry in the Atlantic provinces to bring up the standard of living of our people. Our provincial governments are doing everything possible, and providing every incentive they can, to attract industrial investment. However, our geographical location is such that we must face the stark fact that an industrial venture is not as likely to succeed in our region as in other more central areas of the nation.

The central manufacturer can look to a large consuming public in his own province. When he has supplied that market for his primary profits he can sell east and west. The east coast manufacturer selling to a small population cannot meet primary costs out of local sales. From the outset he must find a market in Quebec and Ontario and farther west. Not only does this mean higher transportation costs, it means higher selling, accounting and collecting costs added to the price of the goods. A sales force far from the factory is more expensive, and less efficient and productive. The maritime industrialist, to provide delivery service in competition, must warehouse his products and his repair parts over a wide area far from home.

At the same time, Atlantic industry can be at a disadvantage even in its home market. A factory producing for our local consumption must of necessity be small. Goods manufactured in much larger quantities in central Canadian factories can be produced at a substantially lower per unit cost. The larger factory can afford extensive advertising and promotion of its goods. It can establish a brand name to catch the shopper's eye. Then these goods take advantage of maritime freight rate assistance to appear in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick or the other provinces at a lower cost than we can produce them. The maritime industrialist is pierced by both swords. He is at a disadvantage trading at home and at a disadvantage in the Canadian market at large.

We do not have too good a proposition to offer an industrialist who would like to establish in eastern Canada. Industry will settle where it has the best chance of profit. In our present position we have great difficulty in coaxing industry to our towns and cities. Every year we see more of the few manufacturing and processing industries we have closing down, and very few new ones starting. Every community has the scar of a local enterprise which was purchased by larger competition and shut down, or which could no longer stand the pressure of competition as central Canadian factories grew larger and could produce cheaper.

Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic region must have a comprehensive special program which will assist us to help ourselves. Grants in aid and subventions are futile to meet the basic problem. The Atlantic program must be generous and far reaching, and if necessary a drastic departure from some of the past concepts of national policy.

I submit that a program of Atlantic industrial development should provide the following incentives to attract industry to our provinces: First there should be a special corporate tax concession to Atlantic industry, particularly to manufacturing and processing industries.

Because of our geographical position a manufacturer is likely to make less profits. To make up for lower profits the corporate tax rate should be reduced to equalize his profit with that which he would earn in a more favoured location. In addition to this equalization concession, new industry should be offered an extra tax bonus for the first 10 years of operation, while it consolidates. I believe that in some distressed areas of the United States such concessions are made to encourage the settlement of industry. The island of Puerto Rico, because it levies no corporate tax, is building up a flourishing industrial complex.

Recently the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources spoke of the advantage that Nova Scotia, with its great coal reserves, could offer to a big steel industry which wished to capitalize on Atlantic iron ore deposits. With all due respect, I fear that without some extra profit incentive a steel producer would prefer to transport iron ore and coal many miles for the advantage of manufacturing close to his market. A big steel industry could be the salvation of Nova Scotia and the maritimes. I am afraid that in the ordinary course of affairs we may never see it. But give such an industry a tax concession and it will start tomorrow looking for a site.

Second, we should have such transportation assistance as will allow our goods to enter the Canadian market without a transportation penalty. At the same time, freight rate assistance on goods coming into the maritimes should not provide cheap transportation for products competitive with those being manufactured or processed in the Atlantic region.

Third, where foreign industry wishes to relocate in the Atlantic region, machinery and tools presently in use in the industry at its foreign site should be permitted entry to the Atlantic area free of tariff.

Fourth, as suggested by the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, where possible defence orders and other federal purchases should give a preference to manufacturers in the Atlantic area.

Mr. Speaker, we hope this government will provide to the Atlantic region the equality of opportunity we have always sought. What does "equality of opportunity" mean? It means that we should have money enough to pave our highways and to build schools. It means that our coal should have the subventions it must have to meet the competition of foreign fuels in our natural markets. And to this extent this government has given Nova Scotia and the other Atlantic provinces more Canadian equality than any other government since confederation.

But "equality of opportunity" must mean more than that. It must mean the chance to produce goods, and to sell them on a footing equal to that of other Canadians. It must mean a chance to enjoy a gross product equal to that of the national average.

At the moment there is a crisis in the Nova Scotian coal industry, not an unusual situation I am sorry to say. The crisis reflects the position of many of our industries and businesses, and is the direct result of all those years of the negative policy of the former administration. I am confident that the present government will not continue that policy. There can be no solution to the problem of our coal industry in subventions alone. The only worth-while solution is to assist the development of a maritime industrial life that will use that coal. And if coal miners must be displaced because of insufficient markets, then other local industries should be provided to employ them.

I am confident that this government will attack the Atlantic problem realistically, with a comprehensive program to help provide an economic climate which will attract industry to the Atlantic region. I submit, sir, that by so doing more could be accomplished in the next 10 years to provide Atlantic equal opportunity and self-sufficiency than has been achieved in the 91 years since confederation. The Atlantic provinces need federal expenditures. But above all we need industrial investment that only special and unusual federal tax consideration can bring to us.

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, "a protectionist and deficit budget, unprecedented in peace time, with no appreciable tax relief".

"The Progressive Conservative government's first full budget is offering Canadians hardly anything in the way of tax cuts, and forecasts record government spending."

Both those comments, Mr. Speaker, sum up the reaction of most Canadian newspapers, last week, to the first full budget brought down in this house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). A deficit, hardly any tax cuts, and the prospect of all-time high expenditures. Who would have thought our hon. friends opposite capable of such a performance?

When our hon. friends sat in opposition, they never tired of repeating that, if ever they came to power, they would cut taxes not by 100 or 200 million, but by 500 million dollars. But, what happened last Tuesday? Not only did the minister admit his inability to reduce taxes, but was compelled to announce a record breaking peacetime deficit.

"Every right-thinking Canadian should feel concern at this complete failure to reduce the crushing burden of corporation taxation, especially when industrial profits are dropping.

"The best remedy for business, for the individual taxpayer and for this country's economy would have been some sort of encouragement, in the form of substantial tax reductions which would have been far less inflationary than the belated effects of higher government spending."

Those words were spoken by the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, commenting on last Tuesday's budget.

About the excise tax on cars, the president of the Canadian Automobile Association said:

> Only the complete abolition of that tax would have removed the long standing injustice of this obsolete, unwarranted tax.

This comment, by the way is an almost verbatim echo of statements made by the Prime Minister prior to June 10, 1957.

Quite obviously, Mr. Speaker, the government has finally come to the realization that it cannot have its cake and eat it too.

About customs tariff and related subjects, the hon. minister, in his budget speech, pointed out,—and to some extent rightly,—the need for meeting the legitimate requirements of Canadian industry, for protecting Canadian producers and workers against certain unfair trade practices. However, Mr. Speaker, while the hon. minister soft pedalled the whole thing, the fact remains that this trend toward a growingly protectionist policy must make us pause and put us on our guard.

This is hardly the time for the government to introduce protectionist measures, however trifling. The minister may well disclaim any attempt to bring down a protectionist budget, but the facts are there, and cannot be disputed. His denials lose much of their force when his budget speech intimates that similar provisions are being considered regarding other imports.

We are hardly in a position to adopt measures of this kind, especially when we consider that, more than ever, we have to rely on foreign markets for the sale of a major part of our forest, mine and other products. Recourse to higher tariffs might entail dire consequences for Canada. It would be a mistake to imagine that affected countries will overlook such measures.

In the field of monetary policy, the minister made much of the fact that more capital is available, that banks now grant any reasonable request for commercial and personal credit and that interest rates are somewhat lower than they have been.

But how long will it thus be easier to borrow? That remains to be seen. Are inflationary trends completely out of the picture? Are not production costs and prices in Canada still going up? In both cases, it is quite doubtful that the minister can reply to those questions in the affirmative.

Then again, in 1958-1959 the government will have to borrow the fabulous amount of $2,350 million! Obviously, to float so huge a loan, the government will have to appeal to all who have money put aside, to individuals, to lending institutions and corporations. The minister soon realized the magnitude of the problem because, just after his budget speech, he hastened to ask the stockbrokers association and its members to help the government in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will succeed in his attempts. However, the day after his budget speech, newspapers reported that government bonds were already going down. Today, they are reported down a few points.

I hope the minister will do his best to call upon the public, and all people who have savings, even if he has to pay a higher interest rate to induce them to buy government bonds.

If the government experiences difficulty in floating those loans in Canada, will it seek help elsewhere, on foreign markets for instance? We may rightly doubt that. It would then be left to the Bank of Canada to issue new money, and we may ask ourselves if such a measure would not be inflationary.

I am now coming to the premium on the Canadian dollar. In 1950, the government of the day took all necessary steps to allow our dollar to fluctuate freely. In 1952, I did not fail to protest against the high premium on the Canadian dollar although at the time it was only about half of what it is today.

From 1952 to 1956 inclusive, the average premium on the Canadian dollar over the U.S. dollar fluctuated as follows: in 1952, it was 2.1 per cent; in 1953, 1.65 per cent, and in 1954, 1955 and 1956, it was respectively 2.65, 1.4 and 1.6 per cent. In 1957, the annual average for the premium reached a record rate of 4.1 per cent, and afterwards fell to 1 per cent for a short time. On June 21 last, the premium on the Canadian dollar was about 3¾ per cent.

In last Tuesday's speech, the hon. Minister of Finance spoke at quite some length about the value of the Canadian dollar as compared to the American dollar. However, he entirely forgot to mention that it was within his power to take the necessary steps to stabilize the value of our dollar.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the minister did not announce that his government would take the necessary steps to completely remove the premium on the Canadian dollar in relation to U.S. currency, or at least keep it to a minimum. Against this course, the minister held the view that:

> —some advantages of the kind would accrue to certain industries but at the same time we would lose other advantages which are assured us through a high rate of exchange.

And the minister went on to state:

> The weakening of our rate of exchange would be unfavourable to us in our exchange relations and, to that extent, we would pay more for our imports and get less for our exports.

Such arguments deserve consideration. They have serious implications. But what do they mean exactly in so far as our export trade and our industry are concerned? There is no need to be an expert to know that when our dollar is at a premium, our export trade suffers and our manufacturers have to face hard competition.

Whether we export wood, pulp, newsprint, copper, nickel, aluminum, lead, zinc or any other goods, processed or not, prices are quoted in terms of foreign currency and more often than not, in terms of U.S. dollars.

Of course, the minister would be right if we were in a position to set for our exports prices based on the value of the Canadian dollar. However, this is not the case, and the minister is well aware of it.

For our Canadian manufacturers, an increase in value of our dollar has the same effect as a lowering of tariffs, if there are any tariffs. Importers benefit from the higher value of the Canadian dollar, at the expense of our industries. It is as simple as that.

I must admit that if I am so utterly opposed to the fact that our dollar is at a premium over the American dollar, it is because the industries of my area are adversely affected by that state of affairs, beginning with our gold mines which have to accept lower prices. The same holds true for the lumber industry and the base metals industry.

It must be admitted also that there is no simple formula to set matters right in this regard and that we would not always be well advised to reverse trends which prove to be persistent. The Minister of Finance has emphasized that point. However, the government can, to a certain extent, hold that premium on the Canadian dollar at a much lower level than is at present the case. In such circumstances, the government must see to it that steps are taken to lighten the load on our export trade.

I was very happy to hear the Minister of Finance's statement with regard to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. This 25 per cent increase is certainly welcome, and the retroactive effect which the government intends giving to that legislation will offset, to a certain extent, the considerable losses which the industry has suffered because of the premium on the Canadian dollar.

This government program, involving the amendments which I have just mentioned, was welcomed by everyone in the gold mining industry, including the miners themselves, who derive their livelihood and that of their families from that industry. The government is making no mistake in accepting, in part at least, the representations of the leaders of the industry itself and those of the municipalities which quite recently sent an impressive delegation to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois).

I do not mean to act the part of a chronic grouch, but I must say I am somewhat disappointed, having honestly believed that the government would be a little more generous. The government should have gone a bit further. It did not have to fear being accused of setting a precedent in raising the gold mining assistance to 50 per cent, for instance, instead of 25 per cent as it proposes because, for the year 1955, the Canadian government paid $16,225,000 in subsidies to gold mines.

Nor do I propose to dwell over-long on this topic because there will be further opportunity to deal with it when the bill introducing proposed amendments comes before us. However, if it is true that one must strike while the iron is hot, I should now like to make a suggestion which should please the government.

For many years, mine operators, the authorities of the municipalities concerned and, indeed, anyone who has anything to do with gold mining have been saying that amendments to the act should extend over more years. It has become a habit or a rule that every time the duration of the act is extended, it is never extended for more than two years.

It is true that the coming amendments will be retroactive to the beginning of 1958 but it will none the less become ineffective on December 31, 1960, a little more than two years from now. Why not extend the act to December 31, 1961 or, better still, to December 31, 1962? It would not cost more to the government and would be so helpful to the industry and municipalities concerned. First, it would allow better planning of development and exploration work by mine specialists, and of course this would lead to more economical working of the mines. Secondly, municipalities could administer themselves more efficiently, more economically and, moreover, capital investments required in this field and in others could be forecast more intelligently.

In the past, Liberal governments have shown generosity with respect to gold mining assistance. The hon. Minister of Finance, who was then sitting on this side of the house, used to repeat that more should be done for the industry. He now has all the freedom he wants to implement what he was then advocating, and I do not see how he can refuse to implement that request that the house approve an extension period of three or four years, instead of having the act remain in force for only two years. The enactment of such an amendment was urged by the Canadian Metal Mining Association and the municipalities concerned.

The expansion of the mining industry which was substantial between 1945 and 1957 unfortunately shows a marked decline during the last twelve months. It is therefore only due to the increased production of uranium, iron ore and oil products that the total value of our mining production in 1957 was substantially higher than in 1956. The demand for our base metals especially is slight and, of course, prices are much lower. It therefore follows that the marginal mines must close their doors, and that a number of others are forced or will be forced to reduce their output considerably.

We can only hope that this slackening of our mining production will not continue. I read in the newspapers of last week that the only base metal mine in New Brunswick which had succeeded up to now in maintaining its operations had finally been forced to shut down. In Nova Scotia, some 9,000 miners must take an enforced holiday because of an accumulated surplus of 1,400,000 tons of coal of which the companies have not been able to dispose rapidly. In my area, the employees of one base metal mine had to accept a wage cut to keep their jobs. We sincerely hope that this difficult situation will stop there and that prosperity will return to the mining industry.

In all mining areas in the country, prospection, exploration and development work is slowing down. Of course, this slowing down process is similar to that which prevails elsewhere. Budgets normally earmarked for those types of works are much lower than they used to be. However, in spite of the present adverse conditions, one must not be led to believe that the mining industry is faced with bankruptcy.

Industrial leaders, those who are more particularly interested in the development of our mineral resources—and fortunately they are numerous—are optimistic and they realize that, in that field, the future of Canada is well-nigh unlimited.

In fact, in my province, in the districts of Wabush, mount Wright and mount Reed on the north coast, considerable work is now in process with a view to the development of iron deposits in those areas. In the course of the next three years, more than $400 million will be spent in the operation of those mines. In the district of Mattagami, the Noranda and associated companies will engage in considerable diamond-drilling to test a recent sensational discovery in that area.

In Ontario, Manitoba and in the western provinces, though prospection has somewhat slackened, large capital investments are contemplated for the next few years in order to develop large mineral deposits of all kinds.

On May 21 last, during the discussion of the address, I said that Canada could not fail to get an ever-growing share in the world demand for metals and minerals, and I maintained that Canadian producers could put their trust in long term deals. I added that, in the meantime, everything would have to be done to keep our mining industry in as good a shape as possible. If I stress this point again today, it is because the government, more than ever, is supporting an industry which is bound to become the most significant in this country, in the very near future.

If the government cannot cure all the ills from which the mining industry is suffering from time to time, it certainly can alleviate the difficulties by which its expansion is slowed down. First of all, it can do so through sound fiscal measures. Here is a simple example of what can be done by the government to lighten the burden of some mines that find themselves in a very special situation. I have dealt with this during the debate on the address. On May 21 last, I called the attention of the minister on a request forwarded to him by the Canadian Metal Mining Association and I said this:

> Another step which should be taken by the government at this time is the introduction of a measure to ease the situation for some of the base metal mines by amending the regulations granting a three year tax exemption to a new mine, in a way which would make it possible for a mine to elect to defer its tax exemption for 1958 and to carry it over to the end of the normal 36 months' period. This question was brought to the attention of the government by the Canadian Metal Mining Association and in proposing such an amendment the association submitted the following argument.

And then, I quoted what the association said:

> Some dozen mining companies, operating within the first three years of commercial production, find themselves in the position of having to decide whether or not to close operations as a result of the fall in base metal prices. It is felt that such an amendment as proposed would induce such companies to remain in operation and to retain the services of their employees at a time of seriously mounting unemployment throughout Canada.

And this, Mr. Speaker, without the government having to lose a single cent. It would be sufficient to extend by twelve months the period during which a mine can benefit from that legislation which has done so much good to our industry and which has not only allowed but encouraged exploration work and the production of huge quantities of metal. In addition, it has meant some revenue for the government in the form of personal income tax and corporation income tax. The Minister of Finance made no mention of it in his budget. He possibly thinks that it is a matter of minor importance. It may be also that he intends to introduce an amendment to the act. In my opinion, he would make a mistake by doing nothing. I repeat that it would not deprive the government of any revenue. It is simply a matter of delaying for a period of twelve months the payment of taxes by mines that have benefited from an exemption during a period of 36 months.

Secondly, the government could also avoid the adoption of measures of protection which could incite our best customers to retaliate when they feel that they have been wronged by a policy such as, for example, higher tariffs. This is very important, for Canada is particularly vulnerable to any reaction along that line on the part of the nations which are normally our best customers.

Thirdly, by increasing the subsidies, if necessary. Nobody likes to receive subsidies. No one dares insist on getting some from the government. However, when it is necessary, the government should not hesitate to increase these subsidies.

The coal mines of Nova Scotia are in a very serious situation. In fact 9,000 men will have to take enforced vacations until the end of September. It is possible that some of these mines will close down indefinitely. There is food for thought in that, especially in view of the fact that prior to June 10, 1957, and prior to March 31, 1958, the present government had given a very firm commitment to the people of Nova Scotia, promising that there would be no work stoppages in the mines during the following months. However, these people now see that, in spite, perhaps, of its good intentions, the government has been in no position to carry out this very solemn promise.

There would also be another way for the government to help the mining industry in a more material way, and it is this.

The government could also do a great deal for the industry through the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. It could, for instance, accelerate research, geological surveys, map making and geophysical surveys.

Finally, it could put within the reach of producers more economical processing methods, facilitate the sale of their products by finding new uses for those products and also put within the reach of prospectors and exploration companies more advanced and detailed basic data. In this field, it would be advisable to supplement the capacity of the provinces which, more often than not, do not have the technological facilities of the federal government.

Professional officers and technicians of the department do a great job with the budget at their disposal. It would be advisable to raise considerably the amount of money voted each year for the department of mines and technical surveys.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) not only on his budget but on his presentation of it. It seems to me that this budget was presented in about as clear a way as I ever heard a budget presented. Certainly, it was clear to those who are not initiated in the complexities of finance. I notice that no name has been given to this budget, no catch-name. It is true the financial spokesman for the opposition tried to introduce the phrase "the blue budget". It did not seem to me it caught on, either here in the house or with the press. Speaking for myself, Mr. Speaker, I rather favour this phrase "the blue budget", because it is certainly my favourite colour. It is a clean-cut colour. It is an accommodating colour in that it suits everybody. It seems to me that the blue of the sky certainly always augurs well for fine weather ahead. I am quite happy to call this "the blue budget".

One reason for my approval of this budget is that it seems to me it has corrected a great many injustices that do not particularly affect powerful people but that affect the little people who perhaps have not got pressure groups to speak for them. The first injustice that was corrected was concerned with the exemption of the estates for widows. In the past there was a $50,000 exemption on an estate of $50,000 or less, and if the estate was more than that were was a $20,000 exemption for the widow. This seemed to me to be a gross injustice, and now it has been corrected. There is a true exemption of $60,000 for a widow, plus $10,000 for every child under 21. I know the minister has received many suggestions with regard to this matter of amending the estates act, but I believe that one brief that has been presented to him from the national council of women contains a clause which it seems to me has merit. Perhaps other organizations have submitted the same suggestion. It is a suggestion for adjustment in regard to pension benefit. I should like to put this particular clause on the record.

When pension benefits are included in the value of a taxable estate passing to a widow for children of the deceased, an allowance should be made for subsequent income tax payments in order to avoid double taxation. The amount of the allowance could be calculated in accordance with the life expectancy of the widow. The present value of pension benefits or annuities is calculated on the number of years or life expectancy of the widow in such instances. If a deduction be allowed on account of succession duties for income tax that would be paid over this number of years, then the problem of double taxation would be alleviated to some extent. In preference, it is submitted the method of taxing such annuity and pension benefits when they were received would be more equitable than the present method of calculating the present value of the annuity, or pension fund. Then the widow would pay tax on only what she actually receives and not on what she might receive.

I hope the Minister of Finance will give consideration to this suggestion.

Another injustice that has been corrected in this budget concerns a husband's tax exemption. In the past, if a wife's income exceeded $1,000 the husband's exemption immediately dropped by $250 for his income tax. Now if a wife's income is $10 over the $1,000, the decrease in the husband's exemption is only $10 instead of $250.

One former injustice that has been brought to my attention many times by constituents and which, I in turn, brought to the attention of the previous minister of finance, concerns the husband and wife who are separated. The former minister agreed this provision was an injustice, but he did nothing about it. When there is no divorce or written separation agreement, but where a court order exists directing the husband to pay so much to his wife and dependents, then husband can now deduct the amount paid for such support and the recipient, his wife, as I understand it declares the allowance in her income and deducts for the dependents. This seems to me to be a fairer method than that which was formerly used.

The promised amendment which will permit corporations to make tax-free gifts up to 10 per cent of profits is another good move on behalf of charity and universities. The Minister of Finance has said that he hopes this amendment will swell the flow of funds to the support of higher education in Canada. I believe that the time has come when industry must shoulder more responsibility for the support of higher education, because certainly industry benefits greatly from the products of our universities and benefits from the scientific discoveries, benefits through the supply of trained personnel, benefits in greater production. Industry should, therefore, shoulder part of the burden of higher education. I hope that, as a result of this added incentive, tax-free gifts up to 10 per cent of the profits, industry will accept the challenge and take up its share of the financial burden of higher education.

[Miss Aitken.]

Yesterday, in the Toronto Globe and Mail it was pointed out that so far corporations had not taken full advantage of even the 5 per cent limit and that $9 million was given last year to universities by corporations. The editorial goes on to say:

Universities are indeed an investment. They are an investment in the nation's future; and as such they are a national concern, deserving of national support.

I would like to make another suggestion to the Minister of Finance also with respect to the subject of education which I hope he will consider. There is another injustice which I would like to see corrected in respect of the youth of today. Their industry and energy are being penalized to a certain extent. A boy or girl may earn $950 per year for the purpose of their education, but in respect of any sum over that amount their father will immediately lose part of the deduction he may claim for that child as a dependant. I believe a boy or girl should be allowed to earn at least enough to cover their university fees, which $950 will certainly not do. They should certainly be able to cover their fees and the cost of their books before the father is excluded from claiming them as dependants.

Another matter which I would like to draw to the attention of the minister is one which I am sure he will recall came to light several years ago. This is a particularly ridiculous situation, in respect of income tax deductions, which was brought to the attention of the former minister of finance but he merely produced a lot of legalistic arguments and nothing further was done. I refer to the situation in which a man whose wife was so ill that it was necessary for him to hire a full-time attendant to look after her, made a claim for the salary of that attendant, but the deduction was refused. This was in spite of the fact that the doctor had said the wife was in fact bedridden. As it turned out, the wife had got up for a couple of hours during the afternoons to sit in a rocking chair, and according to the act, if she had sat in a wheel chair the exemption would have been allowed as a full deduction for a full-time attendant. I hope the minister will also rectify that nonsensical situation in the not too distant future.

In conclusion, I would like to commend the minister for removing the 20 per cent advertising tax on foreign magazines published in this country. As we of the Conservative party pointed out when the tax was imposed by the former government, this was a discriminatory tax and was an infringement on the rights and freedom of the press. It was an irritating tax because it interfered with the public's choice of reading matter and it was also a nuisance tax. As the minister pointed out when presenting his budget, when we were on the opposite side of the house we repeatedly warned that this tax would prove to be both unjust and ineffective. Experience has confirmed our view, and one reason why it was ineffective was because the burden of the tax—as is the case in most taxes—fell on the consumer. This was because the magazines immediately raised their advertising rates and also the price of the magazine and, as usual, the consumer paid the shot. I hope that these magazines which raised their prices will remove the increase now that the tax has been removed and that the retail price will resume its former level.

I am an enthusiastic booster of our Canadian publications and I believe that they take a place second to none in relation to magazines across the border. I think they are doing a fine job in interpreting the Canadian scene and the Canadian mind and I am sure that no one in this house wants to see them suffer unduly from unfair competition but, a discriminatory tax—no matter what the reason for its imposition—is, as the minister has said, unjust and is bound to be ineffective.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, after the hectic events of the past thirteen months it is sometimes rather difficult to realize that so many of us are still relatively new members of this house. This has been particularly brought home to me in the last few days, since this is the first budget of which I have had the opportunity to witness the presentation.

I learned while very young that one of the most dangerous things one can do is to disagree with the ladies but unfortunately I find myself in that position, for I must disagree with the hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken). I had in mind her comments to the effect that the budget was very clear to all new members, but I must say that I have spent considerable time in studying and trying to understand this budget. I am afraid I have had to reach the conclusion that it is very much like the popular song of a few years ago entitled, "Crazy Mixed-up Song".

One advantage of speaking rather late in a debate of this kind is that you have the opportunity of listening to many other members as they present various points in the budget which may have escaped your attention, with some of which you will agree and, of course, with some you will disagree. I was quite interested, for example, in listening to the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Stearns), who is a new Conservative member of this house and who represents the riding in which I was born and raised in the eastern townships of the province of Quebec. I must say that times must be getting really bad back in the eastern townships because I left there in the year 1934 and never since that time have they had to resort to the election of a Conservative member. I might say that the Tories were instrumental in chasing me out of my home town in 1934—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —and perhaps I should return the compliment and try to reverse the position.

One thing that appears to be very prevalent among members on the government side is the accusation that the Liberals frittered away our markets. I hold no brief for the Liberal party, in fact they are far too much like the Conservative party to suit me and, as I have mentioned before, in that part of the country from which I come they run on the same ticket. However, I would like to know just what markets prime minister Bennett bequeathed to the Liberal party which they frittered away over the last 22 years. This is something which has to my knowledge never been explained by any member from the government side.

Another theory which is creeping in a little more than it did last year, particularly in speeches of hon. members of cabinet rank, is that the blame is being slightly shifted and now we find the lately discredited Liberals are no longer to blame for our hard times and recession and so forth. We find the blame is moving a little more towards the United States. The United States is the big bad bogeyman at the present time and I would forecast that this trend will continue and increase as time goes on. The Tories, of course, like Caesar's wife, must always be beyond reproach.

The hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Fairfield) did clarify one point for me when he spoke recently. This was in respect to the fact that you can now deduct the cost of eye glasses from your income tax.

I think I have finally found one reason why this particular measure can be justified at this time, and it is because of the extremely high cost which must have been entailed by members of the Conservative party in buying eyeglasses in the last few months. To begin with, they all had to get one set of dark glasses to present themselves being blinded by "the vision" and then, just before the introduction of this new budget, they had to get themselves a pair of rose-coloured glasses so that they might be able to look on it with favour.

I was interested to find that we have finally got one man who, after 22 years or so, has had the courage to stand up and say he is proud of the former Bennett government. That is something which the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) has done, and maybe it is setting a new trend.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to compliment the hon. Minister of Finance. He made a particular point of deviating from what he says has been a tradition of this house.

I am referring, of course, to the incident where the hon. minister proceeded to give part of the budget address in the French language which, happily, he speaks flawlessly. I would like to compliment the minister both on the new practice which he has adopted, and also on the ease and dispatch with which he spoke in the other of our two official languages in this country.

However, it was perhaps unfortunate that he should have chosen such an unhappy budget as this one, to establish the custom of presenting it in both languages.

I know of many words which the hon. minister could have used at this time which would have gladdened the hearts of the Canadians who speak the French language. Nothing is nothing whether it is said in French, English or any other language, and that is exactly what the Minister of Finance has offered the Canadian people.

For example how much better would it have sounded to the French-speaking people of this country if the finance minister of Canada had chosen the occasion of the first budget speech in French to announce that the basic income tax exemption had been raised to $1500 for single people and $3000 for married couples, in order for people on low incomes to try to meet today's cost of living.

How much sweeter it would have sounded to our French-speaking families, as they struggle to make ends meet, if the minister had taken the occasion of the first budget address in the French tongue to announce that the children's allowance was going to be increased sufficiently to give it the same purchasing power it had when first implemented in 1945.

I overheard one hon. member say that this was the first time in the history of the Canadian parliament that we had been granted a deficit in French, and all in all the fact that it was given in their mother tongue is a very poor candy coating for such a bitter pill.

Let us hope that the next time the hon. Minister of Finance proceeds to give a budget speech in French, that it has some good measures in it, rather than just good words.

(Text):

I believe this budget was one of the best examples of a political step dance, the like of which has never before been seen in this house. I suggest that on future occasions, if the budget follows the pattern of this one, we should put the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on the table so that even though we might not agree with his words we might at least enjoy the political dance he is putting on.

Now on page 1231 of Hansard the minister used these words with reference to the rapid increase in the population over the past few years. He said, and I quote:

> It provides a greater market for our agricultural produce and for the products of our factories and reduces our vulnerability to changes in external demand. It brings us a greater diversity of talent and the means of employing it to better advantage. It reduces the per capita cost of supplying essential services in this great land. There can be no doubt that the population growth of the postwar period has had these effects.

I should like to know, if this growth in population has reduced costs how it is that today we are burdened by the highest cost of living we have ever had in this country. I will simply say that this is one of the illusions of this society of ours. This is the theory. But this theory has never worked out in practice. Unfortunately in this country cost of production has never had any close relationship with the cost which consumers have had to pay. The only relationship is that established by what the traffic will bear.

I should like to give just one illustration of what happened. Everyone will recall the last big steel strike in the United States just over a year ago. After the strike had gone on for approximately three weeks a settlement was reached, I believe, in accordance with which the cost of fringe benefits, pay increases and so forth amounted to a package deal of approximately 30 cents an hour, which, multiplied by the numbers of steel workers in the United States, meant an increase in steel costs of $4,500,000 a week. What happened? The price of steel was raised by $6 or $8 a ton—I do not recall which—with the expressed purpose of meeting these additional costs. But the increase in the price of steel meant the difference of $17 million a week. I would say this is a perfect example of what actually happens, regardless of what the theory may be.

The Minister of Finance referred glibly in passing to the rapid growth at home of population and income. I believe the figures show that the population has increased, but in the light of the number of unemployed we had at the end of last year I doubt if he could convince very many people that the growth in income had kept pace with the growth of our population. As a matter of fact, if there has indeed been such a rapid growth in income how is it that the minister himself forecasts a reduction of income tax receipts next year of $129 million in spite of this rapid growth of population. The figures are contained in the table on page 1241.

> Transfer payments especially rose rapidly and for the latter half of the year they were an important element in sustaining and increasing personal income and consumer demand.

It is gratifying to note that the minister has finally agreed with the theory long expressed by our party that income placed in the hands of the disabled and unfortunate people of this country has a marked effect in sustaining and increasing consumer demand. In other words, it is better to place this money in the hands of the people who need it and who will spend it in such a way as to bolster our economy, and I am glad that the Minister of Finance in his address endorsed that theory.

Again, on page 1233, we find another small item which the minister passed over very briefly. He said, and I quote from Hansard:

> There was some weakening in the demand for forest products.

I would say that that is probably the greatest understatement which has been made here for some considerable time. I know that, in the area from which I come, the lack of demand for forest products is responsible for about 90 per cent of the unemployment. I should like to know because I searched in vain in the budget to find if any steps have been taken or if any action is contemplated by this government to restore the lost markets for forest products. I believe it was the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) who discovered some of the reasons why we have lost these markets. Certainly one of the major ones was the fact that countries which used to purchase from Canada now send their orders to Russia and the amazing part of it is that they pay more for the Russian product than they did for the Canadian. The explanation for this change in the placing of orders is because these countries could not secure a guaranteed delivery from Canada. As soon as a slightly more lucrative market developed somewhere else in the world Canada dropped the commitments it had with its established markets in order to make a fast dollar in a short period of time. Today we realize the folly of those actions.

In the budget speech of the Minister of Finance we find evidence of another fast shuffle on page 1233 of Hansard where he is reported as saying:

> Wheat sales although lower for the year as a whole began to pick up in the last quarter and since December they have forged ahead on a year-to-year comparison.

I would like to know how many years we compare; one, three or five? Before proceeding to the subject of unemployment as referred to in the budget I recall to mind that yesterday the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) chose to place some poetry on the pages of Hansard and I should like to follow his example to the extent of placing on the record a few verses which in my view have a direct relationship to the present attitude of the government with regard to unemployment. These words are contained in the famous poem by J. D. Ketchum entitled "Hymn to the Glory of Free Enterprise" and the verses I wish to cite are as follows:

> At periods when Free Enterprise may not provide employment
> We dread the thought of hungry men—it lessens our enjoyment;
> The government must then step in, with this consideration:
> That any public works proposed do not increase taxation.
> Depressions, after all, my friends, much as we deplore them,
> Are acts of God; who ever heard of blaming business for them?
> Chorus:
> Then hail we now Free Enterprise,
> Extol and give it praise!
> Of course, when profits shrink in size,
> To lay men off is only wise;
> We dearly love Free Enterprise—
> But only when it pays.
> Conspirators on every side Free Enterprise have slandered,
> Forgetting that it's given us the world's best living standard;

We eat and drink supremely well at Royal York and Rideau,
And no one drives more Cadillacs or bigger ones than we do.
How blind the socialist who plots this way of life to shatter!
Free Enterprise brings wealth to all—at least, to all who matter.

Chorus:

Then hail we now Free Enterprise,
Extol and give it praise!
The working man must recognize
That, if in want he lives and dies,
It's just his lack of enterprise—
The enterprise that pays!

At page 1233 the Minister of Finance is also reported as saying:

The reduction of the pressures and demands which characterize 1956 led to a mood of greater caution with regard to new capital ventures and was reflected in a declining rate of increase in job opportunities.

What a delightful euphemism for recession or depression. The minister required four lines and I do not know how many words to say what could have been said in one word. This is just another shining example of this doubletalk the minister employed throughout the budget address. Every situation has been twisted around in an effort to give it an optimistic slant.

Throughout the budget speech we find a strange maze of comparisons. In one case we compare one month with another, in another case we compare the same month with the previous year and in another case we have to go back to 1954 in order to find a favourable comparison. The minister must have used rose-coloured glasses, tax-free, in preparing his budget and in drawing what he fondly hopes is a favourable picture of the situation in Canada. It is small wonder that the budget was delayed last year and not brought in until now.

For 1957 as a whole the number of people with jobs averaged 135,000 or 2.4 per cent higher than in 1956, an increase which compares quite well with the increases in employment during 1955 and 1956.

In this instance we have a comparison between 1957, 1956 and 1955. Another choice item in the minister's address is this:

The labour force increased by 210,000, about double the average annual rate of the preceding five years.

In this instance the minister had to go back five years in order to find a favourable comparison. Then we find this gem:

As employment was higher through 1957 than through 1956, so also was unemployment.

What a beautiful way of expressing it. I do not know how much comfort it is going to give the unemployed to know that while there are more of them, the unemployed, there are more of us, the employed. In fact, one hon. member of the cabinet said just yesterday, I believe, that the unemployed in Windsor do not have too much to kick about. He said in effect, "Look across at Detroit and you will really see some problems." When he said this I was reminded of a sergeant by the name of Pat Patterson whom I knew in my army days and if the minister had spoken in jest I would have understood him. The sergeant of whom I am speaking was in the habit of indulging somewhat excessively in alcoholic beverages in the evening with the usual bad results in the morning. When the men would appear for sick parade he would ask what the trouble was and chided them by saying, "Do you think you feel bad? How do you think I feel?" That seems to be the attitude that was taken by the hon. minister yesterday, "If you think you are badly done by you should look across the street and you will find guys worse off than you are."

At page 1234 the minister was reported as saying:

From October to December there was a pause in the upward movement in aggregate labour income, although for the year as a whole the rise in labour incomes amounted to 7½ per cent, but early in 1958 the upward trend in aggregate labour income reasserted itself.

On page 1233 these words of the minister appear:

—in January, February and March of 1958, employment was slightly lower than a year earlier.

This is possibly the best example yet of the minister's twisting around of situations in order to present them in the best possible light. I have taken the trouble to check the figures. The information I received expressed in round figures is as follows:

October	208,000 unemployed
November	292,000 unemployed
December	286,000 unemployed
January	520,000 unemployed
February	555,000 unemployed
March	590,000 unemployed

Despite this the minister told us that early in 1958 the upward trend in aggregate labour income reasserted itself. The minister went on to point out:

As a percentage of the labour force, unemployment in 1957 averaged 4.3 per cent, equalling the rate of 1954.

I do not know why 1954 sneaked in here, but I presume the only reason for it was that we had to go back that far before we could find anything that looked good even through rose-coloured glasses.

The minister has some sobering news as to the amount we are going to be required to borrow in the coming year. I should like to draw to the attention of the house something that seems to come close to the amount that we are going to be required to borrow. According to the minister's figures, the average number of unemployed in the whole of last year was 254,000 people. If we multiply this number by the average annual wage in this country we find that it amounts to in excess of $750 million. This amount has been lost in production because our people have been unemployed.

It is also safe to say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister used the most favourable figures he could find to arrive at the average of 254,000. I think anyone would have done so in his position. It is also safe to say that to get a proper grasp of the over-all picture we could very easily triple this figure, if we took into account the number of people who are not registered, who never appear in those statistics, and combine them with the number of people who have been working less than full time. If we tie those together we find that the loss of production in this country through unemployment will amount to just about the figure that we are going to have to borrow in the next year.

I should like to add this. We must not forget that the first six months of last year were the favourable months, the ones that brought down the average to 254,000, but we have no such thing to look forward to this year. If the first six months of this year are the favourable months heaven help us next winter.

Then we come to another item that I find very difficult to understand. It has to do with savings in this country. The minister said:

> Nevertheless the total savings out of current income were almost as high as in 1956 and amounted to about $6 billion. Personal savings was down about 5 per cent and accounted for almost one-quarter of total saving.

I find that very strange because when I was home last weekend I picked up a full-page advertisement in the Timmins Press which contained a quotation from the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) address to the Canadian congress of labour convention in Winnipeg on April 24, 1958. I was at that congress convention as a delegate when the Prime Minister addressed it. I do not remember what he said word for word and I have not been able to acquire a copy of his speech to verify this, but this is what the Prime Minister is reported to have said:

> I would like to see started an aggressive buying drive to put money into circulation. Bank savings are up by 5.6 per cent over a year ago.

There may be a difference between bank savings and personal savings but I would assume they would be one and the same thing or pretty nearly one and the same thing. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister could get together and iron out this difference of 10.6 per cent in their analysis of the savings situation in this country, because the figures of the Minister of Finance indicate that $26.5 million has disappeared some place. To return to the remarks of the Minister of Finance, I find that he said:

> Pressures generated in 1956 did not have their full effect on prices until 1957. Thus, the consumer price index which began to rise in mid-1956 continued upward until last October, and experienced another short period of increase in the first four months of this year.

Here again we have our favourite whipping boy. We find that the Liberals are still to blame not only for the delayed effect of the pressures generated last year but also for the effect we are experiencing at the present time. I would think it is time to get a new whipping boy or try to do something to put a stop to this everlasting rise in the cost of living.

I should like to deal with another matter which appears to be the cure for something, I do not know just what. I should like to read from the same newspaper to which I referred a moment ago, namely the Timmins Press of Thursday, June 19, 1958, which contains a telegram from the Prime Minister to the chairman of the Timmins automobile dealers association. The telegram reads:

> Congratulations to Timmins automobile dealers, the daily Press and radio station CKGB in starting "You auto buy now" sales campaign in response to my suggestion that more buying will stimulate business. Best wishes for success in your campaign which I hope will be duplicated across the country.
> John Diefenbaker.

Of course, the reply is on the back page of the Timmins Press of June 21, and reads as follows:

> O.K. John.

I find a very strange thing, Mr. Speaker; at the bottom of the advertisement in small print appear the following firms:

> The following finance companies have pledged their support to this campaign:
> Industrial Acceptance Corporation Limited
> Canadian Acceptance Corporation Limited
> Traders Finance Corporation Limited
> General Motors Acceptance Corporation

I do not know whether the savings are up 5 per cent, as the Prime Minister is supposed to have said, or whether they are down 5 per cent as the Minister of Finance has said. This is definitely not something that we should have sent across the country. The Prime Minister of Canada should not be used by the finance companies to try to rope in a few more people. If the Prime Minister has not done anything about it I suggest that he should. If the Prime Minister of this country is to be used as a selling feature from coast to coast he may find that he is something like a tune on the hit parade, which is used by every disc jockey in the country. Like these tunes he may soon find that he will drop from the top ten.

The planned outlays for business this year will be 11 per cent below the 1957 level; the planned outlays for housing, government departments and institutional services on the other hand are 14 per cent higher, according to the minister. I believe these words are meant to be reassuring to the house and to the country as a whole, and are meant to try to establish the fact that one more or less balances the other. Unfortunately, I could not find any figures anywhere to tell me what the 11 per cent and the 14 per cent referred to; 11 per cent of what? fourteen per cent of what? As a result, I for one do not find any comfort in those figures.

At page 1327 of Hansard the minister said:

> I am confident that with more stable rates of growth and the increased production which will flow from our recent large investment we shall have the capacity, to an increasing extent, to meet our investment needs more nearly out of our own resources.

I thought it was rather strange that we have here again another new and very deceiving word for a recession. Now it is a more stable rate of growth.

I should like to take this opportunity to compliment the Minister of Finance on giving some assistance to the gold mining industry. However, before going too far in that direction I should like to have some assurance as to just what form the assistance is going to take. When the minister dealt with the matter in his budget address he said, as found on page 1239 of Hansard of June 17:

> The serious problems of adjustment confronting this industry, going back as far as the war years, have adversely affected the northern mining communities which are dependent on it.

That is quite true, and as long as the purpose of this subsidy paid by the Canadian people is to render some relief to the gold mining communities I will give it 100 per cent support and co-operation. Unfortunately, however, the minister went on to say:

> It is my hope that this measure will contribute to maintaining the level of gold production in Canada and in this way promote the well-being of our northern gold mining communities.

That is an entirely different thing, Mr. Speaker. It may seem possible to expect that a chip thrown in a little brook will wind up at a wharf in Montreal but unfortunately such is not the case. There is not more than one chance in a hundred million of that happening. We had a good example of that when the price of gold was increased the last time. I believe the price was increased from $20 odd to $35 an ounce and at that time the gold miners received an increase of 5 cents per hour.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder whether the hon. member would tell us how much a gold miner gets an hour at the present time.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The base rates in the gold mines at Timmins are as low as $1.19 an hour.

Mr. Nasserden: How high do they go?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The highest is $1.39 an hour.

Mr. Winch: That will shut you up, won't it?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I realize that many aspects of gold mining administration come under provincial jurisdiction, especially matters having to do with the workmen's compensation board and so on, but I believe that when gold miners are required to subsidize the industry twice through the federal government the federal government definitely has the authority to step in and try to correct matters. The miners are subsidizing the industry first of all through substandard wages as low as half of what men are getting for similar work in other industries. In addition, I should like to outline a case that came to my attention last week end. It has to do with the widow of a miner who for eight years had been on a full pension of $187 a month for silicosis. One lung was completely blocked and the other was badly damaged. On March 24 of this year he died of a coronary heart attack at the breakfast table. His widow was immediately cut off without one cent of pension because he did not die from silicosis but from a heart attack.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is with regret that I must interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be words of congratulation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for the budget and his excellent presentation of it. Seldom does one hear such a factual explanation of the difficulties and problems facing a government. The minister made no effort to gloss over the problems of recession, and if all Canadians would take as frank a look at the economy it would go a long way to easing our problems.

The hon. member who has just spoken referred to the various coloured glasses used and the exemption on eye glasses announced in the budget. I can understand his concern because as a typical socialist he keeps his eyes closed to the problems of today and therefore will not require glasses.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), the financial critic of the official opposition, had to find something wrong with the budget. After advocating a number of so-called cures that his party used to precipitate the recession, he complained bitterly that the budget did not cure the recession. If the Minister of Finance could repair all the damage that the hon. member's party managed to cause he would rank as the world's outstanding plastic surgeon but unfortunately the wounds and scars left by the former Liberal administration do not heal that easily.

I find it rather strange that hon. members opposite should take the attitude that the budget is expected to be a cure-all for the economic ills of the country. Budget debates as recorded in Hansard reveal that when they sat on this side of the house they had an entirely different viewpoint. The debate of 1954 shows that no less a person than the former member for Inverness-Richmond adopted such an attitude at that time. As found on page 4017 of Hansard of April 12, 1954, the former member said:

> —it is true that a surplus or a deficit is neither necessarily good nor bad in itself, but derives its virtue from its accommodation to the need of the economy. Of recent origin also is the belief that the budget can be used as a defensive and offensive weapon in maintaining balance in the economy.

It is interesting to note that the budget debate also contained a great deal about unemployment. Hon. members will realize that the former member for Inverness-Richmond is still held in high regard by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) who recently placed him in Liberal headquarters as a combination spiritualist and script writer for the melodramas originating from their part of the house.

I am very pleased that the government has embarked upon a program of public works and defence spending to put more money into circulation and to provide jobs. Formerly the government was very economy-minded and was striving to attain a balanced budget, but I am pleased that they have chosen a deficit and jobs in preference to a balanced budget and recession.

My constituency is well represented in the estimates of both the public works and defence departments, and while I sometimes get impatient that these projects are not progressing more rapidly one must remember the huge amount of work involved in preparing plans, tenders and the calling of tenders. Recently I called officials of the Department of Public Works to inquire when tenders would be called on a project in my constituency. I was impressed by the amount of work being done by the senior officials of the department.

The budget speech also forecast a higher deficit for the C.N.R. in the present fiscal year. This fact, plus the increased wage demands being put forward by C.N.R. employees should cause all hon. members to be greatly concerned about the future of the C.N.R. This is especially true of maritime and western members. It was expressly written in the terms of confederation that a railway was to be constructed and it was clearly understood that the cost of rail transportation was to be reasonable.

At the time of confederation most of the transportation was by water and moved in a north-south direction. The railway was built to encourage the movement of trade in an east-west direction, and it was understood that rail transportation would be at reasonable rates and competitive with water transportation at all times. Freight rates have increased to such an extent that any resemblance to water competition has been lost. The maritime provinces were pleased when this government disallowed the last increase in freight rates. However, we would still appreciate a thorough study of the freight rate problem and further reductions.

Perhaps some improvement in Canadian National operations could be achieved by restoring to parliament a certain amount of control over that railway. I am sure that all hon. members of this house have received complaints from the public with regard to the Canadian National; that is only natural because the public feels they own the Canadian National. However, when a member passes on these complaints he runs into a blank wall and the reply that the Canadian National is independent and out of the control of parliament. Frankly, I am rather tired of these stock answers that the Canadian National is independent. If any organization that is independent of this house is allowed to run up a deficit of over $2 million per month, then that organization should be required to go elsewhere to make up that deficit. I do not think I am alone in this view. A number of hon. members on this side of the house have expressed the same view.

I have one more comment on the Canadian National, and then I shall move on to other aspects of the budget. We hear a great deal of talk in this house concerning reductions in the staff of the Canadian National. Strangely enough we never hear this talk in connection with the employees in the higher income brackets. If this were in private industry I think they would find it necessary to dispense with some of those in the higher income brackets.

Transportation is extremely important to my small province, especially transportation across the Northumberland strait. Recently the government authorized a survey to determine if a causeway linking Prince Edward Island with the mainland is feasible. The survey, in itself, has certain advantages, but I am afraid it has thrown a smoke-screen over our immediate needs. A traffic to our province and through our province has been satisfactory and has been increasing over the past number of years. The facilities we have now are taxed during the rush periods. It is often necessary to be in line for as long as six to eight hours on a holiday. Let us assume that a causeway is feasible, and no one who is an authority on the subject has said that a causeway is feasible, but if it were it would require several years to complete. I do not believe it is an exaggeration to say it would require ten years to complete the causeway. It is logical also to assume that our present load of traffic will continue to increase. This will leave our province in greater transportation difficulties.

I would urge the government to give consideration to placing another ferry on the Borden to Cape Tormentine run. If a causeway is built later on, then the ferry could be used as an icebreaker or could be put into service on some other run such as the Bar Harbor service. I would not like my remarks to be interpreted as being opposed to the causeway. All the island members are anxious to receive the report on the feasibility of the causeway.

While on the subject of transportation, perhaps I should say a few words about roads. I believe the day has arrived when the federal government will have to consider giving aid to provinces in connection with the construction of highways. This could be achieved, either through an extension of the trans-Canada highway policy or through giving assistance on main highways other than the trans-Canada. The main highway through my constituency is in a deplorable condition. I should like to see federal assistance given for rebuilding this highway, either under the trans-Canada highway plan or through the roads to resources program.

It was very gratifying to the maritime provinces to learn that the roads to resources program was to be extended to the maritime provinces. We were all pleased when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) announced in Halifax in March of this year that tourist areas would be considered as natural resources in the maritime areas. This is another example of the interest shown in the maritimes by the present Prime Minister and his government. We are all pleased that this attitude and assistance continues.

The opposition has complained that dominion-provincial relations were forgotten in the budget. It will take some time for the people of Prince Edward Island to forget the dominion-provincial relations of the Liberal administration. If I may offer some advice to hon. members opposite, it would be simply to keep clear of the subject of dominion-provincial relations because their own record in that regard was anything but satisfactory. Before the election of June 10 our provincial government was required to repay a considerable sum of money as the result of overpayments under the tax rental scheme. The provincial premier, accompanied by a couple of the cabinet ministers, came to Ottawa to request the cancellation of the overpayment. Naturally they did not receive that, but they came back home and said they had received generous treatment.

Immediately after the election of the Progressive Conservative government the provincial government decided they needed an additional $5 million in order to finance provincial affairs. Last fall this government awarded our province $2.5 million annually under the special grants to the Atlantic provinces. In addition to that, $1½ million will be offered under the roads to resources program. This makes a total of $4 million more that is available to our province than was given to it under the former government. It is amazing that those who specialized in being indifferent, inefficient and inconsiderate have now become the experts in dominion-provincial affairs. We in the Atlantic provinces all prefer the so-called neglect we are receiving from this government to the affection that was shown to us by the former government.

The budget intimates that some payments will be required under the farm prices stabilization act. I hope that considerable payments will be made to the farmers under this act. I know that the minister is faced with many problems in setting up and administering the act and in attempting to arrive at payments that are fair to all concerned. We should give the hon. gentleman some time to solve his many problems before we become too critical.

However, I think it would be only fair to warn him that the farmers of Canada expect and are entitled to something better than the type of slide rule thinking which was formerly characteristic of, and I am sorry to say is still exhibited by his department. I would hate to see this government spoil its record by destroying the trust which any class of Canadian, especially the farmers, has placed in it. I am sure all hon. members will watch the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) as he moves to implement the policies of his government as contained in the farm prices stabilization legislation.

In my own constituency the main farm product is of potatoes. Last year we had an extremely heavy crop of potatoes and although we sold more than in any previous year, a large portion of that crop remained unsold. The potato growers approached the farm stabilization board for assistance and I must confess I am somewhat disappointed in the assistance offered to them. I believe a new approach is imperative with respect to assistance to farmers and I feel the stabilization board must make some attempt to interpret the spirit of the act as passed through this house.

Last December the Prime Minister proposed to the NATO countries a plan calling for the establishment of a food bank and I hope the member nations can establish such an organization, which would serve a dual purpose. Firstly it would help to counteract communist leanings in the underprivileged countries of the world and secondly it would provide a market for our surplus agricultural and fisheries products. We quite often hear complaints from the hon. members opposite concerning government proposals for greater trade with Great Britain, and during the last election campaign the premier of my province denounced this policy as one creating disaster for our United States markets. We were going to lose our outlet for lobsters and other fisheries products as the result of United States retaliation for this policy. The ballot boxes were still hot when our Grit premier announced that he was going to England along with the other premiers of the Atlantic provinces to stimulate increased trade with Great Britain. He either retracted his prior statement or decided that as one of the few elected Liberal officials left in this country he would be safer on the other side of the Atlantic.

On Monday evening the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) addressed the house. I must congratulate the hon. member. After representing a maritime constituency for a number of years he has finally discovered that the maritimes are actually part of Canada. This is a rather unusual achievement for one of his political affiliation, and I venture to say he is probably the first Grit since confederation to realize this fact. However, he apparently does not like the idea of national unity as he recommended the establishment of a commission to look after maritime affairs. This commission would not be responsible to parliament but would assume all the responsibilities of parliament. He was probably bringing out the Grit doctrine of destroying parliament.

The hon. member further complains that certain projects of the former government, such as the trans-Canada pipe line, were detrimental to the maritimes. I would like to know how the hon. member voted on that issue; no doubt he was one of the gang working on the railroad. I appreciate his interest and desire to assist the maritimes, but may I suggest to him that he work with us to achieve that objective through parliament and through the Progressive Conservative government.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of personal esteem and affection for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), and I wish I could honestly congratulate him on the presentation of his first budget in this house, but in view of the situation in which our country today finds itself and the total failure of the government to come to grips with that situation, I must confess I find it very difficult to discover anything in the budget upon which to congratulate him.

True the budget does have some notable features—it is perhaps the longest and wordiest budget ever presented in this house. It also proposes the largest peacetime expenditure and the largest peacetime deficit in the history of our country but, in view of the fact that not only is this budget the first presented by the minister but is also the first Conservative budget for over 20 years, I believe the people of Canada expected something more. This is particularly so having regard to the fact that the budget was so long expected and so long delayed as to be almost nine months overdue. Yet the presentation, when it came, was something of an anti-climax, and I do not think it could be described as either inspired or inspiring.

With respect to the deficit, the budget of course follows the traditional pattern set by the Conservative party over the years. The Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), described the budget the other day as putting into words what everybody already knew, and by that I presume he meant that the budget was not intended to contain anything startling or surprising.

It certainly did not contain any surprises for anyone who understood the financial consequences of the promises and commitments which were made by the Conservative party in the course of the last two elections. It certainly was no surprise for anyone in the Liberal party because we recognized the economic nonsense which was being talked at those elections and we went so far as to point out to the people of Canada that if these promises were put into effect the financial consequences would be a deficit up to $1 billion. But it must have come as a shock to those people who took the Progressive Conservative platform seriously and who actually believed statements made by the Prime Minister and his colleagues during the two elections to the effect that it was possible to spend more money, collect less in taxes, and balance the budget at the same time.

The Prime Minister and his colleagues in the cabinet travelled the length and breadth of Canada pointing a finger at the Liberal government and accusing it of waste and extravagance and of overtaxing the people, and ridiculing any Liberal who dared point out that you cannot spend more and collect less without going into the red. It must be something of a shock to those people who believed the charge that the Liberals were guilty of large scale waste and extravagance to find Conservative cabinet ministers standing up one after another in this house as they did in the last parliament and admitting that they had not been able to find any waste or extravagance whatever. It must be an even greater shock for them to find the Minister of Finance himself admitting in his budget speech that not only has his government been unable to reduce expenditure as promised but that instead they have actually increased expenditure to the tune of over $200 million. And it must be a surprise to those people who believed that the Liberals had overtaxed them by $500 million a year to learn that all the tax relief they can expect now amounts only to about $200 million, and that in order to provide this relief the country has to incur a deficit of between $800 million and $1 billion.

Over and over again, this statement was made during the election campaign; people were told that families were being overtaxed at the rate of $120 a year. Another variation was that they were being overtaxed by $10 a month, and still another variation spoke of $30 for every man, woman and child in Canada. If that was true then, they are still being overtaxed today by $70 a year, by $6 a month and by $20 per head.

And I think it must have come as a surprise to the Prime Minister himself to discover that his program of increased expenditure which he himself assessed at $300 million at a press conference in Saskatoon on May 27 has generated a net deficit of over $600 million.

Apart from the effect that these surprises may have on the people of Canada, they do give members of this party the comfort of knowing that the predictions which were made by Liberals during the last two elections have now been substantiated.

An hon. Member: What predictions?

Mr. Carter: The predictions that the promises and commitments which were being made would only result in a very substantial deficit.

The budget reveals a very grave situation in that we are faced at the same time with the twin dangers of inflation and recession and I do not think this situation has ever occurred at any previous time in our history. The government and the nation today are very much in the position of old Ulysses running the gauntlet between the floating islands of Scylla and Charybdis and trying to avoid being crushed. Today the country has to steer a course between depression and inflation and try to keep the economy intact as well. I think most of us admit that this is a problem which is beyond human wisdom to solve. Certainly the problem cannot be solved by the government alone. The government has a role to play but it is a very minor one. The major role must be played by the people of Canada themselves and without their full co-operation very little can be done to effect any solution to the problems which now face us. Especially is this true of management and organized labour. A new spirit must be created in our country, one of unity and unselfishness, because the best cure for inflation is to reverse the forces that produce it.

Wealth today is created by men and machines. There was a time when the bulk of wealth was created by man's labour alone. Technological progress has made it possible for more and more wealth to be produced by machines and with the advent of automation we have reached a phase when the bulk of wealth will in future be produced by machines. For many years there has been a constant struggle between management on the one hand and labour on the other for a greater share of the wealth which has been produced in this way. Somewhere there must be a dividing line for what is fair and honest both with regard to profits and with regard to wages. That dividing line can only be found in the spirit of what is actually best for the country as a whole. It can never be determined in the present atmosphere of suspicion and mistrust. Unity and unselfishness are essential and it is the duty of the government to do everything it can to create this spirit and this atmosphere.

I believe it is possible for management and labour to come to an agreement to share the benefits of automation and technological progress with all the people of Canada. That would involve voluntary freezing of profits and wages and using the extra wealth produced to lower prices because unless prices can be stabilized there is no hope of ever curing inflation. That, I believe, is the greatest danger to Canada today and certainly it is the thing on which our enemies are depending to undermine our economy and weaken our defences. If we can stabilize and reduce prices everybody will win, everybody will be better off and our trade position will be greatly strengthened.

I believe the time has come when the impact of automation on the cost of production and employment makes necessary a complete overhaul of our monetary system. I made this suggestion when the Gordon commission was being set up but a study of the effects of automation was not included in their terms of reference. In a country like Canada with a sizeable increase in the labour force occurring at a time when automation is tending to displace labour at an unprecedented rate we must do everything possible to determine exactly the magnitude of the problem that will result and how it can best be met.

I believe the time has arrived when we must take a new look at our methods of creating new money and of injecting it into our monetary system. What are the effects of our present system of money management? In this connection I should like to ask the minister to tell us what will be the effects of his refinancing of the $3 million or $4 million about which he spoke in the budget. Will this money be taken from the people of Canada or will it be procured through the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks? If the latter course is followed what will be the inflationary effects of this procedure?

I believe we should have an investigation of our methods of determining interest rates. Can money be treated as a commodity and still perform its function as a means of distribution? Is there a better way of regulating the rate of expansion of our economy? Can a way be found in the future to avoid depressions? The best way to avoid a depression is to avoid the boom that caused it and if we are to do that, it is necessary for us to know what rate of expansion is best suited to our markets, to our available manpower, our population increase and our supply of materials. In other words what are the upper and lower limits of our rate of expansion? I believe the expansion of an economy such as Canada's involves control very much like that involved in driving a car. If you drive a car too fast you are in danger of running off the road. On the other hand if you drive it too slowly there is a danger of stalling and blocking the traffic behind you. Somewhere there is a proper and safe speed for the car and there is a proper and safe rate of expansion for our economy.

I would like to see a royal commission or a parliamentary committee set up to study this question. Once this information is available then it should be possible for the government to call together a conference of industrialists, management and labour and map out a long-range program of capital investment for the orderly expansion of our economy. There is no reason why such a conference might not in time develop an integrated system of pensions and social security based on our economy which would replace the one we now have and take it completely out of politics.

If such a planning group could be set up successfully on a national scale I see no reason why it could not be extended to groups of nations such as the nations of the commonwealth and of NATO because we must raise our sights and look forward to a world community of nations if our economy is going to continue to expand and meet the pressures and dangers which await it in the future particularly from totalitarian countries which can utilize all the benefits of mechanization to dump goods on any market of the world without regard either to price or cost. Whatever the findings of such a body might be nothing substantial will be accomplished until a new spirit is created among all the people of Canada.

If it were to be set up, this commission should also study the tight money controversy because it is important that the people should know the truth about this matter. At the present time they do not know what to believe. The present government blamed the former Liberal administration for instituting tight money. Then the present Minister of Finance last session took credit for loosening money. The governor of the Bank of Canada then told us that there was no tight money and later on a group of economic professors criticized him and said he was just quibbling about words and that there had been in fact tight money. Obviously they cannot all be right.

Although the Minister of Finance took credit earlier for easing the supply of money he did admit in his budget address that there was such a thing as supply and demand and that these factors did have some influence on the money market. The story of tight money reminds me very much of a tale that used to be in school books long ago concerning two young boys who found themselves in an argument concerning a lobster. One lad was the son of a fisherman and he said a lobster was black. The other chap who was the son of a man who sold cooked lobsters claimed that a lobster was red. Just as they were getting into a fight another man came along and pointed out to them that they were both right because the lobster is black until he is cooked and then he turns red. I would think that is pretty much like tight money. There was tight money. There was no tight money for the big fellow; it was only more costly money, but there was tight money for the little fellow who could not afford to pay the high rates.

Mr. Baskin: The hon. member should know all about tight money.

Mr. Chevrier: Why does the hon. member not ask the governor of the Bank of Canada? He told of how it was brought about, and that was confirmed by the Minister of Finance the other day.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Carter: Whether there was tight money or not, I think we perhaps have some indication of this when we see the results of the methods used by the minister to refinance the loans, as he proposes doing in his budget. Whether there is tight money or not, there must be a more flexible system to give more protection to the little man.

I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that the operations of the Industrial Development Bank of Canada might be expanded to provide cheap working capital, if necessary, for small businessmen who perhaps might otherwise become the victims of the higher interest rates. At the present time the Industrial Development Bank operates in pretty much the same way as other banks. It is difficult to get any money from them unless you prove that you do not actually need it.

The most discouraging thing about the present budget is that it makes no provision to stimulate our economy and to help cure our unemployment problems. On Friday last the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) sought to obscure this point by indulging in speculation as to what would have happened had the Liberals been returned last June. Instead of indulging in idle speculation and allowing his imagination to run riot, it would have been much more profitable for the hon. member if he had consulted history and looked up Hansard and thereby discovered what actually had happened under a Liberal government in similar circumstances. Had the Liberals been re-elected in June there would not have been any rushing off to have another election in March.

[Mr. Carter.]

Mr. Hodgson: They would have swallowed the C.C.F.

Mr. Cardiff: They would have choked.

Mr. Carter: Had the Liberals been elected at the election in June, this house would have been presented with a budget, a bold, courageous budget such as—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What nonsense! Did Mr. Harris not bring down a budget last year?

Mr. Carter: We would have brought in measures to deal with conditions just as Mr. Harris did once before. We would have done what the minister of finance did in 1954, 1955 and 1956.

Mr. Hodgson: We had one budget.

Mr. Carter: He planned then for a deficit of $160 million, but it was a planned deficit to stimulate the economy of Canada, and he reduced taxes by $148 million. That is one thing that would have happened had the Liberals been returned in June. We could have come to grips with and boldly faced this problem of inflation, and we would have reduced taxes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What utter nonsense!

Mr. Baskin: The Liberals had 22 years to do it.

Mr. Carter: My hon. friends make a lot of capital out of that, as though the Liberals had never reduced taxes in 22 years. That was the impression they sought to give the country all during the two election campaigns. They talked about over-taxation. We all know about that, $120 a year, $30 for every man, woman and child. For 10 months we heard that. What have you done? How much have you taken off? If we were over-taxed then, we are still over-taxed $500 million. How much are you taking off?

Mr. Baskin: What about our senior citizens?

Mr. Carter: Mr. Harris reduced taxes.

Mr. Baskin: "Six Dollar" Harris.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Harris reduced taxes by $148 million, and he planned for a deficit of $160 million but it was not like the present deficit. The present deficit is just a deficit to cover increased expenditures. Mr. Harris' deficit was a planned deficit to stimulate the economy and it worked. If my hon. friends will go back and look at Hansard they will find that it was successful and that instead of the deficit being $160 million it was $33.1 million. That is the difference between a planned deficit and the kind of deficit which we have today.

Mr. Baskin: What about this month?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I must remind hon. gentlemen that we are not in committee of the whole. Mr. Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, the most alarming part of this budget so far as our province is concerned is its policy of a return to trade restrictions, in view of our great dependence on world trade. Trade is the key to employment, because trade is the key to capital investment outlay and therefore to production. Who wants to produce goods that cannot be sold?

On June 23 the dominion bureau of statistics bulletin informed us that for the first quarter of this year there had been a 2 per cent drop in volume in our non-farm production. In the face of this information how does the minister justify his 2 per cent increase in the gross national product for the year? I believe the minister is indulging in a little over-optimism at the present time. If our gross national product declines, as indicated by the figures for the first quarter, or even if it remains stationary, it must result in an even bigger deficit than the $640 million net which the minister estimated. When all the other bits and pieces are added on to something around $1 billion. How grow to something around $1 billion. How discouraging must this news be to the unemployed of Canada whose representatives marched up to see us yesterday? This falling off in capital investment outlay means one thing, namely no extra jobs to take care of the 200,000 increase in our labour force. The only conclusion I can come to is that next year unemployment will be far worse than it was last winter.

An hon. Member: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Carter: As far as Newfoundland is concerned, the tendency of the Conservative party to divert trade from the United States and to restrict trade with other countries, particularly European countries to which we sell fish, is fraught with very grave consequences for our fishermen. The merchant marine and fisheries committee of the house of representatives in the United States is at the present time considering a $43 million support program for United States fish producers. This represents an incentive payment of one cent a pound to the fishermen, one-third of a cent per pound to the plants for every fish handled, payments for technical improvements to boats and equipment and to processing equipment, and in addition ten-year loans at three per cent. This bill is receiving very wide support both in the house of representatives and the senate and there is very little doubt that it will be recommended.

If the bill is recommended it is going to have two effects which can be very serious not only for Newfoundland but for the fishing industry of all the Atlantic provinces. One effect of it must be to increase fish production which will mean that their imports will be correspondingly less. The second result can be even more serious because under the bill fish will come under section 22 of the United States agricultural adjustment act which is the import restriction section. With the heavy government subsidy it will be much easier for the fishing interests of the United States to get import restrictions under this section than through the tariff commission where they have tried unsuccessfully in the past. As far as Newfoundland is concerned, both for the unemployed, whose number is double this year what it was last, and for the sake of the fishing industry it is important that this trade diversion and restriction policy be reversed at the earliest possible moment.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, while the budget is not very reassuring to the people of Canada, it does bring a measure of comfort to the Liberal party because it tends to refute most of the claims made by the Conservatives during the election campaign. It vindicates Mr. Harris' courageous, bold and sound budget. It confirms what the Liberals told the people would happen if a Progressive Conservative government were elected and it proves that our warnings were justified.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks will be directed to congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who has managed to present in clear, precise and concise form the fiscal policy of the government and who has also managed to frame appropriate measures to solve the serious problems of the day.

I have noticed that when it came time for them to criticize the budget certain members of the opposition were so short of ideas, that the better part of their speeches was given over to accusing government members of having nothing to say about the budget except to congratulate the Minister of Finance.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the budget speech of the minister is certainly worthy of the tradition of the great ministers of finance who have occupied that post in this house. As far as we are concerned, we have no hesitation whatever not only in congratulating him at this time, but in renewing those congratulations at every possible opportunity.

One innovation which was certainly most welcomed by many hon. members and more particularly by all members from the province of Quebec was the presentation of some parts of the budget speech in French by the Minister of Finance. The minister made his remarks in flawless French, and I commend him not only on my behalf but on behalf of all my colleagues of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, it is also said that that budget is a blue budget. Personally, I have no prejudice against this colour because as the hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken) so aptly put it, it is a colour which reminds us of heaven. Indeed, it is appreciated not only on this side of the house but throughout our country, as shown by the results of the last election.

I should like to outline how the achievements of this government and the budget proposals are particularly adapted to the constituency I have the honour to represent in this house.

In fact, the riding of Pontiac-Timiskaming is not only a constituency, it is almost an empire. Its area is as great as that of the province of Nova Scotia and about two-thirds of the area of old Scotland. It is a very diversified district from the point of view not only of its landscapes but also of its population. Its limits are within a few short miles of the national capital; in fact, parts of the riding are within the federal district. I am particularly glad to see that the government has decided to introduce a new Federal District Commission Act during this session and I hope that the limits of the national capital will thus be enlarged to open to the population of the capital and to its numerous visitors an area endowed with a great panoramic beauty, the constituency of Pontiac.

Extending along the shores of the Ottawa river, the limits of my constituency go up to the very head of the Ottawa river, in the area of the great lake Victoria. Leaving Pontiac and going west, we come to the riding of Timiskaming which is not as old as Pontiac but whose beginning goes back more than a century.

The settlers who ventured hundreds of miles in virgin forest to settle on the shores of Timiskaming lake, which in Indian language means "deep waters", had a remarkable spirit of adventure and of individualism. It was not because of the stimulus of need that they ventured in areas which were then very wild, but rather because of the appeal of the great adventure, and especially the appeal of new land. Those people settled in the constituency of Timiskaming on the shores of that lake, close to Fathers' bay, and from there they spread deeper into the surrounding area and opened up a whole constituency made up of several now flourishing parishes. Incidentally, the Fathers' bay district, and particularly the location of the old fort, deserves to be pointed out as an historic site, and the historic sites commission should turn its attention to that area and preserve it for future generations.

This year, the chamber of commerce of Ville-Marie is celebrating the 50th anniversary of its founding. This body initiated the development, not only of Ville-Marie itself, but of all the riding of Timiskaming, and, August 3rd and 4th of this year will be dedicated to the celebration of this truly memorable anniversary in the annals of the riding of Timiskaming.

This riding, which originated in 1885, is the cradle of northwestern Quebec, and I invite all hon. members who would like to take advantage of a holiday, to go and, together with me, I hope, take part in the feasts and celebrations which will take place on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, as you no doubt realize, by what I have just said, the people of Timiskaming do not expect that the government should support them; they merely ask the authorities to assure them the proper economic climate to develop according to their own standards, and also to share in the prosperity and grandeur of our country. It is precisely what the government has tried to do up to now, and I also believe that the budgetary measures will enhance the progress we now enjoy.

A good part of the people of Timiskaming are farmers, living off the land. I had the opportunity recently of visiting several of those communities, and everywhere I went, the farmers were glad to tell me that things were now turning for the better for them. Things are going better, first because of the enactment of the Agricultural Stabilization Act which gave the farmer a sense of security he had never enjoyed before. Thus, through the legislation announced by the government, he can now expect more generous credit facilities.

I submit that one of the measures most likely to increase the revenue of the farmers —I do not mean that it is perfect, it is only a beginning—is the Agricultural Stabilization Act; it should however include, among other things, pulpwood, which is essentially a normal agricultural product at least in my constituency. So I suggest that the government should give generous subsidies to farmers who, for instance, have to start undertakings such as cold storage and slaughter houses and also that a system should be adopted to help farmers who, for instance, would need subsidies to purchase seeds and other things of this kind.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) said that one of the ways to restore prosperity in our country was to extend the period of social benefits.

The people were very gratified by the increase of old age pensions.

I suggest that it would be advisable to consider raising family allowances. Surely that is also one way of increasing the social capital in circulation and the consumer's purchasing power. That is why I am happy to join with the numerous hon. members who have requested early implementation of legislation designed to increase family allowances instituted in 1944 and which have not been increased at that time, save by the token sum of $1, last year.

The Budget—Mr. Martineau

Mr. Speaker, in the constituency of Timiskaming, we have huge resources which have hardly been tapped. One of the most attractive planks in the Conservative platform is its development program for our natural resources. The constituency of Timiskaming, and the constituency of Pontiac also, are rich in mineral resources of all kinds.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is six o'clock.

Mr. Martineau: I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

(Text):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader of the house if he can impart any information about Monday?

Mr. Green: I am not in a position to give any further information as yet.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

WHEAT—LONG-TERM CREDITS OR GIFTS

Question No. 56—Mr. McIlraith:

How much wheat was disposed of in the last fiscal year by the Canadian government, or any of its agencies, through long-term credit or gifts?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

The following quantities of wheat were sold by the Canadian wheat board during the period April 1, 1957-March 31, 1958:

	Bushels
Grants under regular Canadian Colombo plan program	6,198,294.6
Grants to Colombo plan countries (over and above regular program)	3,036,271.6
Ten-year loan to India	14,933,333.3
Gift of flour to UNWRA (wheat equivalent)	979,009.0
Sale on three-year credit arrangements (repayment guaranteed by Canadian government)	12,387,759.0

COMPULSORY SAVINGS REFUNDS NOT RETURNED

Question No. 76—Mr. Houck:

1. What is the total amount of compulsory savings refunds not yet returned?

2. What is the total number of persons to whom such refunds have not yet been made?

3. What steps has the government taken to get these refunds to the persons to whom they belong?

2. 62,927.

3. Although no action is being taken to locate individuals entitled to refunds of this nature, all inquiries received and claims made during each year are carefully investigated and refunds issued where warranted. In this regard it may be said that, of the total number of cases investigated in the last few years, approximately 80 per cent have shown that the taxpayer has either already received his refund or is not entitled to one.

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS, QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

Question No. 83—Mr. Deschatelets:

1. How many unemployed persons were registered as at June 1, 1958 in (a) the province of Quebec; (b) the Montreal area; (c) the Quebec area?

2. How many unemployed persons were registered as at June 1, 1958 in (a) the province of Ontario; (b) the Toronto area; (c) the Hamilton area?

3. What amount of benefits was paid from June 1, 1957 to June 1, 1958 in (a) the province of Quebec; (b) the Montreal area; (c) the Quebec area; (d) the province of Ontario; (e) the Toronto area; (f) the Hamilton area?

4. How many applications for employment were filed with the various employment offices of the unemployment insurance commission by persons not receiving benefits, between June 1, 1957 and June 1, 1958 in (a) the province of Quebec; (b) the Montreal area; (c) the Quebec area; (d) the province of Ontario; (e) the city of Toronto?

5. What was the amount of the unemployment insurance fund as of June 1, 1957 and June 1, 1958?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour):

1. Number of persons registered for employment at local offices of the unemployment insurance commission on May 29, 1958, the date closest to June 1, 1958, for which data are available were: (a) In the province of Quebec, 197,191; (b) in the Montreal area, 68,200; (c) in the Quebec area, 13,002.

2. (a) In the province of Ontario, 185,524; (b) in the Toronto area, 52,846; (c) in the Hamilton area, 15,630.

3. (a) Province of Quebec, $137,660,436; (b) Montreal local office area, $41,525,811.67; (c) Quebec local office area, $9,460,798.02; (d) province of Ontario, $137,057,103; (e) Toronto local office area, $32,396,516.40; (f) Hamilton local office area, $10,737,207.07.

4. Breakdown of data requested not available.

5. May 31, 1957, $846,819,435.32; May 31, 1958 (preliminary), $653,501,427.

MILITARY COLLEGE GRADUATES—RESERVE SERVICE

Question No. 90—Mr. Fisher:

1. Do graduated cadets of the military colleges have the option of going on reserve list after a certain period of active service?

2. If so, how long has this been in effect, how many cadets have had the option, and how many have taken advantage of the option?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. Yes. Three years after completion of academic training.

2. This policy has been in effect since September 1952. Of the 141 graduates who have been eligible to exercise this option 26 have done so.

ANODIZED ALUMINUM IMPORTS FROM U.S.

Question No. 107—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received protests from any organization or trade union against the importation of anodized aluminum from the United States?

2. If so, has the government taken any action to protect this industry in Canada against alleged unfair competition?

1. Yes.

2. The Department of National Revenue is presently investigating the fair market value of anodized aluminum entering Canada, with a view to ensuring that it is being imported in accordance with the provisions of the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff Act.

MARINE RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION, SHIPPEGAN, N.B.

Question No. 111—Mr. Robichaud:

Questions

1. Has the Minister of Fisheries received any representation requesting that a marine railway or haul-up be constructed at Shippegan, Gloucester county, New Brunswick?

2. If so, what action has been taken in connection with such request?

Answer by: Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries):

1. Yes.

2. Matter is receiving consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 26, 1958

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HARDIE—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN DEBATE OF JUNE 25

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question, as reported at page 1609 of Hansard of that date:

> In view of the extremely low market price of 6 cents per pound paid to British Columbia raspberry producers, will the minister consider bringing raspberries under the price stabilization act to enable these producers to take off their present crop?

In his reply the minister commented that I had been back in the northern fastness too long because this matter, he claimed, had been dealt with previously.

Mr. Hodgson: He was wrong; you have been here too long.

Mr. Hardie: I am going to be here a lot longer, too.

An hon. Member: That's what you think.

Mr. Hardie: I suggest that the minister himself has been wandering around some place other than his office, because—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member state his question of privilege?

Mr. Hardie: Well, Mr. Speaker, before I asked the question yesterday I checked with the officials concerned and found that no decision had been taken on the question of placing a price support under raspberries. The minister's answer, then, in my opinion was both arrogant and completely false.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member would not like to leave that statement standing on the record.

Mr. Hardie: I think after I get through you will see why I leave it on the record.

Mr. Speaker: I am asking the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. Hardie: If I have to withdraw it, I will have to withdraw it.

Mr. Fraser: That is no way to do it.

Mr. Speaker: May I say that while the hon. member may not agree with what the minister said, and even if one assumes that the minister was mistaken, that does not to my mind raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely it is a question of privilege if he misled the house.

Mr. Hardie: My question of privilege is this, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture deliberately misled the house in reply to my question.

Mr. Fraser: Withdraw that.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I think the hon. member should withdraw his statement that I deliberately misled the house, because I state unequivocally that his comment is completely incorrect. I did not mislead the house yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard what the minister has said, and he knows the practice of the house—that it is quite outside of our accepted standards of conduct here to impute to another hon. member the deliberate statement of falsehood or untruth. The words which the hon. member has used do just that, and I must ask him if he will withdraw them.

Mr. Hardie: I will withdraw that statement, Mr. Speaker, but I will not withdraw the implication I made that the minister was not informed as to what took place in his own department.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has sufficiently made his point that he disagrees with what the minister said yesterday; and as he has withdrawn the statement, unless there is a question of privilege I do not think he should proceed further.

Mr. Hardie: The minister claimed yesterday in reply to my question that the matter had been dealt with the week before. I find this morning that a recommendation had been signed by him this morning and up until noon today a quorum of four of the cabinet ministers had not approved this recommendation and the order in council had not been passed, at least up until noon today.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would raise the matter as a question at the appropriate time. As I have said before, it does not seem to me to be a question of privilege.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, this has been raised as a question of privilege, and I would like to reply to it on a question of privilege. The statement I made yesterday was absolutely correct. The stabilization board sent a wire under my instructions, and after having received the approval of cabinet, to the processors of raspberries in British Columbia. The wire was sent on Thursday night last, making a proposition or an offer to them. As far as the support of raspberries was concerned, it provided that they had to pay a minimum of 9 cents a pound to the growers. They had a meeting on Friday morning and wired back accepting this offer, and I immediately gave instructions to wire back to them to put this 9-cent price into effect immediately. That is the exact situation.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he would table the telegrams referred to by him in his reply earlier today to the hon. member for Mackenzie River, and if he would also at the same time table the order in council referred to?

Mr. Harkness: I would be quite happy to table the telegrams and also the order in council, but of course the order in council appears in the normal form of the Canada Gazette.

[Later:]

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid any further misunderstanding or mistakes on the part of the official opposition in connection with the question of raspberries in British Columbia perhaps I should say an additional word or two on the subject.

The matter first came up something like ten days to two weeks ago. A considerable number of telegrams were received here from raspberry growers stating that they were threatened with a very low price and asking for some form of support. The matter was particularly brought to my attention by the hon. members for Fraser Valley and New Westminster. We canvassed the situation and had a senior official of the department in British Columbia investigate the matter. At about the time the investigation concluded as to what the probable situation would be, the first of the raspberries began to come on the market and the processors of these raspberries who put them into SO2 or freeze them were offering 6 cents a pound for this fruit.

As a result I took up the matter and obtained cabinet approval, as I indicated before, to make an offer to the processors which would ensure that the growers received a minimum of 9 cents a pound. I then dispatched the telegram I mentioned a short time ago.

That is the whole situation. The order in council which provides the specific terms under which the processors will be paid in the event they cannot dispose of the raspberries put into SO2 and held in frozen form was signed today. It went through today but the actual action, as I indicated, was taken last Thursday and Friday, and the growers were thus put in a position to sell their raspberries at a minimum of 9 cents last week, as I stated in the house yesterday.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture raises quite an important question of privilege. I believe the house will be very glad of the statement he just made clarifying this matter, but I feel I must fulfil my obligation of pointing out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister in answer to the question yesterday, as recorded at page 1609 of Hansard, said:

I think perhaps he—

That is the hon. member for Mackenzie River.

—has been back in the northern fastness too long, because this matter was dealt with last week.

Note these remarks, Mr. Speaker:

Assistance was provided under the stabilization act for the raspberry growers in British Columbia which will ensure that they will be paid a minimum of 9 cents per pound for the poorest type of raspberry which is produced there.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, the statement that assistance was provided.

Mr. Harkness: It was.

Mr. Pickersgill: They pay no attention to such things as orders in council.

Mr. McIlraith: The act provides that these things are done by order in council, and hon. members are entitled to know that the law of this country is being observed. At this stage of the proceedings today the minister has told us that the order in council was passed this day, but yesterday he said that the assistance was provided under the act last week.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member for Ottawa West has said bears out exactly what I have said. Assistance was provided last week. Here was an urgent situation which required something to be done immediately, otherwise the raspberries were going to rot on the ground. Now the hon. member is complaining because I took action in order to meet an urgent situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the minister used to talk about C. D. Howe.

Mr. Speaker: I did not know so much heat could be generated over a raspberry. I think the hon. member for Ottawa West is within his rights, of course, in raising a question of privilege if he feels that the information given to the house by the hon. minister was incorrect, but I must say that having heard everything that was said today the problem seems to be one of interpretation of what the minister said yesterday and of what it meant. Everyone is entitled to put his own construction on it. I think the matter has been sufficiently aired.

I see that the hon. member for Kootenay West is on his feet. Is this on the point of privilege?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): No, Mr. Speaker. In order to avoid any further misunderstanding in connection with the application of this most important legislation, would the minister make an announcement to the house when the application of the British Columbia tree fruit growers for support prices for the 1957 crop is granted?

An hon. Member: 1957?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INSTALLATION OF SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION SYSTEM

On the order:

The Prime Minister—The following proposed motion:—That this house do approve the installation of a simultaneous translation system in this chamber and that Mr. Speaker be authorized to make arrangements necessary to instal and operate it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this be transferred to government orders.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred to government orders, under section 2 of standing order 21.

ATOMIC ENERGY

PROPOSED STUDY OF CONTROL OF NUCLEAR TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs care to comment on the report that the Soviet government has now refused to attend the Geneva meeting, called for next Monday, to consider ways and means of supervising a ban on nuclear tests?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the negative and polemical statement made over radio Moscow yesterday afternoon, I feel confident that I can assure the house they have not as yet closed the door, and we therefore advised Dr. Solandt to proceed with his plans to the end that he will be in Geneva next Tuesday, July 1. I express a profound hope that scientists who have been designated by the U.S.S.R. will also be present on that date for that meeting.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—REIMBURSEMENT FOR DAMAGE TO OTTAWA EMBASSY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house whether or not the report is true that the government has offered to pay the Soviet embassy for any damages incurred as a result of incidents in this city last Sunday?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker; according to international practice, we have informed the Soviet ambassador to Canada that if there are any damages in respect of that regrettable incident the Canadian government will pay them. As yet we have not received any claim in that regard.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SECURITY MEASURES DURING VISITS OF HEADS OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice, with some restrained indignation. In view of the very disturbing tale in the Printed Word, a periodical published by the public relations firm of Johnston, Everson and Charlesworth Limited, to this effect:

When President Truman visited Ottawa at the end of the war, his guards searched, without warrant, every house along the line of march, including clothes closets, attics and cellars—

—would the Minister of Justice (1) make inquiries as to the veracity of this report and later inform the house as to the result; (2) assure the house that such procedure will not be countenanced in Canada, at any time, for any purpose, and that the basic rights and freedoms of Canadians will be recognized and respected on all such occasions?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rather doubt whether an allegation about a matter that took place some 10 or 11 years ago, as the visit of President Truman did, is one of sufficient or immediate urgency to justify an inquiry on the orders of the day. However, I have had some inquiry made—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister is raising that as a point of order I would agree with him that the first part of the question might be dealt with differently, but the second part of the question remains.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. gentleman, as a result of inquiries I have made and discussions I have had with those connected with such matters that there is no likelihood of any such event taking place in connection with any future visit by any head of state who visits Canada. I am also able to say, since the matter has been raised, that the inquiries I have made indicate, so far as my present information goes, that the report of the incidents in connection with the previous visit to which the hon. gentleman has referred is greatly exaggerated, certainly in so far as any allegation of the searching of every private house along the route is concerned.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister inform the house if he considers that on such occasions the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are quite competent to provide all the security required?

Mr. Fulton: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I consider the Royal Canadian Mounted Police sufficiently and absolutely competent to provide all the security precautions that are necessary. However, the hon. gentleman will realize that certain protocols and forms are observed in connection with the visits of heads of state of other countries.

DROWNING OF FIVE MEMBERS OF FORCE—VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the minister's statement on June 12 in respect of the tragic drowning of five members of the R.C.M.P. that the total weight carried on that fatal night was within the manufacturer's rate of load for the boat, would the minister care to comment on the finding of the coroner's jury that the five men met their death because the boat was "overcrowded and overloaded"?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I received the text of the verdict of the coroner's jury only this morning, and I am awaiting a full report from counsel who was appointed agent of the Minister of Justice to attend the inquest on our behalf. I am, therefore, not in a position to make a statement on the matter today, but I expect to be in a position to make a full statement tomorrow or by Monday at the latest.

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport on this matter. In view of the finding of the coroner's jury that the Department of Transport standard life jackets and approved life cushions were unsatisfactory in cases of emergency, does the minister intend to change the departmental standard for such equipment?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received the report of the coroner's inquest. When we do we will examine it thoroughly, and if there are any matters that require action by my department that action will be taken.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—ALLOCATION OF R.C.A.F. SQUADRONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question arising out of a statement made in the house on June 10, at page 1030 of Hansard, by the Minister of National Defence, when he said:

> —no squadrons have yet been definitely and specifically allocated to NORAD, nor would it seem likely that any such squadrons of the Royal Canadian Air Force would be allocated in that way.

Can the minister reconcile this statement with one he made before a committee in another place yesterday to the effect that as soon as the resolutions of approval of NORAD are passed there will be formal allocation by the government of air defence commands to NORAD, which would of course include nine squadrons of the R.C.A.F.?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Those statements are correct. I do not think they are conflicting in any way.

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN ARMY UNIFORMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Taylor (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister inform the house whether or not any changes are contemplated in the present uniforms issued to members of the Canadian army?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, certain uniforms which might be adopted have been under development for some time. They are being issued for user trials during the present summer but no decision has yet been reached as to the adoption of any of these uniforms.

INDUSTRY

STEEL—REPORTED STATEMENT BY UNION DIRECTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he is yet in a position to answer the question I addressed to him on Tuesday, June 17, as reported at page 1205 of Hansard, as follows:

> Is the Prime Minister in a position to comment on the press report that William Mahoney, national director of the national steelworkers of America, has asked for a meeting with the government to discuss steel prices and policies in Canada, with special reference to the charge that prices are administered or arranged in such a way that they are geared to United States prices?

The Prime Minister said at that time that he did not know of the press report or of the letter, but I am told the letter was mailed to him on June 12 last.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): In so far as the allegation is concerned as to the date of mailing of this communication, that of course I am unable to controvert. The letter was received from Mr. Mahoney in the stated terms subsequent to the occasion on which my hon. friend asked the question in the house.

Mr. Winch: May I ask as a supplementary question if the Prime Minister is now able to give us any information with respect to the disposition of this matter?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No decision has been reached as yet as to what course shall be followed in this regard, although I am expecting that an opportunity will be given to Mr. Mahoney to make the representations he apparently has in mind. I feel that the representatives of the steel corporations should have the same opportunity at the same time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

KETTLE VALLEY, B.C.—STATEMENT ON TRANSPORTATION OF PERSONS HAVING COMMUNICABLE DISEASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Monday the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) inquired as to the transporting of patients suffering from communicable diseases by railway in the Kettle valley area. In putting his question the hon. member stated that a certain hospital in Kootenay West had been informed by the legal officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway that persons suffering from communicable diseases may ride in the baggage section of the present Budd cars on the Kettle valley line.

If the hospital referred to by my hon. friend is the same hospital which made representations direct to the board of transport commissioners on this point, I think there must be some misunderstanding of the reply made to those representations by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

I am advised that Mr. E. M. Stiles, chairman of the board of the Kootenay Lake general hospital society, Nelson, wrote to the board of transport commissioners under date of April 28. The railway company was asked for its submissions, and the legal department of the railway pointed out in reply that rail diesel cars do not provide separate or private accommodation of any kind but that it is permissible to carry stretchers with sick persons in the baggage portion of the rail diesel car provided they are accompanied by another person.

The letter went on to state, however, that this permission has been restricted to persons who are suffering from non-communicable diseases. The letter added that general order No. 804 of the board of transport commissioners requires that if there is no other enclosed accommodation on a train, a person suffering from a communicable disease can be handled in the baggage car; but as the baggage section is part of the rail diesel car and is occupied by the train baggageman and the news agent, it is not considered that such cases should be handled.

I am advised that a copy of the reply from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was sent to Mr. Stiles.

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF GASPEREAU SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries if any representations have been made by Gloucester county fishermen asking for an extension of the gaspereau fishing season in that county from June 30? If so, has any decision been reached?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, representations have been received from two individuals suggesting that the gaspereau fishing season be extended in Gloucester county beyond June 30. Although the run of gaspereaux in that area this year commenced late, it has now reached a point where from a conservation point of view it is considered essential that the season should not be extended beyond June 30 next.

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I have a supplementary question. Have any representations been received with regard to the extension of the gaspereau fishing season in the Miramichi area?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I have no knowledge offhand that any have been received, but I will take the hon. member's question as notice.

CANADIAN PACIFIC STEAMSHIPS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED REQUEST FOR COMPULSORY STRIKE ARBITRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): On Wednesday, June 4, I directed to the Prime Minister a question which appears in Hansard of that day, inquiring whether he had received a suggestion from the Victoria chamber of commerce for compulsory arbitration in the present strike against the C.P.R. on the west coast. His answer was that he had no recollection of having received such a letter but that he would look into the matter and endeavour to give his answer the next day. I wonder whether he could now indicate an answer to that question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure as to the identity of the organization which communicated with me, but I know that several organizations have brought this question to the attention of the government in letters and communications directed to me or to other ministers.

Mr. Howard: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The one I referred to suggested that the government should impose compulsory arbitration to settle the strike. It was in that regard that I was inquiring whether it is the intention of the government to follow that suggestion and impose compulsory arbitration to solve the problem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is the second time the hon. gentleman has apparently indicated his support of that procedure. There has been no decision in that regard. However, I will assure the hon. gentleman that his representations in that connection will receive such attention as they deserve.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and a question of privilege. The Prime Minister has deliberately twisted and distorted a statement I made.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those with an eggshell sensibility. However, I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw that statement. He must have had a purpose in asking that question and suggesting a course of action. If he did not have one, then I wonder why he worded his question in the way he did.

Mr. Winch: Because he wants to know where you stand.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister wants any comment—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister has taken exception to what the hon. member has said. I would ask the hon. member to consider what he has said in that light and advise me what he thinks it is proper to do.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has already taken objection to what was said by the Prime Minister. May I ask you to take that matter into consideration also.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I am awaiting the reply of the hon. member for Skeena.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I just do not believe that the comments I had to make about deliberate distortion of the implication behind my remarks need withdrawing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard: However, Mr. Speaker, if you insist, I will withdraw them. Out of deference to you I will do so.

Mr. Speaker: I have not insisted on any particular course of action. I simply put it to the hon. member that his words were taken as offensive, and asked whether he would wish to modify them in any way.

Mr. Howard: Not particularly, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member to give me time to deal with this matter before we proceed to the next one. I understood the Prime Minister to suggest that those words were unparliamentary and that they ought to be withdrawn. I am afraid that I cannot agree that the expression used goes beyond the limits allowed. Deliberate distortion is perhaps something in which all members of parliament engage. To my mind the situation here is different from an implication of deliberate misstatement or falsehood. I would not wish to force the hon. member to change the expression if he himself does not see fit to do so.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF NEXT MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would take the house into his confidence regarding the decision at which the government has seemingly arrived as to when a dominion-provincial conference is to be held, particularly in the light of a statement made yesterday to the association of mayors and reeves by the premier of Ontario, who said he had been promised that in the month of September there will be a conference among the provinces, the municipalities and the federal government.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have seen no such statement as the hon. gentleman has attributed to the premier of Ontario, but I am sure if the premier of Ontario is as anxious as I am to take the hon. gentleman into his confidence on this or any other subject, the hon. gentleman will have no trouble in obtaining all the information he desires.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question. I ask the hon. minister if he has not read this morning's Globe and Mail in which the premier of Ontario is reported to have said that the federal-provincial-municipal conference which the Prime Minister has promised for September would deal with the kernel of the problem, and that this has to do with a realistic division of revenue and taxation sources. May I inquire, if the premier of Ontario can give this information to the people of Ontario, is it asking too much for the Minister of Finance to give this information to the House of Commons?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, is no, sir. The answer to the second question was I think given by myself in reply to the earlier question asked by the hon. member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

OIL—REQUEST BY GARAGE OPERATORS ASSOCIATION FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the following question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received a request for action by any branch of his department from Mr. Elliott, of Peterborough, an official of the Ontario garage operators association, with regard to the relationships between oil companies and retail outlets in this country? If so, has the minister any comments to make on the case made by Mr. Elliott?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. gentleman for the notice he gave me of this question. I have received a request from the general manager of the garage operators association of Ontario for an investigation into certain activities of the oil companies. The general manager and other officials of the association, including Mr. Elliott, are to meet with the director under the Combines Investigation Act on July 2 next to elaborate their complaints. These complaints, as in all cases, will be fully studied. Until this meeting has taken place, and until any inquiries which may then be indicated as appropriate to be made have been pursued to a point where it would be proper for me to do so, I would be unable to make any further comment.

POTATOES

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. What action, if any, is being taken by the agricultural stabilization board to alleviate the condition of potato growers in Prince Edward Island, who at this late date have over 800 carloads of potatoes on hand, with little prospect of disposing of the same?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, assistance has been offered by the stabilization board to the Prince Edward Island potato growers and/or the provincial government for diversion of the surplus potatoes as stock food or otherwise on the same basis of payment as applied to New Brunswick potato growers for their surplus potatoes which go into starch diversion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

GATT—INQUIRY AS TO RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. V. Yacula (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the following question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce: (a) When will the general agreement on tariffs and trade, GATT, be up for renewal? (b) Will representations be made at that time to the effect that Canada's position be recognized in a special category? (c) In view of the fact that there is a demand in the United States for tariff protection, is there any likelihood that this agreement will not be renewed by the congress of the United States?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will have to accept that question as notice.

TRANSFER OF CF-100 AIRCRAFT TO BELGIUM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is in a position to answer the question I asked yesterday regarding the transfer of CF-100 jet aircraft to Belgium?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I regret that due to an unexpected absence yesterday I was unable to be here to give answers to questions which were asked of me. The question was with regard to the transfer of CF-100 jet aircraft to Belgium, and I was asked whether I would give the house the cost to Canada of that transfer.

The answer is as follows. This was a joint mutual aid program between the United States and Canada to provide CF-100 jet aircraft to Belgium. The cost to Canada will amount to approximately $10,276,000. Some $3,625,000 was included in the export figures for the month of May.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Trade and Commerce in a position to answer the question which in his absence yesterday was put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who undertook to accept it as notice and bring it to the minister's attention?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Essex East was inquiring with regard to an answer I gave the day before, in which I had said some preliminary conversations had been held, and this had to do with the regulations of the United States which appeared to interfere with trade on the part of subsidiaries in Canada.

Well, my hon. friend, from his long experience on this side of the house, knows that these preliminary discussions are quite the normal discussions on what is called the official level. Some officials of my department have conversed with officials of the United States embassy just to have an exchange of views.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Are we to understand, Mr. Speaker, that the conversations were carried on only in Ottawa, and that they have not gone beyond this?

Mr. Churchill: We have followed the practice followed by my hon. friend in past years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My question was, do I understand that the conversations held were merely with officials in Ottawa and have not gone beyond that? If they have not, is it proposed to make representations, as my hon. friend said the day before yesterday he would consider, from government to government?

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have said the conversations were between officials of my department here, the Department of Trade and Commerce, and officials of the United States embassy in Ottawa, which answers the first part of the question. We are quite prepared to take such steps as may be necessary to pursue this matter further, and in due course the house will be informed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask another supplementary question. My hon. friend will appreciate, I am sure, that this is a matter of some urgency. It involves, as the minister is aware, the sale of automobiles to another country and a situation which if corrected might afford some relief to the unemployment which exists in the automobile industry in Canada.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member mentions urgency. This matter first came to the attention of the former administration of which my hon. friend was a member, and he is only now discovering the urgency. At least we are being informed and propose to take such steps as may be necessary.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the minister not aware that in Arnprior during the election campaign the Prime Minister promised to make an investigation into this?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this exchange is getting into the category of a debate. The last supplementary question which the hon. member asked was simply a statement of information, and if he is proceeding along the same line I would ask him to drop it there.

LEAD AND ZINC—PROPOSED GLOBAL PLAN FOR MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a perfectly proper question. Has the minister had an opportunity to pursue and meditate upon the question I asked yesterday with respect to the United States global plan for the regulation of the marketing of lead and zinc?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to my hon. friend's global question is that I am not aware that the state department of the United States has yet lent its support to any proposal for regulating the flow of lead and zinc to world markets. The government is always prepared to examine and give consideration to any proposals which would appear to be in the interest of the Canadian lead and zinc producers.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—STATEMENT ON SUGGESTED DELAY IN MAKING SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the hon. member for Essex East questioned a report I gave to the house with reference to unemployment in regard to the release date, and I promised at that time I would look into the matter.

I have checked into this, and find that there was no unusual delay in making this survey in May. As the hon. member may recall, in my answer given on June 11, as recorded at pages 1038 and 1039 of Hansard, I stated that this labour force survey is made by the dominion bureau of statistics normally during the week following the middle of each month or, more precisely, during the second last full week of each month, the main exception to this being December, when the survey is taken earlier in the month due to the Christmas holidays.

The end of the survey week has varied over recent years, with the exception of December, from the 15th of the month to the 24th of the month. May 1958, August 1957 and March 1956 were all months when the survey week happened to end on the 24th of the month.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to answer the question which was asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate yesterday with regard to a report I made about an agreement respecting the care of Hungarian refugees. I find that March 13 is the date of the letter from the director of the trade and industry branch of the department of planning and development in Ontario in which he indicated they would accept the agreement.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the hon. lady a supplementary question. Has she been able to ascertain whether this agreement is in any respect more favourable to Ontario than the agreement made with the province of Saskatchewan at the very beginning of the Hungarian movement?

Mrs. Fairclough: I would think the answer to that is obvious. The answer is no.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady mind ascertaining from her department whether in fact the answer is obvious, because Ontario asked for a great deal more.

Mrs. Fairclough: I would be glad to inquire and inform the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO SITTING ON DOMINION DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister relating to the activities of the House of Commons on Dominion day. This question stems from a statement made by the leader of the opposition two years ago in which he objected to the house sitting on Dominion day because of that day's general significance. I wonder if the Prime Minister has any comment to make with regard to the sittings of the house on Dominion day in the light of that statement made by Mr. Drew.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances, when we intend to observe the ceremonies on Dominion day to acquaint Canadians as a whole with the history of their country, or at least bring to their attention the fact that July 1 is the national birthday, it is felt—and I intend to have a motion placed before the house accordingly—that while hon. members as a whole may not desire to remain entirely inactive that day, the house should not begin its session until 4.30 in the afternoon. I intend to have a motion placed on the order paper to that effect.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING TAX RENTAL AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would be able to indicate when the correspondence with the government of Manitoba with respect to the tax rental agreements could be tabled.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to have that done at once. The last time my hon. friend asked this question he said he wanted to have tabled the correspondence with the premier of Manitoba, but there has been some change in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not yet.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, June 26, 1958

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable John R. Cartwright, judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 26th June, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General (Administrative)

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ELECTRIC POWER, NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether he expects soon to be able to table the correspondence with the premier of Newfoundland, about which a motion was passed on June 18.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, I shall do that, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR

BRUSSELS—STATEMENT ON REPORTED RESIGNATION OF CHAPERONE OF STUDENT GUIDES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Trade and Commerce is now in a position to answer the question I asked in his absence yesterday.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday as reported at page 1609 of Hansard the hon. member for Levis referred to a story carried in the Toronto Star of June 24 with regard to the Canadian pavilion at the world's trade fair at Brussels. His question was as follows:

—has the minister, as alleged in the newspaper story, curtly accepted the resignation of Madame Valmore Bienvenue, chaperone of the university students who are acting as guides at the Canadian pavilion, and would the minister comment on the whole situation?

I have seen the story in the Toronto Star. I did not curtly but, rather, courteously accepted the resignation of Madame Bienvenue, which I judged was put before me in good faith, and I apprized her of our appreciation of her services. I had no knowledge that there was anything more to it than that.

The story in the Star talks about low morale. My information is that the morale among the students over there is very high. Visitors who have been attending the exhibition have reported largely that the Canadian pavilion is a credit to Canada. Some have said otherwise, but most of the reports I have received recently say that it is a credit to Canada; that the European visitors are impressed with the exhibit, and that the student guides are good representatives of our country. They are enjoying a remarkably fine experience in being chosen to spend about six months in Europe, the type of experience that almost any university student would like to have, and I think they are a credit to Canada. I know of no low morale on the part of any members of the staff whatsoever. Some difficulties may arise from time to time which I think are insignificant.

May I say this with regard to the exhibit over there. The Toronto Star story says something about lack of funds. That exhibit has cost about $3 million. Other countries exhibiting at the world's fair are spending $18 million or over $20 million on their exhibits and, of course, we do not expect to compete in a circle of that size. But if you compare the Canadian exhibit with that of countries of similar size and wealth I think you will find that it is quite satisfactory to Canada.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the guides have written a letter to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a copy of which has been sent also to the Prime Minister. Would the minister be kind enough to table that letter and also the three reports that were sent to him or probably to the Minister of Justice by the mounted police, who are also in attendance at the fair; and also the letter of resignation of Madame Bienvenue?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of some of those letters to which the hon. member refers. I see no reason why some of those others which he mentioned might not be tabled. I will look into the matter and let him know.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): So far as the Minister of Justice is concerned, since the hon. member mentioned my name, I have no knowledge of any reports having been submitted. I will make inquiries in the department to ascertain whether they have or not. If they are in the nature of routine reports from the constables on duty there to their superior officers in Canada, under such circumstances I doubt whether it would be proper to table them. I will have inquiries made to see whether there is anything that could or should be tabled.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 25, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, at the end of yesterday's sitting I was saying that my constituency is extremely rich in mineral resources, and I am now happy to announce to the house that uranium deposits have been discovered quite recently in northern Timiskaming in the Kippewa and Hunter's Point area, and that these deposits, according to experts, bid fair to be among the richest in the land.

I was particularly happy to learn, while listening to the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), that the government intends to take steps to continue and increase the assistance to gold mines. I was all the happier to learn this because in my constituency there is one extremely rich gold mine, the Belleterre mine, which has been in production for close to 20 years. I submit that the government should look after the problems which beset gold producers, not only by continuing to grant subsidies, but by increasing them. That is, of course no permanent solution but to my mind, every time the occasion offers, representations should be made to the American government for an increase in the price of gold. In this connection, I fully agree with my colleague the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Martel) who requested the Canadian government to take such steps as are necessary so that the price of that product may be increased. I do not believe it is an exaggeration to state that, at this time, the price of gold should be set at $75 an ounce.

Mr. Speaker, among the budget resolutions, that which refers to public works is particularly noteworthy. To my mind we should not be content with a single huge operation in a single, possibly unexplored, area, but money should be voted towards public works in the populated areas of this country, where there could be unemployment. Such works would be of benefit to localities which need the suggested improvements and would also help to relieve local unemployment.

(Text):

I have reviewed some of the problems pertaining to the northern section of my riding, the county of Timiskaming, and I should like to speak briefly now about some of the problems that beset the southern section of the riding, the county of Pontiac. The population of the county of Pontiac is made up principally of farmers, workers in the forest and lumbering industries, and miners. I have dealt with farmers throughout Pontiac county for quite a number of years, and I remember how in the last years of the Liberal regime farmers would come up to me and say, "Well, we are just hanging on. We do not know how long we can still hang on, because the situation is bad and is getting worse."

The present government has been in power for approximately one year but the farmers I see today, who are engaged in dairy farming and mixed farming, tell me they are well satisfied with the measures adopted so far by the government. They say these measures have contributed in a real sense to the betterment of their condition, and they tell me that all we have to do is to continue in that vein and the farming section of our population will certainly always be grateful to the government.

Speaking about improvement in the lot of the farmers, I think of the many "gloom doomers" on the other side of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martineau: —who have been talking about a slump, about a recession, and about the so-called horrible calamities that have beset the country since, due to unfortunate circumstances, they are no longer the leaders of the country. I really think their zeal is most touching but it is certainly not convincing, especially if one analyses their statements in the light of the plight of the farmers, particularly small farmers such as we have in my riding, who as a class were really completely neglected under the former administration.

In the county of Pontiac we have some very good fairs which are organized each year by the farmers. I believe the outstanding one among them is the Shawville fair, an event which has taken place every year for over 100 years. The farmers of the Shawville area and Pontiac county generally are indeed very pleased to know that the Minister of Agriculture will be able to open the fair in September. Tomorrow another agricultural fair is opening at Quyon, and it will last a couple of days. I take this occasion to invite any of my colleagues who have a bit of time on their hands or who would like a restful change to drive the 30-odd scenic miles up to Pontiac county and visit that fair. I am quite sure they will find it most enjoyable. A little later the Chapeau fair will be held, also one of the outstanding agricultural events of our county.

I am pleased to say that some of the exhibits at these fairs have won wide acclaim and first prizes at some of our national fairs, such as the Royal winter fair. The government has given generous grants to some of these fairs, but I suggest that wherever possible the grants should be increased. It is money that is certainly well spent, and it goes far to promote interest in agricultural events.

As in the county of Timiskaming so in the county of Pontiac there is a crying need for a public investment program. This need is all the more crying in that the county was neglected for a great number of years. There are urgent public works projects that should be initiated and soon. Some of them, such as the construction of the new Bryson bridge, are long overdue. There is a very dangerous situation for the users of that bridge, and I suggest that all measures that may be taken should now be taken without delay to see that this much needed bridge is constructed, as the present structure has proved completely inadequate to carry the traffic which has to go over it.

Other bridges are also needed in the county. I shall mention only two. A bridge is needed from Quyon to Fitzroy Harbour and a new bridge is needed at Chapeau, Quebec. So far as the Quyon bridge is concerned, I believe that such a project could be incorporated into the national capital plan. It was with great gratification that I learned that the government had decided to acquire the green belt on the outskirts of Ottawa. While on that subject, I think Gatineau park, some of which lies within my constituency, should be enlarged. The Quyon bridge could probably then be incorporated in the larger national capital area.

The development of the national capital is perhaps not something for the immediate future, but I believe that in the course of the next decade the city of Ottawa is slated to become one of the great capitals of the world.

I remember coming to Ottawa as a student in the pre-war years, perhaps 20 years ago, and at that time Ottawa was still a kind of village. It may have been a big village but it was still a village, and I am just amazed at the progress which has taken place here during the last 10 years. Ottawa is truly becoming one of the great cities of this country and if we consider the development which has taken place in just one decade—having in mind that 10 years is a very small period of time in the life of a city and still less in the life of a country—we can surely envisage in the not too distant future a city of surpassing beauty on the banks of the Ottawa river.

It therefore behooves the government to look toward those days. I know steps have been taken, but I think the field of activity and progress should be widened so that Ottawa will acquire a green belt and there will be set aside large areas as national park lands in order to complete the national capital program.

It is in this larger area which I have in mind that I believe my own constituency of Pontiac-Timiskaming can play its part because, judging from the opinions of the many tourists who visit us each year, my constituency is one of the beauty spots of Canada. Yet at the present time it lacks tourist accommodation, and I think some consideration should be given by the government with respect to aid to the operators of tourist resorts. The government has already announced that it will bring forward legislation to help small businessmen. I believe the tourist resort operators should be included in that group, and that their needs should be considered since they do bring considerable sums of money into Canada. In this way my county will have an opportunity to become outstanding, because from the point of view of natural beauty it has all that it takes to become a great tourist attraction.

I have examined the criticisms of the budget in the speeches of hon. members, most of which I actually heard delivered in the house. All I can see in these criticisms is a lot of contradictions, whining and groaning. The critics have singled out the huge deficit, as they call it, and have also talked about unemployment. I do not see why hon. members of the opposition should be particularly alarmed about deficit financing; as a matter of fact practically every minister of finance during the long Liberal regime spoke about cyclical budgetting. They stated that in times of prosperity one had to accumulate a surplus, and that when there was a pause one should not hesitate to have a deficit as a sort of pump primer to the economic wheel. Why should they now deny what they previously accepted as a sacred economic principle? They say there is now a pause, they say there is a recession, and they apply all their energies to exaggerating that condition.

There is, as the Minister of Finance has said, a slackening in the expansion of our economic activity, but there is no desperate crisis such as the members of the opposition would have us believe. In that connection I can truthfully say that in the county of Pontiac there is this year more employment than for a long time, and from reports in the newspapers during the last few days it would seem to me that the members of the opposition have lost 150,000 reasons for their whining and groaning.

I say this because, as everyone knows, unemployment has dropped in one month by 150,000, and that is the greatest drop ever known in a single month. Therefore the reasons for opposition criticisms of the budget are fast disappearing and when unemployment no longer presents a formidable problem I just wonder what the opposition will have to talk about.

In conclusion I would like to renew my congratulations to the Minister of Finance. He understands the economic problems of our country and has taken steps to resolve them. I am sure the methods he has used, some of which are already in effect and have brought results, will solve our economic difficulties, and they do present a logical answer to those difficulties. For these reasons I submit that the subamendment and the amendment should be defeated, and that the resolution of the minister should be supported by this house.

(Translation):

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is customary for the Minister of Finance, when making his budget speech, to deal with all matters relating to the welfare and progress of our country.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) called the budget a sick budget. Personally I think it is a lame budget because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) forgot to deal with an important matter concerning all provinces and more particularly the central provinces. I refer to federal provincial tax arrangements which have been talked about for a long time and to which no final solution has yet been found. Yet, it is a matter of record that when the Minister of Finance sat in the opposition he kept promising that he would find a solution to the problem. In his budget speech, the minister merely referred to it in the following words, as found on page 1234 of Hansard:

> Additional financial assistance being given to the provinces will enable them to proceed with needed capital improvements in the provincial and municipal fields.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this vital question should have received more attention on the part of the Minister of Finance; he should have spoken at greater length on this subject. This matter was raised in the house about two weeks ago and it was not dealt with in a satisfactory way that would have told us what to expect, because the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) have not yet told us that they will soon call a federal provincial conference nor if they have something better to propose or to substitute for the agreements now in force, that is to say the equalization and stabilization payments.

As far as we, in the province of Quebec are concerned, a province in which this matter has been under public consideration for nearly 15 years, it would be important that we know if the government will maintain the present agreements or if it will return to the province of Quebec its field of direct taxation as requested by the premier of that province.

We have not had the pleasure of hearing ministers representing Quebec constituencies speak on this matter in this house but, in the last election campaign, we heard them say that the province of Quebec had been despoiled and done out of its rights, and that a Conservative government would restore what had been taken away from the province.

However, on June 3 we heard the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) make a fine legal statement to the house but, unfortunately, since he had used up all his time, we could not find out whether he approved or not of the equalization payments now in force or if he proposed something better and more progressive. I hope that before long the hon. member for Bellechasse, an eminent jurist and lawyer, will speak on behalf of the province of Quebec on this matter and inform us of his conclusions so that we may know what to expect and what is the stand of members from Quebec on this matter. I feel sure that the hon. member will speak for the province of Quebec and will say what he thinks of the tax agreements now in force, and whether he is for or against their maintenance, whether he feels that the province of Quebec should be handed back its powers of direct taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of detailing the history of the tax agreements arrived at between the central government and the provinces, nor to repeat that the provinces were forced to accept these agreements, and even to sign them under duress, as has been held by some.

May I simply say that the provinces were by no means obliged to accept the proposed agreements, whose object and aim was to apportion between the provinces the income accruing from direct taxation provided by income tax, corporation taxes and succession duties. It seems that if certain provinces were not satisfied, all they had to do was to levy taxes inside their own borders on the three bases which I have just mentioned and to reject the suggested agreements.

These agreements were arrived at in order to prevent double taxation and to bring relief to the Canadian taxpayer.

It is recognized, under our constitution, that the federal government and the provinces have a concurrent right to direct taxation and the hon. premier of Quebec has at last acknowledged that principle, which he was the only one to reject, since, in 1954, in enacting his own provincial income tax law he had inserted in the bill a preamble stating that provinces had priority over the federal government in the field of direct taxation. Later on, however, he withdrew from that stand by deleting those words about priority.

This principle being acknowledged, Mr. Speaker, what was the aim of the federal government in seeking to reach an agreement with the provinces about direct taxation, and how did the federal government happen to get involved in that problem?

This very complex question is a result of the 1930 depression when the prairie provinces, unable to face their obligations and bending under the load of unemployment relief decided to ask for the assistance of the federal government.

At that time, all provinces were anxious to stop unemployment but, unable and unwilling to do anything, they stated one after the other that unemployment was a national problem, which came under the federal government. This was the time when groups of unemployed marched on Ottawa to force the government to action.

In times of depression and trouble, Mr. Speaker, all problems are referred to the central administration, but in times of prosperity and abundance everyone claims more than his own share. Following that economic depression, the Liberal government, which was back in power in 1935, instituted unemployment insurance and, as everyone knows, millions of dollars are spent each year for the administration of that social security legislation. The provinces did not help the central government at all in the administration of that legislation; however, the federal government must have the revenues required to make it work.

After the 1930's, the Liberal government instituted old age pensions and the provinces gave their approval. Later on, the central government advocated the establishment of arts and trades schools and subscribed a large part of their cost of construction without any protest on the part of the provinces. Later came subsidies for the construction of hospitals, subsidies for public health, pensions for the disabled and the blind and also family allowances. There, again, there was no protest from the provinces, as far as I know, against such steps. For these reasons, I have said and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that if the obligations of the federal government have no limits, its powers must also be limitless.

Everything is being laid at the door of the central government but, on the other hand, everyone wants a large share of its revenues without wondering whether the central government will be able to meet its undertakings. Let me recall some facts which give a good illustration of this.

A few years ago, when cattle suffering from tuberculosis had to be slaughtered as a measure of protection for human beings, and to keep our livestock healthy, by which government was the job done, and who paid a compensation to our farmers for their losses? It was the central government, and no province protested.

When, a few years ago, an epidemic of foot and mouth disease broke out in the west, in Saskatchewan, what government sent men to destroy the affected cattle, and who paid an indemnity to the owners? It was the federal government who was involved, with no help whatever from the provinces.

If, for instance, an epidemic broke out tomorrow among cattle in this country, and cattle had to be destroyed and an indemnity paid, who would be called upon to pay the shot? Again the federal government, and the provinces would claim that it is a matter of national concern and not their responsibility.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I have demonstrated to a certain extent what are the central government's obligations to the people of Canada, which this government has to fulfil lest it be charged with neglecting its duty. However, to fulfil these obligations the federal government must count on certain revenue.

I claim moreover that the Liberal governments which administered this country for 22 years have always worked with the very best intentions and made serious and sincere efforts to solve any difficult problem. I would hope that the present government will continue along the same lines.

In 1955, the Liberal government proposed equalization and stabilization payments which constitute an equitable distribution of wealth and revenues throughout this country in order to help the poorer, less fortunate provinces. This is a problem which occurs in any federal system, and the government must act in a way that will safeguard national unity and allow every citizen to share equally in the common wealth.

It has been only in the last few years that the two richest and most highly industrialized provinces began to show a desire to break their ties with the central government, without renouncing their rights or privileges. They wanted to avail themselves of their abundant revenues, taking no account of the rest of the country.

Have they forgotten that if they are prosperous and if their industries are thriving, it is because they sell their products in the other provinces? For instance, how many billion dollars worth of agricultural equipment have they sold to the prairie provinces, when we know that certain highly mechanized farms use $20,000 to $25,000 worth of agricultural machinery? How many billion dollars worth of furniture, electrical appliances, cars, radio and television sets, etc., etc., have the central provinces sold to the prairie provinces? It is the sale of these goods manufactured in the central provinces, that keeps their manpower at work and brings them very substantial revenue.

Equalization payments were instituted by the Liberal government in order to correct the situation and allow the citizens of less favoured provinces to attain a level of prosperity and wealth equal to that of other provinces.

We do not know the final policy of the government on this matter. However, the Prime Minister stated in Winnipeg during the last election campaign that his party, while in opposition, had criticized not the principle of sharing the federal treasury with the provinces, but the extent of that sharing, as regards payment of funds to provincial governments. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), taking the floor on this question on June 2 last, emphasized the needs of the provinces rather than equalization payments.

However, the promise was made during the last election campaign that a conference would be held between the federal government and the provinces to settle this problem once and for all.

When will this conference be held? We do not know yet but, as representatives of the people, we should like to know.

We know the attitude of the premier of Ontario, Mr. Frost. He stated that he was not satisfied with the agreements developed in 1955 and proposed another formula which would bring his province 100 million dollars annually, an amount, he said, the province needs. He took part in the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958 and stated that he would get what he wanted.

I said at the outset that this question has been discussed in the province of Quebec for the past 15 years and that the premier of Quebec, the great champion of the rights of his province, always stated, outside the conferences in which he took part, that he would obtain for his province what had been taken away from it. Of course, he was never clear and precise on this matter and never made concrete suggestions that would lead to a solution of this problem. I just said that the premier of Quebec stated outside of the conferences that he would obtain for his province what had been taken away from it. However, when he comes to Ottawa, he does not speak that way and merely repeats what he said in some previous conference.

Indeed, if we refer to the proceedings of the 1957 conference, we see that the premier of Quebec repeated the same vague and indefinite proposals he had submitted at the 1955 conference. The conclusions of the brief submitted by the province of Quebec are summarized as follows:

(a) qualification and delimitation of the powers of taxation of both the federal and provincial authorities, in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Canadian constitution, that is to say having regard to the past, the present and the future;

(b) simplification of public taxation in such a way as to reduce its cost and facilitate its collection;

(c) moderation in the domain of taxation to be arrived at by the collaboration of all public powers, in such a way as to ease the burden of the taxpayer so far as possible.

As we can see, Mr. Speaker, the position of the premier of Quebec was always vague, confused, indefinite. And I might add that his motivation was very simple: those proposals were made by a Liberal government and the premier of our province wanted to play petty politics instead of working for the progress of our country.

Now that the Conservatives are in power and that the sworn enemies of the prime minister of Quebec are in the opposition, he might modify his attitude and show himself in a more conciliatory mood; in fact, for the last year we have not heard those sarcastic statements on autonomy, on the protection and retrocession of our rights.

Moreover, since the Conservative members from Quebec who were elected to this house have fully agreed with Mr. Duplessis on the question of tax arrangements, would they be so kind as to tell us if they approve equalization and stabilization payments that were introduced by the Liberals but maintained by their own party until now, and approved in principle by their chief, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker)?

Could they suggest any better and more concrete way of restoring to Quebec all it was deprived and despoiled of, as the leader of that province used to say?

They did however promise, through the ministers representing constituencies of the province of Quebec, namely the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois), that everything the Liberal government had taken away by way of taxes and rights would be returned to the province of Quebec.

If there was a gross injustice, I ask that the situation be settled at once and I urge the Minister of Finance to call a federal-provincial conference immediately to that end.

Besides the Conservative members from the province of Quebec who advocated that doctrine during the election campaign—I talked about it a moment ago—during that same period, the Minister of Finance himself stated in the province of Quebec that the provinces could expect justice in the field of taxation. The Minister of Finance came to my riding, in Montreal, on the 18th or 25th of March 1958, and said that the problem would be solved to everyone's satisfaction. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that at the time a wave of conservatism was sweeping over my constituency. After the visit of that hon. minister, where he stated that everyone could expect justice and that the difficult question of taxation as well as that of tax agreements would be settled, I began to gain ground and I was re-elected with the rather comfortable majority of 4,000 votes. I therefore thank the Minister of Finance for his help and I am grateful to him for it. The hon. minister had insisted on that question but he does not seem very anxious now to call a conference with the provinces. In fact, his delay in fulfilling a promise made during the last election, his silence on this subject in his budget speech and the humility for which he is well known lead us to believe that he is satisfied with the way in which the tax problem has been settled in 1955 and that he feels unable to bungle that lasting Liberal piece of work.

(Text):

Mr. J. W. Kucherepa (High Park): Mr. Speaker, rising to take part in this debate I should like at the very outset to add my congratulations to those which have already been extended to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for having brought down this realistic budget, his first budget, and the first Conservative budget for over 20 years. I should like to congratulate him on the courageous attitude he has taken and the measures adopted to combat and overcome the many problems which face our economy at the present time. I should not wish to miss the opportunity of saying that for the most part these are problems which were inherited from the previous administration as a result of certain policies set out by that administration during its last days in office. I refer specifically, of course, to the tight money policy. Let me quote from the budget address of the former minister of finance as reported on page 2216 of Hansard, March 14, 1957. Mr. Harris said on that occasion, and I quote:

The same excess of demand for goods and services was also reflected in a "tight" credit situation. The monetary policy of the Bank of Canada has been one of restraint, and the fiscal policy of the government has worked in the same direction.

This was the policy of the former Liberal government the members of which party are today speaking diametrically opposite to that policy. So that there may be no confusion in this matter, let me point out that Mr. Harris in his speech that day went on to say:

> It is true that the Bank of Canada could have further increased the supply of money and credit.

But, Mr. Speaker, they did not do this although the former minister and his colleagues were well aware of the repercussions of their actions as exemplified by a still further statement on the part of Mr. Harris as reported at page 2216 of Hansard of that day when he said:

> Higher rates of interest have given encouragement to saving, have moderated a certain amount of spending and have caused some capital programs to be postponed.

Let us consider the effect of this policy on municipal governments in Canada as an example of the problems which resulted from such a policy in all spheres of the Canadian economy. In discussing this problem I will use as an example the municipality of metropolitan Toronto with whose problems I am more closely acquainted. This municipal government is operating at the present time on a ten-year plan of capital expansion to cost about $1 billion or approximately $100 million a year. It is proposed to finance about $90 million worth of capital works every year. Despite the high credit rating which this municipal government enjoys both in Canada and in the United States there has been an increase of 2 per cent in the cost of its capital financing and it becomes obvious that a 2 per cent increase in the interest rate on $90 million of projects over a period of 20 years will cost the people of this city $18 million over and above what this financing would have cost if the tight money policy of the previous Liberal administration had not been in effect. Besides this $90 million of capital works program which is debentured over 20 years, as a rule, the people of the metropolitan area of Toronto are taxed in addition with a special two mill capital levy which is collected out of current taxation and which amounts to over $6 million a year and is in effect a device being used by this particular municipal government to overcome to some degree the effects of the tight money policy.

It is not to be wondered that the government of metropolitan Toronto has requested special aid from this government to assist in the building of the proposed east-west subway in the city of Toronto, a project which is estimated to cost about $200 million. The effect of the tight money policy on this project alone, over and above the ordinary debenture charges, will be to add $40 million of cost to this undertaking calculated at the rate of 2 per cent per annum as I have outlined. As a result of this kind of difficulty many public works have been postponed as was predicted by Mr. Harris in March of 1957, and as a result of this postponement the number of unemployed has increased.

The latest results of this tight money policy, I submit, are manifested by the greatly reduced numbers of supporters of that former government sitting in this house today. At this time I should like to make a suggestion to the government with regard to the financing problems facing all our municipalities. There is a statute known as the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 183 which provides for loans to municipalities by the federal government to enable a municipality to pay the whole or any part of the cost of constructing or making extensions or improvements to or renewals of a municipal waterworks system, a municipal gas plant, a municipal electric light system, or other municipal project, if the project to be constructed or the extensions or improvements or renewals to be made will be a self-liquidating project, and if the project is urgently needed and will assist in the relief of unemployment for the municipality. Any application by a municipality under this act requires approval by the lieutenant-governor in council for the province and requires a municipality to obtain an undertaking from the province that the province will guarantee to the government of Canada the payment of interest and principal of the loan.

Under this act the interest on such a loan is at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and the loan is to be amortized by semi-annual payments sufficient to pay off the loan during a period fixed by the federal government and such period is not to be longer than the estimated life of the project. This act to my knowledge has never been implemented. I should like to suggest that the government investigate the possibilities of this act having in mind that it was passed in 1938 and therefore might be in need of revision in so far as the aggregate principal amount of loans made under its authority is concerned as well as other items which may be desirable to change at this time.

I should like to take this opportunity of commending the government for the speedy action it took in again amending the housing act, early in this session. I believe this will help not only to solve some of our housing problems but will also help to relieve some of the unemployment, the roots of which this government inherited from the previous Liberal administration, whose unrealistic tight money policy did so much to create this unfortunate situation.

In September 1957 the new Conservative government made $150 million available for loans on mortgages to stimulate construction of houses, under the National Housing Act, in the fall and winter months. Subsequently, another $150 million was made available, making a total of $300 million in 1957. When the Conservatives took office in June 1957 the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation had no funds left for new commitments. The new national housing bill which the Conservative government introduced, while not changing the old one in principle went a good deal further to meet the needs of certain people, needs which had not been met in the past.

The effect of this new legislation has been, as was intended, to induce others to lend money under the act and to stimulate construction of low cost housing across Canada. The former Liberal government up to the time of the 1957 election, had not proposed any such amendment; on the contrary, their "tight money" policy ruled out any such possibility. Today they are critical of what the Conservatives did, and did at once on taking office and are continuing to do, as evidenced by the amendment brought in early in this session in this very important field of housing.

Much has been said by members of the Liberal party, regarding the lack of a budget during the last session. I wonder if my hon. friends in the Liberal party are aware that the last Liberal budget was for the fiscal year 1957-58 which did not end until March 31 last. So when hon. members of that party reiterate the question of why there was no budget brought down in the last session, they are in effect arguing that the last Liberal budget should have been scrapped or amended because of its shortcomings.

For the purpose of the record I should like to point out that the Liberals themselves did not feel obligated to present a budget when they called parliament into session on March 19, 1945, and dissolved it on April 16, 1945, with no sign of a new budget to succeed the last previous one of June 26, 1944. Nor was there one until October 12, 1945. The Liberal government in 1944-45 went 16 months without a budget whereas the present government has been in office less than 12 months and has brought in a budget and this in addition to a financial accounting given by the Minister of Finance during the last short session of parliament.

Much has been said by opposition members regarding the lack of tax cuts in the budget before us. They seem to have lost sight of the fact that in this budget the following tax cuts are included which were not present in the 1957-58 budget. The excise tax on automobiles has been cut by 25 per cent, from 10 per cent to 7½ per cent, at an estimated cost of the treasury of $20 million for the full fiscal year 1958-59. In the field of personal income tax, reduction exemptions for children were raised $100. One effect of this will be to free completely from income tax some 100,000 taxpayers. It will also give relief to about one and three-quarter million others. In a full year, the cost to the treasury will be about $60 million.

There has also been a reduction in the tax on income in the first two brackets of the income tax structure, which will benefit every taxpayer in Canada, particularly those whose taxable income is not more than $2,000 and that constitutes about 70 per cent of the taxpayers in this country.

A change was made in the corporation tax rate structure which will be of particular benefit to small corporations, although all corporations will receive a measure of relief. The lower rate of taxation, 20 per cent of profits, which used to apply only to profits of $20,000 or less, has been extended to apply to profits of between $20,000 and $25,000. Some 2,000 corporations which fall into this category will have a tax on profits within this range reduced from 47 per cent to 20 per cent. The cost to the treasury in the full fiscal year will be about $21 million.

The government's plan of spending many more millions on pubic works is obviously a very sound approach to the problem of unemployment. While the government has already cut taxes from the former high Liberal level, the government's public works program does not anticipate the effect that higher spending may have on industrial production but goes to the core of the problem at once. Besides, tax cuts bring immediate relief only to those paying taxes and it is the unemployed, not the taxpayer, whose need is most urgent today.

The Conservative government's tax reductions, higher pensions and abolition of artificial credit restrictions have been helpful, but their full effect has not yet been felt. In the same way, the full effect of the Liberal government's economic mistakes took some time to become evident, and even now in some degree these effects are still with us.

The acceleration of useful public works is, indeed, one of the recognized methods of inoculating and boosting the economy with the resultant increase in employment, trade and prosperity. People of the Toronto area are happy indeed that a substantial works program will be carried out soon in this locality. This program will provide essential public buildings, airport extensions and harbour improvements. More than $15 million will be spent in the metropolitan area and this should help not only to keep employment at a high peak but also to provide for the necessary improvements required to keep pace with the rapid development of this vital area of Canada.

The improvements to Malton and Toronto island airport at a cost of $4,335,000 are long overdue and have been a matter of great concern to the council and people of this area. The expenditure of $4,440,000 will bring about those necessary improvements and repairs to the Toronto harbour, which will provide the important facilities, so essential to accommodate the increased industry and commerce which will result from the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway.

The $5.3 billion budget which is being proposed—the largest in the history of this country in peacetime—will go a long way in stimulating our economy and helping to overcome the problem of unemployment. This sum does not include such items as the government's liabilities under its guarantee of insured loans under the National Housing Act and the variety of other disbursements which altogether are also working toward further stimulation of the economy of this country by this form of public investment. In the past year this amounted to $447 million, which moneys are available from the repayment of loans, insurance and pension accounts receipts and other non-budgetary sources, as shown in the white paper. This year this requirement will reach $755 million. This infusion into the economy should also be a stimulating factor in promoting a higher level of prosperity.

This should certainly satisfy some, if not all, of those critics in the opposition groups who have been asking what this government intends to do for the solution to the problem of unemployment, which I again reiterate was inherited from the previous Liberal administration which refused to recognize the warning signals and which took a course directly opposite—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, it appears that the hon. member is reading his speech rather than making it orally and this is contrary to citation 144 of Beauchesne.

Mr. Kucherepa: I am referring to notes because of the technical nature of the subject which I am now discussing. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the previous Liberal administration refused to recognize the warning signals and as a result of this took a course directly opposite to that which they were advised to take and as a result of that we find ourselves in the present economic dilemma which faces this country.

The members of the opposition made much of the present unemployment situation in Canada and yet in March 1955 when there were more than 400,000 people out of work the same Liberal party did not consider this to be a major problem. To summarize the situation, I should like to refer to page 3556 of Hansard of January 21, 1958, and the remarks of Mr. Solon Low, who was then leader of the Social Credit party in this house and a veteran of many parliaments, who had a full opportunity to observe events in this house for many years. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I have conducted ourselves all through this session as if we believed what I have just said. Now the Leader of the Opposition is asking the government to resign and give over the reins of government to the Liberal party without an election. As I think about that I remember how indifferent the Liberals were on several occasions to high unemployment during wintertime. They claimed it was seasonal and regional and temporary.
> Those terms—seasonal, regional and temporary—have been so burned into my conscience that I shall never forget them. When I bear in mind the fact that it was either policies instituted by that party or things they left undone which started this country into stagnation and carried it before last June 10 quite a way down that road; when I think of the tragic decline in farm cash income during the past six years; and when I add to these things the fact that the Liberal party got as far out of touch with the people of Canada as they did, I find it difficult to see for Canadians any advantage whatsoever in a change of government at this time from Conservative to Liberal.

These were the words of the leader of the Social Credit party who sat in this house during the last parliament and indeed they well summarize the situation as to where the roots of this unemployment problem might be traced.

Some hon. members imply that one of the main causes of unemployment in Canada is the suggestion to divert some 15 per cent of our purchases from the United States to the United Kingdom. Mr. Speaker, these hon. members claim that the Americans have reacted by cutting their imports from us. Similarly, perhaps they would have us believe that United States factories have closed down, leaving millions of workers idle because of this suggestion of increasing our trade with our oldest and perhaps one of our best customers in years gone by.

All this talk about United States reprisals is nonsense. The United States buys from Canada only what they have to buy. Fifteen per cent of our sales from the United States are made up of five main items. Most of the rest that Canada sells to the United States is made up of raw materials needed to keep United States factories going. Obviously, any reduction of these imports would mean idle workers in the United States, and conversely an industrial slow-down in the United States is bound to reduce demands for those Canadian products. This government has nothing but the friendliest feelings for the United States. Our efforts to expand trade with the United Kingdom were never directed against the United States but were aimed at serving the best interests of Canada. It would be in the interest of Canada to expand our trade with the United Kingdom because this would allow Britain to buy goods from Canada with those dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the Liberals had every opportunity to foresee the current trade recession with its resultant unemployment. What did they do? They did nothing. If anything, through their fiscal policy they contributed to it. The fiscal policy outlined in Mr. Harris' budget speech in 1957 confirms this statement.

Some Liberal members criticize the government for policies that they think are harmful to our relations with the United States and at the same time they suggest that Canada should use as a bargaining device our co-operation with the United States in questions of hemispheric defence. I cannot help but quote the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and the remarks he made on May 13, 1958, as reported at page 25 of Hansard, and which are as follows:

> We must naturally protect our interests when they are prejudiced by United States policy. We must, for instance, make it quite clear that the United States cannot expect full and complete co-operation in continental defence, which is desirable, if she treats us unfairly in her tariff and trade policies.

I submit that this kind of Liberal policy as enunciated by the leader of that party is not worthy of one who has had such vast experience in the field of international affairs and who should realize the serious implications of such a move. It is certainly not a matter for bargaining or bartering for special economic considerations which, I am sure, can be achieved through friendly negotiations between the governments of the United States and Canada.

I should like to refer now to the Liberal amendment which was in these words:

> This house regrets that the government, in its budget proposals, has failed to cope satisfactorily with the problems of the recession in spite of the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history and that it is moving towards greater trade restrictions at a time when other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction.

The Liberal amendment before us is most incongruous. On the one hand, it criticizes the government for failing to take steps in fighting the recession. I presume what is meant by that is increased spending as suggested by the Liberal party during the recent election campaign. Their propaganda, as manifested by the crash program of $400 million of further tax reductions plus a six weeks tax holiday, seems to indicate to me that this is their thinking on this matter. Yet in the same breath the amendment implies criticism of the government for spending too much when it refers to the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history. It appears to me that whoever masterminded this amendment does not believe in the maxim, "you can't have your cake and eat it too".

The second part of the amendment is also ambiguous and without too much meaning when read in conjunction with the statement of the Leader of the Opposition made on May 13 last to which I referred a few moments ago. If I may refresh the memories of hon. members, this is the way it went:

> We must naturally protect our interests when they are prejudiced by United States policy. We must, for instance, make it quite clear that the United States cannot expect full and complete co-operation in continental defence, which is desirable, if she treats us unfairly in her tariff trade policies.

This statement implies that the United States is unfair to us in her tariff and trade policies. This, of course, is contrary to what the amendment contains when it says, "that it"—meaning the government—"is moving towards greater trade restrictions at a time when other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction." So, Mr. Speaker, the amendment does not seem to have very much in the way of substance when it is so incohesive.

The C.C.F. amendment, of course, can best be understood in the light of the sum total of the remarks made by members of that group, especially in the light of the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), who on the one hand referred to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the most derogatory terms and on the other hand alluded to the kindness of the Soviet ambassador in Ottawa in affording him a free plane trip to British Columbia. In the light of this kind of thinking, there is not much point in discussing their amendment.

This debate affords me an opportunity to discuss another matter of international importance. We in Canada are of necessity spending many millions of dollars on defence each year while the international situation remains tense and strained, no worse and no better than it has been for some years.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully and I do not feel that this speech is so technical as to warrant reading. I would ask Your Honour to so direct the hon. member.

An hon. Member: You have not been in the house to know.

Mr. Kucherepa: I am merely referring to my notes from time to time. I am sure the hon. member who has objected has read more speeches in this house than any of the members now present.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have not read my speeches and I am asking that the hon. member not be allowed to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Once again I must ask hon. members not to refer to notes too extensively and to deliver their speeches rather than read them.

Mr. Kucherepa: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the western world has developed powerful military alliances which today are the greatest deterrent to war and aggression and which will continue to be essential for some time to come in maintaining the liberty and freedom which we in the western world still have with us today.

It is true that world peace now rests on power so threatening that neither side dares to use it. That being so, what we need now more than anything else is to return to that kind of rational thinking through which, by sincere inquiry and debate, we can distinguish the true and the false, the right and the wrong.

We must not take a defensive position on these international matters but we should bolster our now strong military alliances by furthering economic co-operation with our allies and other free countries to a similar degree so as to counteract the new challenge in the field of trade. Apparently the Soviet government believes this to be our vulnerable position. Therefore we should not hesitate to take steps to ensure a strong economic front among the free countries of the world at the earliest possible opportunity.

At the same time we must demonstrate that our values and ideas, shared by millions of others, represent a positive way of life based on great traditions of truth and justice which have been recognized as the unwritten international law throughout the centuries. This should be the basis of our thinking. I cannot help but reflect upon the inspiring words that the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom uttered in this house on June 13 last, and I quote from page 1151 of Hansard:

> You may ask how will it all end. I do not believe that we need fear the future if we hold firm to our faith and our ideals. In time even the monolithic dictatorships crumble and change, for although the free world by its very diversity often seems weak, in its variety and above all in its freedom it is fundamentally strong. I do not believe that a purely materialistic concept of life will forever satisfy men and women; nor do I fear a continuing struggle of ideas. This I think should be our chosen battleground.

If we can measure up to this conception in international affairs, then I believe that we will be able to solve the problems that confront us in the world today. Without this kind of foundation, neither meetings at the summit nor conferences in the capitals of the world can bring us enduring peace or security.

What we need today is to respect those international institutions such as the United Nations where debate can take place and where truth must eventually come to the fore. We must not be too eager to exchange the role of the United Nations for that of summit conferences. When we did that in the thirties, when we abandoned the League of Nations and pinned our hopes on a kind of summit meeting, the results were disastrous. The proper place and the best place for our deliberations on these vital matters is the United Nations, in full view of all the nations of the world. Summit conferences should be complementary to the United Nations but should not become a substitute for the United Nations.

In a way, time is on our side. It will not be the number of guided missiles or any other armament which will determine our future. It will be our spirit and our devotion to the principles of democracy and Christianity, upon which our traditions are based and from which our progress has stemmed. True, we must maintain our defences for some time to come and we must also expand our economic alliances and meet the challenge of assisting the hungry free nations of the world.

Recent events in Hungary only underline the situation as it exists in eastern and central Europe today. There, many races, enslaved by communist tyranny, look to us in the west with hope that justice will be done and that liberty will once more assert itself in their midst. We must never become complacent, self-satisfied or apathetic if we are to maintain our liberties and also be of service to those less fortunate than ourselves who are today the victims of brutal communist subjugation.

Then, in the battle of ideologies, ours will triumph because it has stood the test of time whereas the communist philosophy, being what it is, will disintegrate, disappear and go the way of all dictatorships. When this happens, our various efforts within the commonwealth, in NATO, in the United Nations and in other similar undertakings will be crowned with success and will help to achieve freedom and enduring peace, not only for ourselves but for those many nations now enslaved by international communism.

Mr. J. M. Forgie (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read from the eighth paragraph in the speech from the throne as follows:

> You will be asked to approve a number of measures and appropriations to continue and extend the program of my government in sustaining employment by the acceleration of useful public works and by encouraging the development and processing of our natural resources.

I have listened to most of the debates which have taken place in this house since the presentation of the budget but I have yet to find a clue as to what policy the present administration intends to follow with respect to unemployment. The administration now in power must cure the unemployment situation; the responsibility for this matter is squarely on the shoulders of this administration and it must now prove its worth.

Unemployment was not an issue in 1957 when the Liberal administration was in office. In this connection I would like to refer to the statement of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) made when he was a member of the opposition party during the year 1955. This statement bears repeating, and the minister said at that time—

> When we entered this debate several weeks ago I am sure that all hon. members expected that the government would avail itself of this opportunity to make an announcement of whatever policy it proposed in order to grapple with a situation which is assuming emergent proportions.

Then he went on to say:

> This session opened 2½ months ago with a statement by the government contained in the speech from the throne as follows: "Some employment of a regional and seasonal nature is being experienced".

As has been said, the Minister of Finance has described the present unemployment situation as a fairly mild recession. He must accept full responsibility for that statement, made at a time when there were over 500,000 people out of work. This budget brought down by the Minister of Finance is a political expedient but the administration has been unable since 1957 to find a solution to the problem of unemployment. If this were not so we would not have had a march on the parliament buildings such as we experienced yesterday. Those unemployed people returned to their homes frustrated and disconsolate.

This is a serious matter but the present administration is seemingly living from day to day and it might be said that their motto is: seize the day and trust as little as possible to tomorrow. The public expects the administration to solve the problem and while public works will be of assistance such relief would only be temporary and the unemployed need permanent jobs. Such permanency can only be attained by a reduction in personal and corporation taxes with a consequent expansion in trade. Such tax reductions must take place now when industrial profits are dropping and our unemployment is the highest in history. The cushioning effects of extended benefits are now disappearing, thus increasing the hardships of the unemployed.

We find on the order paper a resolution to increase the capital of the Canadian farm loan board. That is apparently as far as the resolution goes and the government seems to be awaiting a debate on this resolution in order to formulate a farm policy. In the speech from the throne we read of amendments to certain acts but up to now there is not one inkling of any realistic approach to a practical farm policy.

So that the farmers of our nation will not conclude that the Liberal party has nothing constructive to say on this question I wish to present in brief form, as my time is limited, the salient features of our policy in this frightfully important matter. We shall be interested to hear from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) with respect to the farm policy of the government. At page 1892 of Hansard of March 5, 1957 he is reported to have said:

> I think there is no question that one of the most serious features of our whole agricultural economy and set-up at the present time is that the great majority of farmers now are getting in the older age brackets. The number of young farmers is comparatively small, and the reason for that essentially is the extremely high cost of buying and equipping a farm at the present time. It is impossible for a young man with a very small amount of capital to go into farming as it was possible, and as thousands and hundreds of thousands did, 50 or 60 years ago.
> If our agricultural economy is to continue on a sound basis it is essential that we get more young men into agriculture, and that can only be done if funds are made available to young men, who are interested in the agricultural life to purchase and equip those farms. I know the present act is not adequate to do that to anything like the extent that is necessary.

From the findings of the Gordon report and the submission to the government by the interprovincial farm council it is apparent that our farm population is steadily declining. In 1840, 70 per cent of the population of Canada was engaged in agriculture; in 1940 the percentage was 33 per cent, and in 1956 it was 13 per cent. To most of us these are startling figures. I do not think we can ignore the fact that the notable prosperity arising from the rapid development of our country during the past 20 years has by-passed the farms. There are different phases of agriculture in Canada—the maritimes with their emphasis on products other than grains; Ontario and Quebec with their mixed farming; the prairies with their overwhelming stake in wheat; and British Columbia of course, with its emphasis on fruits.

The export markets have not treated our farmers too kindly. What of the future? On page 159 of the Gordon report we find this statement:

> We have already expressed the opinion that, in time, price and other changes in U.S. agriculture may bring supply and demand sufficiently into balance so that agricultural surpluses will cease to be chronic.

That may be overly sanguine but it would stretch even the limits of our optimism to believe that over the next 25 years the U.S. farmers will be so powerless, the inducements offered them so slight, and the remedies applied to overproduction so drastic as to leave much room in the U.S. market for increased imports of Canadian foodstuffs. At the present time, however, it would appear that our farmer will enjoy a good export market in the United States for beef cattle for the next four or five years unless hit by a tariff. Livestock and livestock products are by far the largest source of income to Canadian farmers. They yielded $854 million in 1955. The estimated cattle population in 1957 was 10,293,000, and the hog population 5,160,000.

To improve farm conditions and to enable the farmer to obtain a greater share of our prosperity, the Liberal party enunciated a farm policy in January of this year which was reiterated and enlarged upon by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) at Cudworth, Saskatchewan on February 27. The government must come to grips with and solve this serious problem that is facing the farmers of both western and eastern Canada. These problems are not identical, however, for the western and eastern sections of our country. They are not even identical in the three western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I should like to read a paragraph from the Gordon report at page 175, as follows:

> Adjustment of farm organization and farm production to changing economic circumstances, including changing technology, will also, in our opinion, call in some instances for rather more generous credit arrangements than are now available. Too easy credit can aggravate farm problems by inducing an expansion in output that would lead to lower prices. Scarcity of credit, on the other hand, can prevent a desirable rise in agricultural productivity by perpetuating antiquated types of farm organization. As the mechanization of Canadian farms continues, some farmers in all parts of the country will need more medium-term capital to enable them to buy machinery and equipment, and more long-term capital to enable them to enlarge their holdings, while the rise in demand for meat will mean that more capital will also be needed for the purchase of livestock. As the result of these cumulative developments, the capital value of farm businesses will be rising on the average; and there will be difficulty in transferring them from one owner to another—in many cases it will be from father to son—unless somewhat more generous credit arrangements are available. So long as farm incomes are relatively low and irregular, it is important that fixed annual payments on mortgages and other forms of indebtedness be no larger than is necessary. Appropriate rates of interest will vary from time to time, but annual payments can be reduced by extending the number of years over which the principal will be repaid. Since the long-range prospects for farm income and for the ability of farmers to service loans would seem to be favourable, we think that farm credit agencies might appropriately extend the period of repayment up to 40 years for long-term loans and up to five or six years for medium-term loans. Extension of credit on somewhat easier terms is one way by which the adjustment of Canadian farming to changing economic conditions can be facilitated. Another way is by altering the emphasis of research programs. In view of the heavy demand that is anticipated for beef and other livestock products, it would seem sensible for research programs to stress the improvement of beef cattle, feeding for beef production, of forage crops, and the carrying capacity of grasslands.

As I see the requirements of western Canada they are as follows: First, there is increased population by immigration. In 1957, 282,000 immigrants entered Canada, a greater number than in any other year since 1913 and brought the post-war total up to 1,700,000. Had it not been for this powerful addition to our manpower, Canada would not have progressed and expanded in the way in which it has since the war. In the next quarter century Canada will need all the morally, mentally and physically healthy people who will wish to come to our shores. It will be interesting to see what will happen this year. If the British immigration figures for 1958 mean anything, we shall surely scrape the bottom this year.

The second requirement is mixed farming that will result when immigration is stepped up, particularly in western Canada. That should reduce wheat productions. The third requirement is the establishment of industries and the fourth is the development of a leguminous rotation cash crop as, for instance, soybeans, particularly in Saskatchewan.

The government must provide funds to accelerate research in order to provide, particularly in Saskatchewan, a profitable leguminous cash crop such as the one I mentioned, namely the soybean. For this crop particular types of soil are required. Such a crop would be the answer to the wheat surplus problem provided that research will develop a seed that will ripen before the arrival of the early frost that sometimes hits Saskatchewan in August. Much research has already been done in this line. I have been advised by the authorities that a grant of $20,000 a year would be sufficient for this purpose.

A study of the European market requirements will reveal that there is a market in Great Britain and in Europe today for over 100 million bushels of soybeans. The last shipment of soybeans exported from Ontario to Germany was sold at $2.55 a bushel. The highest yield in Ontario, as far as I know, has been 69¼ bushels to the acre obtained on Pelee island in lake Erie. Practically all the soybeans now grown in Canada come from western and southwestern Ontario. In 1936 about 1,000 acres of soybeans were grown in that section of the country. Last year the acreage was 264,000. An additional 4,000 acres were grown near Morden, Manitoba but the difficulty has been that the oil content has been somewhat low and the average yield has been only 12 bushels to the acre in comparison with 24 bushels to the acre in the province of Ontario last year. However, research is being carried on at the University of Manitoba and has been going on for some time in an effort to secure a better type of bean for that section of the country. Also I am advised that soybeans have been grown near Saskatoon and Indian Head.

The oil development which played such an important part in adding to Alberta's prosperity pinched out in Manitoba, so that diversification of the economy in Manitoba had to be sought by other means to give it a broader base. Agriculture still is the underpinning of Manitoba's economy, with better than 49,000 farms being worked and with production worth $248 million last year. But there is considerable diversification here, with substantial production of crops other than grain, and with livestock accounting for close to half of recent annual returns. Farm income has not increased substantially, but farming has become a dependable business rather than a hazardous occupation.

The big bonanza for Manitoba has been growth of manufacturing. In the past seven years expansion in this area of the economy has been of the order of 40 per cent, with industrial production exceeding $700 million in value last year. Some 1,650 plants give employment to more than 50,000 people of a provincial population of 850,000.

Significant as to what happened is the increase in the production of metal and mineral products, which had a value of $77 million in 1951 and last year was worth $143 million. Wood products, chemicals, electrical apparatus and building materials also have shown spectacular growth. The people of Manitoba have good reason to be proud of the achievements of the post-war period and the consolidation of it in the last few years.

Mr. Stinson: Particularly in the past few weeks.

Mr. Forgie: The dynamic factors in the agricultural picture of the future will likely be technological improvements, growth of the domestic market and conservation. Scientific farming, with proper care of the soil and careful choice of the crops, will play a leading part in increasing and maintaining output.

Farm problems of east and west are similar in the matter of financial assistance that should be given by federal and provincial governments. I do not suggest that all assistance to farmers should come from the federal government, Mr. Speaker. I think the provinces will have to co-operate as the provinces of Quebec and Ontario are doing at the present time.

To assist the farmers throughout the country, we in the opposition feel that certain steps must be taken that will not only yield a higher financial return to the farmers but will strengthen the family farm and conserve and improve the fertility of farm lands. Acting on this belief we passed a resolution in January of this year to provide all possible help to farmers to improve their economic position by expansion and extension of existing farm credit facilities at present provided by the Canadian farm loan board, the Canadian Farm Loan Act, the Farm Improvement Loan Act and the Veterans Land Act into a complete program of short-term, intermediate and long-term credit.

Such a program would make readily available, at low interest rates, adequate long term capital for farm improvement, the maintenance of the family farm as a healthy economic unit, the purchase of farms by qualified young farmers with small cash payments, and the consolidation of farms. In the estimation of many this program would revolutionize farming in Canada. And, as I said, great emphasis should be placed on agricultural research to find methods of improving and diversifying farm products and introducing new species and new techniques and lowering costs.

To carry out this program for credit assistance we would establish a farm development bank. This bank would control and coordinate all government activities in this field and supervise the loans except those under the Veterans Land Act. That would involve removing the farm loan board from the Department of Finance and placing it and certain other credit functions under a farm development bank directly responsible to the government.

This farm development bank, combined with improved research and proper land use, expresses our basic policy for the long term improvement of the position of all sections of the agricultural community.

We would also like to make it easier to improve farm homes. We think the time has come when more should be done for rural housing than has been possible in the past. We think that because of the rapid growth of our towns and cities there has been, perhaps inevitably, in recent years too much concentration on government assistance for urban housing. That certainly was a vitally important problem at the time and in some parts of Canada it still is, but surely there is an urgent need to improve housing in the rural areas and small towns.

In reading speeches made by members of the house in 1956 on the Canadian Farm Loan Act, as well as the discussions that took place before the banking and commerce committee, I would think it is fairly well agreed: first, that the loans should be increased to 75 per cent of the appraised value of the land and the maximum amount of the loan increased to $20,000. Second, that regional advisory boards of not more than three members should be set up by the farm development bank to hear applications and question applicants for a loan. Authority to set up one board in each province is contained in the 1935 amendment to the Canadian Farm Loan Act, but one board for each province is inadequate. Third, that the appraisal staff should be increased, and, in this connection, I think all those in the agriculture committee, and the majority of the members who spoke in 1956 and 1957, are of the opinion that V.L.A. appraisers should and could be used by the farm bank.

In the administration of the V.L.A., supervisors call on the veterans in their district from time to time and assist young farmers by way of advice and suggestions. They are well trained men with good judgment. Good public relations such as exist under the V.L.A. are most desirable in dealing with farmers. As I said, V.L.A. appraisers could be used to assist appraisers appointed by the farm bank.

Small farms form part of our sound social structure and should be encouraged, and the operators should receive adequate government assistance, both federal and provincial. The government must do all in its power to prevent a further decline in farm population. If we desire to keep our young people on the farms, we must give them some encouragement, especially in the form of adequate financial assistance.

The splendid state of affairs under the Veterans Land Act is in large measure attributable to the field men or supervisors of the V.L.A. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) in his address at Edmonton in May said:

> Undoubtedly a good deal of the credit for this fine record belongs to the V.L.A. field supervisors, who have become experts in advising the settlers on how to use their resources to the best advantage in order to neutralize, to some extent, at least, any unfavourable prices for farm products.
> V.L.A. officials are presently engaged in a survey to determine what is needed to improve the incomes of our full time farmers. So far they have analysed reports on the farm business of over 3,000 settlers and have found that the key to the problem for most of them is more capital. The survey is continuing, and we are studying the possibility of making more supervised capital available to these farmers.

Full time farmers under the V.L.A. are being well served. Loans under the Veterans Land Act are showing a decline, and before long these appraisers and supervisors could be absorbed by the farm development bank that we have previously advocated. Last year 2,400 full time farming loans under the V.L.A. were paid off and there were only 435 new applications. So, Mr. Speaker, the work of the V.L.A. appraisers is on the decline.

The lapse of time is too great from the date of the application to the completion of processing the loan. That delay is caused mainly through the scarcity of qualified appraisers. As for the processing of the loan, there are delays beyond the control of the board. These delays have all been set out in the banking and commerce and the agriculture committees. There is no need to repeat them. Long term loans and low rate of interest on capital invested in farming is the hard core of the problem of financing agriculture, particularly young farmers starting to farm.

The amount of capital a farmer needs to reach reasonable efficiency varies from $10,000 or $15,000 and in many cases more. Agriculture represents immense long term capital investment. Recent estimates put the value of Canadian farms and buildings, implements and machinery and livestock at $10,000 million. Land is normally a non-depreciating asset, except, of course, when the farmer neglects his soil by failure to fertilize or properly rotate his crops. Livestock represents a semi-permanent investment since it may be renewed by reproduction. Farm machinery is subject to depreciation and obsolescence and, consequently, loans should be for a short term only. Lower rates

It has been pointed out by the chairman of the Canadian farm loan board that 25 per cent of the loans have been made for the consolidation of debts and it may be that there has been a significant increase in loans for this purpose. If so, this is a condition that must be seriously considered. Many of these farmers really cannot make a go of it because their acreage is too meagre or the amount of livestock inadequate to operate economically.

Today, banks and mortgage and insurance companies can find more lucrative and less risky loans than farm loans, and hence a farm development bank would soon become the only practical source of credit for our farmers, and especially of long term credit with low interest rates. And I may say, judging from the comments of farmers for whom I have acted in connection with Canadian farm loan board loans, that they are satisfied with a ceiling of $15,000 to $20,000. In an effort to have loans processed in the early spring farmers should be urged to have their applications in a month or so before the snow comes, and all appraisals should be completed before that time. This is not insurmountable.

In my riding many farmers work out after harvesting at carpentering and other jobs. Their take-home pay is substantial but, as the chairman of the Canadian farm loan board said, there is no objection to that so long as the operations of his farm do not suffer. In fact, in the Canadian Farm Loan Act a "farmer" is described as one whose principal occupation is farming.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while all those recommendations are worth while, we in the opposition stand firm in our conviction that until there is a consolidation of the different legislative enactments aimed at improving the lot of the Canadian farmer through the establishment of a farm development bank and supervised loans no effective and satisfactory economical results can be attained for the farmers of our country. The small size farm is so necessary in Canada. Few of us would like to see small farms replaced by corporate farming. When a farm development act is established and operating we shall witness a lasting improvement in farm conditions and farm economy and a general upsurge in business throughout the nation which will result in restoring employment to a vast number of unemployed, and thus fulfil a two-fold purpose.

[Mr. Forgie.]

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware that the amendments he is now suggesting for the Canadian Farm Loan Act were suggested when we were sitting on those very benches and our proposal was turned down by the party which then formed the government and of which he is a member?

Mr. Pallett: Well, you are aware of it now.

Mr. Forgie: No, I am not aware of that.

Mr. Habel: Are you doing anything about it now?

(Translation):

Mr. Aristide Rompre (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, like other members who preceded me in this budget debate, and even before that, I wish to express to the chairman of the house, to the deputy chairman and to yourself, their assistant, my congratulations. I could not omit congratulating the two new ministers.

As mayor of a municipality, together with those in this house who fill the same post in the province of Quebec, may I say to the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. O'Hurley) how much the union of county councils of the province of Quebec, of which he is the president, feels honoured for the confidence shown him in his appointment as Minister of Defence Production.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is to me a great honour, one shared by my family, to be sitting in this House of Commons as member for the constituency of Portneuf. I therefore sincerely thank the electors of that constituency for this mark of confidence and assure them of my whole-hearted devotion to their interests for the duration of my mandate. The last time that this constituency was represented by a Conservative member was in 1882, but there is no doubt that, in future, with the progressive and reassuring policies of the present government, under the talented and wise leadership of its valiant leader, the Conservative party is assured of the confidence of the people there for many elections to come.

My congratulations go out also to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for bringing down a budget in keeping with present economic conditions. The budget provides large expenditures for public works designed to increase employment and to remedy that deplorable condition of unemployment due to the lack of foresight and to the inertia of the former administration.

Because of my experience in the municipal field, I feel it was a generous move to exempt municipal corporations from the sales tax on materials used in the setting up of a fire-fighting system and other systems under municipal control.

Mr. Speaker, as was noted by several newspapers, it has been very rare that any part of a budget speech has been given in French, as was done by the Minister of Finance. That, to me, is a source of great satisfaction.

I would now like to give a few facts concerning the constituency I represent. Geographically it is only a few miles southwest of the old historic city of Quebec, which is now celebrating the 350th anniversary of its founding. The constituency is bound on one side by the north shore of the majestic St. Lawrence, over a distance of about 40 miles, between Grondines and St. Augustin. On the opposite side is the Laurentian mountain range covered with a great and rich variety of timber which contributes to the operations of several sawmills and pulp and paper mills of the area.

The population of this constituency is evenly divided between farmers and industrial workers. From the agricultural point of view, large scale farming is the main activity. Dairy products are processed there for marketing purposes, either into butter or into powdered milk.

I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to express to the government all my satisfaction and that of the agricultural organizations which forwarded me some resolutions about the Agricultural Stabilization Act enacted by the last parliament. Particularly in so far as my constituency is concerned, I am very proud to extend my congratulations to the government, about the very satisfactory level where the guaranteed price of butter has been set for the next year.

I wish to point out that some communities of my riding specialize in the production of potatoes, that the maple syrup industry means a rather important supplement to the revenue of many farmers and that the setting of a support price for each of these two products would be desirable and would contribute to a more stable revenue to which the farmer is entitled since he must set his budget for the whole year, not to mention that it would remove his uncertainty about future markets. I also express the wish that a serious study will be made with a view to setting a support price for pulpwood derived from family wood-lots, a product which is also an essential factor in the revenue of many of our farmers.

A few years ago, the federal government was helping the maple syrup producer by paying him a subsidy representing one third of the purchase price of aluminum pails. That subsidy is still paid in the same amount by the provincial government and there again, Mr. Speaker, I express the wish,—it is also the wish of many maple syrup producers,—that this subsidy will again be granted. The restoration of that policy would substantially help that class of farmers and would at the same time contribute to the production of a better quality product, that would fetch better prices.

There are in my constituency a few communities where farms are not favoured with a loamy and very productive soil. Although I am no expert in this field, I nevertheless wish to refer to some suggestions made to me by several owners of such farms, to the effect that a grant for the claying of their land would be of great help since it would contribute to increase productivity and help them derive a better income from this land.

There is in Portneuf a provincial forestry school where, each year, sons of farmers follow seasonal classes. I feel that it would be wise to encourage by grants the reforestation of some parts of the unproductive farms, as this would create a substantial asset for the coming generation.

With regard to industry, I must point out that the working people in my constituency are mostly employed in pulp and paper mills as well as in a number of sawmills. The lumber industry which feeds these other operations constitutes a rather important source of employment.

There is also, at St. Basile, a cement plant that turns out a good quality product. That industry is only a few years old and is very prosperous.

The quarries of Riviere-a-Pierre provide a granite of incomparable quality, and similar products at St. Marc des Carrieres are another source of employment for our workers. As was done by my good friend, the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Letourneau), I draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) on that fact and I express the hope that these localities specializing in the production of cut stone will be called upon to provide at least part of the raw material needed for the construction of the public buildings mentioned in the estimates for this year.

I draw the attention of the government to the importation of American cut stone from the Indiana Lime Stone quarries. It would be desirable that steps be taken to avoid such competition which is harmful to an industry which is of vital importance to the communities I have just mentioned.

The other main industrial centres are Donnacona, noted for its paper and wallboard industry, a very fine product widely used in the interior finishing of houses and public buildings, and St. Raymond whose industry is largely dependent on forest products, as are the industries of Pont Rouge and Portneuf where similar plants are found.

The largest streams flowing through the constituency are the Jacques Cartier, St. Anne and Batiscan rivers, much used by the industries and the municipalities I just mentioned either for floating pulpwood or feeding power plants.

I am convinced that the $450 million put at the disposal of the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation at the beginning of this session by this government will greatly contribute to a revival of activity in those industries whose products are used in housing.

As regards the other communities along the St. Lawrence river, some of them are agricultural but others, for instance Deschambault and Grondines, have been characterized for many generations as the birthplaces of marine officers such as pilots, captains and others.

May I now mention another great natural resource of the area. I refer to the innumerable rivers and lakes teeming with plenty of fish and situated in a vast forest district where game is plentiful. That makes the area very attractive to tourists.

My constituency comprises an area whose subsoil is rich in minerals and for years has been giving to one category of local labour the advantage of honestly earning its living.

I unfortunately have to regret the suspension of operations of the two mining companies which produced zinc and lead at Montauban-les-Mines. I refer to the Anacon Lead Mines Limited and the United Montauban which closed down in 1955, laying off 300 of their employees.

This mining centre has become a ghost town, which gives a striking idea of the previous Liberal government's improvident and stand-pat policy which I mentioned at the ouset of my remarks. That is also an example of the heritage left to this government.

To remedy this urgent situation, I would suggest public works. I think it would be important to build a retaining wall along the north shore of the St. Lawrence river to prevent the erosion caused by the tides and by the waves in the wake of the big ships going up or down the channel. This erosion causes considerable damage to property along the shore where houses of great value have been built. This work is absolutely necessary in several parishes of my constituency situated along the St. Lawrence river. May I point out to the house that the extension of the wall already existing along the St. Anne river to protect shore properties from the considerable damage caused by floods such as the one of December last would be a great help to the people of St. Raymond.

In the field of social security, while not unmindful of the generosity of the present government during the last session, I will, Mr. Speaker, put before the house several resolutions that were forwarded to me by various executive councils of parochial associations in my constituency requesting the government to pay family allowances up to 18 years of age in respect of children who continue their studies. Needless to say, I share those views. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that steps such as this would be of financial assistance to parents and would advance the cause of education. Another important social security measure would be the payment of a pension to widows and single women at age sixty. These people have a great deal of difficulty in finding employment, and special attention should be paid to their needs.

These remarks that I have just submitted to the house, in the course of which I have advanced a few suggestions with regard to the solution of problems which are of particular interest to my constituents, were offered in the hope of making a modest contribution to the work of this house, in order to attain that object which we all pursue in common, that is to say in order to ensure the greatest possible degree of wealth, prosperity and security for all our fellow citizens. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that with the sincere and conscientious co-operation of all members of this house we will, in fact, reach that goal.

(Text):

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder who has the most difficult task in a parliament, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). Quite bluntly, I think I have to come to the conclusion that the man who has the most difficult task in a parliament is the Minister of Finance. He is damned if he does, and he is damned if he does not. As far as the present budget is concerned, he is going to have to be damned because he does not.

I think all of us have either read or listened with a great deal of interest to the statements of cabinet ministers at various times. We listened to and read the speech from the throne, and I have listened to, read and reread the budget speech. My own feeling on the matter is that I find it difficult to understand just what is government policy. I am inclined to the belief that cabinet ministers are trying to ride two horses at the same time. I have oft-times seen this done by acrobats at circuses but I do not think it has any place in politics or in parliament.

Over the weeks, if not over the months, the Prime Minister has been trying to impress upon the Canadian people the need to spend, to spend and to spend, and I can understand—we can all understand—his thinking in that regard. Undoubtedly he is motivated by the thought that if the people of Canada will just spend and spend the money will go for capital purchases in part but consumer goods in the main and heavy expenditure by the people on capital purchases and consumer goods will so lower inventories that the factories can commence to roll at full speed again and consequently our basic resource industries also. As I said, that can be understood with that motivation if we do not tie it in with the budget of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance, in contradistinction to the economic policy of the Prime Minister, has announced a deficit on current expenditure in the next twelve months of some $641 million. In addition, he quite honestly tells the house that in the next twelve months the government will have to go to the people for loans amounting to close to $3½ billion. I think I am correct in saying that in a speech recently the Minister of Finance said that in all probability borrowing approaches will be made perhaps once a month.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, I never said that.

Mr. Winch: The minister may not have said that but I think he said that he hoped a great deal of it could be financed in Canada. I presume I am correct in that statement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I hope that all government borrowings will be financed in Canada.

Mr. Winch: That is the situation then, $3½ billion in the next twelve months.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That includes what was raised six weeks ago in the $950 million issue at that time.

Mr. Winch: That is right but it is still $3½ billion in twelve months. As has been stated by the Minister of Finance, he hopes that all government borrowings can be raised in Canada. This money must come either out of potential investment capital or out of the savings of the people. It cannot come from any other source because there are no other sources except savings or reserve capital.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I am sure he realizes that in that figure of $3.4 billion which was mentioned there is approximately $2 billion of maturing securities which in the ordinary course we would expect the holders of those maturities to reinvest.

Mr. Winch: That is a nice way of getting out of it, but because you cannot meet your maturing bonds you have got to borrow in order to cover them. It still amounts to the fact that the government is going to the people of Canada for this amount of money which has to come from two sources. You cannot lend money to the government and at the same time spend it on consumer goods. The two are diametrically opposed. As far as I am concerned, I admit that I am completely confused by what appears to be a confusing and contradictory government policy.

I also find myself hoping that the optimism of the Minister of Finance is well founded but I wonder whether he can back up his optimism with the opinions of Canadian economists and the pronouncements of government departments. I think the Minister of Finance must have an entirely different crystal ball from that of the majority of economists in Canada. The minister was kind enough to inform us that the $641 million anticipated deficit in the current budget was forecast on the basis of a two per cent increase in the value of the gross national product. We sincerely hope he is correct but I think we are not being unkind by drawing to his attention that if he is wrong Canada may find itself in a most difficult financial situation.

The daily bulletin of the dominion bureau of statistics for Monday, June 23, contains information relative to the gross national product for the first quarter of this year and indicates that there has been a decline of almost two per cent. Although we have not seen any indication of the required policies yet, I know the minister will realize we are very sincere when we say we hope that during this session the government will be able to announce policies which in the remaining three quarters of the year will be able to overcome the two per cent deficit in the gross national product in the first quarter and achieve the two per cent increase the minister referred to in introducing the budget the other day.

There is something else a number of us would like to have clarified, the position of the government with regard to trade. I know that I am not the only one in the house or in Canada who is still very confused as to what is the government's trade policy. If we listen to government spokesmen outside the house I am certain we all get the impression that the government believes in freer trade and also gives some indication of tending toward free trade. But inside the house the budget appears to indicate the maintenance of the proverbial Conservative protectionist policies. I am not going to speak at length on this matter at the present time. I sincerely hope that when the necessary resolutions and bills are before the house we will be able to have a clear exposition of the principles underlying the trade policies of the present government.

At this point, and because it comes to mind, may I discuss something which disturbs me greatly as I am certain it does the Minister of Finance also. I tried to get some indication of the minister's feelings the other day through questioning but I am afraid that perhaps it was not the right place for me to raise the matter. I refer to the fact of the government introducing tax reductions and some people then taking advantage of them and not passing them on to the ultimate consumer to whom I am certain the minister wants them to go. I am sure that is definitely what the minister has in mind when he introduces tax reductions. I also think that the majority of people in Canada carry them out but unfortunately a great many do not. Of necessity I had to make a hurried trip to my home city of Vancouver last week end. While there I met friends of mine in the retail trade and what did I find? The minister brought down his budget on a Tuesday. In his budget he removed the sales tax on cut flowers.

The next day right in the city of Vancouver, the growers—not all of them it is true but some of them—increased their prices by the amount of the sales tax they had taken off. I do not imagine there is any kind of law which this parliament could pass which would take care of a situation like that but I would certainly like to have a very, very strong statement from the minister as to what in his opinion might be done to stop people from doing this kind of thing. If they persist in what is tantamount to absolute dishonesty, then perhaps we could work out a method by which we could publicize their names so that the consumers would no longer buy their products and maybe that could bring them to task.

I feel certain that a great many people in this country were disappointed in the budget as recently introduced, disappointed because neither the budget changes nor the allocation of the estimates conformed, by a long shot, with what the people of our country had been given to understand they could expect from the Conservative party when its first budget was introduced in this House of Commons.

Firstly there is nothing in the budget in the way of estimates which gives any indication of increases in allowances for the veterans of Canada. I have not forgotten that changes have been made in the past two or three years but I also remember the statements of certain Conservative members that the increases were not half enough and that the veterans were entitled to a better deal.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We introduced legislation in that respect last session.

Mr. Winch: Do you call that a new deal for the veterans? That is very interesting—the legislation we had last session was the new Conservative deal for the veterans. In that case many thousands of veterans in this country must have been very disappointed for I am certain they all had a very different impression of what they might expect. They got a raw deal instead of a new deal. The fact that there is nothing in the estimates over and above the legislation to which I have just referred is, in my opinion, not only a dereliction of duty and responsibility but is a major disappointment to the Canadian veterans.

These remarks apply also to the plight of the senior citizens of Canada. There is nothing to indicate any further assistance to this group and presumably the legislation introduced last session was the new deal of the Conservative party for the old age pensioners. There is nothing in the estimates to indicate any improvement. Given all the commendation that is due for the increases and changes made during last session we still say that this parliament is unfair to the senior citizens of our country in allowing them to continue living on a semi-starvation basis. There is nothing so far as I can see which is proposed to bring the purchasing power of the dollar in line with the pensions of this group of people. There is a responsibility on the shoulders of the government, with its huge majority, to see that our senior citizens are cared for. Even though the government will not go as far as spending more money to help the older people surely it could bring in additional legislation, over and above that introduced last session, to allow old age pensioners to draw their pensions outside of Canada beyond a period of six months.

I find it difficult to understand why we have laws in this country, and a government which permits such laws, under which a former official of this house who cannot return to Canada without facing a criminal charge can draw his pension in the United States for the rest of his life and yet an old age pensioner cannot do likewise. Surely if one has served his country so that he is entitled to a pension he should be able to spend his days anywhere in the world with his loved ones, and still receive his Canadian pension. Other pensioners can do so, so why cannot an old age pensioner? Such a measure would cost this government only an infinitesimal amount with respect to administration costs in order to give that right to the people who need it so much. It is not, after all, asking for very much but I defy any member on the government side to give one logical reason why it should not be done and we hope it will be done at this session.

I do not like going back over the years but we must remember the position of our civil servants in respect to superannuation and how it was said by Conservative members that the previous government was unfair to them, that something ought to be done for them and that something would be done for them. We were told how they would get a new deal from the Conservatives but as yet we have no indication, as a result of legislation or in the estimates, that anything is going to be done this year to bring our retired civil servants—our servants—to the position where they would benefit from some form of equalization in respect of their pensions and the purchasing power of their dollars—something else which was left out.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for the relief of Valija Zvirgzds Kazaks.

An act for the relief of Joyce Florence Taylor Larman.

An act for the relief of Kathleen Margaret Coffin Barre.

An act for the relief of Freda Bernadette Godin Headland.

An act for the relief of Bruno Bedard.

An act for the relief of Stefania Sobol Wojtowicz.

An act for the relief of Elizabeth Antonie Hartmann Elstermann, otherwise known as Elizabeth Antonie Hartmann Von Elstermann.

An act for the relief of Ruth Ellen McMullin Gosnell.

An act for the relief of Beatrice Bellamy Drysdale Scott.

An act for the relief of John Ronald MacCuaig.

An act for the relief of Edith Ann Van Horne Beattie, otherwise known as Beverley Ann Van Horne Beattie.

An act for the relief of Constance Lilias Crawford Booth.

An act for the relief of Henry Krupa.

An act for the relief of Ferenc Tamas Kalman Laczko.

An Act for the relief of Olive-Jane Frances Piper Sinclair.

An Act for the relief of Rhoda Carin Burack.

An act for the relief of Evelyn Grace Blakely Mullins.

An act for the relief of Julia Switnicki Kobel.

An act for the relief of Eric Dunstan Martin.

An act for the relief of Hazel Margaret White Jackson.

An act for the relief of Mary Stepko Berryman.

An act for the relief of Jewel Evelyn Bockus Yeo.

An act for the relief of Clarence Leonard Sproule.

An act for the relief of Geraldine Avonne Dixon McNaughton.

An act for the relief of Emery George Nemeth.

An act for the relief of Alfreda Rose Celina Gigot Kyriazis.

An act respecting The Protective Association of Canada.

An act respecting The Mercantile and General Reinsurance Company of Canada Limited.

An act to amend the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

An act to amend the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, in continuing my remarks on the budget I should like to join with hon. members who have spoken previously who expressed their disappointment that there is nothing in the budget to indicate that the government has any intention of increasing the family allowance.

I believe it is a great disappointment to all people that the government has not recognized that there is a responsibility on its shoulders to so raise this allowance as to combat the loss in the purchasing power of the dollar. I do not intend to repeat arguments that have already been voiced but I do want to draw the attention of the government to a discrimination which we feel strongly should be removed as speedily as possible. I refer to the fact that for some strange reason the law with regard to the family allowance was so drawn that the families of our personnel in the armed forces do not receive the allowance if their families join them overseas. I raised this matter before in committee and was informed that this action was not the responsibility of the Department of National Defence that the situation exists because of a specific section to that effect in the Family Allowances Act. We have been told by officials of the Department of National Defence, however, that perhaps one reason people in this position are denied the family allowance is because of the additional help the families receive when they are sent overseas to join the head of the family. We maintain that this point of view cannot be substantiated in fact.

I am not referring to the 700-odd members of the armed forces who are now overseas attached to embassies, attaches or NATO headquarters because they are well taken care of through financial assistance which in the case of a person who holds the rank of lieutenant-colonel is as much as $190 a month. I am referring to the 11,000-odd armed service personnel overseas who do not fall into the categories I have mentioned. I have been informed by the Department of National Defence that a great many of this number are married and their families are overseas.

I was surprised to learn on what basis they receive an additional allowance. I was advised by the department this afternoon that the increased allowance for families of our armed service personnel overseas is based on the figure established by the dominion bureau of statistics relating to the cost of living wherever the family is stationed as related to the cost of living in the city of Ottawa. It works out this way, just to put it rather briefly. If the personnel is stationed in the United Kingdom and living in what is known as married quarters the bonus is nil. If they live outside married quarters the amount is $10 a month for each family. If they are stationed in Germany and are in married quarters the bonus is $15 a month and if they are outside married quarters it is $30. If they are stationed in married quarters in France and have the rank of lieutenant-colonel they receive $48 a month. In the case of a private the amount is $32. A lieutenant-colonel living outside married quarters receives $100 and a private receives $64. I want to emphasize the fact that according to the information given to me only this afternoon these amounts are all based on the dominion bureau of statistics calculation of the variation in the cost of living in the various centres I have outlined as compared with the cost of living here in Ottawa. On that basis, therefore, we can see no reason for the discrimination against the families of our armed service personnel overseas who are no longer entitled to draw the family allowance when they leave the shores of Canada.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Armed service personnel overseas are required to pay income tax under the provisions of that act which is only fair and just but they should likewise be entitled to receive the family allowance. I sincerely hope the government will recognize the injustice of the situation as it exists at this time and will take action at this session to remedy the condition I have drawn to its attention.

There are many other matters which I know are a disappointment to the people of this country in that they have not been included in the policy pronouncements of the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. It is to be sincerely regretted that apparently no action is to be taken to establish a plan and policy under which financial assistance could be given to the municipalities at low interest rates. The government is to be commended, of course, for the action it has taken in the removal of sales tax from certain equipment when purchased by municipalities and which will result in a saving to them this year of approximately $5 million but the municipalities are in a desperate situation and require a great deal of money with which to carry on the services they provide. It would have been of great assistance had the government indicated that action was being contemplated at this session in this regard.

As I have already indicated there are a number of matters which I have not yet discussed but I feel it is sufficient for one to speak for 25 or 30 minutes and the other matters I have in mind can be discussed when the estimates are before us and so I will conclude with this statement. In all probability this house will be sitting for another two or three months and so there is still plenty of time for the Minister of Finance to redeem himself in the eyes of the public. I think all the people of Canada—and I know all hon. members of the opposition—are so broad in their outlook and generous in their hearts that they will overlook the minister's sins of omission if he will now come forward with the estimates and proposals that will not only meet the expectations of the Canadian people but will also represent the fulfilment of Conservative promises.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like my first words in this house to be words of congratulation to you on your election to the high office you hold, and may I extend the same compliment and my good wishes to the Deputy Speaker and the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Rea). I wish also to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on his budget. It was a delight to me not only to have been present at its delivery but to have felt that in some small measure I was a part of it. I say a part of it because the budget sets out judiciously and exactly those things which I, as a Conservative member, support.

In the budget speech there were two statements which struck me forcibly, the statement on distress selling and that on fair value for duty. In these two clear, concise statements of broad principle may be found the hope for a solution of a long-standing problem in my constituency, that is the plight of our fruit and vegetable growers.

Before dealing specifically with these two budget statements I would like to sum up a few points which apply to my riding. To me, Okanagan Boundary is a lovely part of the world with fertile valleys, forests, lakes and rivers, all set in the heart of the mountains in the interior of British Columbia. I like to call it home. As other members speaking of their constituencies like to call their own places home, so also do I.

As for industries, we have mining, lumbering, ranching and fruit and vegetable growing. We also have a well-established tourist industry. In one respect at least, the province of British Columbia has taken a back seat to no place on this continent and that is in providing campsites and picnic grounds. These are readily available along the highways and beauty spots of the province. They are well laid out camps, with all the facilities provided. Here I would like to commend the federal government for the financial assistance they have given to the provinces aiding construction of such camps.

In Okanagan Boundary there is one further aid to our tourist business which I hope the government will take into consideration. We have a great need for the building of small boat harbourage and launching sites. Not only will this be of benefit to people locally but in general to the many visitors throughout British Columbia, the rest of Canada and from the United States. Visitors bring all types of craft and boats to our lakes. To understand this need it is necessary to know that Okanagan lake provides no safe anchorage in the form of natural bays. In each case the construction of a breakwater is necessary as a protection against strong winds. The building of breakwaters is a federal responsibility but it might well be worked out with provincial or local authorities. Here I would like to say a word of thanks for the recent action of the government in extending and modifying the present breakwater at Penticton.

While commenting on tourism, I would like to draw the attention of the government to the development of highway No. 97 which starts in California and runs up through my riding of Okanagan Boundary and the ridings of Okanagan-Revelstoke, Kamloops and Cariboo and farther on up north. Of great importance to the future is the fact that this highway, if developed further, will provide a logical link to the north. It is the shortest route with the best gradients available and apart from the tourist business, has tremendous trade and military value.

Let me say a few words on flood control. The government has, in conjunction with the province of British Columbia, done extensive work to control flood conditions on the Okanagan river. The worth of this project is shown by the additional acreage made available. Previously the river had snaked its way through the valley and now many miles have been cut off its course. Flooding of a large acreage has been cut to a minimum. However, there is need of a further study in the Similkameen valley and on both forks of the Kettle river. In the mountains fertile land is at a premium and each year erosion is taking place at an alarming rate, particularly so in those parts which I have mentioned.

I would like to turn to some of our industries. Historically, mining has played an early and important part in our growth and economy. Present-day prices for metals have forced once profitable operations to close and I regret the decision to close the mines at Copper Mountain, Hedley and Greenwood.

This stoppage has been felt keenly throughout my riding. We live in hopes that more realistic local legislation and higher world prices will lead to further exploration in the area.

There is one point that I might mention at this time and that is the number of young men who have completed their university courses and are prepared to go into the mining field, but mining is being curtailed in my riding and also throughout the rest of Canada, which means that there are no positions available for them. I would suggest to the government that long-needed surveys be carried out to provide work for those people to keep them here in Canada. We have had far too many moving out of our country to get jobs elsewhere.

I should like to say a few words on lumbering. Lumbering flourished in the early days. Perhaps the word "flourish" is an unfortunate one but at the same time I think it is sufficient to say that our mills have grown, that the forests are being utilized and that many men are being employed. Because of weather conditions—and I might say here that we have an ideal climate in Okanagan Boundary—our mills were able to operate with little interruption throughout the year. However, the bulk of our product must be sold to the United States and a poor market there price-wise means stocks of lumber lying unsold in our yards.

And now a word about cattlemen and poultrymen. Our cattlemen and poultrymen are producing under considerable hardship. We have plenty of room for furthering both these industries in the Okanagan Boundary area. However, our main trouble is the laid-down cost of feed grain. It is more than a little hard to know that our competitors can obtain feed grains for one-half the cost that it is available to us. For instance, we pay approximately $60 a ton; our competitors elsewhere in Canada obtain the same feed grains for $20 a ton. I would recommend that where grain is required by cattlemen and poultrymen for feeding purposes it be obtained through the wheat board at the prevailing door-to-door price in the wheat board area. It does seem to me ridiculous that our great overload of feed grain cannot find its way to a legitimate market such as this. May I here commend the prompt action the government took earlier this year to protect our poultrymen against the United States invasion of turkeys at distress prices.

I have mentioned mining, lumbering, cattlemen and poultrymen, Mr. Speaker. These industries, along with fruit and vegetables, suffer from our position in the mountains. The common problem to all our industries, and indeed to the future location of any industry, is one of freight rates. Not only must we ship to distant markets but the necessities coming to our area suffer from a heavy rail bill, a heavy additional toll. This adds to our cost. We are in a somewhat different position from that of eastern Canada because we are a long way from a large population centre. For instance, Vancouver is 300 miles away from the Okanagan valley. We have to ship a long way. We have no market close at hand and it means the rail bill is a heavy one. The resulting costs of transportation are nothing less than a slow process of strangulation.

May I now refer to our fruit industry. My remarks will apply equally to the vegetable industry. We grow wonderful fruits and vegetables but in order to avoid any argument I will simply say this: they are second to none. Over the years our fruit industry has expanded and improved its product. Every effort is being made to keep up to date in quality and variety. We have an industry-wide marketing agency. By-products have been developed and in this respect a great deal of credit is due to the experimental farm at Summerland. Perhaps a few words here will give the house an idea of the tremendous behind the scenes work which has helped our industry keep up to date.

In the beginning we planted our whole area entirely to fruit and fruit designed for the fresh fruit market; that is, fresh fruit for the consumer but we soon developed annual surpluses and we had to look elsewhere. The fruit and vegetable processing laboratories of the dominion experimental farm went to work with the full support of our industry. This forward looking has paid off. We now process roughly one-third of our entire apricot, cherry, peach, plum and Bartlett pear crops. We now have products which we hope will utilize all our surplus apricots not required by the fresh fruit market. These are worth-while outlets from a remunerative standpoint.

Apple processing has remained a large problem but we actually process approximately one-third of our crop, or 33,000 tons. Apple cider, which has been newly introduced, is another feather in the cap of the farm; that is, of the dominion experimental farm. Here extensive research work in the laboratories has resulted in a fine product. The B. C. fruit processors co-operated to the full in providing material, equipment and encouragement. Of greatest importance, of course, is the fact that the industry hopes lower grade surplus apples will be used here leaving the better grade apples to the fresh market.

The experimental farm also has provided its worth by its work on new varieties. Another important function is their fight against plant pests and disease. Here ruthless measures have to be taken and the industry supports them through the Palmer memorial research grant. It allows large scale experimentation in the orchards and gives a form of insurance against loss through such experiments. Effective sprays are developed quickly. We back our experimental farm to the hilt. It has proved its worth and brought dollars to the industry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I summarize the major problems facing our fruit industry. Through its chief spokesman, the industry has stated that it requires consideration on four major points and, indeed, more than consideration if it is to survive. These four major points are: First, stability of returns from year to year; second, protection specifically aimed at distress selling; third, relief in freight rates; and, fourth, farm financing and farm credit.

To enlarge on these four points and deal with them in a slightly different order, I would point out that I have already made mention of freight rates and stated the necessity of an overhaul. With regard to farm financing and farm credit, to understand this need it is necessary to understand the problem of weather in relation to orcharding. The orchardist accepts normal hazards of weather. Troubles arise through early frost, poor weather when the crop is setting, improper humidity at thinning time, rain when the cherries are being harvested. All these and many more take a tremendous toll. But this is an annual problem and in all forms of farming an accepted hazard. We accept it. There is, however, a weather condition which has in many cases caused widespread disaster. I refer to the tree-killing winters commencing in 1950. This has meant a heavy drain on our resources. It has meant replanting and in many cases new trees planted have been severely damaged in the years following 1950.

The situation requires long term rehabilitation financing. This is not available through the banks. The only other source, the Canadian farm loan board, is not available either as this type of rehabilitation loan does not meet its requirements. It is a straight question of rehabilitation and I would ask the government to give immediate consideration to this urgent problem.

On the short term basis credit has been cut as a result of the poor return in the last five years. But the combination of winter kill and poor returns has been more than the average orchardist can stand. The position has deteriorated until now many are in serious difficulty. Financing through the banks has been curtailed in many cases. Poor annual returns are the sort of thing that make any banker, even if he is a friendly type, think twice. The result has been that a large percentage of growers now work out part time or full time. This, of course, makes it impossible to maintain the orchards properly. From the foregoing you will see that our credit position needs overhauling on both a long and short term basis.

Let me deal now, Mr. Speaker, with the remaining two major points brought up by the industry, namely stabilization and protection against distress selling. We welcome the stabilization act and we look for a measure of relief under this legislation. We appreciate its intention and feel that an honest effort based on the intention will aid in partially providing the answer to stability. But this act alone will not provide the stability that the industry needs. We require the benefits of the stabilization act certainly, but we also require an effective stoppage of United States distress selling.

Let me digress for a moment. Our fruit industry is twofold, first, apples and, second, soft fruits. There is a basic difference. Our apples are an export product and sell well in the United States market. In fact, we have a premium product and we consistently get a better price than the same type of United States fruit does in its own market. That goes for both quality and grade. There is no question of our ever having tried to undersell the American producer in his own market. We do not now ask fair value for duty in this instance. It is sufficient to state that we suffer tariff-wise. But here we can rely wholly upon the stabilization act to balance costs of production in order to provide a fair return.

With regard to soft fruits, that is, peaches, pears, apricots, prunes and cherries a different situation exists. In Canada we do not produce sufficient for our own needs and that is an important point. We do not export and we annually fill our extra requirements from the United States. The problem is one of the price at which United States fruit enters our market and also the timing. United States soft fruits reach maturity well ahead of ours. Their market is saturated before we commence to pick. When the United States market is saturated their prices begin to drop in their own country and they are faced with a disposal problem. Highly perishable fruit still in great quantities must be sold. This fruit is dumped in the United States market. I would ask hon. members to note that they dump their own fruit in their own market and they do so at distress prices, at prices designed to clean up the crop, at salvage prices or, if you will, fire sale prices and, of the utmost importance to us, at prices that bear no relation to the United States cost of production.

The importance of these prices is seen because it is at this stage that our own production comes on our own market. Here you see the chronic disability under which we suffer. The United States fire sale price is the price at which we must begin to sell, a price at which no self-respecting United States producer would produce, let alone sell. Much more important, this distress selling becomes the controlling factor in our price structure. These imports do occur but, believe me, fruit does not have to come across our border to dominate our price structure. The threat of import is sufficient. A quotation f.o.b. any point in the United States will do the trick.

As the Customs Act now stands we are powerless. With distress imports, that is, actual imports coming into our country before relief can be obtained, the damage is done. But over and above this there is no power in the act which can stop the harmful, in fact, disastrous results of a United States f.o.b. quotation. That is our picture. It is from this set of circumstances that we seek relief. Hon. members will now see why we have taken heart at the expression of policy with regard to distress selling and fair value for duty. Here is what the Minister of Finance said while referring to unfair trade practices and I quote from Hansard of June 17, page 1246:

> During the past year many representatives of Canadian industry, large and small, and agriculture, have discussed their problems with members of the government. We have been impresed by the serious difficulties that have been created for many of them by the dumping of foreign goods in the Canadian market. Such dumping may arise from a variety of causes and may take many forms. The present dumping duties section of the customs tariff together with the valuation provisions of the customs act are adequate to deal with some forms of dumping. However, they do not deal with cases where goods are being imported into Canada at less than their cost of production and are also sold in the country of export below cost.

That is precisely what I was saying before. Later the minister went on to say:

> —have examined this problem with the utmost care and am satisfied that this unfair trading practice is in fact occurring, with a harmful impact on Canadian producers.

He went on to say:

> Most countries which carry on substantial foreign trade have laws to protect their domestic producers against dumping. Indeed the right to take effective measures against dumping has long been a standard provision of international trade treaties including the GATT. The government intends to defend Canadian producers against the practice of dumping, whatever form it may take. This will require the strengthening of the present valuation provisions of the Customs Act and their effective enforcement. To this end my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, will shortly submit a bill to parliament amending the valuation provisions of the Customs Act to add a provision to section 35 along the lines of the legislation in effect prior to 1948, requiring that, where appropriate, the value for duty of imported goods shall not be less than the cost of production plus a reasonable advance for selling cost and profit.

Furthermore may I suggest that in the proposed amendments to section 35 of the Customs Act, the representations of the Canadian horticultural council be given the full hearing and respect to which they are entitled. We should remember that this council is the Canada-wide voice of the fruit and vegetable growers and their representations should be treated in the light of the words I have quoted which were spoken by the Minister of Finance. Let them also be treated in the light of the words of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) when he stated that in his view Canada made a grave mistake in 1948 in amending the then provisions afforded by the key valuation section of the Customs Act. He might well have said that at that date we sold the safeguards of our producers.

There is nothing new in fair value for duty. We had it once and we lost it, or gave it away. The Canadian horticultural council fought for this principle in the twenties. They received it in 1930 and from 1930 until 1935 the fruit and vegetable industry had a measure of protection unequalled before or since that time. I say since! Look what has happened. In 1935 the gradual whittling away of protection began both on specific duties and on minimum fair value for duty. Year by year concessions were given and lost until finally in 1948 the Customs Act was emasculated and we sold out to GATT.

Regarding fruit and vegetables, there are difficulties in the proposed amendment to section 35 of the Customs Act. The amendments will be based on cost of production. The Canadian horticultural council, realizing the difficulty of fixing costs of production on fruits and vegetables, has suggested an additional amending clause as follows:

> Sec. 35(13) Notwithstanding anything in the Act, whenever duty ad valorem or specific is imposed on any fresh or processed fruit or vegetable of a class or kind produced in Canada, where the market price in the country of export has, as the result of the advance of the season or the marketing period, declined to levels that do not reflect, in the opinion of the minister, their normal price, the minimum value for duty shall be the amount determined and declared by the minister to be the average price for the same or similar products entered at customs during the immediately preceding ten calendar years.

(14) The operation of the value for duty fixed pursuant to the last preceding subsection may be suspended by the minister in the case of such fruit or vegetable imported into any specified region or part of Canada.

There is merit in this suggested clause because in the clause the price at which imports of fruits and vegetables enter Canada is a known amount and is easily ascertained. It is a matter of record in the dominion bureau of statistics. Such a clause would settle our difficulties to a great extent. Stability should follow as result of crop disposal at higher average prices; the government would not be called upon to subsidize the soft fruit portion of the industry under the stabilization act; United States dumping or distress selling would be curbed. It might well be that growers would become taxpayers. These advantages make sense. To my mind there is a further common-sense factor. As it now stands, when payments are made under the stabilization act the government will be subsidizing United States fruit imports. Would it not be better to provide the opportunity for the grower to stand on his own two feet?

Once again, I agree with the forthright statements of the hon. member for Carleton. May I state without reservation that the fruit industry of British Columbia is an industry of long-standing growth and is properly situated. We can face reasonable and proper competition from imported goods; we are not asking to be pampered and petted by excessively protective measures. What we want is the benefit of the amendment to the Customs Act so that foreign dumping is eliminated. And I reiterate and expand the sentiments of the hon. member for Carleton —surely there is no member of this house who wants Canadian agriculture to be compelled to compete with foreign agricultural goods sold at less than their cost of production and normal profit.

I further concur with him—I too, so long as I have a vote in this house, will not vote to compel Canadian growers and agricultural workers to compete with dumped foreign fruits and vegetables.

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) deserves congratulations upon creating a precedent when he spoke several sentences of his budget speech in the French language on the evening of June 17 last. He deserves congratulations not only because of this venture but because of the quality of his French. This is a praiseworthy precedent which the Liberal minister of finance in the next parliament will, I am sure, be happy to follow. Incidentally I had an opportunity to admire the minister's French last March when he did me the honour of coming to speak to the voters of Lapointe on my behalf.

I feel it is regrettable that the minister did not deliver his budget address on the memorable evening of June 10, 1957 as it was rumoured he would do. The blue suit, the blue lectern and the artificial blue carnation would have stood out the more against a red banner indicating the $100 million deficit and by such a gesture he would have given to this anniversary the real significance of the arrival of a Conservative government in this country.

While the minister created a precedent by speaking French the other evening he certainly did not break new ground in offering to the Canadian people an enormous deficit. In this he carefully followed the well-trodden path of the Conservative party, because Canada has not seen a balanced Tory budget in the last 45 years. How could the Progressive Conservatives offer us anything else because there is a contradiction in their very title. The 20,500 words of the budget speech deserves to be considered almost a work of genius. I remember, as do many others, my college years when our professors judged our essays according to two principles—their contents and their style. If I were to apply these standards to the minister's work of art I would give him, being a Liberal, about 60 out of 100 points for style and one or two for content. However, it is for another reason that I believe the minister's effort is almost a work of genius. I believe it was Carlyle, who said that genius is composed of 99 per cent perspiration and one per cent inspiration. What a pity that little one per cent of inspiration is missing in this instance. However, the minister deserves full credit for the 99 per cent perspiration which he so elegantly exhibited to us.

When one reads the budget speech in the official record of this house, where it is divested of the sheen and sensationalism with which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) managed to clothe it in by his intonations, his emphasis, his gestures and his rhetorical flourishes, one is struck by the absence of concrete steps designed to solve the most urgent problem which afflicts at this time so many families in my constituency and throughout this country: unemployment.

There is no word there of any reduction in tax, only ominous silence with regard to family allowances, and complete silence too with regard to federal provincial fiscal relations. There is however another thing which will strike anybody who will take the trouble to read this speech attentively. It is the government's rather guilty spirit of self-congratulation in the presence of the difficult situation which Canadians have been facing over the last few months. This feeling cannot be necessarily inferred from the words spoken by the minister, but it can be drawn as a logical conclusion from the absence of an energetic and aggressive policy designed to fight the present recession. When account is taken of the commitments made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to the Canadian people during the 1957 campaign, when he was still leader of the opposition, and if the first Conservative budget is compared with those promises, there is no escaping the fact that the government has repudiated its solemn commitments to the Canadian people. The Prime Minister refuses to admit at this time that he had in fact promised to reduce taxation by $500 million. But what did he mean, speaking in Victoria on May 21, 1957? In a Canadian press report published in the Ottawa Journal of May 22, the following sentence is attributed to the Prime Minister:

(Text):

A Conservative government would cut unnecessary taxation to promote production which would help meet the threat of inflation. Last year the government had overtaxed Canadians by $500 million.

(Translation):

On the other hand the Victoria Times of May 22, 1957, reported as follows:

(Text):

The Conservative leader claimed that the federal government had taken $500 million more than it needed from the people of Canada.

(Translation):

What is the meaning of those words pronounced in the heat of an election campaign if not a clear $500 million tax cut. To all intents and purposes, they surely intend to give the impression that a Conservative government will not collect those $500 million which the former administration had overcollected. If that is not—

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Why not? Even if I am not a professor of French at Laval, I understand French just the same. If that is not the impression sought to be created by such a turn of speech we might as well forget the meaning of words right now and perhaps lay off some French professors.

What were we offered after those promises were made to the Canadian people? A $178 million tax cut by way of resolutions in the last parliament and a ridiculous $26 million tax cut in the last budget speech. All told, it is a little more than $204 million, when the public was led to expect $500 million. As the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) so aptly put it the other day, the government or the Conservative party gave us an example of dual policy, namely a progressive policy before the elections and another one, the conservative policy, the genuine one, after the elections.

After witnessing so many examples of this kind given by politicians lusting for power, who have one policy before the elections and another afterwards, the public will end up by saying: What is the good of being interested in politics. Politicians are all of the same ilk. If we want voters to lose confidence eventually in public men,—and in saying we, I do not include your humble servant,—all we have to do is to continue acting this way for that is the best means to that end.

There is no doubt that the government should have reduced personal income tax. It was imperative, the more so since the purchasing power of the dollar has been substantially reduced, and it would have been absolutely necessary to put more money in circulation to stimulate our weakening economy. The budget offered an opportunity to increase the basic exemption, which would have been a form of a tax reduction. I make this claim first because it is absolutely reasonable,—it may perhaps not be understood by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) but it is nevertheless a reasonable thing,—and also because it was one of the main demands of the Canadian and Catholic Labour Union during the last electoral campaign and, finally, because I wish the Minister of Finance to keep his word. In March last, the C.C.L.U. asked that the basic exemption be raised from $1,000 to $1,500 for single persons and from $2,000 to $3,000 for married people. I make this request to the government with the conviction that the Minister of Finance is a man who fulfills his promises. He must surely remember what he said here, in this house, on March 27, 1956, following Mr. Harris' budget. The hon. member for Eglinton, now Minister of Finance, as shown on page 2,648 of volume III of Hansard for that year said:

The next matter to be mentioned, sir, is the income tax. It is true that the rate is unchanged. It should have been reduced. Of course, we are going to have to wait until election year for those increases in the exemptions which are long overdue.

...In 1953, in the general election, the Progressive Conservative party advocated in the plainest terms an increase in the income tax exemptions to $1,500 for single persons and $3,000 for married persons.

What then is the hon. Minister of Finance waiting for to implement what he himself advocated? If this suggestion was good, and if he believed it was good in 1953, surely it is just as good today, in 1958.

This year the government boasts of providing supplementary benefits for the unemployed, and we hear much about its public works program. As far as the supplementary benefits are concerned, there is no doubt that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) had no wish to mislead the public, but he was so vague and so lacking in clarity,—I hope not deliberately so,—that he left with the people the impression that everyone qualifying for seasonal benefits would be entitled to the supplementary benefits. The government seemed to feel that it was highly generous towards a great number of Canadians who were in dire straits.

When I went home for a few days, I met quite a number of unemployed who, after the statement of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) on the matter, and all the publicity that was made about it, asked me why they were not entitled to supplementary benefits.

At a time when hardship has seldom been so prevalent, why did the government not take any steps to protect those who were suffering and are still suffering from the difficult situation we experience today? This is no time for arguing, and pointing an accusing finger at those we believed responsible for the situation. It is time to tackle the problem and try to solve it.

I was disappointed the other day by the answer the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) gave to an inquiry by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets), when he said:

(Text):

What about unemployment? I will tell you plenty about it and I will make it clear who is responsible for the present situation in unemployment before I am done if that is the issue the hon. gentleman wants to raise.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, when we come across someone who is sick, wounded or destitute, we hasten to help him out, before quarrelling with those who might be responsible for his plight.

Much has been and still is being said about public works. I now come to Lake St. John and Roberval. What has been done there? At this point I could leave the floor to my hon. friend from Roberval if he wishes to answer. What has been done in the four constituencies of my district to improve the situation? I am certainly not to be told that the contract for the runway at Alma has been or is about to be granted; I was in the Department of Transport—I was employed there for three years—when the former minister, the Hon. George Marler, announced to the previous Liberal member for Lake St. John and to the mayor of the city that the Department of Transport had agreed to build the airport in Alma. I have followed this matter too closely, on the request of Mr. Andre Gauthier, the former member, not to be perfectly aware of what has gone on, and I am now awaiting a reply from my hon. friends in the house.

Mr. Boivin: They do not answer.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): And yet, Mr. Speaker, the ministers came to us during the last election and approved every promise made by the candidates who said they had a vast program of public works for their respective ridings—

Mr. Tremblay: This is not true.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): All the ministers approved them, except the one chiefly responsible, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), not to speak of the approval of the house, of course.

Mr. Tremblay: That is not true.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): All that has been done up to now back home is merely what had been planned and decided by the former Liberal government.

I hear my hon. friend saying: "That is not true." I had thought that since his election he had learned how things are done in Ottawa, and among other things, that no lies may be told here. He would seem to have a very vivid recollection of the last campaign.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) felt keenly about the unfortunate circumstances of the municipalities of this country and gave the impression that he was about to solve their problems. But what concrete steps has he taken in this connection, apart from all the words which he has used to say that he was going to do something. He simply chose to announce that he was proposing to go over the heads of the provinces, that have jurisdiction in this matter, to gather together the representatives of the municipalities. And this is the man who spoke so movingly and touchingly of respect for provincial autonomy. It is still time to help the municipalities and to bring about a material reduction in unemployment, if only the government will prove its sincerity.

For instance at Jonquiere, where I live, the corporation intends to build a badly needed municipal filtration plant. More and more new subdivisions are going up all the time, and this involves very large municipal expenditures for water supply, power and sewer systems. There are also some urgent and necessary works to be carried out in the town of Kenogami. To give but one example, it will cost close to $800,000 to rebuild and improve the water system.

The town of Arvida is in the same situation. It has to eliminate at least two level crossings which have already cost human lives and it is important that those crossings disappear as soon as possible. It still has an urgent need of a town hall to accommodate its various services. It also has other important projects which, if they were carried out, would relieve to that extent the painful unemployment situation. The same urgent needs can be noted in all municipalities. I shall look forward to hearing what the hon. member for Roberval has to say in this regard.

If the government, which promised so much, gave assistance to municipalities by way of low interest loans, unemployment would be reduced substantially in all municipalities of this country and it is a truism—I use simple words now, so that the hon. member for Roberval will understand me,—it is a truism that if unemployment is reduced locally, it will automatically be reduced nationally. As this is not hard to understand I am sure the hon. member for Roberval has already understood.

There would be much to be said about this old question of the public works promised by the Prime Minister and the Conservative candidates during the last election and I regret I will not have enough time to read a very appropriate article by a most distinguished journalist, Mr. John Bird. In that article published in the edition of February 28 last of the Toronto Star, the author describes the seriousness of the Prime Minister's gigantic program of public works and does so with as much accuracy as humour. Of course, the hon. member for Roberval would have to listen to me closely when I read it because there is considerable wit in that article. I cannot however resist the temptation to read two or three paragraphs from it for the information of the house.

(Text):

John Bird, in this article from Ottawa, writes:

> The Conservatives' $1,185,000,000 "works project" to relieve unemployment is just a diddle of old figures. It whittles down to only about $50 million of new money to provide jobs. Even Tory ministers are chary of the bogus big figures now. It centres upon that $1,185,000,000 "works project" announced with such flourish and advertised as "great" and "new" from Tory platforms across the country. And on high authority, too. Here is Prime Minister Diefenbaker's own statement, broadcast over station CKY, Winnipeg, on Feb. 12: "Now what about the future? And I know what unemployment is. Ladies and gentlemen, to provide for the future of Canada and to ensure jobs, we have launched a nationwide works project for constructive works, for dividend-paying works of $1,185,000,000 of which $270,000,000 will be spent in the first three months of this year." The text is from the Prime Minister's own office. And, in due course, out from the Prime Minister's office in Ottawa came a press release giving some particulars of the $1,185,000,000 but couched in much more cautious, canny terms than those employed by the Prime Minister himself at Winnipeg or by Conservative orators elsewhere. And there is good reason for this caution in language, because that touted $1,185,000,000 is little more than the regular departmental construction estimates for 1958-59, plus $140,000,000 of CNR maintenance and construction, which last, incidentally, is a much lower figure than the comparable one for last year. In accounting for $1,185,000,000, the Prime Minister's office tabulates $106,000,000 for that fine Tory project, the St. Lawrence seaway, launched by the Liberals, of course . . . And in blowing up to inflate the figures, $40,000,000 is included for that fine Conservative works project, the Northern Ontario pipe line against which every Tory member of parliament in the house at the time quite naturally voted "no".

The article continues:

> By and large, the $1,185,000,000 figure consists of the totals for construction work of various kinds that would have appeared in the regular 1958-59 federal estimates, if ever they had been presented to parliament. But by the device of failing to present estimates and failing to give the nation an accounting in a budget before the election, the Conservatives felt able to announce regular, even routine departmental expenditures, plus expenditures on such projects as the seaway and pipe line, as if they were somehow new.

And the article concluded with these words:

> For assorted politicians on the hustings to play fast and loose with statistics is nothing new in the politics of Canada or any other country. What is new in recent history is for a Prime Minister of Canada to encourage such political legerdemain.

(Translation):

To put it bluntly, Mr. Speaker, the government has noisily blared away what it intended to do to alleviate the unemployment problem. It has done absolutely nothing, except stretching winter into June, if I may use the very picturesque and pertinent phrase coined by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). Yet, unemployment is still cruelly prevailing and it is not the government's public works that have produced a lowering of the statistics: it is simply the normal resumption of business. Only a month ago, there were 12,745 unemployed in our district—I mean the four constituencies—I do not expect the hon. member for Roberval to be aware of the latest statistics, as I am not asking so much of him,— while during the same period last year, there were only 5,622.

The municipality of St. Ambroise sent me a resolution calling for help from the federal government in order to reduce the heavy unemployment. If the government helped the municipalities, St. Ambroise might immediately start building a town hall, water mains and sewers, and tackle much other work for new services. But under the leadership of a man who will surely go down in history in this field, the government prefers to just talk.

I wanted to deal at length with family allowances and, more particularly, with the extreme indifference of the government in this matter. I listened with a great deal of satisfaction and attention to the very eloquent plea of my friend, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine), on the subject of family allowances and, frankly, there is not much I can add, except that the government has failed to do its duty in a serious matter. I shall refer to the requests of the C.C.L.U. and I quote the petition its officers submitted to me during the last election: "In order to restore all the social value family allowances had when first introduced, their minimum rate should be raised to $8 and the maximum rate to $13 for each child."

This was from a text by the C.C.L.U. I also received from the city council of Arvida a resolution asking me to support the council in the request it sent to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) to have family allowances doubled and the benefits of family allowances extended to all children attending school regardless of age.

At the Conservative convention of December 13, 1956, Hon. T. L. Smith stated that the Progressive Conservative party accepts the principle of family allowances. It is being quite generous to say that one accepts this principle much as one would accept the great principles of physics and chemistry. However, in the matter of family allowances, words must be followed by deeds. Of course, that is one thing I would never ask the hon. member for Roberval.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Labour (Mrs. Fairclough) to kindly study the decision just handed down by justice John D. Kearny of the exchequer court in his capacity as arbitrator in a case relating to a request made by the national union of aluminum workers of Arvida, office employees' local. This was an appeal made after the case had been heard by the arbitration board at Chicoutimi.

The members of the office employees union at the aluminum plant at Arvida have their own union which has its own collective bargaining agreements with the company.

In 1957, shortly before the Arvida strike, the office employees, having discussed the matter, decided to send a delegate or representative to the talks going on at that time between company authorities and the officials of the national union of aluminum workers of Arvida.

Once work had come to a stop after the beginning of the strike, those office employees did not leave work. Rather it was the company that notified them that there was no more work for them. In other words, they were to all practical purposes forced to leave their employment for the duration of the strike.

The appeal has been maintained and the cause referred to the arbitration board. Moreover, representations have been submitted to the hon. Minister of Labour. I am very happy to see that the arbitrator has decided to refer the cause to the board of arbitration of the company. And one of the findings of the report reads as follows:

> After having carefully examined all documents pertaining to this appeal, and taking also into account the above remarks of the appellant's attorney, I consider it would be to the advantage of all parties concerned that the arbitration board proceed to a new study and hearing of the whole case.

Here is a human problem affecting slightly more than 400 employees of Arvida, Jonquiere, Kenogami and Chicoutimi. If the Minister of Labour should care to look into this matter, I believe that not only would he make some people happy, but perhaps—you never can tell—the population might show its gratitude in the next elections by sending to Ottawa someone well grounded in the Conservative gospel.

Mr. Speaker, there is in my riding another problem of which my colleagues opposite are aware. I received a letter from the Federation of the U.C.C. (Catholic Farmers' Unions) of the Saguenay district.

Mr. Tremblay: As for me, I got an answer from the department.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): If you want me to explain the answer you got from the department, I shall do so.

Mr. Tremblay: I read it, and it is an excellent one.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, everybody knows, and I have it from the government itself, that the Conservative administration has set the price for cheese at 34 cents a pound in Ontario and 33½ cents a pound for the Quebec producers. I shall now quote a paragraph from this letter. As I said before, at the beginning of my speech, this is a letter received from the Federation of Farmers' Unions of the Saguenay district. It reads as follows:

> We therefore wish to point out to you that we have had in our area for about twenty years three recognized grading stations filling all the requirements of the federal government. They are situated in Chambord,...

A well-known place where the hon. member for Roberval lives—

> ...in St. Bruno and in Chicoutimi. Those stations even have export permits through the Port Alfred seaport. In other words, cheese is shipped from its warehouses after grading, weighing and waxing.

I was about to say "by the hon. member for Roberval."

Mr. Tremblay: Thank you.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

> The U.C.C. Federation of the Saguenay area would therefore ask you to kindly approach the Minister of Agriculture without delay...

That has already been done. The hon. member for Roberval did it.

Mr. Tremblay: That is true.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):

> ...and the president of the agricultural prices support board with a view first to having the support price of cheese raised to 34 cents a pound in the province of Quebec as it is in Ontario and to making this price payable to recognized grading stations, which means in our area, Chambord, St. Bruno and Chicoutimi.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I say this with perfect detachment because none of those places is in my constituency. I do it perhaps to make up for the incomprehensible silence of the hon. member for Roberval.

I continue the quotation:

> There is only one support price on butter in Ontario and Quebec. Why should there be two in the case of cheese?

I submit this problem to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) and I would ask him to kindly take it into consideration. He might perhaps let me have a copy of the letter which he sent to the member for Roberval.

[Mr. Brassard (Lapointe).]

Mr. Tremblay: I got a reply; and an excellent one.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Be that as it may, I shall be glad to hear from him.

Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious for you to recognize the hon. member for Roberval.

Moreover, there is in our area another problem which does not concern only my own constituency. I am not merely talking politics but I am dealing with a human matter and I will get to the hon. member for Roberval in good time, human matters being of interest to me, even those which concern the member for Roberval. I have reference here to the layoff of employees by the Canadian National Railways. Since this is a human interest problem I might add at this point that these layoffs are due to the fact that in our area, as everywhere else, there has been a switch over to diesel engines. There has also been an extension in the sections which the various railway employees must look after. I believe that one sectionman must now look after twelve or fifteen miles of track as against seven or eight miles formerly. It will be appreciated that this has brought about a substantial reduction in the number of employees.

I have no bone to pick with the Canadian National Railways management. When I was with the Department of Transport I heard too many opposition members rise to say rude things. As far as I am concerned, I will not say everything I have in my mind, but if I had the word power of the member for Roberval—

Mr. Rouleau: It would be a rather poor choice of words.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): When hon. members in the opposition used to talk about the officials of the Canadian National Railways, you would have thought that these gentlemen did not know how to run their own business. I have worked in close cooperation with top C.N.R. officials, and Mr. Gordon, its distinguished president, knows the network of railroads very well but he is a businessman. What he is lacking perhaps in some degree—and I don't hold it against him—is that his decisions sometimes are crushing for poor members of parliament, who have to carry the load of everything that might be going on in their constituencies and which they, themselves, are unable to solve.

Now, the dismissal of these employees at home is another problem which hurts. There are heads of families who had been working for the C.N.R. for 15, 18 and even 20 years, in fact, one of the last to be dismissed had at least 31 years of service. I have no wish to put the government on the spot. I appreciate the situation but I ask them to look at that problem and to urge the Canadian National to study it and try to find a solution which will not increase the expenditures of the Canadian National in such a way as to put its annual balance sheet in the red.

There is another problem connected with this question of railway employees. Many of these employees, ten, fifteen or even eighteen years ago chose to work for the Canadian National because they felt that that crown corporation offered more stability than private industry. They made a sacrifice in turning away from private industry to join the C.N. so as to work, as they said, for the government because, while the Canadian National is an independent corporation, in the mind of the public it is the government.

Once more I ask the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) to take up the matter with the railway authorities in order to find a solution.

Mr. Speaker, in my closing remarks, I am going to please the hon. member for Roberval because I want to sum up my impression of the budget speech by quoting what was said in this house, in 1955, by the then hon. member for Broadview, who is now the hon. Minister of Transport.

I hope that there will also be applause when I have read his statement. At the end of his speech of January 14, 1955, reported on page 218 of volume I of the House of Commons debates official report, the hon. member for Broadview said:

> I would therefore urge this government to stop thinking of curing unemployment merely by making adjustments to the Unemployment Insurance Act and accelerating our public works program, necessary though those measures may be. The problem we are facing requires far sterner measures. Unemployment is the barometer of economic progress within a country, and when it increases by anywhere from 40 to 100 per cent over the corresponding figures for last year it demonstrates that we are not nearly as healthy economically as we should be.

I therefore ask my hon. friend, our genial Minister of Transport, to use all his influence with the Minister of Finance to have the very sound statement he made in this house in 1955 taken into consideration.

(Text):

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make my initial contribution to the debate in this house may I presume on my own behalf to paraphrase your initial statement to the other house, and remark that should I transgress the rules in any way the fault is mine alone. For the last six weeks I have sat in my place trying to emulate that wise old owl who sat nodding in an oak tree and the more he heard the less he spoke and the less he spoke the more he heard. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have heard so many words in those six weeks that I am compelled to register a few of my own and to say that my first observation is that at this level of democracy perhaps we are prone to treat the meaning of the word "parliament" a mite literally.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I add my felicitations, belated though they are, to the accolades which you have already received on your re-election as the first commoner. At the same time I must congratulate this house on having among its members one so emminently suited for that onerous position which would appear to demand that its incumbent be endowed with the wisdom of Solomon, the patience of Job and a disposition that commands equanimity, good humour and fairness in the face of all conditions, and all this in two languages.

I would like to point out at this time that having as a child had the honour of being acquainted with that honourable and gracious gentleman who was your father, when he and my father campaigned together in that part of the Northwest Territories which is now Alberta, I know that it is not by chance that you have the necessary attributes to fill your high position with honour.

May I add my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker and to the deputy chairman of committees of the whole on their election to the posts they fill with such efficiency. I wish also at this time to convey my felicitations to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on his success in the election just past, in being returned to office with such a decisive mandate from the people of Canada and on now having completed one full year in his high office, and on having achieved in so short a time the high ideal of a united Canada.

I must also congratulate Canada on being blessed in having a native son in the person of the right hon. Prime Minister who has been able to don the mantles of those two outstanding Canadians, Macdonald and Cartier, who, over a hundred years ago, originated the Progressive Conservative party with the object of making a united Canada, a nation composed of Canadians of many national origins, many creeds and many cultures, all welded into one people and proud to bear the name "Canadian". The result of that achievement can be seen right in this house where all the major ethnic groups in Canada are represented and are all proud of the comradeship that exists between them. This achievement is more remarkable in that other parties have worked on the principle of "divide and conquer", with very marked success in the past, having stirred up regional, national and religious animosities for purely political expediency.

I must now make a few remarks about the constituency of Vegreville, Alberta. The constituency which I am so proud to represent takes its name from the largest town within its borders. It is truly Canada in miniature because the people who live there are descendants of those hardy pioneers who came from many lands, with many cultures and many faiths and with one idea, to make a home for their families in a country where they could be free, free to own the land on which they lived, worship according to their own belief and, in short, help to establish the freedom that we now enjoy in Canada. This they did with the result that we, the descendants of those pioneers, are welded together into a nation, Canada, and we are fiercely proud to be able to say, "I am a Canadian".

Vegreville constituency is situated in almost the centre of Alberta. In order to fix its location better in your minds, may I say that the wide spot in the road that we call the city of Edmonton, our capital city, is located about 25 miles straight west. Many Edmonton citizens were raised in my constituency, among them, for example, the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Skoreyko) and the mayor of Edmonton who has made such an outstanding name for himself. It comprises an area of about 5,000 square miles which I somehow thought was quite a size until I came to Ottawa and heard the extent of other constituencies. There are about 25,000 electors with a total population of about 50,000. It contains three complete provincial constituencies and parts of four or five others.

The main industry is mixed farming, with oil activity in the Redwater and Bruderheim oil fields. Elk Island national park lies entirely within my constituency. Last year over 183,000 persons visited this park which is the home of some 1,500 plains buffalo as well as elk, moose and deer. In the northeastern part of Vegreville constituency is situated the Saddle Lake Indian reserve which has quite a large population of our original Canadians, many of whom are veterans of the first or second world wars and some of both. There is also a chemical plant at Duvernay.

The constituency is crossed from east to west by four railway lines but the Canadian National line that lies north of the North Saskatchewan river and runs from Edmonton to Heinsburg via St. Paul stops abruptly at Heinsburg and requires an extension of some 38 miles to connect with the Canadian National at Frenchman's Butte, Saskatchewan.

The constituency has been represented by Liberals, one U.F.A. member and Social Credit members, the last representative having been Peter Stefura, a Social Crediter, who was here only from June 10, 1957 to March 31, 1958. Before that John Decore, a Liberal, represented the constituency for eight years but he did not stand for re-election last June. Through the united efforts of a great many people from both inside and outside the constituency, I have been given the honour and privilege of serving the finest constituency in Canada for the next four years as its first Conservative member. I am reminded that one day last spring in my home town of Mundare I went to a Liberal meeting where the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) was speaking on behalf of the Liberal candidate. I had the pleasure of meeting him that day and I remember well saying to him that I would meet him in Ottawa after March 31. At that time I did not know that I would be sitting on the same side of the house on the left of Mr. Speaker but outside the black line that surrounds the opposition.

Since I am a farmer, Mr. Speaker, and represent a constituency that is 90 per cent dependent on the farming industry, I wish to place before you the reasons for the dissatisfaction of Canadian farmers in general and western Canadian farmers in particular. However, it is my personal opinion that, while something more must be done at this time to assist Canadian farmers to get their fair share of the national income, whether by deficiency payments or other methods, such subsidization on a permanent basis is not the answer to the farming problem. I believe that continual government subsidization of any business or industry tends to destroy initiative and will in time destroy the industry and those engaged in it. There will always be more and bigger demands for additional government help if the idea of subsidizing every industry continues. I see that we are travelling along a road that will shortly divide into two roads. We have our choice. One road leads to a total welfare state, that is, one with total government control, and the other road, while embracing something of the final results to be found at the end of the first road, has at its end an economy based on agreement between all levels of business or should I say all levels of life.

To get back to the business of farming, I want to make it perfectly clear at this time that the farmers of Canada do not wish to require handouts or subsidies or whatever you may call them, but the farmers, who are the most independent group of people in Canada, want to have it recognized that they are the backbone of the country and that it is their right to have their business placed on a level with that of other businesses. All that we ask is that we get a square deal in the economy of Canada, which means that we get our fair share of the national income. This objective is a must for our government, because, as I said before, the economy of the country is dependent on its basic industry, agriculture. We do not like to be accused of begging for special treatment in order to survive but we do want it recognized that steps must be taken to see that we get what is our due. Unlike labour, the farmers of Canada do not wish to strike and tie up the whole economy of the nation to enforce their demands because when a strike is in effect the people who suffer most are the women and children and it is not right to cause hardship to people who are innocent.

The farmers of western Canada are faced with a situation where, when we sell our grain, we have to pay the freight on it to Fort William or Vancouver. In other words, we sell our grain f.o.b Fort William or Vancouver. The freight rate from where I live to Fort William is 26 cents per hundred pounds. It is deducted on delivery. It would be more if the Crowsnest rate was not in effect. It is a fortunate thing that this rate was agreed to by the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific railway with the idea of it being in effect forever. We are also faced with a freight rate to the prairies which is higher than the freight rate to other parts of Canada. It is a well known fact that freight from eastern Canada can be shipped to Vancouver and trans-shipped to Alberta at less cost than if the shipment was made directly to Alberta. A situation like this should be corrected.

The farmers are also faced with the excessive cost of the machinery required to operate the farms. The increase in the price of all machinery required bears no proper relationship to the value of the work it is called on to perform. Something therefore must be done to bring the price of the machinery that we must have into a fair relationship with its value to the farming industry. Positive measures must be put into effect to correct the inequities in the spread between what the producer receives for his goods and what the consumer pays for them.

I want now to commend our government for what it has already done to assist the farmers and what the government proposes to do at this session of parliament. Cash advances on farm-stored grain have been a very great help to the farmers of western Canada. Income tax reductions, in the next year will total over $200 million. The hospitalization plan is coming into effect in five provinces on July 1, this year. The Prairie Farm Assistance Act is being changed to make it more realistic and be of benefit to more people. A national crop insurance plan is being studied and the farmers will be very happy when a comprehensive plan of crop insurance becomes effective.

At the moment, because of the inequities in the business of farming, a system of deficiency payments on farm products would be of great assistance. This would be a stopgap, until such time as the government can see its way clear to institute a two-price system on farm products.

It is very heartening to note that provision is made to expand the harbour facilities at Fort William and Port Arthur for the handling of sea-going ships and that the St. Lawrence seaway is expected to be in operation next year. This, it has been stated, will increase the return in respect of wheat to the western farmer by four cents a bushel owing to the saving in freight between Fort William and Montreal. I do hope that this is correct because the farmers in western Canada believe it to be so.

I am pleased to note that the government proposes to bring into effect a Canadian bill of rights. In my opinion, such a measure is long overdue.

I may say that the government proposals for the development of northern Canada are also long overdue, because it is well known that locked in the vastness of our great northern territory are the richest deposits of minerals and oil in the world. We must develop these for the good of Canada and Canadians and make room for increased population in Canada and provide a larger market within the nation for our Canadian products. With respect to developing this country, I would refer hon. members to the address of my good friend and neighbour, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), in which he so ably set forth the situation in his constituency and further to the north. Other hon. members from northern Canada are also to be commended for the way in which they have set forth the measures necessary in order to open up this wonderful country and make its treasures available for the good of Canada as a whole.

I am very happy to notice mention has been made of a northern branch of the trans-Canada highway to serve the north central, and northern part of the prairie provinces and British Columbia. Such a highway through the Yellowhead pass would be of inestimable benefit to Canada. I would like to see it come through my constituency on the direct route from Saskatoon to Edmonton, which would be over Alberta's highway No. 16, and this as soon as possible.

A great deal has been said about the railway situation in northern Alberta. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) has at times remarked on an extension to the Canadian National Railways line which goes from Edmonton to Heinsburg, through St. Paul, Alberta—a matter of about 38 miles—and the benefits this extension would provide for the people living in the country served by this railway, and also for the industry situated at Heinsburg. The first benefit to the farmers of the Vegreville constituency, who live north of the North Saskatchewan river, would be a saving of two cents per bushel in freight on their grain. I would suggest that this government very strongly consider the necessity of urging the Canadian National Railways to complete the extension of this line from Heinsburg to Frenchman's Butte. I have never been able to understand how or why this extension was not insisted upon by former governments.

As I have mentioned before, I have within my constituency the Saddle Lake Indian reserve and I may say that I have strong opinions on the way that these people should be helped to take their places as full citizens of Canada. I know perfectly well that many of them still wish to enjoy the benefits of their more or less sheltered existence, without the added responsibility of citizenship, but if this policy of treating them as children and wards of the government continues they will never be able to take their proper place in the life of their country, and to make the contribution to Canadian life of which they are capable. I think they should be permitted to enjoy full Canadian citizenship with, for some years, no restriction on the benefits they have been receiving under the original treaty.

We have heard a very great deal of talk about the unemployment situation in Canada. This is a real problem, but I would bring to your attention the fact that there are jobs for 150,000 to 200,000 workers if they would only accept work on Canadian farms. The farmers are unable to properly carry out farming operations, because of the lack of farm help, and farmers cannot compete with industry in the matter of wages paid to farm help because farmers do not get that kind of money for what they produce. Therefore, when the returns to the farmers of Canada for their products are brought to the proper level the agricultural industry will be able to be conducted along the lines of other industries and farmers will be able to get the necessary help to conduct their operations efficiently.

The increase in benefits to veterans and their dependents through the changes in the War Veterans' Allowance Act and the legislation covering veterans' dependents are greatly appreciated by those people to whom this country owes so large a debt of gratitude.

I was very pleased to hear the Right Hon. Harold Macmillan, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, remark in this house a few days ago that the results of the visit of the trade mission sent to the United Kingdom by the present government in late 1957 were most gratifying, and that the benefits will increase as time goes on.

I now want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on having the intestinal fortitude to bring down a deficit budget at this time. This shows that our government has a full realization of the situation in Canada and is taking drastic measures to control the situation. In time of war there is always money available for everything that is necessary. A budget based on a large deficit is the normal course to follow at that time. Why, then, is it wrong to follow the same course during peace? The statement has been made so many times that there is always money to fight a war, so why is there not money for peace? Among the many things the budget provides—and I am going to confine my remarks to a very few—are the changes in the Succession Duty Act under which a widow will now have a total exemption in respect of her husband's estate of $60,000. The injustices perpetrated under the former act have always been a very great hardship to the widows and their families. I am also pleased to see provision made for deductions in respect of medical expenses. The savings to municipalities in removing the duty on culverts and machinery will be of very great assistance. The removal of duty on parts for farm machinery will also help the farmers.

In view of what I have said, I would like to suggest that this house vote against the sub-amendment and, when the time comes, that it likewise vote against the amendment and that the motion proposed by the Minister of Finance be approved in its original form.

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): At the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure hon. members that in the vote which will be taken in a few moments we in this party will support this amendment to the amendment because it is based on the principle of tax reduction as an anti-recession measure. We made such tax reduction the main plank in our anti-recession program. It was a planned and co-ordinated program without similarity to the unco-ordinated measures of the present government which would not perhaps be improved in practice by adding the provisions of this amendment. However, as I have said, the subamendment is based on the principle of tax reduction as a stimulus to employment and an anti-recession measure. For that reason we will support the amendment to the amendment.

In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I hasten to make a few observations concerning the recent budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). As one of the members from northern Ontario I assure you that it is still a stronghold of Liberalism and I am sure that it will remain so for some time to come. I might add that we in northern Ontario are honoured and privileged by our leader having his constituency there, a fact of which we are extremely proud. Following the recent election, in which not one Conservative was elected in northern Ontario, it is easy to understand why Conservatives would be concerned about this situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the amendment to the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Argue) which was negatived on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the leader of the government if the government has yet reached any conclusion about Monday? I assume this debate goes on tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We shall continue tomorrow with the budget debate. On Monday we are bringing on a motion to go into supply and I am hoping that the house will be in an amiable mood—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the Minister of Public Works be in an amiable mood?

Mr. Green: —and once we get into supply we shall call the estimates of the Department of Public Works and then we hope even more that the hon. member will be in an amiable mood.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not catch what the minister said.

Mr. Green: I think you did. And then on Tuesday we will go on with government business.

It being eight minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Question No. 99—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received representations from any organization or trade union to further extend unemployment insurance benefits when the present extension expires?
2. If so, was a reply given to such representations and of what nature?
3. Has the government taken any action towards a further extension of such benefits?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour):

1. Representations have been received by the government from one organization.

2. Yes, the government replied that the representations had been brought to the attention of the proper authorities for careful study.

3. See answer to No. 2 above.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS

Question No. 106—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received representations from any organization or union to amend the unemployment insurance regulations so that any claimant being laid off indefinitely from his or her plant at any time prior to the normal vacation will be enabled to draw benefit for the vacation period?
2. If so, has the government taken any action to amend the regulations as suggested?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour):

1. The unemployment insurance commission has received no such representations. However, the present regulations provide that a claimant for unemployment insurance benefit who has been laid off prior to a general continuous holiday may be paid benefit in respect of the holiday period. There is one exception. If the holiday starts within six weeks after the commencement of the lay-off, any holiday pay received or receivable is treated as earnings for the period of the holiday and the amount of benefit adjusted accordingly. It follows that, if a claimant is not entitled to holiday pay, benefit is paid in full for the holiday period.

2. See answer to No. 1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FRUIT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—TABLING OF DOCUMENTS CONCERNING SUPPORT PRICE FOR RASPBERRIES

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the telegrams and the order in council which were requested yesterday in connection with the stabilization price of raspberries in British Columbia.

DRUGS

APIOL—SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF OPEN SALE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the —I presume—acting minister of national health and welfare. My question concerns the health and welfare of this generation and generations yet unborn. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a news item in the Gazette of June 17 entitled "Doctors Claim Poison Sold Across Counter", and the report of the committee on maternal welfare, presented to the annual meeting of the Canadian Medical Association, which comments on the irregular sale of drugs and consequent poisoning by preparations containing oils of apiol? Can the minister inform the house why the sale of this drug across the counter has not been prohibited under the Food and Drugs Act?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister may I take this question as notice. I will inform him as soon as I see him.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT FOLLOWING RECENT MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister advise the house what results, if any, have followed from conversations held yesterday among members of the government, the premier of Nova Scotia, union and company officials, concerning the cut-backs in the Nova Scotia coal industry?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition stated yesterday, we had a meeting with the premier of Nova Scotia, the representatives of the Dominion Coal Company and the labour union, the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis), as well as various ministers, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks) and the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell). We discussed in general the situation created in Nova Scotia in consequence of the fact that 1,400,000 tons of coal are piled up and are at the moment unsaleable, although there are orders on hand for the disposal of some 4 million tons in the foreseeable future.

I want to say first that the manner in which the representations were made, both on the part of the company and on the part of the representatives of the unions, was deserving of the highest compliment. There was obviously a desire on the part of both to present a picture, and one of deep concern, not only to those directly affected, namely the miners in Nova Scotia and their families, but also to the economy in general of Nova Scotia and indirectly of the maritimes.

The representations that were made are now receiving the consideration of the government. It is a complex problem; it is one that deserves the fullest consideration. What the decision will be I cannot at the moment say. The cabinet met this morning and discussed the question in all its ramifications, and will also give it further consideration later today.

Having regard to the size of the problem and its great importance, I will say no more than that every sympathetic consideration will be given to assure the bringing about of a state of affairs which will ameliorate to the maximum degree possible this very trying and serious problem. My feelings in that regard and those of my colleagues in the cabinet have certainly been intensified as a result of the co-operative attitude displayed by the representatives of the company and the union. I cannot go further at the present time, except to assure the Leader of the Opposition that this matter is one of pre-eminent importance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Does a situation such as this concern the Borden commission, and have they made any interim reports or recommendations to meet such a situation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, at the moment I can see no connection superficially between the situation in the mines of Nova Scotia and the problems that are faced by the Borden commission. It may be that on closer examination there might be some direct connection, but certainly any decision that will be made will not in any way derogate from the problems faced by the Borden commission or the recommendations the commission will make.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INQUIRY AS TO LAY-OFFS FOLLOWING FLOODING OF CANALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Because of the inundation of the Ontario-St. Lawrence canals which will take place on and after July 1, can the minister tell the house, now or at a later date, since I was not able to give him notice of this question, how many employees will be laid off because of the inundation of these canals and what his department or the government are doing to find employment for those who will be affected?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I will get that information for the hon. member and give a reply on Monday.

TRADE

GATT—STATEMENT AS TO RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Springfield asked me several questions which I should like to answer now. The first question was:

When will the general agreement on tariffs and trade . . . be up for renewal?

The answer is that GATT continues automatically in effect among the countries wishing to participate, and the question of its termination or renewal therefore does not arise. The next meeting of GATT countries is scheduled for October of this year. As far as the schedules of tariff rates that have been negotiated under GATT are concerned, these are at the present time bound against increase for a firm period until January 1, 1961. This, of course, is subject to the renegotiation of particular tariff rates under established GATT procedures.

The second question was:

Will representations be made at that time to the effect that Canada's position be recognized in a special category?

I am not sure what is meant by this question. Should the government at any time consider that special arrangements within GATT should be made with regard to Canada's position, this could, of course, be taken up with our other GATT partners. However, as I stated at the twelfth session of GATT last year in Geneva, the government's position at the present time is that we shall continue to operate our policies in accordance with the rules and procedures of GATT.

The third question referred to the likelihood of the agreement not being renewed by the congress of the United States. I have no comment to make on possible action by another country.

TELEVISION

NEW CARLISLE, QUE.—NATIONAL NETWORK SERVICE FOR PROPOSED STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister prepared to advise the house what action is contemplated by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to provide national network service to the proposed television station to open in New Carlisle, Quebec, this coming fall? Will such service, if provided, include both French and English networks?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gave me notice about this the day before yesterday. It is proposed to have a bilingual station at New Carlisle of whose programs approximately 65 per cent—I am not being specific within a point or two—will be French language broadcasts and approximately 35 per cent in the English language. It is proposed to connect this station in the immediate future with the microwave outlet in so far as the French language is concerned because, as the hon. member knows, it is easier geographically to connect with the French microwave service. In so far as the English programs are concerned I should not like to say at the moment whether we will be able to connect with that microwave outlet in the immediate future, but ultimately, I am advised by the C.B.C., that is their intention.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS BY MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if his attention has been drawn to an item in the Globe and Mail to the effect that he had assured himself a place in Canadian history by agreeing to a municipal-provincial-federal conference. This statement was apparently made by the mayor of Toronto, and what I specifically wish to ask the Prime Minister is whether he has given any assurance to the mayor of Toronto or anyone else that such a conference will be held, and if so when.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am glad to see the interest taken by the hon. gentleman in this assurance of a place in history for the Prime Minister. I appreciate his interest in this regard. With respect to the question itself, I wish to say that the only suggestion that has been made in any way in connection with the matter to which he has alluded is that there will be an opportunity for representatives of the municipalities to come to Ottawa to present their views some time, I hope, late in September, following the commonwealth trade and economic conference.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question. Was the premier of Ontario then in error in the statement he made that the provincial governments were also to be represented at this conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The entire program at the moment is as was promised to the mayors' association and as requested by them, namely that they have an opportunity to informally present their views. An undertaking was given at the time these representations were made—I think it was in February last—that an opportunity for such an informal conference would be provided, and in pursuance of that undertaking an informal conference with the municipalities will take place, as I said a moment ago, some time late in the fall following the commonwealth conference.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Prime Minister would consider bringing to the attention of the premier of Ontario the undesirability of making statements of this kind reflecting on the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Leader of the Opposition does not expect the Prime Minister to move out of his own field in that way.

Mr. Pearson: I was just thinking of the Prime Minister's place in history.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Such solicitude on the part of the Leader of the Opposition is most touching.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may just observe, with regard to the question put by the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East):—on a question of privilege and order, that the question put by the Leader of the Opposition was not a frivolous question. It was based on an observation made and a question put a few moments ago by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who asked about a statement made by the premier of Ontario with regard to the holding of a dominion-provincial conference. Surely the Leader of the Opposition is permitted under the rules of this house to ask a question which would elicit from the Prime Minister an amplification of the reply he made to the question previously put to him, as to whether or not statements made outside this house by the premier of Ontario with regard to a dominion-provincial conference are to be ignored by the government.

Mr. Speaker: I assure the hon. member for Essex East that my comment on the question of the Leader of the Opposition was not a frivolous one. The question related to a statement made by the premier of Ontario. If he will consult the rules and precedents with respect to the asking of questions he will find that it is not in order to ask of the ministry questions about matters not within their control and jurisdiction. I suggest to him that statements made by the premier of Ontario are not within the jurisdiction or control of the Prime Minister of Canada. That was the question as I understood it, and that was the view I took of it. The other things the hon. member for Essex East said may be quite proper and correct, but on that particular point that is the view I hold.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask you this question with great respect. Would your ruling mean that members of this parliament could not ask any questions relating to a statement made by the premier of a province, if that statement was on a matter entirely within federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Speaker: Certainly not.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a further question. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the government of Canada has any plans to hold a federal-provincial conference in 1958?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The full answer has been given to that question in the past. Whenever there is any change or alteration of viewpoint, it will be communicated to the house.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING

REFERENCE TO SUGGESTED REASONS FOR REDUCTION IN STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is corollary to the question I asked the Secretary of State the other day about the relationship of the civil service and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Has the Prime Minister seen or studied or considered any action on the charge made at a civil service meeting in the railway committee room Wednesday night that the C.M.H.C. staff was reduced not through dollar-saving dismissals in the interests of efficiency but through people quitting because working conditions at C.M.H.C. were so bad?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the item in question. I have seen references to it. After the statements made before that committee have been brought to the attention of the government, consideration can then be given as to the answer to the allegations in question.

BRIDGES

NUNS' ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING NAME

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received representations from a Montreal committee recommending a name for the new bridge at Nuns' island, and will the bridge be called after Champlain in commemoration of the 350th anniversary of the founding of Quebec?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the national harbours board has had meetings with representative bodies in Montreal to try to decide what would be an appropriate name. That matter is under consideration now. I expect to be able to make an announcement about it in the near future.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

YUGOSLAVIA—REPORTED INTENTION TO SEEK CREDITS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is in a position to comment on a statement made yesterday by the minister of economic affairs in Yugoslavia that in view of the suspension of credits by the Soviet union to Yugoslavia, the government of the latter country was going to seek credits to bolster its economy from other countries including Canada.

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make.

IMMIGRATION

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—STATEMENT ON AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): In answer to a question by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate yesterday I informed him that I had not then been able to ascertain the relationship of the agreement with Ontario on the Hungarian question to the agreement with Saskatchewan. Since that time I have found they are both the same; in fact the Ontario agreement was modelled after the agreement already in effect with Saskatchewan.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Is the hon. lady aware that that was the original proposal we made to the government of Ontario, which was previously turned down as inadequate?

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was a question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF CERTAIN TRANSPORT ITEMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I would like to ask the house leader the following question. In view of the fact that in the past it has been the custom to refer certain Department of Transport items such as maritime freight rates, the Prince Edward Island car ferry deficit, the Hudson Bay railway, the Yarmouth-Bar Harbor ferry and the Newfoundland car ferry to the committee on railways and shipping, could the minister inform the house if it is the intention of the government to withdraw these items from the committee of supply and to refer them to the committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): If the hon. member for Laurier will refer to today's order paper he will notice that under item No. 15 there is a motion for the setting up of this committee to which he refers.

Mr. Chevrier: That does not answer my question, Mr. Speaker. As I said, in the past it has been the practice to refer these five or six items of the Department of Transport to the committee on railways and shipping for consideration, where the officers of the Canadian National Railways can be examined upon them, and my question was as to whether these items, which have already been referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, would now be withdrawn from that committee and referred to the committee on railways and shipping.

Mr. Green: The hon. member is not as bright as he should be this morning. If he will look at the motion by which certain items of the Department of Transport were referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, he will find that items 431, 432, 442, 443 and 635 were not included. I believe those are the items to which he refers. The intention is to refer them to the special committee, notice of the setting up of which has been given.

Mr. Chevrier: That was the point about which I was seeking information from the house leader, whether it was the intention to refer those items to the committee on railways and shipping. There has been no such indication so far.

Mr. Green: If the hon. member had done his homework—and he is obviously missing the tremendous staff he used to have behind him when he was on this side of the house—he would have found that those particular items were not referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and that reservation was made for the very purpose of having those items referred to this special committee on government-owned railways and shipping.

Mr. Chevrier: Why did you not tell us in two words that that is what you are going to do?

Mr. Green: I could not make the hon. member understand with a few words.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY ASSISTANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister in a spirit of friendliness rather than of impertinence. Could the minister inform us as to what date the anxiety and speculation among our Conservative fellow members will end and proper ambition receive its due reward with the appointment of parliamentary assistants?

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—STATEMENT ON EXTENSION OF GASPEREAU SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Yesterday the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi asked me a question which I took as notice, and which was as follows:

> Have any representations been received with regard to the extension of the gaspereau fishing season in the Miramichi area?

The answer is that no such representations have been received.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DROWNING OF FIVE MEMBERS OF FORCE—VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the findings of a coroner's jury with respect to the death of one of the R.C.M.P. officers drowned in lake Simcoe, and the fact that it appears that the small boat regulations of the Department of Transport were not adhered to by those charged with the responsibility of enforcing them, what action will the department take in connection with this matter?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. The department has not yet received a complete copy of the findings of the coroner's jury, but the information we have obtained unofficially is under careful study. When we receive a copy of the findings as a whole they will be thoroughly considered, and if action appears necessary it will be taken.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON REVISION OF TERMS OF UNION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Finance if it will be possible for him to ascertain from the officials of the royal commission on the revision of the terms of union with Newfoundland when the report might be expected?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have no precise information on the point, Mr. Speaker, but my understanding is that there is ground for hoping that the report may be available before too long.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson.

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I hasten to make a few observations concerning the recent budget brought down by the Minister of Finance. As one of the members from northern Ontario I assure you that it is still a stronghold of Liberalism, and I am sure it will remain that way for some time to come.

Following this recent election, when not one Conservative was elected in northern Ontario, it is easy to understand why the Conservatives would be concerned with this situation. In a newspaper article which appeared not long after the election I noticed a statement to the effect that the Conservative national organizer was considering taking a trip to northern Ontario to study just why this catastrophe had happened to the Tory party. I do not believe it will do him much good should he take this trip, as I firmly believe that the best informed and most intellectual electors live in the various parts of northern Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: And in Newfoundland.

Mr. Mitchell: This, I am sure, shows a firm belief in Liberalism, and I see no reason why any of the electors in the north should ever depart from it.

In the minister's budget there are certain irregularities that I feel I should bring to the government's attention. The Conservative government's budget forecasts a deficit of $648 million. This figure must be viewed with some reserve and suspicion, and certainly should be subjected to further analysis. As recorded at page 1240 of Hansard the Minister of Finance stated in his budget speech:

> After studying all the available data most carefully and taking account of possible lapsings and our continued search for economies, I have come to the conclusion that our budgetary expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, will be approximately $5,300 million.

Is this figure realistic? Let us begin with the expenditure proposals that are already known and which we find in the tabled main estimates and the first of the supplementary estimates, totalling the sum of $5,237 million. To this must be added payments to the provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act of $70 million, the deficit in the old age security fund of $190 million and the deficit for the Canadian National Railways of $55 million. We then arrive at a total of $5,552 million.

In addition we must add rough estimates for additional statutory requirements and the usual final supplementary estimates totalling $50 million, and payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Act of $3 million, which give a total of $5,605 million. We must also take into consideration unknown expenditure factors including salary increases for civil servants and armed forces personnel, which could amount to $100 million, and further revisions in the dominion-provincial tax rental agreement which could amount to $150 million should Ontario be granted its demand for $78 million.

Assuming that no action is taken by the government with respect to salary increases and upward revision of payments to the provinces, our budgetary expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1959, appear to be approximately $300 million more than the $5,300 million estimates of the minister. Accepting his estimate of revenue of $4,652 million, we find that the budgetary deficit amounts to $5,605 million minus $4,652 million or a total of $953 million.

We now must take into consideration a bookkeeping transfer to budgetary revenue, I suppose, from a non-budgetary national defence equipment account which amounts to $165 million. This bookkeeping shift was evidently taken into consideration by the minister in arriving at his budgetary deficit. If we do the same our estimated $953 million deficit is cut down to $788 million, or $140 million more than the figure that is being quoted so widely. This $788 million deficit presupposes no governmental action on salary increases or increased transfer payments to the provinces. It is difficult to assume that nothing will in fact be done in these two problem areas. Hence the concern regarding the presently forecast budgetary deficit of only $648 million, and the suspicion that future events will probably bring this deficit figure up to $1 billion.

In times of stress no one argues with the necessity for a deficit budget. However, the full and proper figures should be given and no attempt made to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian people when a budget such as this is presented. True figures should be shown, and I believe this has not been done.

It should also be borne in mind that the purpose of this deficit budgeting was to correct unemployment. I will admit that employment figures have increased in the last month, but the over-all number of unemployed is still higher than it should be, and certainly higher than it has been in many years; and now the Canadian taxpayer is faced with both a deficit budget and unemployment. It has not cured the ills it was intended to cure, and this money has to be recovered in one way or another from the taxpayers of Canada at a future date.

Some time ago, Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to say a few words concerning the plight of the small businessman, and I was hoping that some relief for him might have been indicated in this budget. Unfortunately this does not seem to be the case and he is no better off; in fact he is worse off as each day goes by. I am sure it would not have cost the government a great deal of money should the small businessman have been allowed accelerated depreciation on any alterations or renovations he might want to make in his place of business. This would have been of assistance, but it was not contained in the budget.

I feel that the small businessman is being overlooked due to the scarcity of such men in this house; therefore he has not been able to shout loud enough to reach the ears of the mighty. I place myself in the category of a small businessman, and it is for this reason I am attempting to bring the situation to the attention of the government.

At the time I spoke I mentioned that I felt the attention of the combines investigation commission should be drawn to some of the practices which are prevalent and are very harmful at this time. I know that representations have been made to this commission and to various ministers by various retail organizations regarding the use of loss leaders by many of the larger businesses. These loss leaders are used as an attraction to customers to visit their premises where they may pick up other merchandise which shows a respectable profit.

Just recently I received in the mail an advertisement of one of the large business firms in the city of Toronto dealing in furniture, and I should like to mention two articles which I think the house will agree with me are certainly "come-on" merchandise. I hold the advertisement in my hand, and I draw the attention of the house to a very well-known product, namely Kleenex, which in this advertisement reads, "Regular 19 cents a box, on sale two for 19 cents." I assure hon. members that this merchandise cannot be purchased wholesale at nearly this price. Therefore it is in the category of a loss leader.

However, this is not bad enough. This is a business firm which sells furniture, but in the other corner of the advertisement we find this: "Fresh today, Sunbeam bread, 5 cents a loaf". I reiterate, this is a furniture store which has no connection with the sale of bread, but as a come-on is advertising it at 5 cents a loaf. Any hon. member who has been sent out to buy a loaf of bread knows what the approximate regular price should be.

This is a practice which I feel should be stopped. I am sure it is not the intention of any government to allow this to continue, as it, along with many other loss leaders, is detrimental to the small businessman who is trying to make a living and provide a home for his family. I would urge the government to take steps as soon as possible to organize the committee, which they have suggested, to look into this practice which is being followed every day and prevent many small businesses from being forced to the wall and closing up shop.

In the budget, Mr. Speaker, legislation was brought down indicating that prescribed medicines are to be allowed as deductions for income tax purposes. I feel that this legislation is quite in order. As a pharmacist I believe this will be a great relief to persons who have lingering illnesses which cost considerable money, and relief in this way will be welcomed by many families. However, as a pharmacist I must draw attention to the extra work it will entail in each drug store in the recording, filing and giving of receipts for such medication. It will place the pharmacist in a rather embarrassing position if some of his customers should mislay their receipts and at income tax time hurry to him in the hope that he can give them copies. We are pleased to do this, but the amount of work entailed in hunting back over records is going to be tremendous and a tax on the staff who are already overloaded with regulations, the keeping of records and so forth, far in excess of any other type of retail business.

I also wish to draw the minister's attention to the wording he has used in his budget speech, which I feel does not fit the circumstances and I hope will be altered when the resolution is brought down. I refer to the wording in the budget speech as follows:

> Accounts paid after June 17, 1958, for drugs and medicines which have been prescribed in writing by a medical practioner to be included in the medical expenses in computing taxable income.

The words "in writing" do not seem to be appropriate. Under present regulations of the Department of National Health and Welfare and through pharmacy acts in various provinces we are allowed to take certain types of prescriptions over the telephone and reduce these to writing over the doctor's signature in the form of a prescription, with the pharmacist's signature as well. Therefore I believe this resolution, as far as the wording is concerned, should be changed to read "Legal prescription" or "prescribed medication" instead of the words "in writing". This could be worded in another way which would provide that drugs, medications and so forth which have been prescribed by a medical practitioner, a dentist, a veterinarian surgeon and so on, and recorded by a licensed pharmacist, can be included as expenses that are deductible for income tax purposes. Any of these three wordings would be quite acceptable and should be used in preference to the words "in writing".

I hope the resolution, therefore, will be appropriately reworded, and that supervision will be given by the department's inspectors so that only drugs and pharmaceutical preparations are allowed as prescribed items. If this is not done many other articles could be included in the form of a prescribed order, which is not intended in the legislation and would add considerably to the amount of money this legislation would cost the government. I assure the house that we pharmacists are quite willing to assist in this relief for our customers, but certain pitfalls could be encountered which I hope will be thoroughly investigated to prevent any unfair advantage being taken of this legislation. Representations have already been made by our Canadian pharmaceutical association to the deputy minister of finance, and I believe certain questions have been ironed to everyone's satisfaction, with a view to having this legislation run smoothly and achieve the purpose for which it is intended.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to have a part in this debate. I have listened with interest to the speeches which have been made by opposition members as well as by members of our own party. I should like to contribute to the congratulations which have already been offered from all parts of the house to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on this excellent budget.

This is a moderate budget, well balanced, designed to maintain a balance between the forces of depression and the forces of inflation. I think even the members of the opposition will agree that the Minister of Finance has done an acceptable job in this regard. I have noted some of the comments from members of the opposition. The Liberal financial critic, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), made these statements at page 1279 of Hansard for June 17:

> The budget contains very little for the Canadian people except cheaper rat poison, violins, cut flowers and tree guards not more than 36 inches in height.

Again, at page 1279 the hon. member said:

> We have a deficit not by design but a deficit by default.
> My analysis of what is lacking in this budget is that the government is simply sitting out the situation and sitting it out on its hands.

Then he takes a slightly different line on page 1463, after he has had several days to think it over. On June 20, he said:

> One can certainly argue for spending and deficits if they are not aimless but rather are planned, comprehensive and vigorous enough proposals to provide incentive, to provide lift, to perk up the economy. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that an analysis of this budget will show that the deficit is more attributable to political commitments than to economic theory or for the relief of unemployment.

Farther along on the opposition side we have the leader of the C.C.F. group, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), who had this to say on June 20 as found at page 1470 of Hansard:

> This is an ice water budget which I think will awaken the people of Canada to the fact that on March 31 they were cheated, as has been proven by the government's lack of action since that date.

Again, on page 1471 the same speaker went on to say:

> This government, with its double talk, with its progressive face of last year and its Tory face of this year is just as inconsistent in all its actions.

On page 1472 he went on to say:

> —Conservatives all over this country, whether they be high-placed Conservatives in Ontario or high-placed Conservatives with another name in the province of Quebec, have all got their elbows or their arms into this very lucrative deal, or as somebody says, their nose in the trough. They are still exempt. There is no capital gains tax.

As found on the same page the hon. member went on to say:

> The agricultural producers of this country expected fair treatment by this government. They put great stock in the Agricultural Stabilization Act passed in this house last year, . . . The legislation says the farmer is to have the cost of production, but the government are not trying to find out what the cost of production is.

I think those are good and typical examples of the line of criticism put forward by both parties on the opposition side. We are dealing now with the Liberal amendment to the motion to go into committee of ways and means. That amendment is in these words:

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "This house regrets that the government, in its budget proposals, has failed to cope satisfactorily with the problems of the recession in spite of the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history and that it is moving towards greater trade restrictions at a time when other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction."

I think possibly we should congratulate the official opposition for the efforts they have put forth in criticism of the budget. I think we can congratulate them for the reason that they had so little to work with that their efforts indicate great industry in their search for arguments with which to do their job. The budget has little in it to criticize, and in view of that fact the efforts of the opposition are to be commended.

With respect to the criticism that the government is following an aimless course and that its actions are unplanned, surely the opposition will remember those items which have been enumerated again and again, and which disprove that criticism. The actions of the government have been well planned, and ever since the government took office a little over a year ago they have been aimed at accomplishing certain purposes. The country was slipping into a depressed economic state. The aim of the new Conservative government was to stop that trend, to bring about a measure of greater prosperity, and to create a more buoyant economy.

The actions they took are well known. They began immediately by making more money available for housing, and during the last year over half a billion dollars has been made available for that purpose. Social security allowances of all kinds, old age security, old age assistance and disability allowances, were all increased with the object of placing more purchasing power in the hands of the people so that our markets and business generally could be stimulated and our manufacturing industries could get back to work and relieve unemployment, which was increasing to proportions very undesirable in this country.

Income taxes were eased; a total of $178 million a year was lopped off such taxes. The results of these actions have been to reduce interest rates so that money is more readily available. The recession has been slowed down, and there is reason to believe that the bottom has been reached and we are again on the upgrade.

For the same purpose, to create a more buoyant economy and also to assist agriculture, which was bearing a greater share of the burden of recession than other parts of the economy, the Agricultural Stabilization Act was passed. The government has taken action under this legislation to improve the position of agriculture and again to get more money into the hands of the people with which to buy manufactured commodities.

The government is also encouraging all segments of our economy to hold the price line in an effort to prevent further spirals of inflation. I would think these actions are neither aimless nor unplanned. They have produced results and will continue to produce results. Therefore the criticism of the opposition cannot be taken too seriously.

Now I should say a word about our Middlesex West constituency. Our riding is located just west of the city of London in southwestern Ontario. Due to the moderate climate and the nature of the soil we have probably as great a diversity of industry in this riding as will be found in any riding in Canada. We have good soil of all types, with the result that crops which will flourish and grow anywhere in Canada can be grown in Middlesex West, and they are grown there in great abundance—cannery crops, tobacco, fruits of all kinds, potatoes, grain, hay—and we have also large areas of some of the finest grazing land to be found anywhere in the world.

Our livestock production is varied and important. We have a large dairying industry, and some of the finest herds of dairy cattle that are to be found anywhere in Canada are located in our area of Middlesex West. Some sheep are raised there, but not in large numbers. Also there is an important production of hogs. Our poultry production is important. We have some of the largest turkey farms to be found anywhere in the land. Another item of major importance is the production of seed. We grow a great deal of registered grain for seed. Again, being close to large centres of population, we have a large and important greenhouse industry for the production of vegetables and flowers.

Based on this agricultural production we have a number of processing industries. We have one of the largest canning factories in the country located in the town of Strathroy, one of a chain of factories which once belonged to Canadian Canners and which still operates under that name, although control has passed to a United States interest. Another very important industry in that area is the feed mixing industry. Every town and village has one plant or more which grinds grain and mixes it with supplements for stock feed. As western towns have their strings of elevators along the railway tracks, the towns and villages of Middlesex West have these feed mills which distribute feed mixes to the farmers.

We have a large flour mill in the town of Strathroy. We also have a very large cold storage warehouse where fruit and potatoes are stored and later packed for the trade. We have, in the riding of Middlesex West, what is reputed to be the largest egg breaking plant in the British empire, where eggs are broken and frozen and shipped all over the world. We used to dry them there and make egg powder during the war. I do not know whether that process is still being carried on; I think not. These eggs are transported in a frozen state. We have quite a number of egg and poultry processing plants where fowls are dressed and prepared for sale to the distributing trade. We also have a very large milk gathering station in Middlesex West. Milk is transported 25 to 30 miles to the station. It is cooled there and taken in large trucks to the processing plant at Aylmer. Also we have in our riding a very large seed-cleaning establishment, where carloads of seed of all kinds are prepared not only for local sale but for shipment to the United States.

Not only do we have these processing plants connected with agriculture, but in the towns in our riding we have a number of medium-sized plants which manufacture products not connected with agriculture. We have a large aluminum plant which manufactures window sashes and other building fixtures; we have a plant for the manufacture of mobile homes, otherwise called trailers, and we have a large furniture factory. We have a number of lumber mills which saw hardwood lumber for export to all parts of the country.

Our area produces fine oak timber in addition to cherry, walnut, maple, elm and all other kinds of hardwood. It is rather strange, when you ride through the towns in this area, to see on one side of the track large piles of lumber which have been sawn ready for shipment to furniture plants in other parts of the country, and on the other side of the track large piles of lumber which have been unloaded from British Columbia or northwest Alberta for use in the building trade in our own area. Hardwood is of no use for outside purposes; its use is for furniture and inside fittings. Therefore, though we produce large quantities of hardwood, it cannot be used locally except in our local furniture industry.

We have woollen mills for the making of blankets, knitting mills for socks, and we have one of the largest nursery enterprises in the country, the head office of which is in Middlesex West in the town of Strathroy with branches in Bowmanville and Abbotsford, Quebec. Then we have a large handle factory operated by the Welland Vale Manufacturing Company. There is also a large distribution plant for heating equipment—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have allowed the hon. member to go a very considerable distance in describing his riding, but unless he relates his description to the matter under debate I think he should be content with what he has said up to this point. I do not allow him the same latitude that I allow a member making his maiden speech, because he has had earlier opportunities to do this.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to relate these things to the budget debate. I was pointing out the variety in agriculture and manufacturing industries, and raising the point that the budget introduced by our government aims to improve our position and to assist these industries which are being carried on in Middlesex West. What is required there in general is a certain amount of protection for our industries. The budget in its supplementary papers has mentioned certain tariff changes which are designed to assist industries through our part of Ontario. Because the protection is needed the minister and the government are to be commended because of these protective measures. Because of our position in a northern latitude it is possible to grow agricultural products farther south more cheaply than we can produce them, and to get them on the market earlier than ours can be placed on the market. A certain amount of protection is therefore required for our agricultural products. Because our industries are not large in nature, a certain amount of protection is required to keep them going.

The budget deals with the stabilization of agricultural products. It expressed the hope that large payments under the agricultural prices stabilization act will not be required. I have already complimented the government on their efforts to stabilize agriculture through the action taken under this agricultural prices stabilization act. I have read some criticism that has been offered by members of the opposition to the effect that this stabilization act is not altogether serving the purpose for which it was intended. I contend that the stabilization act has done a good job. Agricultural prices can never be set so that everyone will be satisfied. In trying to arrive at satisfactory levels for prices I think the government has made a worthwhile effort to satisfy the farmer as well as to protect the interests of all concerned.

A large number of products are now stabilized or supported, and these support prices range from 80 per cent to 112 per cent of the base price. People in Middlesex West are generally satisfied, I understand, with the action that has been taken with regard to eggs, and for the most part with regard to dairy products. There has been some disappointment over the level of the price for soybeans, but the differences of opinion which have arisen concerning the prices of soybeans, I submit, are mostly due to the lack of any acceptable figures covering the cost of production and the lack of cost of production figures generally in the industry of agriculture.

The best figures available—and they were produced under the auspices of the economics branch of the Ontario department of agriculture—indicate that soybeans can be produced for about $1.41 per bushel, that corn can be produced for about 88 cents per bushel, and that the cost of producing sugar beets is about $9.90 per ton. There might be some agreement among the farmers as to the cost of producing a ton of sugar beets; a great deal of research has been done in that regard. However, I do not think anyone has succeeded yet in persuading the farmer that soybeans can be produced for $1.41 per bushel. However, those are the best figures available, and until the farmers or our agricultural research experts can bring forward proof that these figures are not sound, we must accept them.

With soybeans supported at $2.10 per bushel, on the basis of these figures, which are the best available, there cannot be too much complaint. The soybean producers themselves feel that they should have $3 per bushel in order to put them in a sound position in the production of soybeans. They asked for a support price of $2.57 per bushel. The government, after taking all things into consideration, set the support price at $2.10 per bushel. I know our soybean growers are not happy about this situation. Personally I am not happy but we must commend the government for using their best judgment and doing the best they could under the circumstances.

I should like to say a word about the Canada Water Conservation Act of 1953. In the riding of Middlesex West we have two conservation authorities. The one of particular interest to us is the Ausable valley authority, which takes in most of the northern part of the constituency. There is another authority in Middlesex county, namely the upper Thames valley conservation authority, which is of more interest to Middlesex East than it is to Middlesex West. I cannot see anything in the budget which will give any measure of assistance to those authorities over and above the provisions of the water conservation assistance legislation. These river valley conservation authorities include all the municipalities which have land draining into any of the tributaries of the entire river system, and each municipality appoints representatives to serve on those authorities. The conservation authorities are something like a municipal government or school board, having wide and important powers and responsibilities; and once set up they have full control over conservation in the various watersheds.

I would like to make the proposal that the federal government, when considering assistance to these conservation authorities, should include the whole conservation scheme planned by such authorities rather than limit consideration to individual items in an over-all plan. That is to say, rather than taking the attitude that one particular dam, for instance, was not of sufficient importance to justify federal assistance, several dams and other works should be all taken together when such consideration is being given to water conservation schemes.

The present water conservation legislation was criticized in the June 23, 1958 report of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters. The minister himself pointed out that this act is not giving the service which he feels it might give in providing assistance to these conservation authorities, and he made the suggestion that the legislation be reviewed with the object of making it more useful.

Time does not permit me to go into much further detail, but I would like to mention that in Middlesex West we have an Indian reserve, and that I feel it is desirable to help the Indians on that reservation to develop their agricultural resources more intensively than has been done in past years. A great deal of agricultural activity was carried on at that particular reservation prior to the first world war, but owing to its proximity to several large industrial centres the Indians since that time have tended to accept positions in industry rather than engage in agriculture. Some of the older Indians have now, however, reached the conclusion that they would be better advised to develop more agriculture on their reservation and a committee has been set up among them to promote this idea. We have been promised the co-operation of the Indian affairs branch in connection with this project. The Indian affairs officials feel, however, that the promotion of greater agricultural activity on the reserve should come from the Indians themselves rather than from the officers of the Indian affairs branch.

In conclusion, I would again like to commend the minister and the government upon the budget, and to urge its adoption without amendment.

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): Mr. Speaker, the remarks I am about to make are non-political, and it is not my intention to blame either the Conservative or Liberal governments, the present or former ministers of health or, indeed, the Department of National Health and Welfare in respect of this matter. I recently made a speech calling the attention of this house to the menace of "goofballs", urging special legislation so that the drugs used in these "goofballs" should be placed under the narcotics act.

I would like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that I made this speech on May 20, 1958; and I wish now to read into the record an article which appeared in Time magazine on March 31, 1958, almost two months before I made my speech in the house. This article is entitled, "Nova Scotia 'Goofball' Crackdown", and reads as follows:

> Halifax civic, school and medical authorities last week rang in an alarm on a worrisome concern: a rumoured popularity among teen-agers for "goofballs" (barbiturates dropped in soft drinks or beer). The Halifax medical society and a citizens' committee brought together by Mayor Charles Vaughan, 40, called for tighter provincial and federal legislation to control the drugs.
> In Halifax drugstores barbiturates (almost any of a wide range will do) may be sold only by a prescription, but there are no laws limiting subsequent possession or use. Schoolboy Tommy Rollins, 14, came by a bottle of barbiturates by filching them from the drugstore where he worked afternoons. By the time he got home that evening, he was acting strangely "drunk and foolish". Next day Tommy went out for a walk and disappeared. Three weeks ago his body was found in a wooded area near his home. The verdict of the coroner's jury: barbiturate poisoning.
> The citizens' committee reported that it found little evidence of a "goofball" fad—drugstore sales had shown no recent appreciable increase, druggists reported little pilfering, and schools had only a few isolated cases under investigation. Said Mayor Vaughan: "We are not having the trouble reported in many United States cities, but that doesn't mean we won't have it if we don't get legislation now."

I should like to read into the record a small portion of an article entitled "Goofballs Smuggled into Prison" that appeared in the Montreal Star of Tuesday, March 25, 1958. After setting out what happened the article states:

> The investigation has revealed that four dozen "goofballs" (barbiturate pills) were smuggled into a prison on Sunday by a visitor, Lt. Legault said.

Further down the article states:

> About half an hour's work ended the demonstration shortly before noon but not before the prisoners had smashed all the windows, lights, and water fixtures in the jail wing of the Joliette court house.

If a few "goofballs" can result in practically demolishing the interior of a jail you can understand the damage they could do to schoolboys who are not yet mature. In my speech of May 20, 1958, I said I was mayor of a city which had been victimized by "goofballs". I never said I was speaking for or on behalf of the city of Outremont; in fact I never mentioned the name Outremont, nor did I mention the word "druggist" in my speech. Mr. F. H. Hart, chief of inspection services of the Department of National Health and Welfare, a menial employee, had the effrontery to give an interview to a Montreal newspaper denying the facts mentioned in my speech, commenting thereon, adding facts never mentioned by me and finally concluding his interview by deliberately slandering the druggists of the city of Outremont. Since when can a menial employee enter into a controversy with a member speaking in this house, and add to, subtract from and distort the nature of the facts mentioned in his speech? In fact, what right has he to comment on the speech of a member of parliament?

I should like to quote from Mr. Hart's interview to the newspaper that I mentioned previously, which appeared in the Montreal Star and Herald on Saturday, May 24, 1958:

> He—

Mr. Hart—

> —didn't take seriously the term "goofball".
> "I heard that one 30 years ago", he said. "It can mean anything the user intends it to mean. It used to mean a mixture of aspirin in a soft drink, and that really didn't do much harm".

The article in Time magazine was dated March 31, 1958. The prison riot due to "goofballs" in the Joliette jail occurred on March 25, 1958. My speech was made on May 20, 1958; yet Mr. Hart states that he does not take seriously the term "goofball". He said he had heard of "goofballs" 30 years ago but not since. Where has he been hiding for the past 30 years? I wish to quote again from Mr. Hart's interview in the newspaper:

> Mr. Hart conceded that there have been prosecutions of pharmacists in Outremont for illegal sales of medicinals which can only be sold on prescription, and that $100 fines were imposed, in spite of requests from the federal Department of National Health and Welfare for stiffer penalties.

I have no hesitation in saying that this Mr. Hart is either sleeping at the switch or he is an outright liar. I have inquired from the director of police in Outremont, who has been on the force for over 30 years, and he says that to the best of his knowledge never has an Outremont druggist been condemned or fined for any infringement of the drug act; in fact never has one druggist ever been accused or brought to court on a drug charge. I am proud to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have in the city of Outremont the finest group of druggists that can be found anywhere on the North American continent. Our city attorney has also confirmed the statement made by the director of police that no Outremont druggist has ever been arrested, charged, fined, condemned or even brought to court for any infringement of the drug or narcotics act.

With regard to Mr. Hart's action, I have only contempt for a man who slanders without any reason such a fine group of men as the city of Outremont druggists. I have written to him challenging him to supply me with the names of the druggists he said had been fined. I defied him to give me even one name. He did not even reply to my letter. He knows he was deliberately lying, and that no druggists in Outremont were ever brought to court. It was only a figment of his imagination. I wish to quote again from Mr. Hart's interview:

> A spokesman for the federal Department of National Health and Welfare says it is up to Outremont magistrates to stiffen penalties against violations of the drug act if there is a "goofball" problem in the city.
> But H. R. Hart, chief of the inspection services of the department, said there is no "goofball" problem in Outremont.

This menial employee Hart, continuing to talk through his hat, said that Outremont magistrates must stiffen penalties for violations of the drug act. How can they stiffen penalties when the first case has yet to come before them? They have never yet had a case to judge.

I am sorry the minister is not here today, but in view of the facts I have just brought before the house I want to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what he intends to do about the request I made in my speech of May 20, 1958. I merely asked that the drugs used in "goofballs" be placed under the narcotics act. I also want to ask the minister what he intends to do about Mr. Hart. If the chief of the inspection services branch of the department does not know that there is a serious "goofball" problem in Canada, then God help the citizens of Canada. This is a national disgrace. This man should be replaced. I say he is asleep. If he knew there was a "goofball" problem why did Hart go over the heads of his superiors and over his minister's head to deny it? What were his motives in denying a true statement made in good faith in this house by a member? If he really did not know that a serious "goofball" problem existed, I say his utility in the job he holds has ceased. He sees nothing, does nothing and hears nothing.

I will have more to say on this subject when the estimates under which Mr. Hart's salary is paid come before the house. In the meantime I want to know what the minister intends doing about his slandering of the druggists of Outremont. Does he intend to force Mr. Hart to publicly apologize for slandering this fine group of druggists? Surely the minister cannot allow this action on the part of one of his menial employees to go unpunished. These druggists have the right to expect that the slur cast upon their reputations will be removed, and nothing less than a public retraction should suffice.

(Translation):

And now, Mr. Speaker, having said these things, I shall pass on to the budget. I would have liked to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) but, unfortunately, with such a distressed and depressed budget, with such a pitiable budget as the one he has just introduced, how could I do so? I could only tell him things that might not be too pleasant. Yet, I remember that when I was sitting on the other side of the house and the present Minister of Finance was sitting here, he used to say: "Oh! if we were in your place, what things we would do! We would cut taxes, build up surpluses, settle all problems, and Canada would enjoy an unprecedented degree of prosperity".

Mr. Martineau: Well said!

Mr. Bourque: Now, Mr. Speaker, for the fiscal year 1957-58, the Minister of Finance of the day had forecast a surplus of $152 million. The present Minister of Finance, who claimed he could offer surpluses too, and achieve all sorts of good things, has unfortunately offered the people of Canada nothing but a $39 million deficit.

During the fiscal year 1956-1957, the Liberals reduced the federal debt by $522 million through a budgetary surplus of $258 million, a non-budgetary surplus of $166 million and a reduction on cash account of $98 million, totalling $522 million.

But that is not all Mr. Speaker. The Liberals reduced the debt by $2,500 million since the end of the war. For this year the Minister of Finance forecasts a deficit of $648 million and, at the same time, he says that he will require close to $3,400 million. He estimates his revenue at $4,660 million. Expenditures, that is to say the main and supplementary estimates, will amount to $5,237 million. If to this figure we add $70 million for the hospital insurance plan, another $55 million for the expected C.N.R. deficit, $190 million for a deficit in the old age security fund, another $100 million for civil service salary increases because a raise of 8 per cent was definitely promised, and the other supplementary estimates which will certainly amount to no less than $100 million, we reach a total of $5,752 million.

Considering an estimated revenue of $4,660 million, the actual budget deficit is $1,092 million.

That is not all, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has further claimed that public debt will increase by $1,400 million, that is $775 million against the exchange fund, plus a $648 million deficit, which gives a total of $1,423 million. I claim however that the debt will increase by $1,092 million, to which must be added $775 million from the exchange fund, which gives a total of $1,867 million.

If you consider that Mr. Frost, the premier of Ontario, has asked for $100 million, an amount of $300 million must be added to that figure—taking the equalization principle into account—which will give for this year an actual increase of $2,167 million in our debt.

From 1947 to 1957, the Liberals have reduced the debt by some $2,500 million. Well, Mr. Speaker, in spite of all the promises made by the Conservatives, in spite of all they said during the election campaign, if my figures are correct, and I have every reason to believe they are, the Minister of Finance will have increased our debt by $2,167 million in a single year.

Mr. Speaker, I read in the Petit Journal of last Sunday an article entitled: "Thank you just the same, Mr. Fleming!" in which the author said:

> How shall we spend those 49 cents?
> Sixteen million Canadians will save $8 million in taxes between now and the end of the year. That is about 50 cents each.

Mr. Speaker, that saving represents less than one cent a week. What a farce! Especially after we had been promised prosperity and many great things. And what are Canadians getting now? Unemployment. In fact, this very week automobile workers gathered at the door of the parliament buildings, carrying signs which read: "We do not want charity, we want work".

If we had a deficit of two or even three billion dollars but provided jobs, with prospects of returning prosperity in a not too distant future, it would not be too bad. We would just say: "We went through a depression, and we are back on our feet". But what is the Conservative party offering us today? Nothing! Just misery! That is what we will have to face next winter.

Mr. Speaker, I contend that if the Liberals were able to reduce the national debt by $2,500 million in a ten year period, it is outrageous that the Conservatives should have increased it by $2,167 million in a single year.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: In order that we may correctly interpret the hon. member's use of words, would he mind answering a question? When he used the word "menial" did he use it in the old Anglo-Saxon sense, meaning a very vulgar fellow, or did he use it in the modern sense, meaning one of lesser status?

Mr. Bourque: One of lesser status, a fourth or fifth grade employee.

Mr. R. M. T. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, last year when I rose to take part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne I was very nervous. I thought the nervousness would disappear, but apparently it is the same today. We have heard from the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) in this debate, and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) gave us a booming oration, telling us that we were all mixed up. It was far different from the sincere criticism and sincere tributes which the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) paid to the Minister of Finance in his summation of the budget.

It is very difficult for a minister of finance to pump out a sinking ship after the Liberals have run it on the rocks, but I maintain that the Minister of Finance is doing a very good job; he is working very diligently—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is still sinking.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Well, if the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had done a little thinking on March 1, when he received the trade and commerce economic report, which I hope he read, and had taken some action during the time the budget was being prepared in March, 1957, perhaps the situation in Canada would not be as bad as it is today.

Mr. Pickersgill: If we had been allowed to read the one for this year we would probably know what the situation is today.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): You were there too long. This is a time for spending. The Liberal party in their thinking and in their talk made reference to building up surpluses and paying off the national debt. We are a young country. Like any young businessman we must look to the future. I think the Liberal party had completely lost touch with the thinking of the people of Canada, and that is why they were turned out.

One thing that worries me very much today is the anti-Americanism we find creeping across Canada. I think the government, if given the necessary time—and I am sure we will be here for a long time—will iron out all the inconsistencies that arose between the former Liberal government and the government of the United States. Our policy is to put forward boldly that we are a completely independent country and that we must be respected in every way. I am sure that with the Minister of Finance leading delegations we will have this respect.

In reviewing the budget it is very interesting to note that this government is trying to help the municipal governments. By eliminating the sales tax on such things as culverts, goods for use in sewage systems, fire truck chassis and so on, the government has increased the revenue of the city of Hamilton to the tune of about half a million dollars. I can assure the Minister of Finance that this will help the city in the construction of many sidewalks and other services.

In the budget there are many references to tariffs. I sometimes wonder whether, when the Liberal party set up the tariff board, they wanted to have the real facts. The tariff board was asked to conduct hearings on the textile industry and I wonder whether, if a Liberal government had been in power today and had received the recommendations the present government received, the Liberals would have acted; or would they have just wasted the taxpayers' money in having these tariff matters investigated by the board. I think our proposals are within the bounds of GATT. I believe the textile industry was sorely pressed and was seeking not so much increased tariffs, but a revision of the dumping laws. In 1953, I believe, the former minister of national revenue, Mr. McCann, stated that it was a sorry affair that the Americans were allowed to dump their excess merchandise into Canada. He said that measures should be taken to correct the situation, but apparently nothing was done.

The amendment moved by the Liberals is in these words:

> This house regrets that the government, in its budget proposals, has failed to cope satisfactorily with the problems of the recession in spite of the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history and that it is moving towards greater trade restrictions at a time when other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction.

Let us look at the unemployment picture for a moment. In his reply to the budget speech the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) suggested that in the early part of June, 1957, there were some 167,000 people out of work. I can assure the hon. member that if he will take the latter part of June he will find that there were a quarter of a million people out of work. This was much higher than in January, 1957, and it is very gratifying to see that in the last report—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: He quoted some statistics about unemployment in June of last year. Could he give the source of those figures?

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I am sorry I have not the source here but I recall reading a newspaper article—

Mr. Benidickson: Read the budget papers. My figures came from the budget papers.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Perhaps I am mistaken about that, but in the early part of July, 1957 there was an article in the Windsor Star or Winnipeg Free Press indicating that there were a quarter of a million people out of work at that time, and the blame was being put on the Conservative government which had only been in office for a very few weeks. I do not think it was fair comment to say that the Conservative government was responsible for this unemployment when actually in the early part of June the figure was much higher than in January, 1956.

Mr. Benidickson: That is not so. Read your budget papers and you will see that June was the low of the year.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): In the early part of March, 1957, the Liberal cabinet received an economic report which said that we were coming to the end of cyclical expansion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman mind quoting the passage in the report which says that?

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I do not have the report here but I have several extracts taken from it. I am sure the hon. member has read it. I have also read it. There were some favourable comments in it, but the comments I have taken from the text with respect to this situation—

Mr. Pickersgill: A highly selective approach.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I read the whole thing and I will give hon. members their due to a certain extent. There were some favourable things, but I believe that when there are bad statements in a report it is up to the government to take action to correct them. I maintain that the Liberal government hid the facts from the Canadian people. I do not blame them for not telling them, but if they had acted at the time and taken steps to correct the situation it probably would not be as bad today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit another question?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. member say whether he thinks it is right for the present government to hide the corresponding report for this year?

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I am not referring to that report.

Mr. Pickersgill: Obviously not.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I have just stated to the hon. member that I do not blame the former government for not making the report public at that time, but I do blame them very much for not acting on the report of their own civil servants in the Department of Trade and Commerce. I blame them because they were told that more conflicting tendencies in construction and manufacturing had begun to emerge, and increases in unemployment in Canada since October, 1956, had been more than seasonal. They were told that some secondary manufacturing industries might encounter a period of renewed difficulty this year. They were also told that if a weakening in United States activity were to develop, and such a possibility could not be ruled out, could such a development be avoided by Canada? They were told that housing construction was expected to drop fairly markedly below the high level of the two previous years.

Did the Liberals provide any money for housing? They said that everything was fine. They said they could not afford to lower taxes and that everything was going to go along just fine. They were the boys of the boom period, and they brought about the recession and slump. They did not act after they had complete information supplied by officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce. They were told that a higher average level of those without jobs and seeking work was likely in 1957 but they did not tell us anything about that. They did not even inform the opposition of what was happening. What did they do? They put the tight money policy into effect.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock when the house rose for lunch I was discussing the inadequate policy of the Liberal party with regard to the trade and economic report which was tabled in the house last January. In this report the Liberal party were told certain things and I believe they did not act upon them. Their tight money policy was not the proper thing. I believe their immigration policy was poor and, most of all, they could have put money into housing in the early part of last year but they did not do so.

It is most gratifying to see that the unemployment situation in Canada is not quite as serious as it was, with 150,000 fewer people on the unemployment rolls and 212,000 more people at work.

With regard to the trade policies of the late government, the imbalance of trade between Canada and the United States grew to astronomical proportions after 1950 until in the early part of 1957 it was $1,300 million. I believe the Conservative party is on the right track with regard to commonwealth relations. We are not ignoring the United States. We want the United States to know the facts with regard to the economic conditions of this country, and we want to secure an understanding of our problems. With the commonwealth conference in the fall I am sure we can expand our trade throughout the commonwealth and the world.

Talking about deficit spending, we have heard pro and con on this question, but it seems funny to me to hear criticism of deficit spending, when during the election campaign the Leader of the Opposition talked about tax holidays, $400 million tax cuts and so on, thus increasing our present deficit. I am not too clear on the thinking of the Liberal party with regard to this, but most of all I am not too clear on the thinking of the C.C.F. party. They would have us spend billions of dollars. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), who is not in his seat at the present time, talked to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) about contradictions.

If the house will bear with me for one moment I should like to talk about the C.C.F. party and their policy with regard to financing. During the election campaign, the C.C.F. spokesman in my riding stated that if they came to power they would raise taxes. In a public debate I asked my opponent if this were so, and he said: Oh, yes, we would raise the taxes from the big corporations and the millionaires. I proceeded to ask: Is it not also the policy of the C.C.F. party to nationalize the steel mills that is: the Steel Co. of Canada, Dofasco, the Firestone Company and several other companies prominent in Hamilton? He said: That is the policy; we are going to take everything for the workingman. I fail to see how the C.C.F. party could raise the taxes of the big corporations and take them over at the same time. I think it is very inconsistent.

I went further, and asked my opponent how they were going to take over these big corporations, and he said they were going to purchase their stock. I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) in his alphabetical speech talked about robbing the people. In taking over this stock I think the C.C.F. would be robbing all the people of Canada, not only the millionaires but the little people who hold stock in these corporations. I asked, referring to a certain type of stock, whether they would pay $30 the market value. They said: No, we would pay the market value when the stock first came into force. So I believe their policies of nationalization and increasing taxation are very unsound and ridiculous.

In this budget I believe the Minister of Finance has done the best job possible considering what he had to put up with and what was left by the Liberal party after 22 years in power. They had the facts, and they did not act upon them. How different was the amendment which the hon. Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), proposed during the last 1957 budget debate when the Hon. Walter Harris was minister of finance. He moved:

> That this house regrets that the economic policy of the government fails, despite a very large surplus, to meet the needs of the Canadian people and in particular (a) does not provide adequately for old age and other pensioners; (b) does not propose a reduction in the personal income tax; (c) does not assure to the provinces a larger share of the revenues from federal-provincial fields of taxation; and (d) ignores the problems and needs of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, this was true Conservative policy. We were putting forth views at that time which we thought were right. In the last session of Conservative administration every one of those amendments was put into effect by the Conservative party, and the people of Canada are getting benefits from them today.

In summarizing my short speech I should like to say that the Conservative party is a very progressive party. Some of the Liberals feel we are conservatives with a small "c". On the other hand they think we are the old Tories of the depression years. But we are a party of young men and we are going to try to show Canada that we have good policies; that we have bound the French and the English together without disunity, without taking the east coast from Upper Canada or Quebec from Ontario, and with this kind of thinking I believe we will have one Canada for Canadians.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): In rising to speak on this budget I find many things in it about which I am not too happy, and very little to give the Canadian people encouragement in the years to come.

One of the things that struck me particularly was the great play that has been made on what the situation is going to be in the coming year. We were told in the budget that our gross national product was going to rise by approximately two per cent. That, I would say, appears to be a very liberal estimate of what the situation is likely to be. At the same time, very little was made of the fact that our national population is continuing to grow by a similar amount each year by natural increase. So it would look as if our situation is going to be worse this year in the light of the gross national product in terms of the population we are going to have, and therefore the situation does not look too bright or too hopeful for the forthcoming year.

I, personally, am not in agreement with having a deficit budget unless that deficit budget is going to satisfy some particular purpose, and it would appear to me that the budget we have before us is no different from the last budget that the Liberal government introduced in March, 1957. There have been very few changes, but I think those few changes are things that the Canadian people should look at very closely. It reminds me of the fact that governments, irrespective of their political colour, are faced with certain housekeeping expenses, and with regard to these the Conservatives are going to find it very difficult to depart from the policy followed by the Liberals in the past. And, I may say, the C.C.F. party also would have to make this type of payment, and that this part of the budget—this housekeeping budget—would be the same no matter what the government was. The small percentage with regard to which the government can make a difference because of its political views seems to be getting less and less. Certainly this budget would seem to indicate that.

I think an emphasis has been put on certain phases in that budget which would indicate some minor trends of a difference in thinking between the Conservatives and the Liberals. We notice this in the tariff proposals. I think it is surprising that a party which comes to power and which brings in its first budget after so many years should not have done some thinking about the protectionist views it held 20, 30 or 40 years ago and come up with something a little better than a patched up tariff program of this sort. The tariff structure should have been examined in the light of the new thinking that is taking place throughout the world and certainly in the light of the offer of free trade extended by the United Kingdom government, and it should have taken into consideration the fact that in Europe free trade on a united basis is the policy of many of those countries.

I think that this budget failed to take into consideration what must be the experience of many years and has reverted, in relation to this tariff structure, back to the thinking of the Conservatives many years ago. There are many things that we wished to have done, and I am quite happy that the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. McDonald), should have mentioned some of them. Some of the things which I think it necessary to raise and to give consideration to for the welfare of the bulk of our population were not mentioned. I refer, for instance, to family allowances. In 1945 the Conservatives were quite opposed to family allowances. But this is something to which we have become accustomed. It is something that I am quite sure the Conservative government would not wish to take away from the Canadian people. If they do not wish to take it away from the Canadian people, then they also have an obligation to bring it back to its original purchasing power, a procedure which would give us now family allowances of approximately twice what we are receiving. This would not be any increase, I might suggest, but it would be rather in keeping with the cost of living.

I think that raises another problem that we should face up to. We are now enjoying the highest costs—and most of us are not liking it—that we have ever had in the consumer field. Everything we buy is double, triple and sometimes much higher than that. At the same time we in Canada are faced with a recession. Although the government may not feel that this recession is important or should be given any particular consideration in this first budget of this parliament, I think it certainly deserves some consideration, and that a great deal must be done to eliminate that problem. It is true that those who are employed are finding that their wages are up as compared to what they were ten years ago but they are also finding at the same time that those wages do not buy in produce as much as they bought ten years ago. Hence we must face this inflationary problem if we are going to look after the people in Canada. In order to do that I suggest that raising family allowances is a way of getting into the people's pockets money that they would not otherwise normally have.

This also is true with respect to old age security. It is quite true—and I do not think there is a member of this house who will disagree—that the main reason the Conservative government was elected in June, 1957 was the fact that they offered the old age pensioners of this country an increase in the old age pension. But I do not think that they were even honest with themselves when they raised that pension by $9. They had promised more than this and they had not made it pie in the sky. I note that the hon. member shakes his head. It is quite true that they may not have been definite because they seldom if ever are definite about anything; but you must tie it to something. You cannot go to the voters and say, "We will give you an increase" without being able to justify it in some way. The only logical justification for the increase, when our revenues are not as high as we should like to see them, is on the basis of maintaining purchasing power which we wish to maintain. I think this matter must be given some consideration in the near future.

We were pleased that an investigation should be set up to examine the whole structure of old age security. I think we all realize that while we can make promises at election time, we are finally going to have to implement them; and that procedure costs money. I am told that we are now going in the red quite rapidly on our old age security program. But why the investigation in the United States? I do not credit Canadian governments over the years with having been so unaware of the situation and so unaware of the lack of a formula on which to base their old age pension system that they did not look at other pension schemes throughout the world, not only that in the United States but those in other countries. I am quite sure that the officials in the minister's department could tell the minister exactly what the program is in the United States and how it could be applied in Canada, and that we did not need to stall for a year or so while we made a phony investigation into something we already knew.

The C.C.F. believes in and would implement the $75 old age pension. We also agree that it cannot be raised in the manner in which we have raised pensions in the past. We propose to the Canadian people to provide two types of old age security, one that is a basic old age security similar to the one that we enjoy but at a reasonable rate in line with the cost of living; and second, we propose that there be a contributary old age pension or national pension or superannuation plan or whatever you might wish to call it, and that this plan be of a nature that the employee be compelled to contribute out of his wages, that the employer also be compelled to pay a like amount out of his fund and that the federal government maintain and operate this plan in a manner similar to that in which the unemployment insurance system that we enjoy today is handled. That would mean that when an employee quits one job he could go to another job and carry his pension fund with him, that he would establish this pension plan from the day he began to work, that he would have an equity in the plan and that he would be able to carry it from job to job, industry to industry or province to province and that at the end of his lifetime of work he would be able to retire on a plan to which he had helped to contribute.

The first step I would suggest in this proposed plan would be to eliminate this $60 limit that we have put on people that are well able to afford a higher payment. We say that all people, even those who have not been employed like your wife and mine—we do not consider them to have actually been employed—should be able to enjoy the basic pension of $75, and we hope they will be able to do so; and we think that one of the steps that must be taken into consideration and should have been taken into consideration in this budget is that of allowing the tax to rise as the income of the people rises. If there is any truth in the statement that the wealth of this country is rising and that the people themselves are sharing in it, then even the $60 a month that was put on a number of years ago would not be realistic if we used the same formula from which the original amount of money was raised.

We have heard what was said by the hon. member for Hamilton South, and I am quite pleased that he raised this matter. He stated that the C.C.F. had said that they would increase taxation. That is quite true. We would increase certain forms of taxation. What he said with regard to corporation stock or corporations is not true. The C.C.F. at no time have had any desire to nationalize industries just for the sake of nationalization.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, I am not sure whether it is a point of order or a question of privilege. I was referring to C.C.F. policy in my riding. I was pointing out the direct views of the C.C.F. candidate who opposed me and what he said on a public platform as reported in the press.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps what the hon. member wants to do is correct a statement that is being made by the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: If that is so, I suggest that he leave the matter until the hon. member who has the floor is finished. Then he will have an opportunity to make any necessary corrections.

Mr. Peters: I am pleased to have received that correction, Mr. Speaker. I was under the impression that this was supposed to be the policy of the C.C.F. If it has not been stated in this particular case, it has been stated in other places in a manner similar to that employed by the hon. member who preceded me. I should like to use one example. In recent months we have seen a particular case in which the federal government is involved namely the matter of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines.

We have seen very large profits made and we do not want to say whether or not those are right although legally we have allowed them to make these huge profits on very low investments. Some companies make an investment of a few hundred dollars and realize a capital gain of $1 million. Certainly we should tax that capital gain. Can any hon. member name any country in the world that does not have a capital gains tax? If the same companies who are spending money in Canada were to spend it in investing in pipe lines in the United States they would have to pay a capital gains tax of 25 per cent. There is no point in giving these people unrestricted profits without requiring something in return. We should remember that they are exploiting the natural resources of Canada. Is there any better way of imposing a tax that will provide the people of Canada with some protection through the means of old age security and other social welfare measures? This could be done by imposing a capital gains tax on those companies that risk very little and make a great profit through exploiting our natural resources.

We were unhappy to observe that the budget did not indicate that there would be a personal income tax exemption of $1,500 for single persons and $3,000 for married persons. It would appear to me that if the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I call to the hon. member's attention the fact that the house voted on that issue last night and negatived it, and it would be out of order to raise the matter again.

Mr. Peters: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish now to approach the subject of pipe lines in a different way. As hon. members appreciate, the government made money available for part of the pipe line in the budget. We have received many complaints over the months concerning the Northern Ontario portion of the pipe line. I hold in my hand a letter which I received just the other day which points out better than I could some of the problems the people in that area are facing, and I should like to read a brief excerpt from the letter. Its author states:

> Furthermore, the company—

That is, a contractor of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation—

> —has developed a sort of disdain and hatred against our men because they are French-speaking. "The least of them, the better!" is the motto of the said company; this is why our men keep on going every morning to the office and there is no work for them, but the company hires strangers, even from Texas, ignoring the local starving families.

I might point out that the lumber and pulp and paper industry in this area west of Hearst has almost disappeared. Where there were 7,000 or 8,000 workers in the bush last year there are now less than 2,000. These people wish to work on the pipe line in order to support themselves and their families although it is not necessarily the type of work for which they have been trained. Nevertheless they are willing to accept labourers' rates of $1.25 an hour, but they are being refused the opportunity of working on the line. The letter goes on to describe some of the other events that are taking place:

> —since the TCP—

The Trans-Canada Pipeline Company—

> —compels the men to work Sundays, in spite of all civil and divine laws, claiming that it must make up for time lost during January and February.

While one can appreciate the company's desire to compensate for lost time, I frankly do not think it is a justifiable excuse for having the employees work overtime. I cannot believe that the line will continue to be constructed in northern Ontario during the winter months because there can be anywhere from four to six feet of frost in the ground. There can be no justification for compelling the employees to work on Sunday when it is not a continuous operation. If it were an around the clock operation there would perhaps be some slight justification for this and the employees could be given their day of rest on another day during the week. There is no reason for having the employees work between 70 and 80 hours a week. Two people could work a 40-hour week on the job and it would be accomplished just as quickly.

With respect to the pipe line, the government has failed to take any action in line with the statements it made prior to the election, on which it was returned to this house. Previous to the election members of that party spoke about nationalization of pipe lines. Not only hon. members of the C.C.F. but the leader of the Conservative party agreed that nationalization would probably be a good thing. I believe the government should seriously take into consideration nationalizing our pipe lines.

I noticed an article in the Globe and Mail of yesterday which reported that the question of nationalization of the trans-Canada pipe line was discussed at a convention of municipalities meeting in Toronto. They agreed that the federal government should be approached and asked to take some action in the nationalization of the pipe line and only two dissenting votes were cast. There are many abuses prevalent on the pipe line which I do not think the Canadian people can afford to tolerate.

At this point I wish to thank the minister for the assistance he provided to the gold miners in my area and on behalf of all gold mining communities in Canada I tender him my appreciation. Having sat in during the presentation of several briefs by the gold mining industry to the federal government I can safely state that those in the industry will appreciate this increased assistance. However, they know and I am sure the minister knows that assistance of this kind is not the solution to the problem. Emergency gold mining assistance is being paid to only a small part of the industry and other parts of the industry struggle along without any aid because their costs of production are not as high as some of the other more marginal mines. The government has not offered a permanent solution to the problem confronting the industry and therefore it has an obligation to the industry. I would suggest that the government remove the word "emergency" from the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act when it is next brought into the house for renewal or revision. There is no longer a need for the word "emergency" to be there because this appears to be a continuous problem which requires a permanent solution.

I believe the government should investigate the matter of storing gold, which could very well be referred to the banking and commerce committee. Let us put a Fort Knox in Canada. Let us buy the gold and back the currency of our own money. If the United States can afford it at $35 it should be worth $35 and more to us. We could set our price for gold. Other countries have had to do that. I am sure we will find some satisfactory method of utilizing gold other than selling it to the United States, which pays only $35 for our gold. If we feel that the gold mining industry should be saved let us find a permanent solution to the problems it faces instead of dealing with the industry on a day to day, year to year basis.

I want to advise the minister that we in the mining communities of Canada are going to be watching very carefully to make sure that a fair proportion of the 25 per cent or $2½ million is returned to the pockets of the workers and through them to the communities that are entirely dependent on that industry. I do not believe the Canadian people have any interest whatever in financing the dividends that are being paid to shareholders in these corporations.

If some of the members on the Conservative benches feel that statement is unfair because they are thinking of some of the dividends from some of these corporations about which they have been speaking, they should take a look at some of these mining companies who are paying out sums as large as $16 million in voluntary dividends when there was an original capital investment of only a quarter of a million dollars. I do not think we have to waste too much sympathy on the gold mines or their operators but we should have a great deal of sympathy and we must be very concerned about those miners who are working for very low wages and who are completely dependent on that industry for their very existence. This is a serious situation throughout northern Ontario and many other parts of Canada. This part of the country must be developed and I therefore hope that every consideration will be given to the people who live in those communities I have mentioned and who, as I say, depend on the mines for their livelihood.

There are a number of other problems in northern Ontario which have not been met by this budget, in fact I can think of very few which have been met by it. However, I am hopeful that some of them will eventually be taken care of. One such problem is with respect to agriculture. Every day people leave the farms of this nation and I particularly have in mind northern Ontario where you can drive through the country and see signs on the corner posts along the side roads "auction sale, such and such a date" and then there is a list of the farm equipment for sale at the various farms. Agriculture is one of our greatest assets in Canada. The agricultural industry is both staple and basic, an economy which we can improve and expand with very little effort and which can be made more equitable with the economies in other parts of our country and, indeed, with the agricultural economy of other countries. I say this because, as is well known, there are hungry people throughout the world and there is a common need for food. We have the means and the ability to bring about great production in that field. I think some consideration should be given to increasing our ability to sell our products and to increasing the value of those products.

This appears to be the day to talk about Conservative candidates during election time and so I will make reference to the Conservative candidate in my own area who made speeches before and since the last election asking for assistance in respect of beef production in my area. He is quite right. Beef cattle can be raised in northern Ontario better than it can be raised in any other part of Canada. Our climate is very similar to that of western Ontario and with our clay land our produce can equal if not improve upon the produce of any other sections of the country. Mention was made recently by one hon. member of the grain in his area which he said was the top quality. We in northern Ontario have done better than he has to the extent of 30 bushels per day. We need assistance, however, and we would recommend the setting up of government gradings, particularly with respect to cattle so that we may stamp our beef No. 1 quality. Assistance should be given to our farmers in connection with improved breeding of our livestock generally so that our beef production may be increased and made more readily available to Canadian markets.

One suggestion I would like to make is that the government could render assistance in this respect by making provision for a slaughter house in my area and I understand that there are in existence certain acts which would make such assistance possible. We would then be able to eliminate some of this dependence upon gold mines and would be able to branch out into secondary industries. This would serve a double purpose in that the federal government would be relieved of some of its responsibilities in respect of subsidies now being paid to the mines. These subsidies have constituted a very difficult problem and it has been very difficult to dispose of them.

We will be watching the situation with respect to how this budget is going to be applied for the assistance of those people who came to Ottawa the other day stating that all they asked for was the right to work. It is true that all these people want is a job. It cannot be said that they are lazy or do not want to work. They live in towns such as Windsor where jobs have not been available for a long time, where unemployment benefits have for many months been exhausted and where seasonal benefits no longer apply. We will watch this situation very closely.

This brings us to another matter. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) stood up in the house the other day and very graciously suggested that parliament should sit at 4.30 on July 1 instead of at 2.30. I have been concerned with labour problems for quite a few years and July 1 is one of those holidays which we have had very little difficulty in getting employers to endorse as a national holiday. It is true that with respect to some of the other holidays management has argued that they are not of a national character but this national holiday has been the only one universally observed. This day commemorates the creation of the Dominion of Canada and yet we are asking the representatives of the people of Canada to sit in this house on that day rather than enjoy the holiday celebrations.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member does not intend to pursue that matter because he will have a chance to do so when the motion is called. It is on the order paper. I do not wish to unduly restrict him but that is the situation.

Mr. Peters: I do hope something can be done but I was not aware this matter was to be debated. I will have something further to say when the motion is called. We in the C.C.F. are very perplexed—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: Yes we are because we think and some other people do not. We are perplexed because we have waited for this budget to be introduced and we know that it is a budget which many many people have also been anxiously awaiting. Many Canadians have been saying how wonderful it was going to be when the people of this country would receive the first Conservative budget which would eliminate many of their problems. They have now received it but I fail to see any difference between this budget and one the former minister of finance would have introduced had he still been in office. I think these sentiments might be echoed by many of his predecessors. As one of the hon. members of this house has said this was a truly blue budget introduced by a minister of finance wearing a blue carnation and a blue suit. I notice that he has worn that blue suit since budget day but I think from now on the people of Canada, by the time he has finished with them, will be the ones who are wearing the blue suits.

(Translation):

Mr. Emilien Morissette (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, in speaking here for the first time as member for Rimouski, I should like to recall the memory of some of the most prominent figures of Canadian political history who have attached their names to my constituency.

After the principle of responsible government had been accepted, Robert Baldwin became attorney general of Upper Canada and, in accordance with the practices of the time, had to be re-elected but, unfortunately, went down to defeat in his Ontario riding of Hastings. Lafontaine, then member for York, asked the member for Rimouski, one Borne, to resign and, in early 1843, Baldwin was elected by acclamation as member for Rimouski and remained so until the general election of 1844. A few years later, in 1847, Joseph-Charles Tache, was elected member for Rimouski. He represented that riding until 1857.

Mr. Speaker, may I remind hon. members that Joseph-Charles Tache was the founder of the Courrier du Canada and was at one time deputy minister of agriculture, in Ottawa. By articles in his paper and by means of a pamphlet entitled Provinces de l'Union Fédérale (Provinces of the Federal Union) published in 1858, Tache was one of the main promoters and propagandists of the confederation idea.

Finally, in 1878, Sir Hector Langevin, one of the fathers of confederation—who, after the death of Sir Georges Etienne Cartier, was the principal collaborator of Sir John A. Macdonald, and who was also the brother of the first bishop of Rimouski—tried to get elected in my riding, but unfortunately failed.

Such illustrious precedents, Mr. Speaker, may well fill a young member of parliament with noble ideals, but also with a great deal of humility. I want to say, without boasting, that I have no other ambition than to modestly follow in the steps of these great men.

I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for presenting us with a very lucid and detailed study of the problem of Canadian finance and of the general economic situation of our country. I congratulate him specially, as I do the government, for developing and deciding to apply an economic and financial policy which, in the present situation, appears to me to be very appropriate.

I congratulate the official financial critic of the opposition, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson). For all the incoherence of his theories and the built in contradictions of his system, which were very forcibly denounced by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), I was deeply interested in his speech.

I was surprised to find that our Liberal colleagues base all their disparagement of the budget on the fact that this year the government will have a deficit of about $650 million, when the very A B C of economics say that, in periods of recession, government expenditures should be maintained at a very high level. And while lashing into the announced deficit, Liberal members found it possible to lecture the government for its failure to cut down taxes even more. They inveigled against the budget deficit but asked the government to introduce all sorts of measures that would mean a further drain on government funds. This lack of logic in criticism on the part of our opponents bespeaks either bad faith or incompetence.

By expounding contradictory, self-demolishing theories, Liberal members are showing to the whole country that they have been unable to conceive a genuine and realistic economic policy.

Already, on previous occasions, the Prime Minister has described to the house the fiscal policy devised by the government to ensure economic recovery, and he has clearly defined the three ways in which the Conservative government plans to fight unemployment.

On Friday June 6 the Prime Minister made a statement in this house which can be found on page 899 of Hansard for that day:

> According to economists there are several means that should be adopted. One is to provide additional consumer monetary assistance in order that the consumer may be able, by the expansion of his income, to make purchases, thereby improving the general situation. The second is by a public works program. The third is by action in the reduction of taxes. All three courses of action have been followed. In no case has any one of these three legs of the tripod, as it were, for recovery been followed in its entirety. Each complements the other. None of the three by itself is recognized by economists as sufficient to meet the situation.

That is what the Conservative government has done. Its first move was to reduce taxes.

Since the election of June 10, 1957, the government has reduced taxation by a total sum of about $200 million. It has helped keep purchasing power at a high level by improving all forms of social security legislation. It raised the old age pension and allowances to the disabled and the blind. Its new fiscal concessions to provincial governments have allowed the Quebec legislative assembly, for instance, to increase in turn its allowances to needy mothers. It enacted repeated and numerous extensions to unemployment insurance legislation, in respect of seasonal benefits. Finally, to complete these two first steps, the government has set into motion a vast public works program.

Within the present day economic context, this federal government policy has proved both appropriate and timely. The economic situation is already improving, and we can infer from a number of factors that Canada's economic activity is again on the upgrade.

Consumer demand is growing at a satisfactory and steady rate. The employment index is rising.

According to the national employment service, in May 1958 the national labour force was 6,031,000, as against 5,881,000 in May 1957. That is an increase of 150,000 over last year. Prospects for the home building industry were never so good. This is a direct consequence of the government's generous and bold policy in this matter.

As the Minister of Finance pointed out in his budget speech, in the first four months of the present year the number of building starts were 80 per cent greater than for the same period in 1957. Many facts point to the growing stability and buoyancy of Canadian economy. Home building activity recently went up 15 per cent over last January. I have already noted that with regard to the corresponding period of last year, that increase is of the order of 80 per cent.

The price of the industrial securities registered in the stock market, I mean common shares, are two to three per cent higher than at the beginning of the year. Commercial and industrial construction was more active in March and April. The weekly averages of hours of work in manufactures show new firmness as do wholesale prices in the field of industrial production. Finally, our exports, one of the decisive factors of our national prosperity, have risen in March and April.

According to the Federal Bureau of Statistics, the total volume of our exports represented, in March 1957, the sum of $361 million; in March 1958, the corresponding figure was $369 million. In April 1957, the figure was $365 million and, in April 1958, it had reached $371 million.

It is easy to forecast that, as the economic activity improves in other countries, especially in the United States, Canada's export position should improve further.

It is reassuring to think that the recession itself has been much less serious in Canada than in the United States. It is fair and reasonable to believe that the sole reason why the economic situation deteriorated much less in Canada than in the United States has been the wisdom of the financial and economic policy of the Conservative government.

In March 1958, the retail trade in the United States was 5.6 per cent below its level of July 1957. In Canada, the volume of retail sales has increased by 12 per cent from July 1957 to March 1958 and this trend seems to continue.

Industrial production went down 10 per cent in the United States from July 1957 to March 1958. In Canada, the difference is but 3.3 per cent.

New construction projects in the United States are just about beginning to reach the level of last year, while in Canada a very strong rising tendency has contributed to strengthen our economy substantially.

Instead of protesting vehemently, and of describing as outrageous the deficit forecast by the Minister of Finance, Liberals should remember that, before the June 1957 election, they failed to take the energetic measures which could have then warded off the recession. When the first symptom of an economic slowdown became apparent, the Liberals kept finding delight in a stupid inflationary intoxication. Not until a Conservative government took power were adequate and appropriate measures taken to deal efficiently with a disturbing slackening of economic activity.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed strange to hear Liberals rejecting today, as a matter of political expediency, the economic creed they had professed at one time.

[Mr. Morissette.]

Even since John Maynard Keynes wrote his very famous "General theory of employment, interest and money", in 1935, the Liberals have claimed to be die-hard "Keynesians". It can be said, Mr. Speaker, that certain economists, great advisers of the Liberal party, have never been ashamed to confess candidly that they had been fanaticized and bewitched by the great English economist. They have always claimed to be the champions of a cyclical tax policy. But when, in 1958, a Conservative government introduces a budget which, precisely, has due regard for all that is best in contemporary economic thinking, the Liberals heap abuse upon it. I say, Mr. Speaker that this attitude enlightens us on the score of their inconsistency or lack of sincerity.

If the Liberals were sincere and if they wanted to be consistent, they would congratulate the Minister of Finance and the Conservative government for having the courage to accept all the liabilities of a deficit budget at a time when everyone knows that it is the best and perhaps the only way to cope efficiently with the recession and to establish in Canada a full employment economy.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal briefly with a few matters concerning my constituency.

First of all, I take pleasure in thanking the government, since the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) announced on June 6, when we were discussing the estimates of his department, that he intends to spend a sum of approximately three million dollars for the construction of a winter harbour at Father's Point. I am happy at the thought that work will start this very year. This year-round boat service linking the area with the north shore will alleviate the present isolation on that shore and help reduce the great cost due to seasonal ups and downs in our economy. When we think, Mr. Speaker, that, all along the 700 miles from the mouth of the Saguenay to the Atlantic, the people and industry on the north shore rely only on navigation for their supplies and the shipping of all kinds of products, we can easily grasp how much this project will help develop the area and promote the welfare of local residents.

Following the example of my friend, the hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. English) I also would emphasize the necessity of extending the railway from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts. The Gaspe peninsula needs this link between its raw materials and the markets. An extension such as this would do much to increase prosperity along the lower St. Lawrence and in Gaspe peninsula.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the government's attention, and especially that of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) to a problem of acute import to my constituency at the moment: that of air navigation. My constituency has two airports: one at Rimouski and the other at Mont Joli. The one at Mont Joli was built during World War II and involved the investment of about $20 million, but, unfortunately, is practically out of use today. In the last few years, under the Liberal administration, no active step was taken to bring it back to its former status. By their geographical location, facing the north shore—now in full-geared activity, as a result of the development and operation of the iron ore deposits in the Quebec-Labrador area—the airports of Rimouski and Mont Joli occupy a strategical position.

I ask the government to consider whether it would be possible, by improving and modernizing those airports, to stimulate air transportation in my area. At any rate, it is absolutely necessary from the economic point of view in the area of the lower St. Lawrence and of the constituency of Rimouski that strong steps be taken in order that our airports may obtain part of the air traffic which the development of the Ungava and new Quebec has created and will continue to create.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to say to the voters of the constituency of Rimouski how grateful I am to them for the eloquent tribute of confidence they gave me on March 31 by electing me to represent them in the parliament of our nation, with the greatest majority—barring a single exception—ever granted a member for Rimouski. My only ambition is to serve humbly in the defence and promotion of the rightful interests of my electors. I believe that by working for the prosperity of our own particular home constituency, we are all working here for the prosperity of this great homeland of ours, our beloved country, Canada.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) had words of regret, the other day, for the position of Quebec Conservatives. My hon. friend is at present a victim of a frustration complex. I am pleased to say to him that we, Conservative members from the province of Quebec, feel quite at home in the party of Macdonald and Cartier, in the party of the right hon. Prime Minister of this country. We know that, within it, we can work freely and usefully for the greater good of Canada.

(Text):

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would be very remiss indeed if I did not offer my congratulations to my old and good friend from Hamilton South (Mr. McDonald) for the speech he delivered a while ago. I am not so politically bigoted that I cannot praise at times a man with whom I find myself in opposition. I have always felt that the hon. member for Hamilton South, and I say this without any fear of contradiction whatsoever, was one of the greatest footballers Canada ever developed. He not only brought a great deal of honour to himself, his family and the city of Hamilton but also to the big four football organization. I must confess that many times I sat with the other fans in Hamilton and cheered him lustily for his good playing, little realizing at that time that I was cheering a Tory.

Mr. Pickersgill: He probably was not a Tory then.

Mr. Houck: I must say that he brought honour to himself and was a perfect gentleman on the football field as he is in the House of Commons.

For a few minutes I should like to deal with something not particularly connected with the budget but first of all may I congratulate the previous speakers who over the course of the last five or six days have argued the pros and cons of the budget. At this time I should like to discuss some of the problems with regard to what I consider is a very troublesome, perplexing and not well understood tax, the income tax. I was quite impressed on reading a statement of Mr. W. M. F. Petry, a noted archaeologist who made a study of the rise and fall of nations and civilizations which gave him unusual insight into the outcome of man's experiments with government. He made the statement that democracies consume themselves through excessive and unjust taxation until they collapse and are succeeded by men on horseback or the rank growth of the jungle.

Representative William Cockran of New York years ago warned that democratic institutions must perish from the face of the earth if they cannot protect the fruits of human industry wherever they are or in whatever proportion they may be held by the citizens.

I think we have failed fully to realize that through our tax system we have been playing right into the hands of the Marxists who gleefully hail the income tax as the one sure instrument that will bring capitalism to its knees. We also have failed utterly to see that communism is not a political philosophy or plan but rather is a state of impotence to which those marked for subjugation by would-be dictators must be, and are, reduced in order to assure absence of effective resistance. But there are other reasons for taking a dim view of our tax system, particularly the income tax, that are no less urgent than the fact that the system has become an ideological bombshell.

I could mention people in many categories whose skill and talents have placed them in the higher brackets, yet the taxes that they have to pay are certainly brutal. I think the professional athlete fares about as badly as anyone. If one is fortunate enough to break through to the top he usually does well income-wise, but the way up is pitifully unrewarding, so much so that those who make the grade more often than not mount the throne of glory head over heels in debt and their reign usually is short. These are the people with whom the tax collecter forms a real heads I win tails you lose partnership. Even the people with a regular earning power are by no means the only sufferers from our income tax laws. Almost everybody now has been gathered under the tent and the percentage of those taxed leaves few immune to plucking who have enough feathers to notice.

It is my belief that one of the strongest and most serious counts in the indictment against the income tax is its complexity. It certainly started out simple enough, but I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that it has become as frustrating, confusing and bewildering a fiscal problem as the Canadian people ever had to cope with. I certainly give the department credit for trying everything they could think of to make this tax understandable, and it is my belief they have made some progress. Relatively few people can handle even the short form or T1 general tax return without assistance. Naturally, the forms have to follow the law. They cannot be made any simpler than the law, and anyone who cannot understand the law cannot very well be expected to understand the form. It certainly is an unhappy truth that it seems to be impossible to have simplicity and fairness at the same time.

[Mr. Houck.]

Most of the complexity in the present law came from efforts to plug the so-called loopholes and remove discrimination. Let no one assume that the income tax law is any better understood in official circles than it is by its lay victims. This honourable house is not made up of supermen or superwomen. It is simply a collection of human beings like everybody else and I hope no one will think that I wish to make any attack on these people, but to be perfectly frank I must suggest that just as no one has to understand what dynamite is made up of to know that it can blow a person to kingdom come, so no member or parliament or senator has to know how to determine the tax consequence of intricate corporate reorganizations to have found out by now that the income tax is hopelessly complicated and a Trojan horse.

May I ask this question? Who, if anybody, does really understand this tax? How about the people who write it? The answer is not greatly different. By the time the tax branch and their staffs get through with the grist that is delivered to their mills, many undecipherable changes have been wrought. The problem then presented is well illustrated by the struggle the experts in the treasury department have been having with the job of getting out regulations to cover the code. It isn't that the people in the treasury department and the national revenue service have not been trying to get these regulations to be clearly understood; quite the contrary, I think they have been knocking themselves out at it. But it has been extremely difficult for them to reach agreement as to just what the government means at many points and equally difficult to agree on how to express the intentions of the government after they have agreed upon what the intentions were.

Honest and efficient administration of public affairs cannot be achieved by invasion of the prerogatives and assumption of the responsibilities of executive officials by legislative bodies, committees, individuals or committee staffs. I have never believed that enduring honesty or efficiency can be achieved by legislation. Honest and official public administration can be achieved only by honest and efficient administrators, honestly appointed and free to act only in the interest of the people.

Another count in the indictment against the income tax, and a very serious one, is the cost of it. There are two categories of this cost: (1) what the government spends to administer the law; and (2) what the taxpayer pays to comply with it. In identifying the first category, the cost, I did not speak of it as a cost which the government pays. The government does not pay any part of this cost. The taxpayers pay every cent of it, the cost of administration as well as the cost of compliance. The government never pays anything. It spends, and the taxpayer pays. I am not suggesting that the revenue service is wasteful or inefficient, because I know better. What I am suggesting is that the complexity of the income tax law necessitates the use of a lot more people in our nation's revenue department than would be necessary under a simple and better understood revenue system, and that therefore the cost of administration is a great deal more than it ought to be. We continually hear complaints from the revenue department, and I think it is the irony of the present situation, that they do not have enough on the staff to assure adequate enforcement. Sometimes I think we have more fear that the taxpayer would react adversely to close enforcement of the law than concern about the revenue that would be lost by inadequate enforcement. I have never felt that people resent full enforcement of tax laws. They do resent inadequate enforcement because they well know that a lot of people do not pay what they should when enforcement is inadequate.

Many taxpayers have complained bitterly to me about this situation, and sometimes I think the gentlemen who are acting in the tax department assume the role, and improperly, so, that because of the fact they are like an officer whose coat is filled with brass buttons, they assume too much authority and demand too much of the taxpayer. I have a case in point in my own riding where the tax men went to a doctor's home and demanded to see not only his will but his wife's will, and they broke the seal upon both of these wills, and kept this doctor's books for a year-and-a-half without returning them. This sort of action breeds a feeling of ill-will against any government.

Many taxpayers have complained bitterly to me, and I am sure to many members of this honourable house about this sort of situation and I must admit I cannot honestly disagree with them. All I could do, like any other member, was to try to explain the problem in my meagre way and beg their indulgence. No one ever refused to listen to me, but none of them were happy about it and I do not blame them.

If a satisfactory substitute for the income tax cannot be found, the only answer to the first complaint is more revenue agents of top grade, but I must be frank in saying that I doubt if this government or any other government would permit the service to have all the agents it needs. I think some of the members of this house must fear what many knowing outsiders firmly believe, namely that if this House of Commons allowed the revenue service to have enough money for all-out enforcement of the income tax the demand for repeal would become so great within a year that it would be irresistable.

Another count in the indictment is that the income tax is unstable, being based upon income. It is a low producer in slack times and the high producer when times are good. Thus, theoretically, rates must be raised when people are least able to pay, and may be lowered when everybody is most able to pay.

The man-made deficiencies of the income tax laws are to a large extent the consequences of submission to the demands of pressure groups. For instance tremendous accumulations of income producing wealth have been removed from the jurisdiction of the income tax law by the exemptions granted to foundations and certain other nonprofit organizations about which I am not complaining. I think these exemptions are perfectly justified, are right and should be continued. What I object to is the fact that billions of dollars of potential income also are kept out of reach of the tax collector by government's engagement in business activities that compete with private enterprise.

Too much has been done deliberately to keep taxable income from keeping pace with economical development and growth, thus precluding realization of the full potentialities of the income tax as a revenue producer and making it more and more unequal to its job.

With the income tax having proven to be an unstable source of revenue I think the government has availed itself of a variety of other taxes. Some, if not many, of these taxes could be dispensed with if the primary tax were a stable one and could be permitted to produce fully and freely.

Naturally hon. members are going to ask themselves the question: What can be done about all this? I suggest to hon. members of this house that the time has come to take a new and critical look at our whole tax system. After all, some elements of the present tax system seem to be as old as our dominion itself.

Naturally age alone is not a sufficient reason to condemn any particular tax or any part of our tax system, but to me there is a lot more wrong with the income tax besides its age. Naturally, you are going to ask me—and rightly, what I would suggest to remedy this serious situation. My proposal would be a simple one. It is that this house appoint a commission-type group to make a really critical analysis of the income tax in particular and other tax systems in general and to study such reasonable proposals as may be made with regard to both. I think such a study is long overdue. We have failed in the past but there does not seem to be much of a search for anything better and this search could be conducted on a continuing basis. Research pays off handsomely for business as to matters far less important to it than the government's tax system. It is time the government got some research started in this important field. Such a commission as I have in mind should be a non-partisan one and all the responsibility for it and its findings should be assumed by this House of Commons. Moreover, it should not be put under the handicap of a deadline. It should have time to do a thorough job and not be restricted in any way in its enquiry.

Then again I know that hon. members will ask me the question, "Well, what if we get rid of the income tax what would you put in its place?" That is a fair question but to me that is not the immediate problem. The necessity for a commission to go into the whole problem of taxation thoroughly would be lost in an argument whether or not mine or your suggestions would be feasible. Those who have vested interest in maintaining the status quo would see to that. There are many such people and I must admit some of them have tremendous political power. For the time being I must content myself by saying that I believe that a law or system can be contrived that would be simple enough for the average taxpayer to understand. Such a system might be relatively inexpensive for the government to administer and the taxpayer to comply with and at the same time be a stable source of revenue. Certainly such results have been worked out in many cases in very important categories of business enterprise. I believe that the same can be worked out for business generally and for individuals as well.

I say to the hon. members of this house that there is not any time to lose. Whether you believe it or not, everybody is being overtaxed, the middle class is being taxed out of existence and the nation thereby is being robbed of its surest guarantee of continued sound economical development and growth and its staunchest bulwark against the rise of socialism. The marvels of television brought the truth home to us with indelible clarity. Certainly the big surprise to me and others as well has been how little we have left after the "gimme" man has taken his cut.

Too many people today do not have enough money left in their business after taxes are paid to keep them abreast of the demands of their customers and since even more is extracted from us as individuals we just do not seem to accumulate anything and are not able to increase our investment in our businesses, or in our country's growth. I repeat and with emphasis indeed that things are mighty serious largely because of the tax system and the income tax. Big business gets bigger and little business and substantial middle class folks are beginning to disappear. We were concerned about the future because we did not believe we could stand another serious recession. High rates of tax certainly could not mean anything when we have not anything to tax.

May I say again that time's a-wasting and the enemies of the way of life that we cherish so greatly rejoice as we are led closer and closer to national suicide. So I leave this question to hon. members of the house: What are we going to do about it? Let us do something about it before it is too late.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate I first want to congratulate the Speaker, yourself and the chairman of committees. This is my first opportunity to do so since you three have taken office. I want to say that in the discharge of your duties you are doing a wonderful job, to the honour of this chamber and yourselves, in maintaining the traditions and the dignity of parliament.

Next I want to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker)—and this also is my first opportunity to do that—on the wonderful majority he has brought into this house for the benefit of Canada through the Conservative party. He has carried on and won two campaigns within a year. Some hon. members say: "Oh, he had good candidates". It is true that he had good candidates; but I want to say that it is much easier to get good candidates under the leadership of John Diefenbaker. He talked the same talk and the same politics in Vancouver and Newfoundland and Ontario as he did in Quebec.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that not rather a reflection on your previous leader?

Mr. Hodgson: It is quite a change from the tactics of the former government because they have talked of "divide and rule" for the last twenty years in every election.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is rather a reflection on your previous leader.

Mr. Hodgson: I am making a reflection on you fellows, I hope.

An hon. Member: Keep it clean.

Mr. Hodgson: Anyway, the former government talked of "divide and rule" from one end of this country to the other. They did not talk the same talk in Quebec as they did in western Canada and they did not talk the same talk in western Canada as they did in Quebec. But that procedure has become outmoded with the advent of the radio and television. However, they did not know that it had become outmoded or they forgot. The former government were so arrogant and domineering and were in power so long that they could not see the forest for the trees. When they woke up they found themselves on the humble side of the opposition.

I would like next to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on the splendid budget he has brought down. He was frank; he was honest; he was bold.

Mr. Pickersgill: He was courageous.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, he was courageous.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the theme song.

Mr. Hodgson: This is the first honest attempt of any government or any minister of finance in my time, and I say this because he has lived up to all the election promises.

Mr. Pickersgill: Half a billion reduction in taxes? He promised that.

Mr. Hodgson: Oh, the hon. member's leader was talking in the election about cutting everything and giving the people $500 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your leader promised half a billion in tax reduction; where is it?

Mr. Hodgson: Where are all the things your leader promised?

Mr. Pickersgill: He promised many things but he is not in office.

Mr. Hodgson: He promised everything from soup to nuts.

Mr. Pickersgill: You have your chance but you do not deliver.

Mr. Hodgson: The people did not believe him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. members kindly allow the hon. member for Victoria (Ont.) to continue with his speech? If they wish to ask the hon. member's permission to ask questions they may do so, but otherwise they must let him carry on with his speech.

Mr. Hodgson: I do not mind, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes it is the spice of life if someone finds fault. As I have told hon. members, if I am making a speech with which they are in opposition, it is quite all right, they can go ahead, because Sir John A. Macdonald once said that all the sticks and stones generally lay under the best trees of fruit.

This was a double-barrelled budget. It takes care of the farmers and also of such problems as old age pensions, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1957 for the benefit of labour and measures to improve veterans affairs and so on. In fact the budget not only lives up to every election promise but it has assistance for the little man, the farmer, the butcher, the baker, the labourer and the artisan.

An hon. Member: Nothing for the lumberman.

Mr. Hodgson: I think it is going to help the lumberman before the end of the year. I did not intend to make a speech today at all but my name has been brought into the house so many times on different occasions that I thought I had better say something to try to put right some of those who are at times so wrong. I refer firstly to the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget), who said as recorded at page 912 of Hansard of June 6, 1958:

> Hon. members will also recall that when the amendment was discussed in the house our friends now sitting opposite were very critical of the progress that had been made. They were also blaming the government of the day for not paying at least 90 per cent of the total cost of the road. I could read from Hansard many statements that have been made, particularly by the hon. member for Victoria and also supported by many other members of the Conservative party of that time.

That is quite all right, but I did not know I was so effective when I was on the opposition side. I did not realize that I probably asked too many embarrassing questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is always effective.

Mr. Hodgson: Never mind, John, you are doing all right. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said, as recorded at page 916 of the Hansard for the same date:

> One of the points that I believe was dear to the heart of the hon. member for Victoria, Ont., when he was a critic in this particular field was that the trans-Canada highway was not wide enough, that the 22 foot strip led to a concentration and a wearing out of the highway so that by the time the project is completed the highway is going to be in a state of needing rebuilding. He made the point very well, I thought, that a broader highway—even a 24 foot highway—would be to the best advantage. I should like to have some word on how he has gotten along in his work within the department in seeing that this is coming to pass.
> One of the other things in connection with the trans-Canada highway was this. I noticed there seems to be a popular clamour from new Conservative members in Alberta and Saskatchewan to have a second trans-Canada highway instituted under the general overlordship of the federal government.
> I would suggest to the minister that in certain parts of Canada we are still waiting for the trans-Canada highway itself to be completed, and that before he follows this rush of enthusiasm from the west he should begin taking steps to get the provincial governments working much faster on completing the highway as it is. I wonder whether if in this regard he would consider offering Premier Frost of Ontario some sort of bonus in order to get his department of highways working a little harder up in northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question. Would he tell us whether, when he becomes minister of public works, he will pay 90 per cent of the cost of the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Hodgson: I think I will be perfectly safe in promising that, because I have to become a minister first. However, I would like to say to the hon. member that if there was any special concession given to Ontario his group would be the first to holler to high heaven.

Mr. Pickersgill: We would like it for Newfoundland.

Mr. Hodgson: After all, this government has a mutual understanding with all the provinces and they must all be treated in the same way. As far as the 22-foot strip is concerned, in some places where the highway is taken over from the provincial highway it is only 20 feet wide and in some places 22 feet. But as soon as we became the government there were negotations from an engineering standpoint between the provincial and federal governments. We have been in favour of building a 24-foot highway but, after all, the wishes of the provinces must be considered and in connection with the procedure in the province of Ontario we have put a 22-foot hard top on the trans-Canada highway and where a piece of provincial highway was taken over where the road was only 20 feet wide, all the grading and work done since is prepared for a 24-foot top. I might say that all the pavement in connection with the trans-Canada highway being laid this year in the province of Ontario will have a 24-foot top.

The hon. member for Port-Arthur made reference to the width of the trans-Canada highway and suggested a bonus for the province of Ontario for the early completion of the highway and I think he has been answered. The provisions of the trans-Canada highway agreement permit a minimum of 22 feet and a maximum of 24 feet pavement. This government would prefer all of the highway to be 24 feet. In Ontario, however, they had in some sections elected to complete to the 22-foot width. There have been discussions with provincial officials at the engineering level and it is our understanding that they are prepared to build the new construction to the 24-foot width. This point is being pushed by the department.

[Mr. Hodgson.]

With reference to progress in Ontario, the work is being pushed. We have received from the province a very tight construction schedule which they have prepared to complete the paved highway on the route by 1960.

A particular effort is being made in the gap section from Agawa to Marathon, a distance of 165 miles. All grading contracts will be awarded by July of this year and it is proposed to award paving contracts for 45 miles before the end of the year. To date, $10,537,000 has been spent on the gap and another $12 million is estimated to be spent this year.

Mr. Speaker, I have some figures covering commitments on the estimated cost of construction of the trans-Canada highway for the fiscal years 1956-57 and 1957-58 and then the payments to the provinces in connection with the additional 40 per cent contribution to the cost of construction as provided for under section 6 (1) b and section 6 (1) c of the trans-Canada highway agreement. Then there are figures concerning the paving mileage approved and completed under the agreement. I have recently received these figures and would like to have them appended to my speech as part of Hansard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member the permission of the house to put this table on Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hodgson: There has been some talk about our not spending as much money on the highway this year as in previous years. This table gives the facts and the figures and it will be found that more money was spent on the trans-Canada highway during the last 12 months than in any previous year.

Commitments Covering The Estimated Cost of Construction of The Trans-Canada Highway

There is one other matter I would like to bring to the attention of the house and that is the occasion when my name was again brought into the discussion, this time by the hon. member for Levis as reported at page 912 of Hansard of June 6, 1958 when he said:

> At this point I should also like to ask—the hon. member for Victoria (Ont.) also inquired about this some years ago—if the minister has made any approach to the government of the province of Quebec so as to convince them to share in this program if it is not too late.

All I could say about that is that there has been a certain amount of ill will between the government of the province of Quebec and the federal government for a number of years. I believe the election of June 10, 1957, and the election of March 31, 1958, ended a lot of that disagreement and misunderstanding and I think there is now a better feeling between the federal government and all the provinces than there has been for a number of years. I hope the provinces and the federal government will strengthen their good will and understanding because the provinces and the federal government must be united if we are to have a united Canada and there must be a maximum of understanding and co-operation between them.

The hon. member for Port Arthur was heard from again on June 6 and we find his remarks recorded at page 913 of Hansard of that date. He had this to say:

> One of the points I wanted to bring up was that two years ago the hon. member for Victoria (Ont.) made an interesting comment during the consideration of these estimates. He said something like this:
> Last year, I made some reference to patronage. So long as you do something for my riding, I do not care how much patronage you use. So long as we get a little project, a building here and there, we shall be satisfied. The little bit of patronage that is used by the department at times does gripe a little, but never mind we shall stand the gripes if the minister will get busy.

I said that two years ago and I said it a year ago and I still say it now, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. Herridge: What did the hon. member say about patronage?

Mr. Hodgson: As far as I was concerned I meant it for my own riding. I did not say it about any other riding. If the Liberals wanted to use a little patronage in my riding it did not affect me very much nor did it affect the C.C.F. because neither the Liberal or C.C.F. party got any more votes. All the votes the C.C.F. got could be put in your hip pocket. That is how the few pieces of paper were involved. Whatever patronage the Liberals might have used in my riding it did not affect the Liberal vote either because I kept getting more Liberal votes all the time. I had to have 5,000 Liberal votes to get the majority I did. Why should I object to a Liberal receiving a job through Liberal patronage? The chances are he was voting for me in any event. I can understand that the C.C.F. would be worried about it because they did not get enough votes to amount to anything. But I will say this about the C.C.F., they are courageous people. They run a candidate every election.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why don't you give him a job?

Mr. Hodgson: He is a good fellow and he does not need one. He is not as poor as some of the members of the C.C.F. would have us believe they are when they are howling about it all the time. This chap can look after himself financially and otherwise but it does not assist him in getting votes.

The hon. member for Port Arthur went on to say:

> This, of course, raises a nasty suspicion in my mind that perhaps patronage did exist in the Department of Public Works under this nefarious regime which ended last June. We righteous people are worried, because of the approach of the member who has been parliamentary assistant to that department, as to whether or not patronage still exists. This suspicion was increased last session when the minister, in answer to a question from a gentleman on the Liberal benches who has since moved to a more exalted realm in Quebec, suggested that the building of certain river improvements was more likely to have been placed in certain areas if the people in the area happened to be good Liberals. As I say, these suspicions are going around in our minds. We are prepared to accept that the new minister is a very forthright and very honest individual. He has made a number of public statements that no such thing as patronage is going to exist. I feel, therefore, he should be prepared now to make a statement about the patronage he found in the department and the steps he has taken to stamp it out. Certainly, he should say what steps he has taken to watch his erstwhile parliamentary assistant who said he did not care how much patronage there was as long as his riding got a little bit. Now that may be in keeping with the free enterprise ethics we heard stated so well yesterday. However, it seems at odds with the minister's own position, and we would like to hear more about that.
> There is one more aspect of patronage I should like to mention, and this has come to the notice of those on the opposition benches. There are not many defeated Conservative candidates across Canada, and I know that makes a number of people around this chamber very happy. Those few defeated Conservative candidates that do exist have, in a few instances since the last election, come out with statements in their local papers. These statements seem to have been triggered by letters they received from the Department of Public Works or officials of that department to the effect the government, in its graciousness, is going to do something here or there. In other words, we have defeated Conservative candidates announcing government projects as a result of what seems to be a pipe line into the Department of Public Works.

From my knowledge of the Department of Public Works there is no pipe line into the department that is not open to all members of parliament. If any hon. member wants to establish a pipe line into the Department of Public Works all he has to do is write a letter to the department setting out what he wants to know and he will receive the information without any trouble.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member who is presently waiting in the outer courts to be called as a parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Public Works permit a question? When he or other persons notify the defeated Conservative candidate of a proposed public works in the riding is the sitting member for the riding, if he happens to be in opposition, also notified?

Mr. Hodgson: Turning now to another subject—

Mr. Herridge: What is the answer?

Mr. Hodgson: I did not catch the hon. member's question. I thought he was making a speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: Make it simple.

Mr. Herridge: When a Conservative candidate for any constituency is notified by some person in the Department of Public Works that any certain public works project is going to be undertaken in his riding is the sitting member for the riding, if he happens to be an opposition member, also notified at the same time?

Mr. Hodgson: I cannot tell you that. I only know that if any hon. member wishes to receive information from the Department of Public Works he has only to write in to obtain it. The department consists of a fine group of civil servants who are very co-operative. I do not think they have any politics. My personal experience with the department indicates that they are always open and above board in all their dealings.

I could continue to quote passages from the remarks made by the hon. member for Levis but I do not think it is necessary. He is a nice little fellow and I will say this to you about him. The hon. member for Levis had a lot more authority with the Department of Public Works than I do to either hire or fire.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) also expressed an interest in the business of patronage and his remarks can be found at page 1137 of Hansard of June 13. I might note that at one point he made reference to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) although I believe he intended to refer to the hon. member for Port Arthur. Apparently the Liberals are interested in patronage too and I think the hon. member for Laurier was more or less setting traps. I must point out that he was not a very good trapper because he did not catch the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) in any of the traps he set; at least he did not succeed in having the minister make whatever statements he might have been interested in having him make.

I wish to deal briefly with one of the statements made by the hon. member for Port Arthur as found at page 914 of Hansard which I have already placed on the record when he said:

> Certainly, he should say what steps he has taken to watch his erstwhile parliamentary assistant who said he did not care how much patronage there was as long as his riding got a little bit.

I must confess that I was not aware that the parliamentary assistant had any authority that would warrant his being watched very carefully but I was interested in the remarks of the erudite hon. gentleman from the Lakehead and so I looked up in the dictionary the meaning of the word "erstwhile" to ascertain exactly what it means. According to Webster's dictionary it means "before" or "before long".

Mr. Pickersgill: Are the last two words a prayer?

Mr. Dinsdale: You are becoming a good scholar.

Mr. Hodgson: Take that for what it is worth. So far as patronage is concerned, this government does not know anything about it, at least I do not think they do. They are babes in the woods compared with the former Liberal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about Mr. Carson Stroud?

Mr. Hodgson: So far as patronage is concerned, they are babes in the woods. I know this from what happened in my riding. I do not have to go across Canada. The hon. member for Laurier was minister of transport for a number of years. In the letting out of jobs or in the hiring of people his party and his department were rife with patronage right in my own riding. There was nothing I could do about it. I can well remember when I got a little money from the government to build a dock in a place called Bobcaygeon. What happened? Talk about pipe lines. In the Department of Public Works and in the Department of Transport, and you can also add in the department of the post office, there is such a thing as appointing foremen and inspectors. The present government puts these jobs out for competition. Under the old government there was no competition. Who was the inspector on the first job that was done in my riding after I became elected in 1945? Was it a Liberal, a Conservative or a C.C.F.'er. No, it was the humble defeated Liberal candidate, the man whom I defeated and who was a member of this house for 10 years. He was the inspector. On the next job on Cameron lake the next year, who was the inspector? It was the same individual and that sort of thing went on. There never was a competition run for the job of inspector at any time under their regime in my riding. So far as the Department of Public Works and the post office are concerned, the same thing took place there.

There was a competition once for a postmastership in Bobcaygeon. This is the way the competition was run. The district postmaster at Toronto came up to Bobcaygeon and he talked to the heads of the Liberal association there. They went over to a garage and got a little fellow out of the garage, a nice little boy, and he turned out to be a good postmaster, too. He was installed and the old gentleman was retired. That is how the competition worked. I happened to be the member and some people did not like what happened and they were bothering me about another fellow who wanted the job. So I took it upon the floor of the house with the postmaster general and they had a competition. The competition was held in June. Although the other fellow had some months experience in the post office, the second man had five years overseas experience and six years experience in the army. He won the competition on both the written and oral examination. He had four years of high school and one year in college. What happened? Did he get the job? He got a large form from the civil service commission. We have the form framed if anybody wants to see it. The form stated that he had won the written and oral examination by so many marks, and so on, and that his appointment would be made early in September.

July went by, August went by and September came. September went by and there was no appointment. The people began bothering their member of parliament again. I got on my horse and I drove down to Ottawa and low and behold the postmaster general would not see me. I could not get on to his plush carpets; I could not see him. Of course, the girl asked me what I was there about. I said I wanted to talk about the postmastership at Bobcaygeon. I could not get in to see him. I started calling him on the telephone and after six or eight calls he talked to me about it. He said that the other fellow had three, four or five months experience and he did not think it right to turn him out. So the minister overruled the decision of the civil service commission. That is the way patronage was played in my riding from that day until June 10, 1957.

Patronage permeated other departments besides the Post Office Department. It was as bad in the Department of Public Works and in the Department of Transport while the hon. member for Laurier was minister of transport. In my riding I have from 165 miles to 240 miles of the Trent canal and waters and lakes. There are 25 or 30 men hired temporarily every spring and two or three permanent men retired every year and new ones hired. Never once did a Conservative get a job on the Trent canal; in fact, a Conservative can hardly look into the canal. After I was elected for a year I thought it was about time that the houses occupied by the workers on the canal were wired. I was down near the canal one day and I thought I would drive down and see what was going on. I drove over to the canal and got out. Instead of walking all around as I should have done I walked across the locks. I got half way across the locks when a man came out screaming, "Get off there, get off there". He came over to the locks. I thought every man in my riding knew me, but I found out that one fellow did not because I said, "I am the Conservative candidate". He said, "You get the hell out of here; you can't put that bull over me". He said, "There is no room for a Conservative around here, anyway". He is still on the job. I think he is a good lockmaster.

Then we have the Department of Trade and Commerce. They have a little patronage in there, too. They appointed some six or eight statisticians up in our country and again not one Conservative, not even a C.C.F.'er, got a chance at those jobs. The appointments were made by the Liberal association and they were hand-picked. They were not only Liberals, they were good Liberal workers both before and after they got the job and even up to the last election. They died awfully hard, but they still have their jobs. I do not believe in firing everybody high wide and handsome. I do not believe in firing people who are doing a good job just because some political mistakes were made by somebody higher up who should know better.

Mr. Dinsdale: They have seen the light now.

Mr. Hodgson: You can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink. They will be just the same if they ever get back into power but they will not be back in power for a long, long time.

(Translation):

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in the discussion of the budget and to express my personal position and the views of the voting population of that grand riding of Drummond-Arthabaska.

The first words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in his budget speech, were the following:

> I approach this task tonight in a spirit of deep humility and dedication in recalling, as did some of those who have preceded me in delivering their first budget speech, that this honour has fallen in times past to the lot of some very great Canadians.

It was indeed with humility that such a budget had to be submitted and no Canadian has ever presented such a pitiful one since confederation. As someone said before, no government has ever submitted a budget with as large a deficit in peacetime.

In submitting an explanation for his $648 million deficit budget, the hon. Minister of Finance has broken with a long Liberal tradition. As a matter of fact, since 1946, i.e. the year after the war, we have seen the public debt gradually decrease, except in the fiscal years 1954-1955, when our deficit was $147 million, and 1955-1956, when it reached $17 million. However, these slight deficits were compensated by a surplus of $272 million in the years 1955, 1956 and 1957.

On April 1, 1958, the national debt was estimated at 11 billion 48 million dollars, i.e. $649 per capita. However, this debt had been of 13 billion and 400 million dollars in 1946, or $1,100 for each man, woman and child in this country. Under the able guidance of the Hon. Mr. Abbott, who was minister of finance until 1952, the debt gradually decreased and continued to be paid off under the equally capable leadership of the Hon. Mr. Harris.

At the time several members of the Conservative party were loud in their criticism of these administrators. But the latter deserved the gratitude of every Canadian citizen. Whatever the area in which they may, at this time, exercise their activity, they deserve our gratitude and our sympathy.

Since the Conservatives came into power, what has happened? Whereas Mr. Harris' budget forecast a $152 million surplus for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, we have seen the present Minister of Finance, not only absorb this surplus in its entirety, but end the year with a deficit of $40 million, not even considering the $250 million which, according to the hon. gentleman, had been camouflaged by the Liberal party. This means that the government has added $542 million to administrative expenditures since it has come into power, though we are still as far as ever from the earthly paradise which it had promised us. You will remember the promises made during the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958. There was not one Conservative candidate who did not express shock at Liberal government surpluses. It was said that each family should be reimbursed the $120 it had paid over the year in surplus taxation. It was also stated that the excise tax on automobiles should be repealed, that our natural resources should be developed, that employment should be kept at a high level, etc.

If we look at the forecast made by the Minister of Finance last year, to the effect that there would be an $80 million surplus on March 31, 1958, and if we look at the evidence of a $39 million deficit which was confirmed last week, we can easily deduce that, projecting this error in like proportion, next year's deficit will be one billion dollars. The most striking feature of the budget under discussion is the flagrant contradiction between the figures provided by the Minister of Finance and the promises recently made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

He was not sparing of words when telling us that, without regard to cost, we should see to it that the economic life of this country be activated in order to create employment. Last year in his stillborn budget, he reduced taxation by $178 million, bringing about, in so doing, no improvement in the situation. It was during the few months that followed this reduction in taxation that we have seen the unemployment figure reach 860,000.

This year, this reduction in taxes is only of the order of $8 million. At that it will only benefit those who wish to make a gift of $10,000 to their wife and children, those too who will leave, at their death, an estate of $60,000 and less. Even Don Juans will not have to pay taxes on the flowers which they distribute right and left, thanks to the generosity of the Minister of Finance.

True, there have been some slight deductions in taxes on certain construction materials, agricultural and horticultural products, without forgetting eyeglasses and rat poison. But what real relief will all this bring to the working class and to the heads of large households?

With the exception of medicine bought on prescription, and of other treatments for chronic ailments, there is very little that the Minister of Finance can show in the way of real relief for the ordinary citizen of this country.

We have reason to say that Tory times are hard times.

Mr. Chown: Shame!

Mr. Boulanger: Since Confederation, not one Conservative government ever presented a sensible budget. Under the Liberal administration, a budget deficit of $648 million would have meant, if that amount had been applied to relieve the taxpayer, a reduction of $38 for each citizen of our country. If the same amount had been applied to increasing family allowances, Canadian families would be receiving $15 to $20 per child.

Yet, it was none other than the Prime Minister who said that Liberals were picking out of the pockets of every Canadian family $120 which the government did not need to administer the affairs of this country. When saying this, he was taking advantage of people's honesty in order to draw votes. The Canadian people were taken in and must now suffer the consequences, though with regret.

Mr. Speaker, I did not want to let the consideration of this budget go by without dealing with some aspects of family allowances. In fact, I received a great number of requests from citizens of my constituency asking me to urge an increase in family allowances. There is no doubt that all members in this house have received such requests.

These requests are fully justified by the increase in the cost of living and by the ever-pressing needs of education.

In January 1957, on the basis of the rise in the cost of living, the Liberal government understood and raised family allowances at the same time it raised old age pensions, pensions to the needy and all other social welfare benefits. A few months later, it was the Conservative government which, immediately after taking power, increased the old age pension by $9 a month, for the same reasons, while forgetting about family allowances. It is strange to find that the Conservatives who gave themselves as champions of social justice did not apply the same principles to the protection of the family.

One would have to look into the hearts of the Tories to find the real reasons of their indifference towards large families.

Since the Hon. George Drew, former leader of the opposition, opposed family allowances in 1945, the Conservatives have consistently grumbled that the Liberals had gone beyond the limit to meet the demands of the people. Still recently, in 1956, at the Conservative convention, the party defined its stand when the Hon. G. I. Smith, to a lady who asked him what was the attitude of his party in that field, answered that the committee instituted to study that question did not feel able to recommend now an increase of family allowances. On the other hand, the Liberal party, at its convention in January, did not hesitate to make its stand known and to add to its program the payment of family allowances to students up to the age of 18.

Today, the disproportion between old age pensions and family allowances is obvious and the Conservatives have substantially aggravated this lack of balance. At one time, we felt that the government would have decided on a certain increase in family allowances to meet the repeated demands of the population. Many members from the government side have therefore made statements in which they undertook to recommend such an increase. In fact, the Conservative members from the province of Quebec went all out, to their hearts' content, in their statements published in a certain paper of that province. Not one of them, however, had the courage to state squarely in this house what he desired. They have merely been using nice words, making no sense whatever. Yet, they are aware of the growing needs of large families with regard to maintenance and education.

The consumers' price index based on 100 for 1949—that is four years after the family allowances act was sanctioned—reached 125.2 in January last. The least the government could do at this session would be to continue to pay these allowances for children still pursuing their studies and until 18 years of age, and adjust pensions to a level comparing with old age pensions.

Any legislation that the government will introduce to improve that act will be welcomed by all citizens and there is no doubt that the Liberal party will approve it without reservation.

Mr. Speaker, before ending my remarks, I would be remiss if I did not say a few words about agricultural prices support. When that legislation was considered at the last session, there was much discussion and we were right, on the Liberal side, when we asked that its adoption should be delayed so that we could consider it further.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) was so anxious to have it adopted, so as to be able later to say that he had fulfilled one of his promises, that he did not care whether it would be detrimental or not to the farmers.

In the last few months, several reactions cropped up from many parts of the country. It is rightly claimed, for instance, that milk powder producers are affected directly, and the farmers indirectly. Those manufacturers are fairly numerous in the eastern part of the country, and especially in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Under the new price stabilization act, the Minister of Agriculture has decreed that the new prices would come into effect on May 1, 1958, and that the government was willing to pay 15 cents a pound for first quality dry skimmed milk, spray processed, and 12 cents a pound for roller processed dry skimmed milk.

Those new prices are 2 cents a pound less than those in force prior to May 1. Now, according to the figures of the Dried Milk Producers' Association, there were still in those plants, from 10 to 12 million pounds of milk powder. Those producers therefore took or will take a loss of 2 cents a pound when marketing their product. Those losses will account for $200,000. Some small manufacturers, whose financial situation is not too solid, will be in a very embarrassing situation.

If the government had at least announced its reduction policy a few months earlier, those producers would have had time to dispose of their stock.

A similar situation came about under the Liberal regime in the years 1942 and 1943. The government of the time paid a compensation to wholesalers who had quantities of butter in reserve when a price reduction was announced on this product. The butter producers, wholesalers and farmers were not then forced to sustain a loss and the change-over came about smoothly.

Since the reduction of the support price of dry milk by 2 cents per pound, the price of milk in Quebec and Ontario has been reduced by 10 cents per hundredweight. We know that approximately 8 pounds of dry milk can be obtained from approximately 100 pounds of milk plus 4.2 pounds of butter. By carrying out an extremely simple computation we will see that with the increase in the price of butter the profit is 4.2 cents per hundredweight. This shows that with regard to recent years butter has been selling for one cent more per pound, that is 64 cents. This increase, with regard to 100 pounds, is equal to a profit of 4.2 cents. If account is taken of the fact that 8 pounds of dry milk are produced from 100 pounds of whole milk, this decrease in 2 cents means a loss of 16 cents for the producer per hundredweight. By subtracting the loss incurred on dry milk production from the profit made on the sale of butter, we will note that the producer loses from 10 to 12 cents per hundredweight. What is happening at this time in the province of Quebec is that the price of butter has gone down from 10 to 12 cents per hundredweight. And there is great praise for the agricultural prices production act which, according to some people, is the farmer's salvation!

We are still unable to see what the results of this act will be since it is far too recent; but we can state that this legislation, as far as milk products are concerned, is a complete failure from the point of view of the farmer. True, there are certain products in respect of which this legislation can be to some advantage for speculators or traders. This is true as far as wool is concerned. A compensation price of 60 cents a pound is being considered. Since this wool can be sold only to manufacturers or traders, the farmer is deprived of the advantage of bargaining and the manufacturer can offer him any price whatever. Whether the farmer sells his wool 40 cents, 50 cents, or 65 cents a pound is completely irrelevant since the government will pay the difference when the compensation price has been established on the basis of the price on the Toronto market. Therefore, if the compensation price is fixed at 60 cents and if the farmer has sold his wool at 40 cents, the government will pay the difference, that is 20 cents per pound. If that legislation has any advantage whatever, it is only as far as traders and manufacturers are concerned. Since the trader is not concerned with competition, he can offer any price he wishes. In fact, he can grade it in any way he chooses. I am convinced that there are no wool graders who really know anything about wool grading either in our Quebec manufacturing plants or among traders.

I had an opportunity to offer similar remarks last year, when we were discussing the Agricultural Prices Stabilization Act and I believe that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) will admit today that I was right.

We could deal with a great many other products, but I am content with noting these two, reserving the right to return to them later on.

(Text):

Mr. A. R. Webster (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, rising as I do now for the first time in this house, my first words must be of congratulation to the Speaker on the high office with which he has been honoured. It must be a source of great satisfaction to know that members of parliament from every party and every corner of the country were not only pleased but proud to have him chosen again as the first commoner. We in this far corner of the House of Commons know that he will see us equally well and as often as he will see those members who are much closer to him. I should congratulate too, the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Sevigny) who has already demonstrated in this session that he will live up to the many fine things said about him by earlier speakers in this parliament.

St. Antoine-Westmount is a metropolitan Montreal riding about two miles and a half square. The 41,000 voters are a cross-section of Canadian life. Every walk of life, from the lowest to the highest, is represented. There are the very poor and the immensely wealthy. About half are French and the other half predominantly English. I will strive honestly to represent them all, not just those who voted Conservative in this parliament.

I might add that my constituents will be able to make a close and, I trust, friendly check on my activities here through the hon. member for Longueuil, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Chambers) and the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays), who are all residents of St. Antoine-Westmount.

I must record my approval of the budget presented to this house last Tuesday by the finance minister in a feat of endurance and easy speaking which I am sure was a marvel to all the new members like myself.

Naturally, I have been watching for and listening closely to all the comment available on the budget. I have been in my own riding of St. Antoine-Westmount this last weekend to hear the observations of my own constituents; and, notwithstanding what we have heard from certain sections of this house, I am forced to say that I believe most Canadians approve and are satisfied with this budget. Of course there is nothing in it to make anyone hysterical with joy. But there is an honest recognition of the facts of economic life in Canada as the people know them.

There was optimism, justifiable optimism, I believe for the future. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has told us that this budget is only a first push to start the wheel turning forward. There is no reason not to believe that in subsequent budgets the wheel will gather momentum and that there will be the gradual, systematic reduction of taxes for which this party has always stood.

Before discussing taxes at greater length, there is one feature of the budget and reaction to it which I think deserves some notice. We have heard repeated charges that this is a budget based on a protectionist philosophy. No doubt we will hear that claim made often even long after this budget has been approved here in parliament by the representatives of the people.

Some members of the opposition parties with whom we share this side of the House of Commons have found it convenient in their attack on the budget to quote the Financial Post, a paper with considerable standing in the business community. Let these critics, then, turn up page 10 of the Financial Post of June 21 where the tariff changes are discussed, and let them note these two paragraphs quoted from that article:

> All of these changes—
> The reference is to tariff revisions on iron and steel, pipes and tubes, zinc and zinc products and wool.
> —are the result of tariff board investigations initiated under the Liberal government.
> The Conservative government is following lines mapped out by its predecessor.

That ends the quotation and it should end too some of the fallacious arguments we have been hearing from other sections of the House of Commons about what these changes mean.

Before this diversion I was discussing taxes and the fact that I have found general approval of the budget in spite of the fact that there were no substantial tax reductions. The only people who seem really concerned about this are those sitting to your immediate left in the two opposition parties. They are in the minority in this house, and I am convinced they are still swimming against the stream of public opinion in the matter of this budget and other equally important questions. There was general agreement throughout the country even before the budget was presented —and I am now not referring only to the events of March 31—that taxes should not be drastically reduced.

One of the most significant documents which came to my attention in the last few weeks was a copy of a letter from H. Roy Crabtree, chairman of the executive council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. This organization is a national voluntary federation of more than 750 boards of trade and chambers of commerce in all Canadian provinces and the territories of the north as well. As such it represents literally thousands of businesses, large and small, who have as great a stake as you or I in every budget.

In January of this year the national chamber of commerce, visited the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and urged upon them consideration of substantial reductions in personal and corporate income taxes. Four months later, however—in May—the executive council sought and received another interview with the Minister of Finance and his cabinet colleagues. The council felt it was important, in view of changed circumstances, to considerably amend its former position. During its first meeting the executive council had expressed the uncertainty that everyone felt at the time regarding the possible extent and duration of the adjustment which the Canadian economy was then undergoing. In May the chamber said, and I would like to quote from the letter to the ministers as follows:

There are still elements of uncertainty particularly as to the duration of the current slowdown in business. There is some recent evidence, however, of stabilizing tendencies.

The letter went on to discuss the fact that Canada's economy is directly affected by economic developments abroad, particularly those in the United States. It added that there appear to be what the chamber of commerce called feasible means of improving our economic climate through governmental and private policies designed to improve the confidence of business and consumer. Then the letter came to this significant conclusion:

During the intervening months—

That is, since the first submission made in January.

—the fiscal background has changed significantly. Having in mind the probable sizeable deficit of the government for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1959, largely resulting from expanded spending to counteract prevailing unemployment, the executive council believes that it would not be prudent or responsible to recommend sizeable tax rate changes at this time.

I would like to repeat the last part of that important sentence.

—it would not be prudent or responsible to recommend sizeable tax rate changes at this time.

That is the considered opinion of the executive council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I do not think anyone could accuse that body of the political bias which inevitably flavours every speech made on this subject in this house. By the standards of this group the budget under discussion is, therefore, both prudent and responsible. Furthermore, the Minister of Finance apparently received similar advice from the large group of trusted and efficient officials in these departments which prepare studies to aid him in budget decisions.

[Mr. Webster.]

Within this frame of reference, that is to say, "Hold the line on major tax cuts", the Minister of Finance has introduced some improvements which I am glad to hear, even the opposition admits, makes sound sense. The question must be lingering in many minds as to why these changes were not made by former governments. We have heard arguments that the welcome changes in deductions for medical expenses will be of very little value to very few people. I think this is an exaggeration because reduction of even a few dollars in tax payments is valuable to every Canadian affected. One argument is that the 3 per cent floor which must be exceeded in respect of medical expenses before all such expenses are deductible will severely limit the value of these changes. While medical charges are not altogether standardized, I think it is fair to say that it is much easier for a relatively low income family to run up 3 per cent of income in medical bills than it is for a higher income family to do so. These changes therefore will be of the most value to the Canadians who most need the benefits.

More and more Canadians are wearing eye glasses, and yet until the night of June 17, 1958 the federal government refused to accept the fact that weak eyes or any condition requiring eye correction was, for deduction purposes, a physical ailment.

The same is true of the bulk of drugs which are playing an increasingly important part in the treatment of illnesses. I imagine every member of this house knows of at least one case where the cost of drugs has been the largest item in the recovery of some patients. Laboratory and diagnostic services are also vital to the proper treatment of many ailments and, as I said earlier, it is only good sense that they should all be included for deduction purposes.

I could not agree more than I do with the statement of the Minister of Finance on this subject last week he told us of these changes, as recorded at page 1243 of Hansard for June 17 in the following words:

—will go a long way to correct the unfairness which in the past has been the source of so much complaint about this section of the income tax law.

The same words might apply to another change announced in the budget address. As every member must know, a wife could earn $999 without damaging the exemption which her husband could claim for her. But, as conditions were before the budget, if she earned $1,001 this exemption was immediately reduced by $250. I understand the change will eliminate this small but rather vicious anomaly. The deduction will now be reduced by only the exact amount of the wife's earnings in excess of $1,000.

The third announcement I would like to mention concerns the estate tax. A new bill was introduced in January last and since then many representations have been made. These representations we are told had resulted after careful consideration in a number of revisions. This proves to all concerned the wisdom of the course adopted by the house earlier this year in facilitating the introduction of this important legislation.

We have also been told that the tax relief envisioned by the new estate tax legislation is concentrated, deliberately, in the low value estates. Estates of less than $50,000 will be completely free from tax and widows will receive particular attention by means of a scale of exemptions which, as the minister explained, are true exemptions. In other words, the tax will be paid only on the amount by which the estate exceeds the total applicable exemptions.

In closing I would like to say the Minister of Finance is a Conservative, with both a large "C" and a small "c". If he has erred in any of his estimates and predictions forming part of his budget, his error has been on the side of caution. Therefore we have reason to believe that the situation will improve and that his controlled optimism will be more than justified.

I have spoken of the general policy decisions which had to be made in regard to this budget and I have mentioned three specific changes for which I am sure the majority of Canadians are grateful. I believe the points I have discussed underline my contention that this is a budget built on good sense. It is the kind of budget the people expected and that the country should have under the circumstances. I am therefore pleased to say that my vote against both amendments and for the main motion will be a vote for good sense more than a vote for political partisanship.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence pursuant to standing order 15 (3).

SECOND READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. SD-56, for the relief of Margaret Patricia Winckworth Thornton Sherwin.—Mr. McCleave.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Argue for the second reading of Bill No. C-4, to amend the Interest Act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson.

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on June 5 at the adjournment of the debate I was in the middle of a sentence when, according to the report in Hansard, I was guillotined. During the interval of time I have had drawn to my attention an editorial appearing in a newspaper called the New Toronto Advertiser headed "Of Interest To Borrowers". I feel at this time I should read it in its entirety because to a large extent I feel there has been a matter of misrepresentation as far as I am personally concerned. The editorial reads as follows:

> The people of Canada can consider themselves very fortunate that there is only one John Drysdale in the House of Commons. Because you have probably never heard of him, we will tell you that John Drysdale is the member for Burnaby-Richmond. His fleeting moment of fame or rather notoriety came this week during discussion on the C.C.F. motion to amend the Interest Act and limit interest to 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I call the attention of the hon. member to the practice that editorials which comment on proceedings in the house are not properly read in the course of debate.

Mr. Drysdale: May I call the attention of Mr. Speaker to page 133 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, 1958, paragraph 7 which reads:

> (7) When a complaint is made of a newspaper, it is the practice in the House of Commons of Canada for the member to rise on a question of privilege and point out that he has been libelled or misrepresented. He may read as much of the article as is necessary to prove his case but he cannot go farther. He is bound to confine himself strictly to the question of privilege.

On that point, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and ask for permission to read the editorial.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the hon. member was speaking on the debate on second reading of the bill. He had not referred to any matter of privilege.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, during the interval this editorial appeared involving myself and in connection with the Interest Act. I am rising to speak following the adjournment and I wish to rise at the same time on a question of privilege. Being a new member I was not sure whether or not it was necessary under parliamentary procedure to raise a question of privilege but I do so now if it is necessary in order to read the editorial.

Mr. Speaker: I have never heard of an hon. member interrupting himself to raise a point of privilege. The rules say a point of privilege may be considered at any time and it may be that the hon. member is right. If I have some advice on the subject I might give a better decision. Does any hon. member wish to speak on this question?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, if I may address myself to the point, I think while the hon. member may be right in raising a question of privilege if he speaks now I do not think he will be able to get back to the subject which is under discussion because he cannot have it both ways. He cannot raise a question of privilege and interrupt his own speech and then go back and argue the resolution or bill which is now before the house. He must do either one or the other. He can raise the question of privilege before the orders of the day are called as any hon. member can but my submission is that he cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to rise and bring up the question of privilege that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Drysdale) wishes to interrupt himself on so as to transfer the liability from himself to me.

Mr. Speaker: After I dispose of this point of order, I will consider it.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, if I may offer to be of some help in resolving the dilemma. I listened very carefully to the hon. member and his remarks so far were only an introduction to what could be a question of privilege. I suggest that he could make his question of privilege now and later take part in the debate.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that perhaps the hon. member might adopt a method which is used in court from time to time. He could incorporate some of the words from the editorial in the context of his speech and thereby refer to them without offending at all the objection raised on the question of privilege and without offending the rule about reading the editorial itself.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps there are various solutions to this dilemma which will commend themselves to the hon. member, but I really do not think he can speak in two capacities at the same time. Since he is addressing the house now on the motion for the second reading of the bill I suggest he confine himself to that and deal with the matter of privilege on another occasion.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, the two matters more or less fuse together, and the reason that I disclosed at the beginning the fact that I was reading from the editorial is that I did not want to fall into the difficulty that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) fell into in connection with the editorial from the Winnipeg Free Press. This is not from the Winnipeg Free Press. I do not know whether I should actually refer to the editorial itself, but if it is necessary to adopt the garb of anonymity, shall we say, I shall be glad to go back to just reading this matter without referring to it as an editorial. Would that be permissible?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will proceed, I will interrupt him if I feel it necessary.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly enjoy this enlightenment of the rules as I proceed.

John Drysdale began his address—

This sounds like a paid advertisement, Mr. Speaker, but I assure you it is not.

John Drysdale began his address by claiming he agreed with the objectives of the bill and then continued on to prove he did no such thing.

He pointed out that banks do not lend money at six per cent interest.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member is trespassing on the credulity of the house in using words which are obviously not his own. In accordance with the rules, I really do not think he can use the editorial, since it reflects on some action of his own in the house. If he complains about what a newspaper said he is in order to raise the matter as a question of privilege at the proper time.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Speaker, would it be in order for the hon. member to speak in the debate, and then when he has closed off any further remarks he wishes to make in regard to the debate, to proceed on the question of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: I will deal with that when it arises. Perhaps I might give the hon. member this assistance. If he wants to indicate to the house the substance of what has been said about his statement, without attributing it to anyone, and it is relevant to the bill, I would not object to that procedure.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you. I will not pursue the dilemma that I seem to be placing the house in at the present time. Perhaps I might paraphrase the effect of the editorial. The objection that I had to it primarily, sir, was that the length of the editorial is approximately the length of my interrupted speech and it ascribes to me certain points of view on the interest rate which I feel are inimical to the stand I took. The editorial continues by taking out certain phrases from the small speech that I made and then taking these particular phrases to back up or substantiate a preconceived conclusion that they had already reached. I felt it was extremely important, because the matter is of a great deal of interest to the people in my riding and to the people of Canada generally, and when a point of view is ascribed to me, to which I do not adhere, as stated in the editorial, I feel that I should take the opportunity of clarifying the matter.

In substance the editorial adopts the attitude that the 12 per cent rate of interest is quite justifiable. At the beginning I pointed out to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that I agreed with the objective of the bill but I had great difficulty in ascertaining where he obtained the 12 per cent figure. These are some of the phrases used by the hon. member in 1957, as reported at page 1897 of Hansard, in reference to the 12 per cent rate:

> Certainly loans made by the chartered banks to a great many credit unions in the country, money loaned under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the National Housing Act or the Canadian Farm Loan Act, all carry lower rates of interest.

He meant lower rates than 12 per cent. He went on to say:

> I believe the terms of the bill are moderate. I think the suggested rate of 12 per cent per year is certainly as high as any rate should be.
> Another reason why I suggest that rate is that many credit unions in Canada charge a rate of approximately that amount.

That is the only positive statement he made as to how the 12 per cent rate was established. Again, speaking on the same bill on January 10, 1958, at page 3164 of Hansard, the hon. member said:

> The 12 per cent interest rate provided in this bill is, I think, high. Some hon. members on previous occasions have said that the rate should be lower and I think a good argument could be made in this respect, but this rate was proposed because it seemed to me that it was so reasonable that very few hon. members could oppose it.

Again, arguing in the debate on June 5, 1958, as reported at page 858 of Hansard, the hon. member said:

> I do not think it can be successfully argued that a rate of interest should be in excess of 12 per cent per annum. As a matter of fact, I think 12 per cent is itself rather high but I have placed the ceiling in that amount in order to appeal to hon. members to do something about this problem.

In other words, the analogy, or the idea, that the hon. member for Assiniboia uses to establish the basis is that he looks on the credit unions as establishing the rate of 12 per cent. However, I would like to refer to the report of the royal commission on co-operatives in 1945, and specifically appendix E, which starts at page 239 and deals with the development and operations of credit unions—caisses populaires—in Canada, and in particular at page 242:

> A credit union (caisse populaire) may be defined as an incorporated group of people with some well defined tie of association, occupation or residence, who pool their savings in the form of shares and deposits and out of the fund so accumulated, make loans to members only for purposes which are considered to be provident or productive.
> The affairs of a credit union are administered by three committees appointed by and from the members, namely, a board of directors, a credit committee and a supervisory committee.
> The board of directors must rule on all applications for membership, each application being endorsed by at least one director. In addition, the directors determine the maximum individual share holding and the maximum individual loan which may be made with or without security, subject to the provisions of the act, determine interest rates on loans and deposits, declare dividends: (subject to the approval of the general meeting); have charge of investments, other than loans to members; fix the form and amount of security of officers and employees handling money; and fill vacancies on the board of directors or of the credit committee until the next annual meeting.
> The legislation requires the credit committee to pass on all loans and determine the rate of interest and security in each case. The directors may fix the maximum rate which may be charged from time to time.
> The supervisory committee examines the books and accounts at least quarterly, makes an annual audit and reports thereon to the annual meeting. The supervisory committee may also suspend any officer and call a meeting of the credit union to report on such suspension.
> There are thus three committees in each credit union, with well-defined functions. The exceptionally low loss record of credit unions is probably partly due to this three-way system of checks, balances and administration. Another factor is that the tie of residence, association or community which must form the basis of credit union membership, seems to be conducive to a careful selection of members and results in a certain similarity of credit problems.
> Another factor is that of the loyalty of a credit union member to his group. When he borrows money from his credit union he tends to remember that he is borrowing the money of his friends and neighbours. Another factor responsible for the low loss rates of credit unions is undoubtedly that all credit union legislation makes provision for at least an annual inspection of each credit union by the registrar or other government official concerned with the administration of the legislation.

Further on there is the following:

> Most of the loans made by credit unions are for the purpose of meeting current expenses of the members, although as the resources increase, mortgage loans may be made.

The point on which I have taken issue with the hon. member for Assiniboia is the fact that his whole argument is based on a 12 per cent rate of interest and as far as I can gather from the arguments he has put forward in the past three years he has established that rate only from the fact that it is the rate charged by credit unions which are on a much different basis, are much more selective, examine loans made to their members much more closely than the ordinary investor or finance company can and therefore have much more stringent control over the individual member. In fact, Mr. Speaker, even within the credit unions themselves loans, in addition to being made very carefully, generally have a provision whereby the note is endorsed by at least two members of the association. The act itself provides that if the directors make the wrong type of loan they are in fact responsible for making the necessary repayment.

By taking an extremely unusual group such as the credit unions and adopting the 12 per cent rate of interest the hon. member has in my opinion failed to look at the realities of the situation. I feel that the result, although not intended by the hon. member, would be just the opposite. In other words, there would be a tremendous increase in loan sharks and the number of people trying to circumvent the legislation because people would not be inclined to take the great risk involved in lending money at 12 per cent.

The editorial to which I referred earlier emphasizes some of the types of individuals who borrow money from loan companies. In contrast, the credit unions scrutinize prospective members thoroughly and to a large degree seek them out for their honesty and responsibility. On the other hand, the loan association estimates that at least 20 per cent of the people who borrow from such companies require special consideration.

I referred earlier in the discussion to the fact that I was a lawyer and that in my earlier days as a young lawyer I had had occasion to follow up some of these people. The thing that amazed me was the extent of irresponsibility of the people who got that far. Although there is not too great respect, shall we say, held for lawyers when they are pursuing people on such matters, personally I took the attitude that I would try to get them to come and see me so that I could talk over the matter with them, point out that they had contracted an outstanding debt and that the best thing for them to do was to try to pay it off.

Very often there were cases where service of papers was involved. I can think of some instances where I telephoned the man concerned and said, "If you come into my office on Tuesday we can save you at least the $5 costs involved in serving the papers." I can remember an instance where the person came in on Friday. He apparently had not bothered to take the trouble to come in before and had just decided that he did not want to make the saving. I had a great deal of difficulty in understanding that attitude. I should like to clear up the impression created by the newspaper editorial. There are many good, responsible Canadian families who at times have to obtain small loans from the loan companies but I do want to accentuate the matter a bit with my own personal experience that not all people who borrow from loan companies are highly virtuous and respectable.

When I started out to practice as a lawyer I also had the experience of following up members of a particular credit union. Several of them would perhaps move away, forget their problems and leave the two endorsers on the note with the responsibility of paying it. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia has not disclosed in any of his speeches on this subject during the past three years a realistic approach as to what would be a sensible rate of interest. He has merely reached out, taken a figure which he assumed would be suitable because of the specialized case of credit unions and has endeavoured to hold on to that figure very rigidly. Although he talked at great length about various iniquities, he has done nothing to support a figure of 12 per cent.

There is another factor that bothers me a great deal. Because of the risk involved to the various lending agencies, I would assume that in all likelihood the 12 per cent figure he has suggested as a maximum would tend to become the figure that prevailed. We would have a rather unfortunate situation in that regardless of the size of the loan, whether it was $300 or $3,000, the 12 per cent figure would still apply. I feel that the hon. member did not take this into consideration and that this is another indication of his relatively unrealistic attitude.

In order to clear up the difficulties as far as the editorial is concerned and the misrepresentation I felt was attributed to me, I should like to emphasize that I am in favour of having interest rates reduced but I do not feel that can be done until there is some realistic evidence to justify the establishment of a lower rate.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, since I spoke on second reading of the bill an amendment has been moved which gives me the opportunity to rise again today to clear up a few misunderstandings that may have been inadvertently brought about by the hon. member. I should also like to refer to another case which I think should be placed on the record. When the hon. member read from the report of the investigating commission he mentioned the 12 per cent per annum rate of the credit unions. To clear up any misunderstanding, this is the maximum rate permitted to credit unions but in actual practice the rate charged is not nearly that high.

I think the easiest way to explain it is to take a unit of $100. If you borrow $100 from a credit union and keep it for one year you will pay $12 but if you pay it back in 12 equal instalments the interest charged will only be $6.66. Most credit unions pay an interest rebate at the end of the year according to the profit the credit union has made and there is a further reduction there. In the credit union with which I was associated as treasurer for four years the rate of rebate was 15 per cent which reduced the interest rate to $5.67 on $100. Therefore it can be seen that while the interest rate is based on a maximum of 12 per cent per annum in actual fact it does not come anywhere near that figure.

In his report he mentioned the various committees—the board of directors, the credit committee and the supervisory committee—and he mentioned that the credit committee has authority to set interest rates. That is true in one sense, but it only has authority to set interest rates from 12 per cent downward, not from 12 per cent up.

With regard to the suggestion that credit unions are a privileged group, I do not think that is actually so. But from my experience of these credit unions I know of many cases where members have been taken out of the hands of the finance company, sometimes after they have been there for many years, and after only two or three years in the credit union, with the advice and assistance given by credit union officials they have been able for the first time in many years to find their way out of the dilemma they were in. I rather resent the remark the hon. member made about the irresponsibility of some people. I think, in all fairness, it is not so much irresponsibility as a complete loss of hope. Many who have been in debt to finance companies for five, ten or fifteen years, year after year, find themselves reduced to despair.

The other matter I should like to mention today has to do not with finance companies, not with money borrowed to buy luxuries or anything of that kind, but with people buying groceries, the very basic staples of life. I have run across a case where a big chain store—not one of the national chain stores, but still a big chain store—is being very accommodating to its customers, permitting them to buy on a pay-to-pay basis and then, with the excuse that the store itself has to borrow money to pay for its stocks, charging what at first sight may be regarded as a very low interest on the loans, namely three per cent. But it should not be forgotten that there are 26 pay days in a year, and on this basis the rate of interest actually works out at no less than 72 per cent per annum.

In many cases people do not realize what is happening; they are lulled to sleep by fancy advertisements. They do not realize what they are stepping into. I became interested in this matter, so I went into it a little further. I found out that the situation is even worse than it at first appeared, because it is not even three per cent, it works out at one cent interest on the first 18 cents. So if I go into the store today and buy groceries, and tomorrow is pay day and I pay my bill, one per cent on 18 cents works out to the astronomical figure of something like 2,000 per cent a year. This is a fantastic figure and it should be prohibited in this country. This is the purpose of this bill. Those who support it are trying to put a stop to these practices which are bleeding people white without their realizing what is happening. I think this bill should definitely go back to the committee so that we may find out how many times situations of this kind are being repeated across Canada, and put a stop to these practices once and for all.

Mr. McCleave: I wonder if I might ask the hon. member a question? Was the 5.37 per cent the effective rate paid on the $100 lent by the credit union? How did the hon. member arrive at that particular figure?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): That is the actual interest paid. In a credit union, on very rare occasions does one get any term loans. It is usually worked out on the basis of what a member is capable of paying, and calculated on the basis of one per cent per month. That is what $100 would cost, paid off in 12 equal instalments with the rebate back at the end of the year.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): I thank the hon. member for that information.

Mr. Speaker, when this matter was brought before us on June 5, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), the sponsor of the amendment to the Interest Act, spoke about "the men in grey suits". I would go a little further this afternoon, bearing in mind the tales that have been told today and in the previous debate, and call them "the men in the grey fleece suits".

What is the modus operandi of the interest shark? I would say it was an ability to play very cleverly on the nerves of potential ulcer sufferers in Canada. The snare and delusion with which he traps his victim is the promise of soothing treatment to a man or woman harassed to death by debts and anxious to consolidate them and, instead of having 25 letters a month coming to the door demanding payment, to get only one instead. And once the prey is well and truly trapped, if he falls behind in interest payments the suggestion that may be made to him is to use the same remedy all over again—to consolidate that debt, both principal and interest together, into the new loan. And so it goes on, with the 24 per cent interest snowballing downhill and dragging the unhappy sufferer along willy-nilly.

It seems to me I might perform a useful service to the people of Canada who suffer from the too rapacious demands of some loan companies to remind them that sometimes it is much better to be sued and to suffer judgment rather than sign a new note which puts them in the 24 per cent interest category, for although submission to judgment may affect credit standing, the people who go to loan companies probably have little or no credit standing anyway. As I say, it might be better for these people to accept judgment and then pay six per cent interest on that judgment rather than continue to pay 24 per cent. I throw this advice out in a modest way, to whoever may be in the hands of loan companies.

One of the useful pieces of literature associated with the subject is prepared by the superintendent of insurance for Canada who finds himself seized with the task of reporting to parliament on the activities of small loans companies and moneylenders. We have the report of this gentleman for the year ending December 31, 1956, and I believe we may expect the report for 1957 some time around the end of this year. I notice that the last report of Mr. K. R. MacGregor was dated November 1, 1957. I have examined the figures, and though I pretend to be no accountant—no expert at going through company statements—I find this fascinating reading. Take, as an example, the case of a company which enjoins Canadians never to borrow money needlessly. As of the end of 1956, the total amount of money out on loan at 24 per cent interest—this was before the last change in the Small Loans Act—was just under $50 million; in fact, it was $49,866,095. Assuming that all that money were out at any given point during the year and collecting 24 per cent interest, the total amount of interest from it would be just under $12 million. Actually, I calculated it to be $11,967,862.

Looking elsewhere in the accounts of this company as reported to parliament I find that the actual income earned on those loans was just a trifle less, namely $11,806,865. The house may be interested in the difference between those two figures. It is $160,997. In short, that figure is approximately one per cent of the total amount of interest earned by the company. It would suggest to me—although perhaps I may be wrong and may not be reading the balance sheet correctly—that these companies are very efficient when they lend money at 24 per cent and are able to get it all back. It also suggests to me that the potential which they have to lend out is in fact lent out, because of the $160,000 figure which indicates that they are just about getting the maximum use of the money for which they have potential loan customers.

Reading elsewhere from the balance sheet, I would suggest to any committee which is charged with studying this matter that the reserve for bad loans of these companies is probably too high in the light of the figures I have just given the house. However, I think the house should also know that while the major loan companies are extremely efficient in their transactions, there are smaller companies in the business of making small loans and their fate is not always a generous one. The big companies seem to take the cake in this business. For example, at page 52 of Mr. McGregor's report for the year 1956, I find that 71 companies which were in the small loans business during 1956 had a loss of $292,204 on their operations. It is true that these companies were in other fields and on those operations they made $4,637,546. But at least the figure of the loss on small loans indicates that there is some danger in this field.

My hope would be that this matter would go before the committee as recommended in the amendment of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) and I am going to support his amendment for that reason. It may be that we have even another remedy and that is to examine the English law on this matter. I do not know the constitutional implications, whether it is a jurisdiction of the federal parliament or of the provincial legislatures but I think the matter is worth looking into. As the house perhaps knows, under the English laws relating to usury I do not believe there is any particular ceiling on the amount of interest that can be charged but there is a good healthy provision that courts may be enabled to look into the whole transaction.

Yet another possible suggestion on this matter is that this and all other matters of credit policy be studied by a royal commission such as the one which was set up in Canada some 25 years ago and which led to the setting up of the Bank of Canada. As has been suggested by the premier of New Brunswick, Hon. Hugh John Flemming, such a royal commission could be charged with a good many tasks, among them the problems of Canadians in obtaining credit.

My final suggestion to the hon. member for Assiniboia and his supporters is that perhaps they might give serious consideration to amendments to the Bank Act. I am informed that at the present time the banks make no profit in the small loan business. Perhaps that is the reason why they have allowed these finance companies to spring up. They find it difficult to operate small loans departments on the 6 per cent interest that is allowed. Even if they are successful in obtaining back all the money that they loaned out under small loans to customers, they still do not find it profitable for the time of the supervisors and the employees would have to be charged up against such operations.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) moved an amendment to refer this bill to the banking and commerce committee.

However, I should like to say a few words on the purpose of this bill, which is to limit to 12 per cent a year the interest charged by some finance companies.

The Interest Act, as it is drafted just now, sets no limit on the interest which can be charged in Canada. In certain fields, limitations are imposed with respect to the interest rate but they are provided for by special legislation.

An analysis of loans under the Small Loans Act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Bank Act, and so forth, reveals that there is no legal limit to the interest rate which finance companies may charge at the present time and anyone is free to make a loan to an individual at any rate of interest agreed by the two parties. It is also legal at the present time for a finance company to charge all costs which may be agreed upon between the purchaser of an article and the company.

No limitation is provided for in the case of the interest rate which a business undertaking can charge to finance its instalment sales. The bill now before us would set a limit with respect to the interest on all loans made for instalment buying. Like the other bill on the order paper concerning the Small Loans Act, this bill would restrict the interest rate at 12 per cent annually. If the interest rate of 24 per cent a year charged on small loans is too high, the rates of 25 per cent, 30 per cent or 40 per cent charged by some finance companies are obviously fantastic.

To have to borrow money at that rate of interest is a dreadful thing for hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

Some large commercial businesses are charging today, in Canada, for instalment purchases, a rate as high as 54 per cent a year.

The interest which government bonds yield now is in the neighbourhood of 3 per cent.

The huge sums of money now being loaned under the National Housing Act are loaned at an annual rate of interest of about 5 per cent. The rate of interest prescribed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act is 5 per cent a year. Bank loans yield in the neighbourhood of 5 or 6 per cent per year.

If this maximum of 24 per cent charged for small loans is too high and must be lowered, an interest of 30 or even 40 per cent charged by some commercial companies is certainly exaggerated. In fact, it is four times and even eight times higher than the interest rate charged by the banks. The borrowers from those lending institutions are, in the main, the ones who can less afford such a high interest. Most of them are workers.

I am in favour of this bill to limit the interest rate of finance companies and great commercial businesses. I am supported in this by labour unions such as the CTCC which has an important branch in my constituency and whose president, at Joliette, is Mr. Marcellin Ferland.

The interest charged on loans granted to the lower income groups should be reduced to a level comparable as much as possible to the rate of interest charged borrowers who are considered to be better risks.

Say what you will of the differences that must exist between interest rates, I maintain that the disparity between an interest rate of 6 per cent asked by the banks for ordinary loans and of 24 per cent for small loans—and even 28, 30, or 40 per cent for larger loans—which is charged by some finance companies is certainly much too high.

In this country, credit unions lend money to their members at a rate of one per cent a month. In this way they can accumulate savings and pay rebates. May I also, in this house, give credit to the Caisses Populaires founded in 1900 by Mr. Alphonse Desjardins, of Levis (P.Q.), and which have multiplied throughout Canada.

The slogan of these credit unions is "All for one and each for all".

There are several credit unions in my riding, and they are partly responsible for the present development of home-building.

If today a number of workers have become house-owners, it is thanks to the credit unions and the provincial law of Quebec with regard to the family home. I would strongly encourage all classes of society to go and deposit their savings in their local caisse, or union. This money helps all groups, and more especially the working class.

The number and the size of the deposits increase the confidence of the owners and the very low rates of interest attracts prospective borrowers and prevents them from falling into the nets of the lending companies.

How many workers and large families have been able to settle their housing problem thanks to credit unions?

Allow me to pay tribute to hon. Senator Cyrille Vaillancourt who has shown an exceptional devotion to the Quebec credit unions. His nobility of heart, his magnanimity and his work have allowed credit unions to spread throughout the country and to become the pride of Canada. In my constituency, in the town of Joliette, credit unions are prosperous. Their boards of directors are made up of serious and devoted men and their managers, notably Mr. Marcel Gravel and Mr. Albert Lajoie, are hard working men.

Mr. Turgeon, the manager of the Caisse Populaire de L'Assomption is a credit to his board of directors.

In Montcalm, credit unions are equally prosperous.

There are about 4,500 credit unions in our country, which lend more than $300 million to more than 1,700,000 members. The number of credit unions and the scope of their operations are ever increasing. For instance, in 1948, there were only 2,600 of them with 850,600 members. The credit union system is more flexible than that of any other finance undertaking, as far as borrowers are concerned.

They also do a fine educational and moral job by tying their financial activity with the campaign against obscene literature, for example.

There are also the rural establishment banks instituted by the clergy of Quebec and by the UCC. They make loans at a very low interest rate to sons of farmers wishing to settle on a farm and thus complete the provincial farm credit system that lends money at a record low interest rate of 2½ per cent.

Credit is vital to any nation wishing to develop. Our prosperity depends upon it in large measure. A reasonable interest rate would not only permit more Canadians to satisfy their needs but would increase the purchasing power.

I hope this legislation will be adopted, as it will facilitate loans at a reasonable rate of interest. Unfortunately, low wage earners must pay high interest rates while people of means can borrow at low rates. I do not suggest that it is possible to achieve uniform rates, but I say that the discrepancy between the two is too sharp at the present time.

Loans have become more and more important in Canada through the years. A table showing the total earnings made on small loans granted by finance companies dealing with this type of business reveal that in 1941, for instance, they have earned $1,642,000. In 1946, their earnings jumped to $2,926,000, and we could go on with further examples. Unfortunately, I do not have figures for the last few years, but I am sure the increase must be nearly twice as much. This increase shows the rapid development of the Canadian economy and the still quicker expansion of loans in our national economy.

Loans being very popular, it is only consistent to discuss a reduction of interest rates. Some people will say that if the interest rate is lowered, however worthy the aim, a lot of people who could up to now obtain funds from the loan companies, will be forced to apply to loan-sharks . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is now six o'clock.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—STATEMENT ON REPORTED CUTBACKS AND MINE CLOSURES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the house I should like to make an announcement with respect to action being taken by this government to meet a serious problem in Nova Scotia. Over the last several weeks representations have been made by the members for Cumberland (Mr. Coates), Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLellan), Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), Pictou (Mr. MacEwan) and Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) with regard to the question of the rising unemployment situation in the coal areas of that province.

To summarize the general position I wish to say that the Dominion Coal Company has been for some time maintaining abnormally high stockpiles of coal and because of this fact has recently announced immediate lay-offs of 25 days in addition to the period of regular holidays for which latter period the employees received pay.

Even in the face of those reductions in working days, the company has estimated, and that estimate has been confirmed by the dominion coal board, that by the end of the year 1958 there would be in stockpile 750,000 tons of coal in excess of the normal average carryover.

The company has advised the government that it would be necessary to extend lay-offs beyond the above mentioned periods with a view to reducing the stockpile at the end of the year to approximately the average amount of the normal carryover in previous years. As these hon. gentlemen to whom I have referred have pointed out, if this action were taken it would result in over 9,000 men being out of work in the coal fields, thereby constituting a serious hardship to them and their families and, in general, much economic loss to the province of Nova Scotia as a whole.

Discussions have taken place between the representatives of the company, of the labour union, of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), who is himself a member from Nova Scotia, and of course always with the concurrence of and in the presence of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) and those discussions yesterday culminated in the meeting to which I made reference earlier today. At that meeting company officials undertook that at the end of the 25-day lay-off already announced the company would continue its normal operations providing it is compensated for the additional cost to which it would be put to maintain the excess over and above the normal stockpile.

After full consideration and on the recommendation of the minister of mines the government has decided that in order to help maintain employment the subvention policy now in existence will be extended so as to include among the cost audit items to be determined by the comptroller of the treasury the amount of the insurance stockpile and interest charges of the excess coal stockpiled this year and the government of Nova Scotia has agreed to share in these additional costs with the federal government. I am glad to report that this action will result in the company being enabled to maintain at a high level employment in the coal mines it operates.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, we were very glad to hear of this move to provide continuous employment for these employees. Would the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) consider some action along the same lines in co-operation with the government of British Columbia to assist the idle coal miners in that province?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that in this case there is a very large stockpile far in excess of the normal carryover and it was on that basis that this action was taken. In the case mentioned by the hon. gentleman I can only say that naturally consideration would have to be given on the basis of existent economic conditions within the company and the degree to which there is an excess. These would necessarily be matters to be considered in determining what course should be followed in the case of the mines to which he has made reference.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire from the leader of the house what the business will be on Monday? Will he tell us what items of government business will be called on Tuesday?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we intend to move to go into supply. There has been no agreement reached that that motion will be dealt with within one day. Should we get into supply on Monday we would take the estimates of the Department of Public Works, a few of which remain to be dealt with, and then those of the Department of Agriculture.

In the event that we do get into supply on Monday we would take on Tuesday, first, item No. 15 on today's order paper, which provides for setting up a sessional committee to deal with government-owned railways and shipping; then item No. 5, the second reading of the act to incorporate the lakehead harbour commissioners; then item No. 4, the second reading of the act to amend the Lake of the Woods Control Board Act; then item No. 12, the resolution concerning the Yukon Act, and item 11, the resolution concerning the Cape Breton Highlands national park. By the way, the departments which it is proposed to call are defence production, fisheries and mines and technical surveys.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PUBLIC BUILDING, NEWCASTLE, N.B.

Question No. 97—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What was the amount of the tender award for the federal public building now under construction at Newcastle, New Brunswick?
2. What is the estimated additional cost over the tender price resulting from a change in plans?
3. What is the target date for completion of this building?
4. What party is responsible for the inspection duties?
5. Was preference given to local persons and veterans preference followed when the selection of an inspector was made?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

Questions

1. $342,000.
2. Additional expenditure of $20,831 for revised foundation work to meet site conditions.
3. By end of December, 1958.
4. Ross, Patterson, Townsend and Fish, architects, of Montreal, P.Q., who also prepared the plans and specifications for this project, and district architect.
5. The terms and conditions of appointment of these architects require them to assign, at their own expense, a clerk of works (inspector) who is to provide constant supervision. The selection of this employee is the responsibility of the architects.

BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 102—Mr. Denis:

How many bankruptcies have there been in Canada, each year since 1950, by provinces?

Answer by: Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice):

NUMBER OF BANKRUPTCIES IN CANADA

Provinces	1950	1951	1952	1953	1954	1955	1956	1957	Total
Newfoundland	3	6	9	5	4	9	12	17	65

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 104—Mr. Michaud:

1. How many miles of trans-Canada highway will there be in (a) Prince Edward Island; (b) Nova Scotia; (c) New Brunswick?
2. How many miles of this highway have been completed in each of these provinces?
3. How many miles are presently under construction in each of these provinces?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) 71; (b) 311; (c) 390.
2. Completed under the trans-Canada highway agreement: Prince Edward Island, grading 70 miles, paving 67 miles; Nova Scotia, grading 95 miles, paving nil; New Brunswick, grading 118 miles, paving 81 miles.
3. Presently under construction: Prince Edward Island, 4 miles; Nova Scotia, 30 miles; New Brunswick, 57 miles.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 30, 1958

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MINES, FORESTS AND WATERS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West) presented the second report of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH INSURANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SIGNING OF ADDITIONAL AGREEMENTS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an announcement to the house at this time. In the past few days agreements under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act have been concluded with four additional provinces, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. As was the case with that signed earlier this month with Newfoundland, the effective date of these agreements is July 1. In view of the fact that royal assent has now been obtained for the amendment to the related federal legislation, the dominion government will therefore be in the position as of tomorrow to begin payments towards the cost of hospital insurance plans in these five provinces.

In other words, our objective of getting the program under way in all provinces wishing to participate as of July 1 has now been achieved. I think it is highly fitting that an undertaking of such importance to the people of Canada should be launched on the nation's birthday.

I might say that the basic agreement entered into in each case is substantially the same. As hon. members may know there are, however, areas of the act in which the provinces are permitted leeway in developing their programs. Accordingly certain differences occur in provincial plans, and these are reflected in the schedules of the agreements which have been completed.

In all cases the basic inpatient services enumerated in the federal act are provided for. In this connection the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta propose to impose an authorized charge. An authorized charge is a levy made on an individual at the time a service is provided, and as far as British Columbia is concerned this will amount to $1 per day for hospital care. In Alberta the authorized charge will be $1 per day for new-born infants and from $1.50 to $2 per day for others, depending on the size of the hospital. The other three provinces are not imposing such charges.

With regard to outpatient services, the Manitoba and Saskatchewan plans will make these available on an emergency basis. In addition, Saskatchewan will provide for the pathological examination of tissue. The agreements with Alberta and British Columbia do not contain provisions for outpatient services. British Columbia, however, will continue to supply an emergency service to outpatients and will levy a $2 authorized charge in this connection. As previously indicated, Newfoundland proposes to furnish a fairly wide range of out-patient services.

Hon. members will recall that four of the five provinces now entering into shared programs with the federal authority have been operating provincial hospital insurance plans of one kind or another for the past few years. It is hoped that the support now available through the contributions of the dominion government will enable them to extend and improve further the hospital and diagnostic services which are available to their residents under this program.

On behalf of the dominion government and officials of my department I should like to thank these provinces which tomorrow will join with the dominion government in initiating this nation-wide program of hospital insurance for the fine spirit of co-operation which they have shown in bringing these agreements to completion. To me the pattern of joint effort developed in this connection augurs well for the future of this major federal-provincial undertaking in the health field. I am sure hon. members will join with me in wishing these five provinces success in directing their plans to the benefit of all their people.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question. Will he tell me who signed the agreement on behalf of the province of Manitoba?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Hon. R. W. Bend.

R.C.M.P.—Drowning of Five Members

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

FURTHER STATEMENT ON DROWNING OF FIVE MEMBERS OF FORCE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on June 12 I made a statement to the house concerning the tragic accident on lake Simcoe on June 7 in which five members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police lost their lives. The statement appears at page 1064 of Hansard for that date.

Now that the inquest has been completed there are certain further observations I feel I should make to the house, particularly as there would seem to be some discrepancies between the facts contained in my previous statement and the evidence given at the inquest. That inquest was in form of an inquiry into the cause of the death of Corporal Smart, whose body was the only one recovered at that time, but it was in effect an inquiry into the cause and circumstances of this whole disaster.

In the first place I should like to read into the record the actual text of the finding of the coroner's jury:

> We, the jury, find that Corporal Herbert Smart met his death by accidental drowning on lake Simcoe, off Georgina island, on the night of June the 7th, due to rough sea caused by storm, failure of motor, causing boat to swamp.
> We, the jury, found by testimony and observation of test that boat on night in question was overloaded and also overcrowded, and at the same time, on our discussion, this plaque of Canadian Boating Federation Incorporated and Department of Transport is confusing of proper maximum weight.
> With further regard, on observation of test made on Black river with two experienced swimmers, that we find the Department of Transport standard life jacket and approved Department of Transport life cushions to be unsatisfactory in case of emergency. Therefore, we, the jury, strongly recommend that a life jacket type vest is the most serviceable.
> We, the jury, recommend that the plaque issued by the Canadian Boating Federation Incorporated, Department of Transport and boat manufacturers read that gross weight to include motor, passengers and all equipment and that greater consideration be given to calculation of gross weight.
> We, the jury, recommend that a compass be added to all boats operating at night.
> We, the jury, recommend that the book called "Safety Afloat" be made readily available to the boating public.
> We, the jury, strongly recommend that more common sense be used on the operation of boats with respect to all waters.

The information previously given to the house by me may now seem to have been inaccurate in respect to the load limit of the boat in question and the weight it was actually carrying on the night of the accident. If I seem to have misled the house in any degree this was done quite unintentionally, and resulted from misunderstanding or lack of information on three points, which I am now glad to clear up.

[Mr. Monteith (Perth).]

(a) The R.C.M.P. had interpreted the load limit of the boat as being 975 pounds exclusive of the power unit.

(b) The weight of the clothing and equipment worn by the men was estimated at 8 pounds per man, a figure usually taken for this purpose. It now seems that the total weight of personal clothing and equipment may have somewhat exceeded the 40 pounds calculated by the police—we cannot as yet be sure of the exact weight.

(c) A tarpaulin weighing 14 pounds 12 ounces, an anchor, and an anchor rope, are now understood to have been carried in the boat. At the time I gave my earlier statement, it was not known that the boat was carrying these items, and they were therefore not included in the police weight calculations, although they were in the figures produced at the inquest.

The police calculations upon which my statement was based were therefore as follows: Weight of men, 860 pounds, and I should say here that is the actual weight as established from the personal records and as produced at the inquest; weight of clothing and personal equipment was 40 pounds, making a total of 900 pounds, and leaving a 75-pound margin to cover other items of equipment in the boat exclusive of the power unit.

The weight of the other equipment at that time known to have been carried in the boat, exclusive of the power unit, totalled 52 pounds 12 ounces, and it was on that basis I said that the weight carried was within the 975 pounds maximum weight authorized.

It now turns out also that we underestimated somewhat in using the standard estimate of 8 pounds per man for clothing, etc., worn or carried on the person. Such items as one overcoat, revolvers, and handcuffs had been overlooked.

The previous police estimate on which my statement was based should therefore have been increased by the following weights as established at the inquest:

Extra allowance for clothing and personal equipment	15 lbs.
Anchor and rope	20 lbs.
Tarpaulin	14 lbs. 12 oz.
Total	49 lbs. 12 oz.

On this basis the total actually carried will be seen to have been somewhat over the presumed limit of 975 pounds.

If, however, we deduct the three items of equipment not previously known but now presumed to have been carried that night, namely tarpaulin, anchor and rope, the gross weight is again reduced to 967 pounds 12 ounces, or 7 pounds 4 ounces below the 975 pounds then understood to be the carrying capacity of the boat.

But the main cause of the discrepancy was, of course, the interpretation of the words used as to the maximum carrying capacity of the boat. The jury itself found that the wording on the plaque issued was confusing on this point, that is as to whether or not the 975 pounds load limit shown was inclusive or exclusive of the weight of the power unit. The R.C.M.P. had taken it that the weight of the power unit was not included in this figure and evidence to this effect was given by them at the inquest.

The wording on the plaque is as follows:

> This boat is built to safely accommodate under normal operating conditions a gross load of > MAXIMUM WEIGHT 975 LBS. > and an outboard motor of not more than > HORSEPOWER (Mfrs. Rating) 35 hp.

I must point out that the police wrote to the Peterborough Canoe Company, makers of the boat, as late as February 10, 1958, inquiring as to the issuance of a plate stating the number of persons the boat could safely carry and the horsepower rating of the motor which should be used. The company replied under date of February 11 and said that the Department of Transport and the Canadian Boating Federation were in fact working together with the manufacturers to arrange for maximum load and horsepower ratings for various boats. The company went on to state as follows:

> It is our understanding that the plaques are now in the possession of the Canadian Boating Federation and we hope to have our supply in the not too distant future and would be very pleased to supply you with the necessary plaques to attach to your boat but it would be necessary for us to have the serial numbers of the two boats in question, and if you could send these to us at your convenience we would, as soon as the plaques are received, make out two plaques for you and you could attach them to the boats.
> The Royal of 1956 is not the same boat as the Royal of 1957 or 1958 and it is more to the specifications of our 1958 Nomad. The Venus for 1957 and 1958 are identical and the rating on this particular boat is 975 pounds gross load capacity and 35 horsepower for the motor.

The boat in question in this accident is the Venus referred to in the above quotation. The plaques were in due course received and, on the basis of the phraseology used thereon as well as the correspondence to which I have referred, the R.C.M.P. concluded, and I think not unreasonably, that the 975-pound limit was exclusive of the power unit.

I have gone to some length in explaining these facts, as I should like the house to understand that the figures previously given were honestly computed both in the light of the facts as we had them then and of the best estimates we could make at that time.

Turning now to the finding of the jury that the boat was overloaded and also overcrowded, there are a number of points touching on this issue which I think might be borne in mind:

(a) When the boat left the mainland on its fatal trip the weather was clear, there was a light wind blowing and the water was only slightly choppy.

(b) There was no apparent reason for the boat to be more than five minutes run from land at any time.

(c) Corporal Smart, the non-commissioned officer in charge was an experienced, self-reliant N.C.O. and he had some time previously turned back from the same stretch of water when he faced what he thought was an unacceptable risk.

(d) Corporal Smart had eight men under his control on the night in question and he had a responsibility for using these men as circumstances seemed to dictate.

Earlier in the evening his party had made four arrests for drunkenness, and it was his plan and his duty to visit Georgina island and check on conditions there later that evening. Just what action he would take was to be dictated by circumstances and by such information as might come to him. It is a matter of record that aside from arrests for intoxication, four people in the area had been convicted for supplying liquor illegally between March 14 and June 2, 1958. I might add that these people were not Indians. This was the general situation that Corporal Smart and his men had to deal with and which took them to the southern lake Simcoe area on June 7.

I point out these factors not by way of objection to the jury's findings but to emphasize that there will always be times when a police officer may be faced with situations in which he must exercise his judgment as to what must be done to discharge his duty, even though that may mean the acceptance of personal risk over and above the normal. I emphasize again that Corporal Smart was experienced in these matters and was a competent and reliable N.C.O. with 11 years' service.

I should like to comment on two other matters which have been the subject of criticism in the press or elsewhere in this connection. The first is that headlines and editorials in certain newspapers create the impression that there was an untrained novice at the helm of the boat on the night in question. This is unfortunate, since in fact the evidence actually given establishes that Constable Farough was a well-trained, competent and experienced helmsman who had been in charge of this boat in these waters as far back as August and September of 1957. His training included the use of compass, map reading and how to tell direction by stars at night. Evidence was also given that this boat had carried five men on similar patrols on lake Simcoe in 1957 without mishap.

Second, it has been said that the boat in question was too small for a large body of water such as lake Simcoe. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police in carrying out their duties have to move their patrols from lake to lake and from river to river, covering hundreds of bodies of water in Ontario and indeed elsewhere. In order to meet this situation they have secured patrol boats which are light enough to move by trailer but at the same time sturdy enough to cover most of the stretches of water they need to patrol.

It is admitted, of course, that small boats have a limit when used on large water surfaces, but we also know that they can be operated safely along a shore line, in coves, bays and the like. It becomes a matter of judgment, therefore, keeping in mind the urgency of the duty, as to how far patrols may be extended on open water with the type of equipment we have. I repeat here that, when this patrol left, the water was only slightly choppy, and having regard to the speed of the boat it did not need, so far as we can see, to be more than five minutes from shore at any particular time.

While I have made these general comments, I wish to make it clear that the verdict of the coroner's jury is accepted and will be used to the fullest extent as a guide for the future. In particular I would emphasize the following points:

(a) The coroner's jury found that the phrasing used on the plaques fixing safe maximum load and power limits is confusing. My colleague the Minister of Transport informs me that steps are being taken to improve the wording on these plaques so as to remove any possibility of misunderstanding.

(b) The coroner's jury also found that the life jackets and cushions as used in this boat are unsatisfactory in case of emergency. These were standard items of equipment approved by the Department of Transport, and the Minister of Transport informs me that this question is being studied in the light of the jury's finding and the evidence given and tests made at the inquest.

(c) The commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has set up a board of officers to review the situation in the light of the evidence and verdict at the inquest, and to examine and report on what steps, if any, might be taken to reduce the risk that members of the force face in carrying out water patrols, and to ensure that safety rules consistent with the demands of police duties are always followed.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I think the house will welcome the statement by the minister, particularly in view of the fact that the findings of the coroner's jury were somewhat of a discrepancy with what the minister had announced earlier. I think, too, the house will join with me in deep regret that so many Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers should have lost their lives on this occasion. I believe this is the first time that so many of these valuable men have lost their lives on an occasion such as this.

It occurs to me that while the house will welcome the statement made by the minister, there is no doubt but that there has been a breach of the Department of Transport small boat regulations. I am wondering whether or not the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Transport will continue the investigation which I understand is being carried on under the Canada Shipping Act. I may have misunderstood the Minister of Transport when he answered a question in the house earlier but I was under the impression that an investigation, if not under the Canada Shipping Act then under some other authority in the department, was being proceeded with. The question which arises in my mind now is this. Notwithstanding the investigation which the superintendent of the R.C.M.P. is carrying on, will the Minister of Transport continue his own investigation, and what action will be taken in this case under the provisions of the small boats regulations?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since the report of the coroner's inquest was made available to us my department has been studying very carefully all the factors involved. As the Minister of Justice has said, we have taken careful note of what the jury found regarding the plaque and the life saving equipment, and I expect to make a statement regarding these factors tomorrow morning when my estimates are again under consideration by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Since the hon. member for Laurier is a member of that committee he will no doubt be present at that time.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group appreciate the full and very frank statement by the Minister of Justice with regard to this very sad accident, and extend their sympathy to the relatives of those who have lost their lives. I hope that as a result of this unfortunate accident the Department of Transport will commence some research into the production of a satisfactory life preserver for people in small boats. A good many of us have found from our own experience that the type of life preserver now in general use is totally unsuitable in cases of emergency, in view of the short time there is in which to put on these life preservers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN HOURS OF SITTING ON DOMINION DAY

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister) moved:

That on Tuesday, July 1 next, the house shall meet at 4.30 o'clock p.m., notwithstanding the provisions of standing order No. 2.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned this matter the other day in the house, and I should like to pursue it a little further today. As this holiday which we celebrate on Dominion day is our only truly national holiday, I think we should give more consideration to the Canadian people than we are doing by delaying our sittings until 4.30 o'clock.

I mention the fact that members of parliament have other commitments. I notice the Prime Minister is not in his seat. I also notice that statements have been made on the radio and on television that he is participating in activities connected with July 1 in other parts of the country. As a matter of fact, every hon. member has been given an opportunity to do that, and we have had to refrain. Not enough consideration has been given to establishing July 1 as a truly national holiday for all the people.

Another important matter is the staff of the House of Commons. Every other department in the city of Ottawa is receiving a holiday on July 1, but those who work in the House of Commons and the people connected with the operation of the house have to be here. I think it is only fair and just to extend this holiday to a full day for members of parliament so they can play their part in the program that has been designed for our national celebration, and that the staff be given a complete holiday on that day.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the sentiments expressed by my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming. Tomorrow is Canada's ninety-first birthday as a dominion, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow morning we hope there will be assembled in my riding 18,000 Burnaby citizens to pay tribute to the work of those who have gone before us in establishing this wonderful Dominion of Canada as one national entity.

On March 31 many of us believed that we would see a new era in Canada under which some new respect would be paid to Canadian institutions. I regret very much that the motion now before us does not signify any new era by way of respect and pride in our institutions.

Mr. Lennard: It certainly does.

Mr. Regier: The other day in the city of Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, we saw how the Conservative party celebrated its first birthday, signifying one year in office. Well, I have to agree that they had ample cause for rejoicing. I understand that they had quite a day at the Chateau Laurier. However, Mr. Speaker, the anniversary of our nation is much more important. I note that the Prime Minister was able to attend the Conservative victory; I also note with regret that our Prime Minister will not be able to attend our national birthday celebration in Ottawa tomorrow, which will take place on the lawns of parliament hill.

This Machiavellianism is to be very much regretted. We had a premier in our province of British Columbia who for several years thought it was rather smart not to be attending to the business of government for which he was elected, but to be in other places. He and his cabinet were usually found all over the province making political hay at the expense of public services in the province.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What has this to do with the motion?

Mr. Regier: I believe those people—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Regier: This has direct reference to the motion. The Prime Minister and the government are elected to perform the functions of government of the country, and we find that the Prime Minister is setting public representatives a very poor example indeed in that he chooses to be absent from Ottawa on Canada's national birthday.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that on reflection the hon. member would not consider that relevant to the motion, which has to do with the sittings of the house.

Mr. Murphy: He would not know the difference.

Mr. Regier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I consider it a piece of impertinence for the Prime Minister to arrange for us to be here and at the same time arrange for himself not to set the example.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Regier: He wants to go out celebrating, but he denies other hon. members of the House of Commons the opportunity to participate in similar situations all across this country.

Mr. McPhillips: Your big holiday is May 1.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this motion in support of my colleagues, who I think have taken a very sound and very loyal position on this question.

I do wish the strong, silent and stoical member for Wentworth would keep quiet.

Mr. Lennard: Not when you are up.

Mr. Herridge: I was taught in school nearly 60 years ago that we should respect our national holiday, and look upon it as an occasion for the celebration of the birth of this nation. During my somewhat brief and not at all glamorous army experience—and I am certain the Minister of National Defence will also realize this—during the first world war all training was suspended and everything possible was done to get the troops to celebrate our national birthday. The deputy prime minister will remember that in our youth we celebrated July 1 together some 44 years ago in a certain community. In the small communities that day was looked upon as a community day to be taken advantage of by all, and respect paid to our national holiday.

In addition I support everything the hon. members have said to that effect. Any hon. members who have the opportunity to visit their communities on that day want to be there. In addition, it is up to the house to set an example to the nation with respect to our national holiday. Finally, I think there is a very good argument to be made on behalf of the staff of this house, who are just as entitled to celebrate our national holiday as any others in Canada.

Mr. Fraser: Your leader is not present, and the leader of the Liberal party is not present.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be few. I notice that statement has received some applause from across the way.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member has a right to speak in the house.

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Howard: There seems to be quite an undertone of conversation among some hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will proceed, perhaps we can get along.

Mr. Howard: My remarks will be few. There is not much I would care to add to what my colleagues have said, except to say that it is our desire that the house should not meet on Dominion day, our national birthday.

Mr. Murphy: What has the house been doing for the last 20 years?

Mr. Howard: Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I move an amendment to this motion, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), as follows:

That all the words after "That" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"the next sitting of the house shall be on Wednesday, July 2 next, at 2.30 o'clock p.m., notwithstanding the provisions of standing order No. 2."

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Chevrier: Does the hon. member for Vancouver East wish to say something?

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, all I wish to do is just to make one statement as the seconder of the motion. I have noted in the press in recent weeks a matter to which all of us should pay attention, and which should be called to the attention of the house. I refer to the expression of regret that we still have not built up in Canada an understanding that, irrespective of the land in which we were born, we are all Canadians. I feel that one of the strongest ways to drive that point home is to have Canada's national holiday accepted throughout the whole country.

To me and to our group it seems wrong that the one place that should give a demonstration of the meaning of the day is the one place where work will still carry on. I know the arguments that can be made. It is said that it is a good day for us to do our work; but by meeting at 4.30 tomorrow and sitting until 10 o'clock we will not expedite the work of the House of Commons a great deal. As seconder of the amendment I believe that one of the greatest indications we can give to all the people of Canada as to what our national holiday means is for the House of Commons not to sit on that day.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, while I find myself in agreement with some of the things that have been said by our friends to your immediate left, on the other hand I think perhaps the best way to give evidence of the fact that we take our position as parliamentarians seriously is to sit on July 1 and also to adjourn, as has been suggested in the motion, in order to take part in the ceremonies that are to take place on parliament hill. Furthermore, I think it was made quite clear from this side of the house, by myself at least, to the leader of the house that we would consent to this motion because of the reasons which have been given.

There is also the question of those members of the house whose homes are in distant parts of the country, whose constituencies are far away. I am sure all of them will benefit not only from the fact that the house will sit for the greater part of the day but also from the fact that they could view part of the ceremonies that will take place tomorrow.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is with some regret that I rise to speak to the amendment, because I think it is most unfortunate that a group of members in the house should seek to make political capital out of a question of this kind. They may say they have not done that, but the words they stress indicate that we are not showing respect for Canadian institutions and that we are not showing loyalty. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam went so far as to make a personal attack on the Prime Minister of this country—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Green: —an attack which was entirely without justification, but which shows only too clearly the motive and intent of these hon. members in bringing forward an amendment of this kind on this occasion.

I would point out to them that one of these days they will learn that members of the House of Commons, no matter to what party they may belong, have an equal respect for Canadian institutions and an equal sense of loyalty. When a handful of members have the audacity to put themselves above all the remaining members of the House of Commons in this regard they are doing something which is utterly foolish—

Mr. Howard: You are talking nonsense.

Mr. Green: —and which is hitting below the belt. What are the facts? This house has sat before on July 1.

An hon. Member: On many occasions.

Mr. Green: The men who were leading the C.C.F. party in those days never stooped to raise objections of the kind that have been raised today. They were not that type of public men. I go back, for example, to 1956. In that year the holiday fell on July 2. Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who was acting as prime minister, referred to the day as Canada's anniversary and suggested that the house should sing "O Canada" and "God Save the Queen". This was done. No time was lost, and the house sat for the normal length of sitting.

In 1955 Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent did much the same thing. He made a brief and very fitting speech and then suggested that the members should sing "O Canada" and "God Save the Queen". The length of the sitting was not abbreviated in any way. In 1952 the house sat on July 1, and Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent did the same thing on that occasion although there was provision made in 1952 that there should be an intermission from four o'clock until eight o'clock rather than the ordinary intermission from six to eight.

These are only three examples of the house having sat on July 1. There are various others. I located one this morning, and the former leader of the C.C.F., Mr. Coldwell, spoke on that occasion. After all, we are here from all over Canada. The hon. members who have spoken know very well that they could not go back to British Columbia for a one-day celebration; and when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggests that it would be very nice if he could be back in his riding he is just talking a lot of nonsense, because he would not be going back in any event. This is just a red herring drawn across the trail. The hon. member for Kootenay West is in exactly the same position. He would not be going back to Kootenay West tomorrow. He would be sitting here on his hands doing nothing at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: We would be going back if the minister had kept his promise about air travel.

Mr. Herridge: Would the Acting Prime Minister permit a question?

Mr. Green: As a matter of fact, the government has gone much further this year than has been the case certainly since 1935. There have been no celebrations of July 1 on parliament hill in that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the minister is mistaken.

Mr. McIlraith: Quite mistaken.

Mr. Green: I may be wrong about that, but it is not necessary to go further to make my point. I do point out that the government has arranged that there will be a ceremony on parliament hill tomorrow, certainly for the first time in many years. There will be a trooping of the colour, to which all hon. members have been invited.

Some attempt is being made to focus attention on the great importance of Canada's national day. That is the reason we ask that the house should not sit until 4.30 rather than commencing at 2.30, in order that members can take their full part in this celebration. It really is amazing now to find ourselves attacked for taking this step. I merely point out to the members of the house that this move by the C.C.F. is just a cheap, political trick—

Mr. Winch: How dirty can you get?

Mr. Green:—and I suggest it be dealt with accordingly.

Mr. Herridge: Will the Acting Prime Minister permit a question? Would he tell the house what the policy was in connection with such a situation as this of the Conservative administrations under Mr. Borden and Mr. Bennett?

Mr. Green: I do not know what happened in those days. I am trying to live in the present.

Mr. McIlraith: Will the minister permit a question? It is simply this, and it is only asked for the purpose of clarifying the record. Does he recall the trooping of the colour on Dominion day under the previous administration?

Mr. Green: Really I am not sure whether or not that happened while the house was in session.

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived on division.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the main motion?

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

RESOURCE ROADS PROGRAM, ONT.

Motion No. 15—Mr. Benidickson:

For a copy of all correspondence since September 1, 1957, between the federal government and the province of Ontario respecting cost sharing of a roads to resources program.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I shall have to oppose the passing of this motion at this time. This matter is under negotiation between—

Mr. Speaker: The motion is not debatable. It can, under standing orders, be removed to the category of notices of motions and be debatable at that time. I do not think the minister should do more than say he is opposed to it.

Mr. Benidickson: I will consent to having it stand.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That will be satisfactory to me.

Motion stands.

[Mr. Green.]

TERRA NOVA NATIONAL PARK, NFLD.—EMPLOYMENT

Motion No. 19—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or any official of his department from any member or official of the government of Newfoundland with respect to employment in the Terra Nova national park since June 21, 1958, and any replies thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): With the usual reservations.

Mr. Speaker: With the usual reservations.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF CANADIANS SEIZED BY REBELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or in his absence to the acting minister who may take the question as notice. Would the minister care to tell the house what action the government is taking to gain the release of the three Canadians reported to have been seized by the Cuban rebels?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): The government is very much concerned about this event in Cuba. Our ambassador in Havana, Mr. Allard, has confirmed press reports that the three Canadians, Harold Gisli Kristjanson of Winnipegosis, Manitoba, and Edward Cannon of Cornwall, employees of the Freeport Sulphur Company of New York, and Richard A. Sargent of Toronto, manager of a sugar mill, are being held by the rebels in company with a number of United States citizens and United States servicemen.

Mr. Allard has expressed the deep concern of the Canadian government to the Cuban government concerning the kidnapping of Canadian citizens, and has requested the co-operation of Cuban authorities in obtaining their release. Mr. Allard has been assured by the United States authorities in Cuba that their efforts to obtain the release of the United States citizens held by the rebels cover the Canadian captives as well. It would not be in the interests of the Canadian captives to reveal all the methods being used to effect their release. Officials of the Freeport Sulphur Company have been attempting to make direct contact with the rebels, but no information on the success of their efforts has been made available.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXPIRATION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS—INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION FOR UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that unemployment insurance seasonal benefits ended on Saturday, June 28, will he inform the house what provision the government is making to take care of those who are still unemployed and who have lost entitlement to unemployment insurance?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I really think this question was dealt with a few days ago by the Prime Minister. It is not the intention to extend these seasonal benefits any further.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Acting Minister of Labour a supplementary question. Could the hon. lady tell us how many persons were receiving seasonal benefits at the time they expired?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Since that was only two days ago, I do not have those figures at the moment. I shall be glad to procure them for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question. I am afraid the Acting Prime Minister did not understand my question. I knew the seasonal benefits were not going to be extended. In view of the fact that they have expired, what provision is going to be made for the unemployed who are no longer covered by unemployment insurance but who are still unemployed?

Mr. Green: The reply to that question, I am afraid, would require a debate. The hon. member knows, just as well as other hon. members do, that this government has already taken very many steps to help create employment in Canada. I give him the one example of the housing policy, which has put perhaps over 100,000 Canadians to work. We are just as anxious as he is to help Canadians to get employment.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, but the Acting Prime Minister has not answered my question. We are not discussing what he has done about employment. The question is, in view of the fact that seasonal benefits have expired, is any provision being made for those who are still unemployed and no longer eligible for unemployment insurance?

Mr. Green: They, of course, benefit under the general policy adopted by the government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

SEVERANCE AND RETIREMENT ARRANGEMENTS FOR OFFICERS OF FLEET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I have given him notice. In view of the statement made in this house, I believe by himself and, if not, certainly well known, that the Canadian National Steamships vessels are up for sale, would the minister care to tell the house what severance and retirement pay arrangements will be made for the officers of the ships, and in particular those with long service?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. I am advised by the management of the Canadian National that the situation concerning the disposition of the officer personnel has been the subject of considerable investigation and is under careful examination at this moment. As a matter of fact a group of company officials already has been in Halifax to conduct interviews on an individual basis, and is returning to Halifax later this week to continue detailed discussions on other employment opportunities.

SHIPPING

C.G.S. "LABRADOR"—COMMENCEMENT OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the refit of the C.G.S. Labrador completed? If so, when will this vessel go into service, in what work and when is it proposed that it is to return to Halifax?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The Labrador has successfully completed harbour trials and is now preparing to carry out sea trials. The ship will proceed to Montreal in order to take cargo for the R.C.M.P. post at Alexander fiord on Bache peninsula, and is expected to leave Montreal on July 10. After the Bache peninsula work has been completed the Labrador will go to Resolute to assist with the work being carried out there, and then will proceed to assist in the D.E.W. line resupply in Foxe basin. The Labrador will return to Halifax after the northern operations have been completed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

STATEMENT ON LAY-OFFS FOLLOWING FLOODING OF CANALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I say that on Friday last the hon. member for Laurier referred to the inundation of the Ontario-St. Lawrence canals on and after July 1, and inquired how many employees would be affected and what is being done to place them elsewhere.

The exact number of operating employees who will be displaced is not known, because definite information is not yet available as to how many will accept transfer to other canal positions, but the number may be in the neighbourhood of 115. With regard to action taken to meet the problem of lay-off of employees, I would refer the hon. member to the answer I made on May 30 to a question he had placed on the order paper, the last part of which dealt with this matter at some length.

TRADE

COMMUNIST CHINA—REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF ROYAL BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, notice of which I sent to the Prime Minister's office this morning. Has the Acting Prime Minister's attention been drawn to a report on his visit to China made by Mr. James Muir, chairman and president of the Royal Bank of Canada, in which he says in part:

> "It was galling to meet (in China) and to talk with the selling forces of other western powers, not only obviously getting business but enthusiastic about it, while our people seem to sit back and wait for a silver platter deal".... The Canadian government should see to it that "if any Canadian enterprise should be induced by outside influence to deviate from its responsibility to the Canadian worker and the Canadian economy by declining legitimate and clean business, drastic and immediate steps should be taken to discipline it."

In view of the need for a great increase in exports to provide employment—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Herridge:—will the Acting Prime Minister inform the house if consideration is being given to action along the lines suggested in Mr. Muir's report, in order to secure for Canada a fair share of this great potential market?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with great deference may I suggest that this is an abuse of the rules of the house. This is not a question. This is a reading into the record of the report of a speech made by Mr. Muir. I suggest that it is not proper for that reason, and that it does not need to be answered.

Mr. Winch: What has come over the minister this last little while?

Mr. Speaker: It is clear what the rule is, but it is not always easy to apply it, at least not from the chair. Only enough fact can be given to lay the groundwork for the question. As I understood what the hon. member read, he first read something about trade with China and then something about an entirely unrelated matter. It seemed to me that it was a rather long basis for a question. I daresay that the question itself, as it was finally put, is one that can be asked.

Mr. Winch: The Acting Prime Minister does not want to answer it.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a similar question, of which I have given notice to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and which I should like to put to him. The question is this. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the statements of Mr. James Muir, president of the Royal Bank of Canada, which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of June 28, 1958, to the effect that Canada is not taking advantage of the opportunities for good and legitimate trade with China—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I think that is a repetition of the question which the hon. member for Kootenay West has already asked, in effect.

Mr. Howard: I was trying to elicit an answer from somebody over there on the government side.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he cannot insist upon an answer.

FISHERIES

MIRAMICHI, N.B.—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING CHANGE IN SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. I regret that I did not have an opportunity to advise him of it. Probably he will take the question as notice. Did the minister or his departmental officials receive representations from the Miramichi salmon drifters' association seeking a change in the season's dates, to eliminate the two weeks' lift period?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I do not at the moment have the answer to that question, but I shall be glad to take it as notice and answer it later.

DRUGS

APIOL—STATEMENT ON SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF OPEN SALE

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in my absence on Friday last the hon. member for Kootenay West asked me the following question:

> Has the minister's attention been drawn to a news item in the Gazette of June 17 entitled "Doctors Claim Poison Sold Across Counter", and the report of the committee on maternal welfare, presented to the annual meeting of the Canadian Medical Association, which comments on the irregular sale of drugs and consequent poisoning by preparations containing oils of apiol? Can the minister inform the house why the sale of this drug across the counter has not been prohibited under the Food and Drugs Act?

In answer I would inform the hon. member that the newspaper article which he mentioned had previously been drawn to my attention, and I have had a preliminary investigation made of the matter by officials of my department. We have in fact no record that oil of apiol is sold as such in Canada. We do know, however, that there are two preparations on the market in which oil of apiol is combined with ergot. Sale of these preparations is prohibited under the Food and Drugs Act except on a prescription basis. I have instructed the food and drug directorate to look further into the matter of the alleged illegal sales of such preparations.

Mr. Herridge: I want to compliment the minister for his knowledge of the rules and thank him for his courtesy in answering my question.

PIPE LINES

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF JURISDICTIONAL AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of concern expressed by two provinces over alleged encroachment by the federal government in the control of pipe lines contained within provincial boundaries, would the government consider referring this question to the Supreme Court of Canada for a definition of jurisdictional authority?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question, which deals with the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners in connection with the regulation and construction of pipe lines. The question which he put will be given serious consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED BOMB EXPLOSIONS IN KELOWNA AND VERNON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the house whether or not any additional and special assistance will be given to the law enforcement officers of British Columbia in view of the recent reports of bomb explosions in a hotel in Kelowna, on an Okanagan ferry, and in the city of Vernon, a most serious situation? We would appreciate a statement from the minister.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): As the hon. member knows, some three weeks ago I went out to Victoria and met with the premier and other provincial ministers and officials to discuss the Doukhobor situation. I was accompanied by the deputy minister of justice and by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Certain proposals were put forward by the provincial government at that time, which I reported to my colleagues here. About a week ago we wrote to the premier of British Columbia advising him of the position of this government with regard to the requests that were made. We have not received a reply, or any indication of the attitude of the provincial government in response to our letter.

I say that by way of background to the present question.

In so far as these latest incidents are concerned I have had reports of them, but whether or not they are related to the outbursts of violence in the Kootenay area by the Doukhobors, and particularly by the sons of freedom sect, has not been definitely established according to my present information. However, I must say there is a strong presumption that they are. We have had no further requests as a result of these last three incidents. Therefore there is nothing before us to reply to in so far as the incidents are concerned. However, we remain ready to examine immediately and sympathetically any request we may at any time receive from the province for assistance in this matter.

CANADIAN PACIFIC STEAMSHIPS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that this is the last day of June, and that industrial inquiry commissioner Mr. Taylor has set tomorrow, July 1, as the deadline date for settlement of the strike on Canadian Pacific Steamships, can the minister advise the house what expectations there are for settling this strike by tomorrow?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are all, of course, deeply concerned over the strike not only because of the disruption of service and its effect upon the company and employees alike, but also because of its effect on the residents of the island. Although I saw the press report in which it was said that the commissioner had set July 1 as the deadline, I have no official word to that effect from the commissioner. I do know he has been working very hard in this matter. I know because I myself have been in constant touch with him over the week end. Unfortunately, however, up to the present I have no definite report to make. I know the commissioner himself still hopes that he will be able to effect a settlement between the disputing parties, as I do also.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER WORKS, LACHINE SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I made a motion for the production of papers in the first few days of the session. It was passed, and I brought it to the attention of the Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche), who told me I would get the return. I have not received it yet, and I am most anxious to use it. I wonder if I might take this opportunity of drawing it to his attention once again.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Secretary of State I shall be glad to bring it to the minister's attention.

ELECTRIC POWER, NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Acting Secretary of State would ask the Prime Minister when there will be a production of the correspondence about which I asked the Prime Minister on Thursday, and which I was very anxious to have for use today?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): I would be very glad to look into it, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Howard.]

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

COAL—ALLEGED CHANGE IN GOVERNMENTAL POLICY

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the motion of the Minister of Finance that the house go into committee of supply, I want first to take notice of the announcement made before the adjournment of the house at six o'clock on Friday last by the Prime Minister. It is true that the federal government and the government of the province of Nova Scotia have moved in with financial help to ease further contemplated lay-offs affecting about 9,000 coal miners, but unfortunately the assistance for the Dominion Coal Company does nothing to avert the 25-day mine shutdowns in Nova Scotia. It will do very little to provide additional outlets for the record coal stockpiles accumulated in the face of declining demand, stockpiles which are increasing daily since the present government took office. In fact it was clearly stated—and I want to quote the Prime Minister's own words as reported at page 1737 of Hansard of Friday, June 27, 1958:

> Even in the face of those reductions in working days, the company has estimated, and that estimate has been confirmed by the dominion coal board, that by the end of the year 1958 there would be in stockpile 750,000 tons of coal in excess of the normal average carryover.

It is evident, therefore, that despite the action taken by the government there will be at the end of the present year a stockpile which will reach close to 1,400,000 tons, which will be practically equal to the carryover which the company has on hand today.

In view of the vast expansion and growth which has taken place the federal government decided in 1955 to appoint a royal commission to study Canada's economic potential in order that the Canadian people could be more fully informed of the long-term economic prospects of our country. The commission was appointed to study our productive capacity, the growth and distribution of our population, the production and nature of our industrial and social capital.

This commission, having as its chairman Mr. Walter Gordon, was known as the Gordon commission. In its preliminary report made public in December of 1956 a special paragraph was devoted to the problems and difficulties in the four Atlantic provinces. In this preliminary report it was generally recognized and made clear by the commission that there is no single or simple solution to the problems of the Atlantic region. Besides transportation and communications, special attention was given to the situation of the Nova Scotia coal industry. This question received special attention, not only because of its importance to the economy of one of the Atlantic provinces, but also because of the great number of people who are dependent, either directly or indirectly, upon the industry for their livelihood. After all, it is perfectly obvious that in Nova Scotia alone a population of over 120,000 people, including 8,000 or 9,000 coal miners, would be affected. In New Brunswick it also affects the Minto area in York-Sunbury, where over 1,000 miners reside.

In addition, the 1946 royal commission on coal known as the Carroll commission had been assigned a complete and extensive study of this industry, including its mechanization, its productivity and management-labour relations. It recommended proper action by the federal government in order to improve, if possible, at all levels the operation of the industry including relations between management and the miners employed.

It is generally recognized that one of the main factors affecting this industry in earlier years, and in fact a problem which is also in existence today, is the competition from United States coal in consuming centres in the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Previous governments accepted the idea of a subvention policy to ensure the survival of the coal industry. This subsidy on the transportation of coal was followed by the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act, providing long-term loans to the coal companies for the modernization and mechanization of their plants.

In the past number of years it has been apparent that certain factors such as deteriorating market conditions caused by competition from other fuels were having unfavourable effects on the coal industry. It was then considered advisable to discontinue, for the time being at least, the mechanization program which had resulted in increasing the productivity in 1955 to a rate 47 per cent above the levels which had prevailed in 1945, output per man day of 2.33 tons as against 1.58 tons ten years earlier. This output per man day could increase to 3.79 tons by 1960, thus bringing our total production close to 7 million tons per year, with a present yearly market potential of 5 million to 5½ million tons.

It was generally recognized that the main market for Atlantic coal must remain in the maritime provinces and that every effort should be made to retain and increase it, even to the point where this would necessitate the granting of assistance against oil where required. Mention was also made of the potential export market for at least 2 million tons a year to Europe, provided prices and quality could be agreed upon.

While the most logical market for Nova Scotia coal would seem to be the Atlantic region, as I have said, it is only logical that emphasis on present subsidy arrangements should be modified in order to give specific advantage to the greatest possible use of coal in the Atlantic region. It was clearly indicated in the Gordon commission recommendations that such subsidy arrangements should be designed to encourage the use of Nova Scotia coal in the generation of thermal power in the Atlantic region.

In the presentation of his budget on March 14, 1957, the minister of finance, Mr. Harris, clearly indicated that it was the government's intention to launch an immediate review of the maritime transportation system in general, and thereafter put forward proposals as soon as feasible. There then followed definite proposals on another matter affecting the Atlantic region, that is the relatively high cost of electric power as compared with most of the other parts of Canada. The government initiated the notion of the interconnection of the Nova Scotia-New Brunswick electrical systems. The minister of finance announced that the federal government would be prepared to provide the main interconnection facilities within and between those provinces, and to build and operate such large thermal plants as might be needed either to replace existing ones, should efficiency so indicate, or to meet the requirements of growth and industrial development.

These were the terms of the general proposal made by the previous government through its minister of finance on March 14, 1957. This proposal opened the way for immediate negotiations between the federal government and the provinces concerned for the implementation of this offer. This program for thermal power plants in the maritimes was initiated for the dual purpose of providing additional power at lower cost and, at the same time, assuring a much needed outlet for maritime coal.

During the political campaign before the June election of 1957, the guarantee of the use of coal in these proposed thermal plants became a common issue in the Atlantic provinces. I want to emphasize, however, that the then minister of public works, Hon. Robert Winters, stated several times in the course of that campaign that a subvention would be paid on coal for use in the power plants if such was necessary to make coal competitive with oil. Such statements from a member of the federal cabinet on the policy to be followed by a Liberal administration might eventually have been proven to be more valuable to the coal industry than the attitude presently being adopted by the present administration.

As I have just said, when the new federal government power development's plan for the maritime provinces was first announced last fall, it was definitely emphasized that the project was being undertaken to provide both low cost electricity to industry and new markets for the ailing coal industry. For this very reason this program involved the payment of subventions on coal used for power production at the newly constructed and at the existing generating stations. It was then said that such a policy would ensure that coal produced in the maritime provinces would be used for the growing power demand of those two provinces, and would not be replaced by oil brought in from foreign fields. On page 52 of Hansard for October 16, 1957, the Prime Minister said:

> As an integral part of the power development of the maritime provinces and also out of consideration for the situation prevalent in the coal producing areas of the maritimes, we believe the time has come to inaugurate a system of freight subventions for the removal of coal for power purposes within that area. That will serve two purposes: first, it will provide a steadily increasing demand for maritime coal and also do much to stabilize the coal industry, reduce the cost of power and in consequence render the climate clement for expanded industrialization and the raising of economic standards in the maritime provinces. That is of the essence, and that is also of the essence of this policy of national development.

Again, when suggestions were made by political opponents and officials of the united mine workers during the last federal election campaign that oil would be used in at least the proposed Saint John plant, the federal ministers and the government's candidates were quick with their denials. Speaker after speaker gave the reassurance that coal and coal alone would be used.

On Monday, May 19, I directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question asking whether power agreements under section 3 of Bill No. 244, an act to provide assistance in respect of electrical power development in the Atlantic provinces, had been signed with the governments of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. When the minister answered my question on Wednesday, May 21, I directed a supplementary question, as follows. The exchange will be found recorded on page 313 of Hansard of that date:

> Mr. Robichaud: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister now inform the house whether such agreements insisted that coal be used to generate power instead of oil?
> Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): To my knowledge there is no such term insisting that coal be used. In fact, in one part of the working out of this agreement I understand it is fully understood between the two governments that on certain occasions oil will be used in one of the plants.

Now that the federal election campaign is a matter of the past we are informed by a representative of the federal cabinet that the policy which had been placed before the public during the political campaign was altogether different from the one presently adopted by the government. In other words, the promises of yesterday are today a thing of the past.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Would the hon. member permit a question? I should like to ask him if it is not true that during the proceedings of this house both here and in the committee it has been made very clear that since the reserves of coal have risen in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, we have made it very clear as a government that we have asked that coal be used in the Saint John East plant.

Mr. Robichaud: My only answer to the minister's remarks is the reply which I received and which is in the record of this house under the date of Wednesday, May 21, and which I read as follows:

> To my knowledge there is no such term insisting that coal be used. In fact in one part of the working out of this agreement I understand it is fully understood between the two governments that on certain occasions oil will be used in one of the plants.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, because I believe a misstatement of fact has been made by the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member who has the floor is willing to yield and offers no objection, it is all right; otherwise it can be deferred until he has finished his address.

Mr. Robichaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Again I want to repeat that during the last election campaign Conservative speakers were most definite in assuring the electors of the Atlantic provinces that the thermal power units to be built with the assistance of federal money in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would use maritime coal. No more definite comments were made than those of the Minister of Transport when, speaking in New Glasgow on March 28 he said, and I quote from the Halifax Chronicle Herald of March 29:

> Thermal power stations to be built in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will definitely be fired "by coal from the mines of Springhill, Pictou county, and Cape Breton."

I have here a series of other statements made by different members of the present cabinet during the last election campaign, including an extract from a speech made by Dr. Sidney E. Smith, Secretary of State for External Affairs, on March 1 at Port Hood, Inverness, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of Monday, March 3, 1958:

Dr. Smith answered charges he said he had heard made by Liberal speakers that the government has given no assurance proposed maritime thermal plants will be fired by coal by "offering my assurance that it is a condition of the agreement that coal will be used."

And from the speech made by the Minister of Labour on March 18 at Glace Bay, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of Wednesday, March 19, 1958:

Michael Starr, federal labour minister, said Tuesday night the thermal power agreement between the federal government and the maritime provinces was contingent on the use of coal.

I have also, Mr. Speaker, excerpts from the debates of the house of assembly of the province of Nova Scotia for March 4, 1958, pages 1131, 1132 and 1133, on which the following discussion took place:

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the premier. I should like to know whether any agreement has been entered into between the province and the government of Canada under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act?

The Premier: I think the answer to that is "yes," Mr. Speaker. I was inquiring about that before the house opened, and they say that the provincial secretary has executed such an agreement on behalf of the province. I believe the agreement is complete and when I am satisfied that it is, I will table it promptly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question directed to the premier; is there any provision in the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act which requires that coal be used as the fuel in the operation of power projects built with federal funds provided under that act?

The Premier: Mr. Speaker, I am now speaking from memory. I am not sure there is such an express provision. I may say that it is contemplated that each thermal power station would be the matter of a specific agreement between the province concerned and the government of Canada.

In other words, there is the master agreement, and the master agreement makes provision for a specific agreement regarding specific projects and I have been instructed by the Prime Minister that the burning of coal is a necessary condition of federal assistance in any such program.

Mr. Cowan: I have another question, Mr. Speaker, directed to the premier. I wonder if the premier could confirm or deny the rumour that the proposed thermal power plant to be built in Saint John, New Brunswick, is to burn oil and not coal?

The Premier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have just told my hon. friend through you, sir, that the instructions that I have received from the Prime Minister are just the burning of maritime coal is to be a condition precedent to federal assistance under the agreement.

Mr. Hicks: Including the Saint John one?

The Premier: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how—what my hon. friend wants. I said that I had been instructed by the Prime Minister that the burning of coal is a condition precedent to federal assistance in the construction of any thermal power station under this agreement.

Mr. Fielding: Under the master agreement?

The Premier: Under the master agreement.

I hold in my hand the master agreement, tabled on Monday, June 15, 1958, as sessional paper No. 110, and I have failed to find in this agreement where coal is a condition precedent to federal assistance in the construction of any thermal power station to be built under such agreement.

Let us hear what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) had to say in an interview with the press, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of June 13:

At the present time, Nova Scotia has a surplus coal supply but to meet the needs of a tremendously expanded steel industry in the future, it might possibly be considered a deficit area.

Farther on he said:

For the present, we have asked the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to use coal in thermal power plants as long as there are stockpiles.

Listen to this:

But those plants should be geared to switch to other thermal fuel, perhaps even to nuclear power, if the coal stocks ever prove insufficient to keep them going.

This is the same minister who, as I have just mentioned, in answering my question in the House of Commons a few days earlier, stated that:

In working out an agreement with one of the provinces, it was fully understood between the two governments that on certain occasions oil will be used in one of the plants.

What did the Prime Minister have to say on the matter of thermal stations in the maritimes? The Halifax Chronicle Herald of March 25, 1958, reports as follows:

On the matter of thermal power stations in the maritimes, Mr. Diefenbaker said he wished to "underline...that we are asking, we are demanding that coal be utilized." He was answering Liberal statements that there was no assurance that coal would be used.

As I stated earlier, the main power agreements have been signed with New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and they were tabled by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on June 16. Nothing in these agreements specified or insists that coal should be used to generate power in thermal plants built under this act.

These documents show an estimate of $537,000 for 1957-58 and $2,750,000 for 1958-59 to be spent on the east Saint John thermal plant in New Brunswick. The minister must tell the house why no payments have been made from the 1957-58 item, and also why on the last day of June, 1958 no specific agreement has been signed with the province of New Brunswick for the erection of this particular plant. Where is that emergency and urgent need for additional power which was so urgent before the June 10 election of 1957, and more so before the election of March 31? The Prime Minister knows of this emergency, as was so clearly expressed by the premier of New Brunswick in comments addressed to him on October 11, 1957. I wish here to quote just the last paragraph of those comments:

> The whole matter is one of great urgency in view of the fact that a letter of intent has been issued by the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission covering the turbo-generator on the assumption that this would be taken over by the Northern Canada Power Commission, which has been discussed at a series of inter-governmental meetings.

The present situation of our coal industry we know is serious and disturbing. The coal mining problems have been laid squarely at the feet of the federal government, and the piecemeal solution offered by the Prime Minister and the government on Friday last will do nothing else but take care for the time being only of an emergency situation. As I said earlier, this move by the government has not prevented the layoffs now taking place in the coal mines of Cape Breton and New Brunswick.

When I brought this matter to the attention of the house six weeks ago, on Friday, May 16, the representative of the province of Nova Scotia in the federal cabinet, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), clearly stated, and I quote his own words, that he had no knowledge that A. V. Roe was contemplating suspending operations for a period of 25 days or for any other period.

Knowing that such suspension of operations was contemplated, I directed a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, and I received the following reply, as reported at page 139 of Hansard for Friday, May 16: I asked the minister the following question:

> Is the dominion coal board taking any steps to assist in the disposal of coal now being stockpiled in the Cape Breton area?
> Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not up to the moment on that matter but I know consideration is being given by the dominion coal board at the present time to disposal of the surplus of coal that is available under the circumstances referred to by the hon. gentleman.

How different, Mr. Speaker, is this reply of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) from the answer given by the Minister of National Revenue. Finally, only after the contemplated lay-off of miners had become an accomplished fact, on Friday, June 20, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) directed a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) and we were then at last told that the matter was receiving the attention of the government. I should like to quote here the question put by the hon. member and the reply of the minister as reported on page 1460 of Hansard for Friday, June 20. The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria said:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I understand that the Dominion Steel and Coal Company has announced a five-week shutdown of its coal mines in Cape Breton and on the mainland of Nova Scotia due to lack of markets. In view of the hardship this step will cause to the 8,000 or 9,000 miners involved, can the minister assure the house that he and the dominion coal board will render every assistance towards reaching a solution to this very serious situation.

The minister answered as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. This situation has been under study by the government and the dominion coal board for several weeks and is under continuous study and consultation with the company, but due to many factors we are not too hopeful that we can prevent the idle time which has been planned by the company.

The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria clearly stated that this lay-off would cause hardship to the 8,000 or 9,000 miners involved and pleaded with the minister so that the dominion coal board would render every assistance toward reaching a solution to this very serious situation.

Again, Mr. Speaker, on June 23 I asked the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys if he could confirm a Canadian Press report to the effect that the A. V. Roe Company was contemplating a lay-off of 47 days instead of 25 days as originally intended. I further asked what the company was asking by way of financial aid. This was the reply I received, and I quote the minister's own words as found on page 1508 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, the answer is no; we have not made any proposal on that.

It is rather difficult for members of the house to reconcile the minister's reply with his own statement of Friday, June 20, when I asked the same minister the following question as found on page 1460 of Hansard:

> A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise the house if any definite action has been taken by the government on the request of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company for financial assistance?

The minister replied:

> I am afraid I cannot give a definite answer to that question today, but I am most hopeful of making a statement in this regard within a short time.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the matter was under consideration. The house expects the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to explain today before the closing of the present debate his negative answer to a problem which, according to the Prime Minister and according to his own statement made three days earlier, was under consideration by the government and by the dominion coal board. The minister must also explain the statement he made a few weeks ago to the effect that the stockpile of coal in the Nova Scotia coal mines was sold and waiting for transportation to destination points.

How can the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) justify and explain his statement made during the last political campaign at a public meeting at Wallace, Nova Scotia, and reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of March 22, 1958? I quote a part of the report:

He referred to the thermal power plan which he said would result in the establishment in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick of ten thermal power plants by 1967. These plants, he said, would use coal, backbone of Nova Scotia's economy, which would result in the production of power in these provinces as cheap as in other parts of Canada.

Now that the election is over, and now that the members of the government and their supporters are comfortably sitting to your right with the overflow to our left, the pre-election promises seem to be a thing of the past. No wonder that we hear so much of the vision of the Prime Minister, of the philosophic dreams of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, of the big bamboozle of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), of the blue tinted red budget and of the momentous monument of double talk of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and nothing about new industries for the Atlantic provinces. On the contrary, industries are closing down or are moving out to establish in the central provinces. Our New Brunswick base metal mines have ceased operating and the Nova Scotia coal mines are curtailing their production. How different, Mr. Speaker, are the present conditions from the policy advocated by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) during the last election campaign. I have here an excerpt from the Fredericton Gleaner of March 29, 1958 which is headed, "In N.B. Power Stations; Says Diefenbaker Promised Minto Coal Will Be Used", and reads as follows:

Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker already has given assurance that under his government's thermal power plant assistance policy to the maritimes Minto coal will be used in New Brunswick power stations, J. Chester MacRae told a Progressive Conservative meeting at Minto Friday night.

With a thousand miners of the Minto area without work, with mines already closed down, the situation has certainly changed. The Dominion Steel and Coal Company is planning to build near Montreal a steel fabricating plant at an initial cost of $20 million, which could eventually develop into a $200 million project. Why should this plant not be built in the Atlantic provinces, in the heart of the coal empire? What action, if any, is being taken by the present government to encourage such new enterprises to settle where they are most needed?

The temporary measure taken by the government on Friday will not satisfy the 8,000 or 9,000 miners of the Nova Scotia coal mines and the 1,000 coal miners of New Brunswick. In fact, no action whatsoever is being taken to relieve the unemployed coal miners of the Minto area of New Brunswick. The present government's policy gives no assurance whatsoever to the coal mines of the Atlantic provinces that at the end of the present year the excess carryover and stockpile accumulated will not force a further layoff which could be much more serious than the shutdown now taking place.

I have here a report of a statement made in Saint John, New Brunswick by the president of Acadia-Atlantic Sugar Refineries Limited as found in the Saint John Telegraph of June 27. Mr. Alex Hill of Toronto, the president, was reported as having said:

He told the luncheon meeting: "Given a fighting chance to meet competition in the upper Canadian market which is our life's blood, we should be able to continue our expansion and improvement program for the refinery here—indeed, we might be able to reopen the long dormant Halifax refinery."

However, he warned that without such a chance the company would be forced to start construction of a refinery in Ontario which would eventually reduce the Saint John operation "to a faint shadow of what it is now."

If the government continues its present policies, Mr. Speaker, we are afraid that such a move will take place.

It is now my intention to move an amendment which, by its nature, I am convinced will receive the support of every maritime member in this house, and particularly of those members who have at heart the future of the coal industry and those who feel that this government must insist that coal and coal alone be used in all thermal power plants operated under Bill No. 244 by which assistance is provided in respect of electrical power development in the Atlantic provinces. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill):

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets that the government has failed, despite the measure announced on Friday by the Prime Minister, to avert the five week shutdown in the Nova Scotia coal mines;

That this house regrets further that the government has backed away from its commitment to promote the development of industry in the Atlantic provinces;

And particularly from its specific undertaking to ensure the use of coal in thermal plants assisted financially by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) had a point of objection which perhaps he could make now if he wishes, unless he wishes to speak now.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think I should like to extend my remarks beyond just correcting the errors in the statement made by the hon. member who just sat down. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) made a specific attack on the agreement between the federal government and the province of New Brunswick concerning the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, and particularly the use of coal in one of the thermal plants. During his remarks I asked him if he would not admit the truth of the statement that this government had made clear to the province of New Brunswick that during the present period of surplus coal in that province coal should be used in the east Saint John plant. His answer was that all he had to deal with, and all that he could put on the record of this house was the answer to the question which he had asked and the terms of this general agreement. Then, he went on to quote some passages containing questions and answers from the reports of the New Brunswick legislature.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nova Scotia.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I stand corrected, of the Nova Scotia legislature. These passages, I believe, clearly indicated the answer I was going to give. The answer to this problem is very simple. The Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act was simply enabling legislation by means of which the federal government could make agreements with any one of those four provinces in connection with transmission lines in that area or thermal power plants. This general agreement is, as was stated by the premier of Nova Scotia, simply a master agreement which enables both parties to enter into an agreement on a specific proposal for thermal power plant, transmission lines or terminal facilities. This agreement has to come before the governor in council for approval, and there has to be a specific agreement made for each project. Naturally, when each project comes before this government the principles which motivated this government will be brought into being.

The suggestion that because this government did not put a clause in this general agreement insisting on the use of coal in every thermal plant in these four provinces is a suggestion that we should do something which is absolutely against the interests of the coal industries of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I want to make it very clear that the policy the hon. member advocates would, in fact, destroy the future of this coal industry in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It is on this point that he intends to make political capital, but he is not looking at the needs for future growth and expansion of these four provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, sir, surely it is against the rules of this house to impute motives to an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is drawing a rather fine line when he objects to the implication of political motives; that is done every day.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not suggest political motives, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Should I say, partisan motives?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I stated that by doing what the hon. member proposed he would do inestimable harm to the long-range future of that same coal industry which every member of parliament from the Atlantic provinces, and which every party surely must support. If one looks at the history of the Atlantic provinces one finds that since confederation there has been a gradual decline because they joined with the central provinces in an east-west movement, and this was not in accordance with the natural geography of the area. They made this great sacrifice in the interest of building, on the north half of this continent, a nation in which we could have our own way of life.

When this party was elected in June last one of the pledges we made was to lift up those regions and those groups in Canada which had fallen behind the national standard of living. There was no question in the minds of the people of this country, because by our spoken word on many occasions we specifically mentioned the fact that the maritime provinces and the prairie provinces, through no fault of their own, had fallen behind the national level. One of the first things this government did, therefore, was to fulfil that pledge in so far as the maritime provinces were concerned by introducing the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act. The fundamental purpose of this act was to provide cheaper industrial power to the Atlantic provinces. Cheaper industrial power is not obtained by any single device. It is obtained by using every device known to engineers and economists to reduce the costs. The question of interest, particularly in hydro plants, and the question of the type of fuel as applied to thermal plants, the question of building transmission lines interconnecting the various power grids, are all matters one might mention in this connection.

It is a matter of great pride that today in the province of New Brunswick they are planning to transmit power to Nova Scotia, and they are planning to receive power back from Nova Scotia. They are also selling power to the state of Maine, and doing very well from it. They would like, in the future, to see power coming from Quebec. This power from Newfoundland will come into their area and they, too, will be shipping power back to Newfoundland. It is by means of this interconnection that you achieve these great savings. Savings are also achieved by the technique of "peaking", whereby you get your lowest costs by using hydro and thermal in the correct sequence to give you the lowest cost to industry. We are trying to do all these things under this Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act. I, as a member of a political party, am quite aware of the things that were said before the election of June 10 in this regard. I do know that the then minister of public works, Mr. Winters, made a deathbed repentance and promised to look into this matter of subventions.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement is not correct.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I know that the first decision to pay subventions was made by this government. If any person has worked any harder than some of the members of this administration in trying to equalize the cost of power or at least the cost of coal in the manufacture of power in the Atlantic provinces, I should like to know who they are. We did achieve that on a temporary basis. We have agreed to examine all this periodically so that any plant manufacturing electric power from thermal fuel will have the same advantage in any Atlantic province as currently exists in the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Having mentioned all these things, why then do I make this statement that to achieve what the hon. member for Gloucester has advocated means the destruction of the coal industry in the future. This is a very serious question and must be given serious attention. The reasoning I put forward is very simple. Our philosophy behind reducing power costs in the Atlantic provinces was to provide inducements to industry to use that capacity. It was on that one single point that the whole future development of the Atlantic provinces depends. If industry will come in, providing opportunity to work in the factories, there will be more demand for power. That has been the experience all across this country. Never in this country's history or, to my knowledge, in any other country's history, has cheap power been provided at any location that industry has not moved in to take advantage of that very valuable advantage of a modern industrial state. That was our thinking in the case of the maritime provinces. Certainly we use coal because with the supply there it does provide a very fine thermal fuel.

But my department has the responsibility of looking ahead not just for two or three years but for 30 years or 40 years to see the future of this country and to make plans for the multiple use of our resources efficiently. As the minister responsible I naturally must look ahead those years in the Atlantic provinces. The agreement calls for a 30-year agreement on thermal plant units and a 40-year agreement on the transmission lines. Who can tell at this moment that the demand for power will not be so great in the Atlantic provinces that all the coal available at present levels of production and beyond it will be used and that the demand for power will be so great that all forms of thermal energy will have to be used?

It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that this government through the department which I head is aggressively seeking for ways and means to get a large supply of energy available in the Atlantic provinces in order to make possible a tremendously expanded iron and steel industry in this country. That is more important to the Atlantic provinces than any other single thing that I know of. It is important to the Dominion of Canada that we have a series of iron and steel industries across this country to take advantage of the opportunity which the present situation in the world makes very clear is ours. I refer to the fact that there are only two places in the world where there are vast unused quantities of iron ore. With supplies in the United States running thin, this obviously is our opportunity to make plans that will make use of this iron for processing here in Canada so that this country will become one of the greatest suppliers of iron and finished steel goods in the world. This is our objective and the maritime provinces are vital in that plan.

I point this out to the hon. member for very sound reasons. If he insists and if we insist that only coal be used in thermal plants for all time—

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: Were not those exact words used by the Prime Minister during the political campaign: Not only are we asking but we are insisting that coal be used.

Coal—Shutdown of Nova Scotia Mines

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I happen to have a copy of the statement referred to and the words used are "asking and demanding" that coal be used in thermal plants. But what I am pointing out is this. We are asking and we are demanding that coal be used in thermal plants in the maritime provinces because we have full awareness of the needs of the coal industry in Nova Scotia and in New Brunswick. But what I am saying is this. To insist in a general agreement that only coal should be used would be suicidal and completely destructive of the long-range future of the coal industry in that area. The reasons I am trying to advance are simple. If the demand for coal is as great as mentioned, we shall have full use of all the coal we know of in the Atlantic provinces area, and in addition we shall be bringing in, I hope, with the co-operation of Newfoundland and Quebec, hydro power over long distances; and maybe in the lifetime of many of us here—in fact, I would say in 10, 15 or 20 years—you will see large nuclear plants in operation in the provinces to provide us with the energy we need.

I think I have said enough to make it clear that as responsible people we are asking and demanding from the government of New Brunswick that coal be used in this present emergency because it would be wrong for us to be helping the coal industry on the one hand and to be slapping them down with the other. But to insist, in a term of a general agreement going over 30 years or 40 years, that only one type of fuel would be used would be to put that power commission or any other power commission in the hands of one supplier or the other.

I could point out many technical advantages to show that any plant can use both facilities side by side. There is a plant in my home city of Saskatoon which has three sources of thermal power which they make use of one after the other or simultaneously, namely coal, gas and oil. I point out that if you go down to the province of Nova Scotia you will find that the Dominion Steel Company, which is a producer of coal and which is trying to get rid of its surplus, has standby oil equipment for logical technical reasons, namely to reduce their cost and to make their plant more efficient to carry the power to the people that need it. Any person that examines all the facts will recognize the injustice, the complete crucification you would bring on an industry by insisting that for a 30 year or 40 year period one fuel should always be used when these other things are developed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, having dealt with this matter of coal, oil and nuclear power and hydro power in the province of New Brunswick and the Atlantic provinces generally, I should just like to make a few remarks in answer to what the hon. gentleman said at the end of his remarks. He spoke in terms of derision of the future that the Prime Minister envisaged, and he was kind enough to use my own name, and the hope of all Canadians for the future of this country. I think the term that has been used is "vision". I would just like to quote a remark or two on this matter. I have in my possession the speech delivered by my predecessor in this department, the Hon. Mr. Lesage, in which he lays down the policy of the previous government on this question of development in general. This speech was made in Toronto on December 13, 1956 and I should like to quote from it as follows:

> To go beyond that, however, to try to impose an over-all blueprint, a "National Policy", as some understand it, for resource management—to do that is to depart from the facts of our national situation. I have suggested already why such a "master plan" must fail of its purpose. In a country as vast as Canada, with widely different conditions and with different problems in different areas, there cannot be a single and unified policy for the management of resources.
> The fact that the British North America Act places resources under the control of the provinces is not a matter of accident or coincidence, it is rather a reflection of the basic facts of our national existence. Resource problems are generally regional problems or local problems and must be handled on a regional or local basis. Thus it is that the facts dictate, and our constitution requires, that our resource management be in the hands of the provinces. This is the framework and background in which we must see the problems of resource management and development in Canada. Accordingly, to advocate a "national policy" on a national basis as a responsibility of the national government is to misread the facts of our economy and the spirit and letter of our constitution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman agree with those views?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Those are the words of my predecessor in office and I am merely using them as an example of a policy that is diametrically opposed to the policy I advocate. I believe that statement by the responsible minister in the previous government lays down a philosophy which is foreign to the whole history of this country. We believe that the resources of Canada belong to the provinces and that we operate in the territories to the north of those provinces only in the sense that we hold them in trust for the people who will live there in the future. We also believe, as the very act which sets up my department instructs me to do, that it is the responsibility of the department to do planning for the most efficient co-ordination and use of those resources for all the people of Canada. That explains why this government on many fronts is offering co-operative plans of resource development with each of the provinces in order that they may best be able to develop their own resources and best look after themselves. There is no question whatever of infringement on constitutional responsibilities. In fact, we lean over backwards in an effort not to force our will in any way at all even to the choice of roads or any other project on which we are co-operating.

I mentioned this speech as symptomatic of the thinking of the previous administration and I am now going to take the liberty of offering some advice to my hon. friends in the Liberal party. I am going to ask those hon. gentlemen to go back in their own history and read the speeches of men like George Brown and particularly the one by him published in the Toronto Globe one hundred years ago, in which he laid down a philosophy of agricultural expansionism and resource expansionism identical to that of this government. How unlike the narrow views expressed here today it is! As the years rolled on the Liberal party drifted away from that broad point of view. I invite hon. members to look at the record of the speeches of Mackenzie and see how cautious he was about approaching these problems. I urge hon. members to then look at the record of pessimistic statements made by Blake. I suggest to hon. members that they go back to their beginnings and read the words of men like Brown in which they will find an expression of the faith that made the Liberal party worthy of its great traditions. Or, if hon. gentlemen prefer a more recent example, I suggest that they look at the statements of Laurier and the record of his achievements in the opening of western Canada under the immigration policy he advocated. These things are in tune with the thinking of the Canadian people today. I ask hon. members of the Liberal party to forget the petty politics of the last 30 years of the Liberal administration in this country and to see Canada as I see it, and as I think all Canadians see it, as a nation which is manifestly moving towards a vast expansion and a potential population of 50 million, 75 million or 100 million with all groups and regions in the nation enjoying some measure of equality of opportunity within the general framework of the economic standards of the whole country.

I think if hon. gentlemen were to do that—remember their beginnings and forget the political events of the last 100 years—they would see the needs of this country as the ordinary people see them. They would not quarrel with this attempt to help the Atlantic provinces on a broad front and they would not bring in this petty little criticism in an effort to embarrass the government for the immediate advantage of any one group or another. If hon. members were to adopt this perspective they would find themselves in harmony with the thinking of the Canadian people of all political faiths and would perhaps ensure their return to this side of the house much sooner. But as long as hon. gentlemen opposite adopt the igloo to igloo attitude, the attitude that says the people of the maritimes do not count or the people of the prairies do not count, and that the ordinary people in all parts of Canada who look forward and try to see greater opportunities for their children do not count, then there is no future for the Liberal party.

I for one, and I believe most people who sit with me here, have grasped something of the challenge that confronts Canada today. Our quarrel with the previous administration is that it did nothing about it. On the contrary, hon. gentlemen of that party have expressed themselves in speeches in important places as being opposed to the whole idea of a national development policy and have repudiated the idea of a blueprint under which our resources can be developed on a national, co-ordinated basis without exploitation or waste.

I think the house will recognize that I have spoken without too much notice but when this question is raised and when the government is attacked on the ground that its national development policy is phony—I believe that was the word used to describe this measure to help the Atlantic provinces—then I am brought to my feet in defence of something that many of us hold very dear.

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Gloucester, (Mr. Robichaud), I shall try to confine my remarks to those problems which to my mind are of immediate interest to the coal mining industry, the miners and the people of the maritime provinces. These problems can be classified under three different categories. First, the shutdowns and curtailment of operations to take place during the next two months in all the mines owned and operated by the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation in the Cape Breton area and on the mainland; second, the threatened closure of further collieries; and, third, a problem of immediate interest which has been most adequately covered by the hon. member for Gloucester, that of the increased use of oil rather than coal in some of the thermal plants in the maritimes.

This is the first time in the post-war period that the miners and people of Cape Breton, Pictou and Cumberland counties in

Coal—Shutdown of Nova Scotia Mines

Nova Scotia have been faced with the shutdown and closure of mines as was proposed by the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation on June 17 and which in fact have been put into effect as of June 23. The news confirming rumours of shutdowns and curtailment of operations in the coal mines must have come as a surprise to the coal miners and the people of Nova Scotia because it is not so very long ago that such rumours were denied. In fact, during the months of February and March and even as late as the month of May this year the people of Nova Scotia were told that the industry was in good shape, that there would be no lay-offs in the coal mines of that province and that a new era had come to the maritimes.

At a press conference in Halifax which took place on February 17, and as reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald on the following day under the title, "No Cut Backs in Coal Production", Mr. Allan C. MacDonald, chairman of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation's management committee and executive vice-president of A. V. Roe Canada Limited, is reported as having said that the company was banking on an "expected upturn in the general climate" and the "success of an aggressive sales campaign to capture a greater share of the Canadian market now supplied by United States coal mines".

Mr. MacDonald is reported as having said:

"The company will continue stock piling coal to maintain a high level of employment and is appealing to its mining force to continue its high production." He added: "The bank of coal on the surface now warrants shutting down of some operations, but we are not going to do it. We want the miners to keep on with their good job and will do everything we can to sell the production."

To Mr. Tom MacLachlan, president of district 26, of the united mine workers union, this statement was heartening. As reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of February 18, following the above mentioned statement of Mr. MacDonald Mr. MacLachlan had this to say and I quote:

We are certainly heartened by the report and the assurances of continued high employment in the foreseeable future. The co-operation of the miners and the operators . . . will continue and we are all looking forward to a growing of the coal industry in Nova Scotia. The policy of the company . . . eliminates a costly process of unemployment in the industry. It calls upon governments to take stock of the co-operation between the miners and the operators and to lend whatever assistance possible to see that the banks of coal will be shifted and eliminate possibility of slack times.

Commenting on the statement of Mr. MacDonald, the provincial minister of mines, the Hon. E. A. Manson, had this to say, and I quote:

The announcement was cheering and welcome to the miners, the government and the people of Nova Scotia. The approach to the coal problem by the company showed courage and optimism . . . for which it is to be congratulated.

You will notice also, Mr. Speaker, that this announcement by the company came at a most opportune time from the point of view of the electoral chances of the Progressive Conservative party in Nova Scotia. The announcement was given wide currency. There is little point now in saying it was wrong, and that cutbacks have taken place. Also, in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of February 18, in an insert in the "no cutbacks in coal production" article, and I quote:

Toward the end of his 90-minute speech in the legislature last night, Premier Stanfield referred to the DOSCO announcement regarding continued full employment in the province's coal mines.

He said it was a magnificent and appropriate stand for the firm to take, and the government would co-operate with DOSCO in every respect to the full exploitation of new markets for coal.

We are justified, Mr. Speaker, in asking this question now: where are the new markets? We also ask whether Mr. Stanfield may not feel he was hasty in lending his own weight to assurances given last February that no cutbacks would take place.

In a Canadian Press dispatch from Glace Bay which appeared in the Calgary Herald of February 25, 1958, Mr. Harold Gordon, vice president of Dominion Coal Company and general manager of all DOSCO operations, in an interview which took place in his office at Sidney, is reported as having said this regarding the industry, and I quote:

Mr. Gordon said the industry's position now is better than it has been for a good many years.

"We had daily outputs last year which were the highest since 1940. Last year we sold every pound of more than five million tons we produced."

Mr. Gordon also explained that the proposed $30 million maritime thermal power system promised a new market for coal. "It will be a considerable help to the coal industry when everything proposed goes into effect", said Mr. Gordon, "and we will put ourselves into a position to supply all the coal needed."

As late as May 23, the company denied the rumours of lay-offs and cutbacks. In an article of that date under the title "Plan no Cut Backs" the Halifax Chronicle Herald had this to say, and I quote:

Although a 800,000 ton coal stock pile in Sydney continues to pose a serious problem no working force of operational lay-offs are planned in DOSCO coal mines, A. C. MacDonald, chairman of the corporation's management committee told executive officers of district 26 united mine workers at a conference in Sydney, Thursday.

Mr. MacDonald told the united mine workers delegation there would be no slackening of operations at the present time but did not minimize the urgency of obtaining new coal markets. Indications are that new Ottawa assistance in coal marketing will be sought and union district president, Tom MacLachlan, Glace Bay, contended that additional federal government subventions could add more new markets in Ontario and dispose of the mountain of more than 800,000 tons of coal banked here.

Mine union officers questioned Mr. MacDonald, who was accompanied by DOSCO coal chief H. C. M. Gordon, and manager of public relations Arnold Paterson, about a question asked in the House of Commons Friday concerning possibility of 25 days idleness in Cape Breton Mines.

Mr. MacDonald said there has been no change in the company policy announced in Halifax February 17 when he said "there would be no colliery shutdowns" in the foreseeable future, and every effort would be made to gain new markets.

The DOSCO management committee chairman, assured the union executive that if it is necessary to increase their coal carrying fleet of eight ships, this would be done immediately if market conditions warranted it.

I ask you to take note, Mr. Speaker, that this was on May 23, 1958. The predictions of the officials of the company as to the position of the industry, the denials of possible shutdowns by the authorities and the forecasting of a new era in the coal mining industry of the maritimes by the Conservative politicians did not turn out to be very accurate.

On May 31, the Financial Post reported that the federal cabinet had already under consideration a request from the Dominion Coal Company for government backing for a loan to cover the 1958 operations. It was stated that DOSCO was in urgent need of funds to help maintain its planned rate of operations until it could collect payments for this year's delivery.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) and I have several times during the present session—there is nothing personal about this—drawn attention to hon. members reading speeches—

Mr. Robichaud: On what side of the house?

Mr. Morris: From this side of the house we have drawn attention to hon. members reading speeches. Allow me to speak on a point of order, if you will. Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to Beauchesne's parliamentary rules and forms, fourth edition, citation 144, which says:

It is a rule in both houses of parliament that a member must address the house orally, and not read from a written, previously prepared speech, for the reason that, "if the practice of reading speeches should prevail, members might read speeches that were written by other people—

We, of course, think that this is true.

—and the time of the house be taken up in considering the arguments of persons who were not deserving of their attention."

Specifically, we believe that these speeches are not only being read, but they are being written by a person who is not in the house and who has had a good opportunity to assist the coal industry. My point is that the former member for Inverness-Richmond has been replaced. My point of order is that the reading of speeches is against the rules of order.

Mr. Dumas: On the point of order raised by the hon. member, I must say to him I have some notes with me and I am following those notes.

On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has no right to say that I did not prepare my speech. I was here on Saturday and Sunday and all day today, and I have plenty of time in which to prepare my speeches and I must tell him that I can prepare my own speeches. The hon. member has no right to say that I did not prepare my own speech.

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I also wish to say something in connection with the remarks by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Morris). He mentioned my speech. My speech was prepared by myself on Saturday and Sunday. This is the second time this has happened in this house. It might be better if the hon. member looked at both sides of the house and then he would know what to say.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if an hon. member wishes to speak in this house he should speak from his own seat.

Mr. Caron: This question has been raised a few times by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) and the hon. member who spoke a while ago, that some members are reading their speeches. I admit it is a fact that we should not read our speeches. If hon. members wish to insist on it, I say that they should not read speeches from their side and even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) will not read his speech next year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: First of all, I must bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that they are not permitted to raise a point of order on a point of order. I must furthermore remind hon. members that they cannot accuse other hon. members of reading speeches which have been prepared by other people. This cannot be done unless definite proof is actually available.

Further, on this question of reading of speeches this matter has been brought to the attention of the house quite frequently during recent weeks. The quotation which the hon. member read from Beauchesne is quite right, that speeches must not be read. However, a certain discretion is always given in the reading of speeches because obviously in some instances it would be impossible for some hon. members to make a speech unless they extensively consulted the notes in hand. The fact remains that, as has been said previously, hon. members are permitted more from a general acceptance than from anything else to consult their notes, but this practice of reading speeches in their entirety must stop at one point, and I believe this point has really arrived, and it will be my unpleasant duty to call to order members on both sides of the house from now on who read their speeches in their entirety.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Speaker, just before the hon. member raised the point of order I was saying that on May 31 the Financial Post reported that the federal cabinet had already under consideration a request from the Dominion Coal Company, and I was starting to say that at that time it was reported that the stockpile of 1.4 million tons was somewhat larger than usual but that it was sold or at least covered by firm orders. It was further stated that the company had a very satisfactory fleet of ships and that it was moving the coal as rapidly as possible to Quebec river ports. The need of funds was only to cover this lag in payments.

Then, in another Canadian Press dispatch, as it appeared in the Ottawa Journal of May 24 last, the Cape Breton Post was reported as having said that a decision with far-reaching effects on the maritime coal industry was to be made by the federal cabinet within the next 10 days. The Cape Breton Post, in anticipating such a decision from the cabinet, is reported as having stated:

"A. V. Roe (Canada) Limited, which now controls the Dominion Coal Company through the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, has proposed a 20-day layoff in all collieries in addition to the five-week production cuts already announced", the newspaper says. "Roe also proposed permanent closure of two mainland mines and one in Cape Breton.

To avert these moves the government was asked to grant the company a loan of major proportions designed to carry the industry through the next two years," the Post says.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, rumours were to the effect that the company needed help only for the balance of the current year; that a request was before the government for consideration, and that such help was considered sufficient to maintain operations as they were planned and, also, what is more important, at that time there was no mention whatsoever of any kind of lay-offs. Three weeks later shutdowns and curtailments were ordered and put into effect. Now that the shutdowns and curtailments are in fact a reality we are told that the company will need government backing for two years unless additional lay-offs are made and permanent closure of three mines takes place.

If what I have just said is factual, there are a few questions which need to be answered. Why was the public not informed about what was happening? Why were the miners given to understand last February, and then again in May, that no idle time was contemplated? What happened during those three weeks between May 31, when the first rumours came out that Dosco might be in need of help from the government, and June 23 when lay-offs started to take place? During that period did the company really put its problem before the government? Was it made clear to the government that unless some help was forthcoming there would be immediate lay-offs at the mines? Was the company turned down because it was felt that those demands were exaggerated?

We were told by the Prime Minister on Friday that a suitable arrangement had been made between the government of Canada, the provincial government and the company whereby assistance would be provided in order to avert additional lay-offs and permanent closure of three mines, as previously announced by the company.

The statement of policy as outlined in the House of Commons at six o'clock on Friday by the Prime Minister reads as follows, and I quote from page 1738 of Hansard:

After full consideration and on the recommendation of the minister of mines the government has decided that in order to help maintain employment the subvention policy now in existence will be extended so as to include among the cost audit items to be determined by the controller of the treasury the amount of the insurance stockpile and interest charges of the excess coal stockpiled this year and the government of Nova Scotia has agreed to share in these additional costs with the federal government. I am glad to report that this action will result in the company being enabled to maintain at a high level employment in the coal mines it operates.

Earlier in his statement the Prime Minister said, as found on page 1737:

Even in the face of those reductions in working days—

The Prime Minister was talking about the immediate 25-day lay-off in addition to the period of regular holidays with pay.

—the company has estimated, and that estimate has been confirmed by the dominion coal board, that by the end of the year 1958 there would be in stockpile 750,000 tons of coal in excess of the normal average carryover.

The Prime Minister also stated:

—company officials undertook that at the end of the 25-day lay-off already announced the company would continue its normal operations providing it is compensated for the additional cost to which it would be put to maintain the excess over and above the normal stockpile.

The newspapers of Saturday, following the statement made by the Prime Minister, reported that an unofficial estimate of the total cost of the measure announced by him would be $500,000 and that four-fifths of the cost would be borne by the federal government and one-fifth by the provincial government. It was also reported in the same Canadian Press dispatch that the scheme parallels the assistance given to the Britannia mine in British Columbia. If this is so, I hope that the end results in the coal mines of Nova Scotia will not parallel those of the Britannia mine.

The announcement by the Prime Minister on Friday presumably will have the effect of avoiding lay-offs after the period of the 5-week shutdown until the end of December, 1958. All that the Prime Minister did was to look after the company's charges on the stockpile in order to prevent shutdowns in the period from the middle of September to the end of December. For this the coal miners of Nova Scotia and the people generally are certainly grateful but, we wonder what will happen after December 31, 1958. Are we to understand that the government will extend assistance after December 31, 1958? We were led to believe that the company really needed assistance for two years in order to be able to keep production going and to avoid lay-offs.

We realize the importance of the coal mining industry. Possibly the hon. member who interrupted me a few minutes ago was not aware that I am interested in the mining industry, whether it be coal mining, gold mining, copper mining or zinc mining. I am also as much interested in the people of his own province because after all they are Canadians. Let me tell the hon. member that in my home town of Malartic there are many people who came from Nova Scotia in 1929 and 1930 to work in our mines. All of them are my best friends. They were called Nova Scotians but they were good miners and they were welcome in my constituency. They were welcomed to Malartic. They were strong, hard working men and they are still living in the province of Quebec. They have been there for the last 20 or 25 years and we are glad to have them with us.

Therefore if I take the opportunity today to talk about coal mines it is because I am interested and also because I know something about them. I know very well that if the government does not do something very soon the coal mines of Nova Scotia as well as the coal mines of the west will have further trouble.

The minister who preceded me wanted us to forget the political events of 100 years ago and then in the same breath he said that we should go back to Laurier. He did not want us to go back 100 years. He wanted us to be realistic. Let me tell him that the previous government was realistic and did a lot to help the coal mines. The dominion coal board was organized. Subventions were paid to the coal mines for the transportation of coal. Different research branches were organized.

It is true that the present government increased the subventions but now that they are in power it is their duty to do more for the coal mines. They told us in the past that we did not do enough. Now it is up to them. It is their duty and they promised the people of the maritime provinces that they would do something. We leave it up to them now and we hope that they will do something not only for the coal mines of the maritime provinces but for all the Canadian coal mines spread across the country.

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak on the amendment. First, may I say to the hon. member who has just sat down that I welcome his interest in the Nova Scotia coal mining industry as I am sure all members from Nova Scotia and elsewhere in Canada do. Furthermore, may I say that I welcome the new look of the Liberal party toward the coal mining industry of Nova Scotia, the fact that they now realize that there is a coal industry in Nova Scotia and have some suggestions to make about it. Such an attitude was certainly lacking during 22 years they were in power and the economy of Nova Scotia is certainly the worse off for it.

The hon. member made some mention of some of the things that his party had to say about the Nova Scotia coal mining industry when the Liberals were in power. I should like to put certain remarks on Hansard as to what his party did feel about the industry. I should like to quote first from an editorial published in the Fredericton Gleaner of January 23, 1958. This is part of the then prime minister's (Mr. St. Laurent) statement regarding the coal industry and has reference to some of the facts that were put to him leading up to his answer in that regard. This is what Urwick Currie Limited had to say about Nova Scotia industry as found in the report of the Gordon commission on Canada's economic prospects:

The principal producers of coal in Nova Scotia are carrying out an extensive program of mechanization. It is expected that this program will be completed in 1960. It is estimated that the mechanization of the mines will result in a substantial increase in output per man-hour. This means according to estimates contained in our study on the Nova Scotia coal industry that if there were no reduction in employment, an additional two million tons would be produced each year. On the other hand, if production is not increased the services of some 4,000 out of the 11,000 mineworkers presently employed will not be required.

What was the answer of the former prime minister to that? Let us examine his answer in the light of that situation. Mr. St. Laurent, in his Fredericton speech, was referring to the proposal pulled out of a hat by Mr. Winters just before the June 10 election campaign with relation to assistance to the economy of the maritimes by thermal power. Mr. St. Laurent said:

Now, will maritime coal continue to be the cheapest fuel for the production of power for all time? I do not think it will. I think that coal is going to become more valuable for chemical and synthetical processes than it will be as a fuel. In the meantime, of course, we want these coal mines kept in operation because we do not want the coal mining towns to become ghost towns. But so far as I am concerned, so far as my opinions may carry weight in the decisions that are taken, we are not going to encourage substantial increase in the production of coal because I do not think that that would be fair to future generations of Canadians.

May I ask there, I wonder how fair it would be to the 120,000 people in Nova Scotia who are dependent on the coal industry.

Mr. Robichaud: What is the present government doing?

Mr. Coates: I will tell you what the present government is doing my friend. If you gentlemen had done what you should have done when you were setting over here, you would not be over there now. We would not have shut you out in Nova Scotia because you never did anything for us.

Mr. Robichaud: That is a poor reply.

Mr. Coates: I go back to the quotation from Mr. St. Laurent:

But so far as I am concerned, so far as my opinion may carry weight in the decisions that are taken, we are not going to encourage a substantial increase in the production of coal because I do not think that that would be fair to future generations of Canadians. I do not think it is fair to future generations of Canadians who will know they did not benefit from the greater value.

In other words, as the editor says, the coal should be left in the ground.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what Mr. St. Laurent said.

Mr. Coates: I did not say that is what Mr. St. Laurent said, but that is the conclusion reached by this editor and, so far as I am concerned, I join him in that conclusion.

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) would permit a purely factual question?

Mr. Coates: I should like to finish my speech. Since I have been in this house I know that the hon. member has been on his feet more than he has been in his seat, and when you sift what he has said you find that it all adds up to nothing. I do not feel I want to be disturbed.

I should like to make reference to another former minister in the government, the Hon. Mr. Sinclair. In Nova Scotia, he made a statement that the uneconomical coal mines should be closed and the people should be shifted to Ontario. That is a different story from the one the hon. gentlemen in opposition are now telling. What is the reason? The reason is that the people in Nova Scotia have shown the members of the opposition what they thought of their policies in the past. May I add a further remark at this time? The maritimes have indicated very clearly to the rest of Canada that they want the Progressive Conservative party in power because the Conservatives are going to see that maritime children can remain at home and have the same opportunities as any others in this great country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly, the coal miners can stay at home for the next five weeks.

Mr. Coates: I am not referring to Newfoundland because I consider Newfoundland has not been a part of Canada long enough to realize the difference between Liberal promises and Liberal action. As soon as they find out, they will get rid of the Liberals.

Mr. Robichaud: They have no place to go for work now.

Mr. Coates: These hon. gentlemen across the way have said that we never did anything or we have not done enough or we have not done this or that. Let me say this. This long sheet of paper contains all the things the Conservative party has done for the Nova Scotia coal industry. Let me say further, that the people of Nova Scotia did not forget that. They showed they remembered on March 31, and they will show it a great many more times in the years ahead.

Mr. Robichaud: Phony promises.

Mr. Coates: The hon. member can talk about phony promises. I grew up in an area about which the Liberals made many phony promises. Let me quote something from the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. This will give a little better idea of the differences between Liberal promises and Liberal action. On page 403 of that report, I find:

However, as shown by chart 19.I, average incomes in this region—

They are talking about the Atlantic provinces and the north.

—have remained below the averages for the rest of Canada. In 1926, for example, the average income per capita in the three maritime provinces was 38 per cent below the average for the other six provinces; in 1939 the corresponding percentage was 32 per cent; in 1946—

Which is after the war and the prosperity that we had in this country for five years.

—it was 24 per cent.

In 1955, after all those great years about which they told the people of Canada under a Liberal administration, where did we go? We went to 33 per cent. We went backwards again. The people in the Atlantic area saw we were going backwards. If you take the Atlantic area, we are back to 37 per cent below the average. If you read still further in this report, you find this:

In 1955, average family incomes of people living in metropolitan centres in the three maritime provinces were only about 15 per cent below those of average family incomes of city dwellers in the rest of Canada.

Where was the rural population of Nova Scotia? It was certainly a long way behind other rural areas, and after all those great years of Liberal reign in Canada.

Now, what have we done for the Nova Scotia coal industry? I am very proud of this, and I am very proud to be a member of a government that did this for the town of Springhill. The government said that the No. 2 colliery in Springhill would not close down. This government took one small town in this great Dominion of Canada and said, "We will help you; you need help. You have proven it in the past. You have the guts and stamina which is part of this great Canadian nation. We are going to see you get the help you need." This help was extended first on August 22, 1957 and was extended last April. The government said they still needed help; that is the kind of government to have in this country.

On February 18, 1958, the cabinet issued a directive to government departments that Canadian coal be used in all government coal-burning installations where the laid-down cost of such coal does not exceed the competitive cost of other coals by more than 20 per cent. On August 22, 1957, approval was given by order in council under the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act to the grant of a loan for the purpose of colliery mechanization to one of the smaller coal producers in Nova Scotia. On November 18, 1957, approval was given also by order in council under the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act to the grant of a loan for the purpose of colliery mechanization to one of the larger coal producers in New Brunswick.

On April 14, 1958, as reported in the Halifax Herald of April 15, 1958, we have these changes: Raised the amount of government assistance for the transportation of coal to Ontario and western Quebec from the present 45 per cent of freight rates to 60 per cent; extended subvention on Springhill coal until March 31, 1959.

Those were some of the things. Then we had the Prime Minister on Friday rise in this house and give still further aid to the Nova Scotia coal industry. I regret, as does the government, that there still is going to be a 25-day lay-off of the men in the mines in Nova Scotia. We regret that fact. But we provide the aid to see that in the future they are going to have full employment. I think that the people of Nova Scotia will appreciate what has been done, will understand what this government was faced with and will understand that this government, in co-operation with another Conservative government in Nova Scotia, will work together to the end that they will see to it that the Nova Scotia coal industry, and thereby the economy of Nova Scotia, which is directly dependent upon this industry, will have a future ahead. Furthermore, might I say that we in the east look to this northern development program so well explained by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) as the vision, and which hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house—

Mr. Robichaud: Illusion.

Mr. Coates: —refer to in so many different ways.

Mr. Robichaud: Illusion.

Mr. Coates: We see there the beginning of a new economy in the Atlantic area. Why? Because we are not faced with some problems that are faced in western Canada with regard to roads to resources. We have many ports in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland by means of which to get at the iron ore in Baffin island. We have the thermal power program in the Atlantic area to provide cheaper power. We have coal in Nova Scotia. With those three and with the future potential of the power resources in the Hamilton river area, we could easily become one of the great steel producers in Canada and maybe in the world. We have the ports and we have the people with the ability and the initiative to see that this program is started and that it leads us into a new era in which, as I said before, our children do not have to worry about going to the central area or about getting a one-way ticket purchased for them by any government in this country. They will have their opportunities at home and they will be able to enjoy them.

Mr. Robichaud: They will have no place to go, as they have now.

An hon. Member: That is cheerful.

Mr. Coates: We are looking forward to this era, not as a joke but as a dream that is going to become a reality. This is the government that is going to make it a reality.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, this amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) will give all hon. members an opportunity to express the regret which I am sure we all feel that, in spite of the measures announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) last Friday, there will still be a shutdown in the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia for five weeks. The Prime Minister's statement was greeted with warm applause, but I believe that applause was given spontaneously before hon. members realized that the measure did nothing more than postpone this problem to some future date. Certainly all the measure announced was that the cost of adding to the stockpile, together with the extra charges for carrying that stockpile, would be met and that, as a result of this provision, there would be no further shutdown beyond the five weeks as already announced and which will continue in spite of the measures.

If these measures could have been announced a little earlier there is no reason why this five weeks' close-down should have taken place. In replying to the hon. member for Gloucester the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) dealt with one point only. He concentrated on the fact that it might not be wise to write into an agreement a clause which would make it binding to use coal for a period of 30 years or 40 years in the future. However, he did nothing to explain the charges made by the hon. member for Gloucester that assurances had been given by company officials and by the premier of Nova Scotia and other members of the legislature that this shutdown would not take place. Neither did he explain the statement made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) some time ago that this stockpile of coal had been sold and was only awaiting transportation.

If the miners received cold comfort from what the Prime Minister said on Friday last, they must get even less comfort from the words of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in that he asked them just to be patient and just to think of the great vision in 30 years' or 40 years' time, that we are going to get a great steel industry up in the north and that will make up for all the trouble and suffering which they are going to undergo at the present time.

This stockpile or this overproduction represents a reflection of the decline in our economy. If we are going to find a solution to that decline, surely the solution must be three-fold. In the first place, an effort must be made to stimulate our present business firms which are suffering from a decline and to get them expanding again. In the second place, new industries must be developed. In the third place, efforts must be made to increase our markets for coal. The blueprint for this industrial expansion has been drawn up by different bodies. It was laid down by the premiers of the Atlantic provinces in a conference which they held in Charlottetown last September. Prior to that, I think in last March before the election, the Conservative candidates for the Atlantic provinces met in a conference in Moncton and produced what I suppose they regarded as a new Atlantic charter. That charter was referred to in the July, 1957 issue of the Atlantic Advocate as consisting of seven resolutions which for the convenience of hon. members I should like to put on the record. They are headed "The Atlantic Resolutions" and they read as follows:

1. A national development program of federal assistance for developing the resources of the Atlantic provinces, having regard to their differing needs and varying financial capabilities.
2. Industrial decentralization, by placing a more equitable share of defence contract expenditures within the Atlantic provinces; by the establishment of crown corporations; and by encouraging private enterprises to locate in the area and to encourage the processing here of our natural resources as a result of special fiscal considerations.
3. Atlantic provinces power development by means of financial assistance for the development of low-cost electric power which would fully preserve the rights of the provinces to build and operate both thermal and hydro installations and transmission lines and by immediate subvention on coal produced in the region and used for generating electric power therein.
4. Adjustment of freight rates and provision of transportation facilities to allow our producers reasonable access to the markets of Canada.
5. Capital projects program to provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area.
6. Special adjustment grants for all provinces with a per capita income substantially below the national average. The claims of Newfoundland to better financial terms should receive recognition.
7. The establishment of a Canadian coast guard.

I submit that this is a very fine blueprint for the development of the Atlantic provinces but a year has now elapsed since this government took office and we have yet to see anything done for the maritime provinces beyond the special grants which were made at the last session. As indicated in these resolutions the federal government can do a great deal to assist in the development of the Atlantic region. Reference was made in the throne speech to the setting up of a small branch in a government department for advice to small businessmen. I believe this would be a very good move but when and if it is done I would suggest it would require much more than just a small office with two or three advisers. If that organization is going to be of any effect it should be organized on a regional basis in very much the same way as the national employment service is now organized.

There are some things which the Atlantic resolutions did not refer to and better communications is one of them. This is something that is absolutely essential if we are to develop our maritime industries. Transportation has been referred to and that is perhaps our greatest handicap particularly in Newfoundland. In spite of subsidies and special freight rates, transportation costs are a millstone around the necks of all small industries in the Atlantic provinces.

Something should also be done to encourage investment and that would require special tax concessions and depreciation allowances. More can be done than is being done at the present time to encourage the local industries we already have. We have many fine small industries in the maritimes which produce products of an excellent quality which could be utilized by the government in its construction programs. I have referred to some of these on other occasions. In Newfoundland we produce first class cement, fibre board and birch veneer, all of which is of a high standard. In the maritimes we produce excellent brick, aluminum windows and doors and other products which could be given special consideration by this government when it has purchases to make in its own building programs.

Mr. MacInnis: Did the old government do it?

Mr. Carter: The Department of Defence Production could also do much more than it is doing to encourage the existing industries in the maritimes. If the government intends to tackle this problem in earnest then defence production contracts should be awarded on the basis of factory prices. There are many items which we can produce at a lower market price than can be produced elsewhere in Canada but when transportation charges are added, particularly on the cost of products from Newfoundland, then our costs are higher and of course we cannot compete for the contracts. By this simple device of awarding contracts on the basis of factory prices assistance could be given to the many excellent small companies we have in the maritimes.

I remember that tenders were called for shoes for the army a couple of years ago. We have an excellent shoe factory in Newfoundland which can produce an article perhaps as good as any produced elsewhere in the world. The company tendered on that contract. The factory price was lower than that of the firm which was awarded the contract but because our transportation costs had to be added to the factory price to comply with the terms of the contract that order from the Department of Defence Production was lost to our province.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question. If this occurred two years ago why did not the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) do something about it?

Mr. Pickersgill: He did, and they got the next order.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Why did you not do something for the factories in New Brunswick, then?

Mr. Carter: One of the prime requirements for industrial development in the maritimes, of course, is the production of cheap industrial power. In this connection our government should take into consideration the inequality which now obtains as between public versus private distributors. It is true that if electricity is developed and distributed by a public body they have tax concessions which private enterprises do not have and which they must pay. Public bodies have an advantage in that way which I think should be permitted no longer. This could be done very well by granting tax concessions to private enterprises which are engaged in the production and distribution of power. Unless that is done the subsidies which are handed out by this government with one hand are taken away with the other hand in the form of income tax.

A third thing which could be undertaken is the expansion of markets. Of course this is a responsibility shared not only by the provincial and federal governments but also by the industry itself. This government has a responsibility because the coal which we are discussing today is a resource which is the property of the provinces. That resource should be converted into wealth while there is time to do it. The time will come perhaps sooner than we think when nuclear power will produce electricity cheaper than it can be produced from coal. Probably many hon. members will have seen the article which appeared in the local press a few days ago which said that before long this power could be produced at the rate of 6 mills. Once that happens the coal we have in our provinces underground will lose much of its value because its use as a fuel will go out of existence and other uses will have to be found in the production of dies, synthetics and chemicals.

When that day comes it will perhaps be a good thing for the coal industry, but we should be looking forward to that stage now and research should certainly be going on as fast as possible in order to find other uses for our coal. The time is running out when we can depend on it to sell as a fuel. Governments can help by using more coal to heat government buildings, and in thermal plants, as long as Canada is over supplied. The industry itself shares this responsibility with the government and I am not satisfied that in the past it has done all in its power to find new markets for coal or to expand existing markets.

As far as the Nova Scotia coal industry is concerned, it has had a first rate market on its doorsteps in the province of Newfoundland. We have been dependent on Nova Scotian coal for ages but the policy of the coal company was to take this market for granted. They did very little to expand this market and as a result, in spite of our increased population, the consumption of coal in Newfoundland has declined drastically over the last few years, although, at the same time, the consumption of oil has just about doubled. In 1953, the total receipts of coal in Newfoundland amounted to 275,000 tons, but in 1957, despite the increase in the population, it had declined to 258,000 tons, the latter figure including imports from the United States. On the other hand, 509,000 barrels of kerosene and stove oil were consumed in Newfoundland in 1953, a figure which had risen to 971,000 barrels in 1957, just about double. A lot of that imported oil could have been displaced by coal if our people had been treated fairly and if the company had done all it might have done to ensure a supply of coal of good quality at a fair price. But I have myself seen fishermen buying coal which was nothing but dust, much of which blew away when they took it out of their boats and still more blew away while they were waiting to get it into their houses. And for that they had to pay the highest price, between $25 and $35 a ton. A market cannot be developed when this kind of service is given and I think the coal company must accept a good deal of the blame in this respect.

Speaking in this house on July 25 I suggested that coal depots should be established along the south coast of Newfoundland, because it would have been in the interest of the coal company to have found some means of distributing this coal at a fair price. What was happening at that time was this: our ships were going to Sydney and being tied up in Sydney harbour for up to two or three weeks, with all the extra costs of demurrage, waiting to get loaded. This demurrage cost was added to the cost of transportation. The answer to this problem would be to find some means of carrying the coal in a special ship whose cargo could be quickly unloaded, stockpiled at various points on the coast of Newfoundland, and distributed from the central points to the smaller harbours. This system, if it had been adopted, would have reduced the cost of coal considerably and instead of purchasing only one ton or a ton and a half—all they could afford—the fishermen might have been able to buy three, four or five tons at a time. The answer, if this government intends to do anything to maintain what bit of the market the industry still has, is to pay subventions on freight between Sydney and Newfoundland with regard to water-borne transportation. The former member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Lesage) raised this question in the house on January 14, 1958 as reported in Hansard on page 3317.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was referring to the opportunities of expanding the coal market in Newfoundland, and I had said that in order to do this it would be necessary to pay some subvention or subsidy on the water freight between North Sydney and our province. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself is aware of this need, as he is reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of May 3, 1957, as stating at Amherst, Nova Scotia, on May 2, 1957, as follows:

"What we want", he asserted, "is coal subventions within the province."

And again at Minto, New Brunswick, on June 1, 1957, as reported in the Montreal Star by the Canadian Press on June 3, 1957:

> The Conservative chieftain speaking to party supporters in the coal mining community of Minto, New Brunswick, said "there should be and must be a subvention on coal transported within these provinces for power purposes."
> Cheaper power for the maritimes and assistance for the maritime coal industry could be obtained, he said, if subsidies were provided for inter-maritime coal shipments.
> During discussion of the federal government's decision to join in the financing of coal-fired thermal power plants in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, Mr. Diefenbaker said the Conservative party's policy "is to give provinces a type of co-operation they have not had in the past."

Not only must subventions be paid on coal for power purposes but also for consumption in homes in Newfoundland if coal is to be made competitive with oil, which is being used to an ever-increasing degree, as I pointed out earlier this afternoon.

In my own riding there is an opportunity for expansion on the Burin peninsula where we have a considerable shortage of power at the present time. Not only are there large communities like Marystown, Garnish, Creston, which do not yet have any electric power at all, but the fish plants and the mining operations at St. Lawrence are very greatly handicapped on account of the lack of cheap power. The St. Lawrence mines, like the Sydney coal mines, have been closed down. In fact, one of the fluorspar mines at St. Lawrence has been closed down now for over a year with 200 people out of work.

Then, again, there is the proposed development of the free port at Mortier bay. If this dream ever comes true a great deal of electrical power will be required, and that power is not easily obtainable in that particular neighbourhood at the present time. It may be possible to develop Hydro power at bay d'Espoir and transmit it to Mortier bay; but an economic survey might prove that this power could just as cheaply be delivered on the spot by use of thermal units. Here again is a prospective opportunity at least for an expansion of the coal market in Newfoundland. It would therefore be to the advantage of both of our provinces if the federal government got behind this proposal for the development of a free port at Mortier bay.

As I said before, if the coal is to be used at all, some subvention must be paid on the waterborne transportation. When I was interrupted at six o'clock I was putting on the record a passage from Hansard which was an exchange between Mr. Lesage and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) about this question. The exchange is to be found at page 3317 of Hansard of January 14, 1958, and I quote:

> Mr. Lesage: I see. If Newfoundland should sign an agreement for thermal plants would the cost of water transportation be taken into account?
> Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The question is hypothetical but well thought out.

Further down, after other exchanges the minister said:

> Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that the same principles of fair play and justice will be applied to Newfoundland as to either of the other two provinces.
> Mr. Lesage: That is very vague, of course. I would like to know whether Newfoundland will benefit to the same extent as the other Atlantic provinces?

I quoted this extract from Hansard, because in spite of the statements of the Prime Minister, which I mentioned earlier, when the question was brought up during the thermal power debate in this house last session the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) was very vague as to what extent this freight subsidy, if any, would be applied to water freight charges on Nova Scotia coal going to Newfoundland.

This afternoon the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources again treated us to this great vision of a great steel industry in Canada, utilizing the power of Hamilton falls which would take place in perhaps 30 or 40 years time. Well, Mr. Speaker, we all know that; we all subscribe to that; we know it will come some day and it will come regardless of which party is in power. It will come when our population has expanded to the point where our domestic market can support such an industry; it will come then and not before. We must not allow ourselves to be blinded by visions of this kind; we must do as the Acting Prime Minister pointed out this afternoon; we must try to live in the present and the realities of the present day are that the coal industry in Nova Scotia is in a depressed condition at the present time and miners are out of work and will be out of work for five weeks in spite of the measures which have been taken on their behalf.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources admitted that this economic decline in the maritimes has been going on since confederation, and he referred to it as the sacrifice which the maritime provinces have paid and will be paying to make Canada a nation. What we want in the martimes is for governments to face up to those realities and not wait 30 or 40 years to have this vision come true to end all our troubles in the coal industry. There is no reason why the Atlantic provinces should become a permanent poor house. There is no necessity for it. We have a great deal of undeveloped resources and a little co-operation from all concerned along the lines I have suggested will bring this development about.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on this occasion my remarks will be brief. As a member of the united mine workers from Glace Bay representing miners who today find themselves on the street more or less because of their own efforts in producing coal, I feel justified in making a few remarks. I am grateful for this opportunity for two reasons. First of all, I am grateful that the government has seen fit on two occasions to alleviate the problem by increasing the subventions and has at this time met the request of the A. V. Roe Company in order to prevent further lay-offs. Second, I am grateful, and I emphasize this reason, because of the fact that there has been a change from the situation that existed under the previous administration.

I say that because their attitude towards the coal mining industry of Nova Scotia was very well brought out by the former prime minister in Fredericton, New Brunswick, when he said that coal was too valuable a product to burn and should be left for future generations to be used in the manufacture of synthetic articles. In addition, there was the attitude of the former minister of fisheries who said in effect in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, that he did not believe in subventions for the sole purpose of alleviating unemployment.

I will have to check the records to find out whether opposition members who spoke today made the same remarks about the coal industry a few short years ago when there were also cutbacks. I know that in my own colliery I had three weeks of idleness because of cutbacks and at that time nothing whatsoever was done by the former administration. Therefore I am surprised at their attitude today which has been one of great concern for the coal miners. I must agree with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) that they are concerned about the coal miners only because they wish to take advantage of the situation to further their own political aims. That was brought out by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) who had much to say about the problems of Newfoundland while speaking on the coal situation in Cape Breton. I give him full marks for the fact that he did touch on the question of markets and transportation. That is the only contribution towards this debate that has come from the opposition side of the house today. He at times made reference to the coal markets in Newfoundland and the transportation problem.

The attitude of the C.C.F. towards this situation was brought out very clearly on Friday when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made his announcement concerning the aid to be given to the coal industry. One of the C.C.F. members immediately jumped to his feet to ask the Prime Minister about the possibility of extending the same assistance to coal miners in another part of the country. In my opinion this is not the way to help the coal miners of Nova Scotia.

I could go into the history of the coal mining industry in Cape Breton very thoroughly tonight but I do not think it would serve any great purpose. I could go back to the time of the Sir Andrew Rae Duncan reports of 1926 and 1932 which indicated that the coal mines and coal miners of Nova Scotia contributed much to other industries. The commission report brought out the fact that the coal miners were subsidizing other portions of the corporation, and at that time the miners stood pat on their wage demands simply to help out these other subsidiaries. It was in recent years before the new company took over that the policy was changed and put the miners at a disadvantage. The policy was adopted that the company would place the coal mining operations in a category of their own and that those operations would have to show their own profits, but considering the fact that in previous years the miners had subsidized these other industries I think the miners were placed in a very unfair position.

I would ask hon. members to compare the Sir Andrew Rae Duncan commission report which said that the miners should be given a raise and that they were earning it with the recent Gordon commission report. As has been pointed out by members on this side several times, the only solution put forward by the Gordon commission to alleviate the situation in the mines of Nova Scotia was to practically tell them to get out of the province.

This question has come up in the house several times in the last few weeks and great concern or supposed concern has been shown on the part of many members of the house. I should like to correct any misapprehension about representations from the united mine workers of America. I have spoken to the president and other representatives of the union here in Ottawa within the last couple of days and they brought it clearly to my attention that never on any occasion have they sent a telegram to any member of the house. I should like to point that out so that hon. members will not be misled by somebody getting up and waving telegrams and saying they have received them from the united mine workers of America. That is not so.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member deserves correction because a telegram was received by a member of this house.

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member saw fit to stand in his place one day within the past few weeks and say that he had received representations from the united mine workers of America. I do not know whether or not I am in order but if that is so I should like to see that telegram tabled. I do not know whether or not it is in order to ask for it.

Mr. Robichaud: I said at the time that I had in my hand a telegram which was sent to a member of the house.

Mr. MacInnis: You used the words "united mine workers".

Mr. Robichaud: From the united mine workers.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I would again bring it to your attention that I was informed by the president and the international representative of that organization that at no time was a telegram sent from the united mine workers office in Glace Bay. Not having the experience that the hon. member has, I may not be too familiar with the rules, but if I am correct I should like to see that telegram tabled.

Mr. Robichaud: Again I wish to state that I had a telegram which was sent to a member of this house.

Some hon. Members: Table it.

Mr. Robichaud: I know you do not like it.

Some hon. Members: Table it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The rules and practice of the house require a member to accept the statement of another member made in his place. They also entitle a member to have a document tabled which is quoted but, of course, that should be asked for at the time the document is used.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I was not too sure whether I was in order in requesting that the telegram be tabled. Since I am not in order, I am quite willing to let the matter ride on the basis of the information I have received.

Mr. Speaker: I did not mean to say that the hon. member could not ask the hon. member for Gloucester to table the telegram. I would think it is up to him now whether or not he does so, but that point should have been made at the time the telegram was used.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to continue much longer with my remarks. As I said, I could go into the history of the situation regarding coal miners in Nova Scotia these last few years. I might point out that throughout the last few general agreements drawn up, the selling point of the company—I repeat that the company has changed hands since—was the fact that mechanization was going to cure all the ills from which the industry suffered. As soon as this mechanization reached its potential, the coal industry would be in a much better situation. However, it appears that the efforts made by the miners to stand pat on their contract and do their utmost to increase production per man has resulted in the miners working themselves out of a job for the time being.

I would say that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo did have a point when he referred to the marketing problem for coal and the transportation of it. This has always been one of the big problems and has yet to be corrected. I feel that the situation today is one which company policy could do much to alleviate. I am not at this time in a position to dispute company figures, but I would say that, without a doubt, there is an excess amount of coal at the present time. Although the company is in receipt of orders far in excess of the total volume of this bank of coal, still production more than takes care of market demands at present.

The one question which occurs to me in discussing this subject at the moment is one about which I have had representations from Cape Breton during this last week. I refer to the question of unemployment insurance. I would ask this government to give sympathetic consideration to amending the Unemployment Insurance Act to provide that in the event of mass lay-offs such as those which have taken place in Cape Breton recently the five-day waiting period be waived. I do not mean at this time to confine that request to Cape Breton only, so possibly the government will give serious consideration to waiving the five-day waiting period in the event of mass lay-offs.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, this government has now been in office for just over a year. We have had two openings of parliament and two speeches from the throne. We have had a baby budget and a full-grown version. Many measures have been passed by parliament, and some of them have been handled to the credit of the government, while others have not. It does appear to me that to date there has been very little indication of a sound government policy emerging. It does appear to me that there is a statement made here and a contradiction made there. The country's business is being conducted on a day to day basis.

I would think there is no greater example of conducting the country's business on a day to day basis than this action which has been taken to temporarily relieve the problem that exists in the coal mines of Nova Scotia. I am sure that the people all across this country will appreciate what the government has done as a temporary measure. On the other hand, they will regret that something more could not have been done in order to avoid this five-week lay-off. Questions will arise in people's minds as to what will happen at the end of this year. Are we going to arrive at the same situation next year? It appears to me that some solution must be found without delay. After all, there are 9,000 miners affected and the total number of people affected runs to close to 121,000 people. Somewhere, somehow, if these mines are to be kept open, markets must be found for this coal. As the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) has said, there is a market next door to Nova Scotia, a market that could have been used to greater advantage in the past. I hope that when markets are being sought for Nova Scotia coal this will be one consideration.

We have heard a good deal lately about the policy of this government to divert 15 per cent of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom. The province of Ontario imports every year more coal than Nova Scotia produces. I would suggest, therefore, that if the government is serious about this 15 per cent switch in trade, they should switch some of the trade now given to the United States by diverting it to Nova Scotia. I recognize that there will have to be a subvention paid on some of this coal, but that has been done for quite a number of years.

This afternoon hon. members questioned what had been done by the previous administration. I am sure that anyone who wishes to turn to page 23 of the seventh annual report of the dominion coal board will find there the amount of subventions paid to coal mines over the years since 1928. This amounts to $80 million. I would suggest also to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) that he might check the statement he made this afternoon that these subventions were started under his party. In addition to these subventions which have been used we have also had money lent to the coal mines of Nova Scotia for the purpose of mechanization. This policy was adopted as a result of the report of the royal commission in 1946. Up to date the money for this purpose has amounted to something over $5 million. I am sure that anybody would admit these figures hardly indicate nothing has been done for the coal mines of Nova Scotia.

However, we would agree that more has to be done if markets for the coal are to be found. Today the coal miners of Nova Scotia are facing the prospect of a five-week lay-off. No such lay-off has ever happened in the postwar period under a Liberal government, and I believe that if careful thought had been given to this problem last week a solution could have been found.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Batten: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made reference to the fact that no such lay-offs occurred in the post-war period. I have just pointed out that within the last three years miners in my own mine have been unemployed for a three-week period because of a similar cutback. I am speaking from personal experience.

Mr. Batten: I suggest to the hon. member that in the post-war period there has never been experienced in the history of Nova Scotia—

Mr. Nowlan: Who told you?

Mr. Batten: Would you care to know?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, I would.

Mr. Batten: There has never been a case in the post-war period in which 9,000 men were facing a five-week lay-off. There has been a great deal done for the coal mines in Nova Scotia, but perhaps the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) does not want to admit it. I am sure that it is irrelevant who told me about the coal mines, but these mines have become very important to those of us who have been living next door to them for so many years.

The second part of this resolution deals with the fact that the government has backed away from its commitments to promote the development of industry in the Atlantic provinces. It does appear to me there would be something wrong in expecting any federal government to formally enter into business. However, I think three things can be expected of the government if they are going to be serious about the promotion of industry in the Atlantic provinces.

There are three things that I think could be done. First, I think the federal government should provide those facilities which are within the authority of the federal government and which cannot be provided by the industry or the people concerned. Second, the government can create that atmosphere which is conducive to the development of industries. Third, it can increase, both at home and abroad, the markets that are required to sell the produce from these industries.

I am going to take a few examples from my own province in general and from my own riding in particular. I should like first to talk about the fishing industry which is the oldest industry in Newfoundland and which, up to a few years ago, was the most important one. It is not the most important one today but it is still an extremely important industry in the economy of this province. It is particularly important today because of the number of men who have been unable to find employment anywhere else and who now have returned to the fishing industry. If these men are going to be able to carry out their duties as fishermen they will need the assistance which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) is able to give. In order to develop this industry fully I would suggest that the Minister of Public Works increase or speed up the assistance which he is now giving to the fishing industry in Newfoundland in providing harbour facilities. This year, as far my riding is concerned, I am extremely grateful for what the minister has done but I believe that it could be speeded up in the hope of taking care of the large numbers of fishermen who have gone back to this industry.

The industry also requires the services of the science divisions of the Department of Fisheries. It is urgently in need of an expanded and more efficient bait service. This bait service, which we now have in Newfoundland and which was initiated by the commission government late in the 1930's, is one that has been able to assist the fishermen in getting to work earlier in the year and to stay at work later in the fall of the year and has increased immeasurably the production from this industry. Today, with the larger number of men engaged in the industry, the service as it exists is no longer able to give to all those who require it the service which they deserve. Here is another way in which the Department of Fisheries could increase the effectiveness of this industry.

Above all, this industry in Newfoundland today demands the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill). There is in Newfoundland much disquietude concerning the markets in the United States, the markets in the Caribbean and the fish markets in Italy. It may be, however, that there are those who feel that the fishing industry in the maritimes is not particularly important. Many of us remember when in 1957 the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) came back from the conference in London and was reported in a press conference on July 8, 1957 as follows:

> Discussing Britain's participation in the proposed European free market, Mr. Diefenbaker said Canada would take a "benevolent" view of this so long as commonwealth farm products were not included.
> He added that Britain also is inclined this way—though some of the continental countries are not—and that the U.K. realizes such inclusion would be serious not only for Canada but also for Australia and New Zealand.

Then a reporter said this:

> He was asked whether he would include fish in the commodities that should be excluded.
> "I don't think that's a very serious matter," he said.

May I now pass on, Mr. Speaker, to other ways in which the industry could be improved in the province of Newfoundland. The Minister of Public Works is very proud of the assistance which he has been able to give the industry of homebuilding, and I think rightly so. But while Canada has had a boom in home building, there has been no boom in home building in the maritime provinces. In my own province of Newfoundland there has been no regular boom. However, I agree with him when he says that the building of homes in Canada has a great effect on industry not only because of the amount of labour involved in building these homes but also because of the amount of labour required to provide all the things that are needed to build a home and to furnish it for those who are going to live in it. We in Newfoundland are able to supply fibre board, gypsum board of the highest quality, and a good quality of cement; and if orders were given to these small industries in Newfoundland to provide materials for the home building industry they themselves would be able to carry on to a far better degree than they are now able to do.

It is true that Canada is experiencing a recession but it appears to me that the Atlantic provinces are feeling a greater impact than is any other part of Canada. I might go on further, Mr. Speaker, and refer to my own home town. Here there is a paper industry which, before extensions were made to Powell river a year or so ago, was the largest integrated pulp and paper mill in the world. Here is an industry which pays out monthly in wages $2 million. Here is a port 30 miles from the sea which over the years has developed into one of considerable size and is comparable, for example, with Baie

Comeau or a port that has a total amount of shipping equal to the total of the bay of Chaleur. In order to show the growth of this port over the years I have here a table showing the tonnages from 1943 to 1956 inclusive. May I have the permission of the house, Mr. Speaker, to include this table in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: What is the source of the table which the hon. member submits?

Mr. Batten: The figures have been supplied to me by the paper company at Corner Brook.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave of the house to incorporate this table in his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Batten: The table is as follows:

NET REGISTERED TONNAGE OF SHIPPING USING PORT OF CORNER BROOK

Year	Vessels	Net tonnage
1943	112	129,329
1944	115	136,709
1945	129	166,809
1946	156	196,576
1947	189	257,238
1948	225	294,588
1949	403	321,019
1950	450	406,130
1951	581	602,812
1952	605	708,219
1953	728	906,979
1954	720	819,265
1955	675	795,359
1956	618	861,725

This port is one that over the years has become extremely important to the west coast of Newfoundland. During the last ten years only once has the port frozen over the extent where icebreaking service has been required and that was in the winter of 1957. When the port freezes over and icebreaking services are required the cost of the product produced at Corner Brook is increased by 12½ per cent. I am sure that hon. members who know something about the competition in the paper market at this particular time will realize the real importance of what an increased cost of 12½ per cent can mean to the producer. With regard to encouraging industry in the maritimes, here is another way in which help could be given by providing all-year round navigation through icebreaker assistance.

Of course we in Newfoundland have always had the problems of transportation and it has been an extremely serious one for all our people, and particularly for small industries scattered around the coast. May I speak for a moment concerning communications and transportation in the province of Newfoundland? Over the years since confederation the Canadian National Railways has spent a large sum of money in improving the Canadian National Railways in Newfoundland. Yet, although they have spent a large amount of money, they have not been able to keep up with the demand for transportation. It may be possible that at some time this railroad may be improved, as was referred to by the Prime Minister on April 5, 1957 when he spoke in St. John's Newfoundland and as reported by the Toronto Globe and Mail on April 16, 1957, when he said this:

> Newfoundland's narrow-gauge railway should be converted to the standard gauge because the present line retards development, adds to the cost of transportation and therefore makes it more difficult for Newfoundland industries to compete in domestic mainland markets on the same basis as other provinces.

We have a tremendous communications problem in Newfoundland. The Canadian National Telegraphs has built an excellent communications system across Newfoundland connecting the larger centres. A good job has been done and I think they are to be commended for the service which they have rendered but it is now time to expand the service to other parts of Newfoundland so they can all enjoy the modern services of a communications system.

In mentioning this I might say just a brief word about television. Certainly television is important in the development of any part of the country. Tomorrow will be a great day for Canada and if there is one splendid way of celebrating the birthday of any country it is to present to the people of that nation something worth-while. Tomorrow, for example, there will be presented the St. Lawrence seaway and we shall also have a number of provinces entering into an agreement with the federal government concerning health insurance. These are great events for any country. Added to that there will be the opening of the microwave line that will bring television to many places across the country from North Sydney to Vancouver. In the year that has just past it is regrettable to me that an extra effort has not been made so that in opening this great television service Newfoundland could have been included. Newfoundland is the oldest part of Canada and it was here that the wheels of commerce and industry turned while the wind still whistled through the trees that stood on the site of every major city of this country.

I am going to turn now to the third part of this resolution dealing with coal being used in thermal plants in the maritime provinces. I remember very well the occasion last year when Bill No. 224 came before this house. One of the objections I placed before the house on that occasion was that the bill did not include provision for hydro power for the province of Newfoundland. I argued at that time that if any improvement was to be made in the supply of electricity in any province it was necessary to employ and utilize the resources which the province had. I pointed out at that time that although it was a wonderful thing for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to be able to receive the benefit of added quantities of electricity at a cheaper rate provided by their natural resources as a whole because they did not have hydro power, Newfoundland, where we have no coal but do have sufficient water power, should have been included in the bill providing for hydro power. The reason given at that time for the building of thermal plants in the maritime provinces was that it would provide, not only more and cheaper electricity for those provinces but would also offer a market for maritime coal. These two aims are very commendable.

Recently, however, we heard that in one of the plants that is to be built some form of residual oil which has to be imported will be used instead of coal. I listened very carefully this afternoon to the remarks made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton). I can assure the house that he did not convince me with the arguments he used and I am quite sure he is not going to convince many of the maritime people with those arguments either. I was definitely under the impression, as were, I am sure, most of the people in the maritime provinces, that if thermal plants were to be built in that area they would use coal. I also recall that when members of the Progressive Conservative party were campaigning in the maritimes during the last election they, too, gave that impression. I have in my hand quotations from some of the speeches they made throughout the maritime region. The Halifax Chronicle Herald of Monday, March 3, 1958, reporting on a speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) at Port Hood, Inverness county, on March 1, stated:

> Dr. Smith answered charges he said he had heard made by Liberal speakers that the government has given no assurance proposed maritime thermal plants will be fired by coal by "offering my assurance that it is a condition of the agreement that coal will be used".

Commenting on a speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on March 3 at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, the Halifax Chronicle Herald of Tuesday, March 4, 1958 said:

> He reaffirmed statements he made Saturday night in a speech at Port Hood on Cape Breton island that it was a "condition" of the agreement between the federal and provincial governments that coal would be used in production of electric power through thermal plants.

The Halifax Chronicle Herald of Wednesday, March 19, 1958 reporting a speech made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) at Glace Bay on March 18, stated:

> Michael Starr, federal labour minister, said Tuesday night the thermal power agreement between the federal government and the maritime provinces was contingent on the use of coal.

I could go on at greater length and cite quotations from speeches made by the Prime Minister and also by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees). Surely there is no doubt in the minds of anyone from the maritimes that during the last election campaign the impression was left in that area that if thermal plants were used to develop electricity, coal would be employed in those plants and today we have learned that perhaps some plants will not use coal but will employ some kind of oil. In my view this is a reversal of policy which is not going to engender very much confidence in a government that sees fit to make one statement prior to an election and changes its mind without any satisfactory explanation following the election.

During the past month we have heard a great deal about the vision of Canada that is held by the Progressive Conservative party. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if this is the kind of thing that is going to take place the so-called vision of Canada will be exactly what the word implies, nothing more than a vision. It will be nothing more than a figment of the imagination. Indeed, it will be little other than a cloud seen away out at sea, gilt-edged by the rhetoric of the Prime Minister during the election campaign, but one which develops into nothingness as it approaches the shores of reality. If we are going to have a vision for this country there must be something real about it. When statements are made in extremely flowery language there must be something behind them other than empty words. In the development of this country there must be real and tangible events. Industry must develop on the basis of reality. It can only develop if the statements and promises made concerning it can be relied upon. It is only by making statements with all sincerity and a firm resolve in carrying them out that we will find a basis on which to produce the standard of achievement for this country that all of us long to see.

Mr. R. S. MacLellan (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion some of the most interesting remarks made in the debate today were those made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) when he said that the policy of the government in relation to Nova Scotia is to use the coal of that province for the benefit of Canada in order that this resource which we have so plentifully in the maritimes will make the contribution it should to the Canadian economy. When the minister spoke of a great steel plant to supply the steel required by the eastern seaboard of the United States and Canada perhaps he was speaking of the hidden potential conceived by a beneficent nature which placed abundant coal resources in the maritime provinces. In the maritimes we have some of the world's greatest supplies of iron ore and coal. By bringing together these two resources we could use both to make a vast contribution to this nation without subventions or assistance from anyone.

I also listened with interest and some astonishment to the debate introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud). The biggest question I see in this debate is not whether coal will be used at Saint John but how the Liberal party after years of betrayal and neglect of the Atlantic region dares now to pose this question in this house when all Canada knows that such speeches from the Liberal party at this stage are nothing but crocodile tears.

I should like to take the house back for a few moments to a time not so long ago, to the spring of 1957 and the situation in the coal industry of Nova Scotia. As hon. members know, in Nova Scotia we produce about six million tons of coal a year. Of that production about 40 per cent is used in the Atlantic region, another 40 per cent finds a market in Quebec and southern Ontario, and the other 20 per cent is sold overseas. In the winter of 1956 and the spring of 1957 the outlook for our coal industry was very bleak indeed. We saw the St. Lawrence seaway coming to completion; we saw the natural gas pipe line bringing in gas from the prairies and the use of oil becoming more widespread across the nation. We saw threatened a market for two and a half million tons of coal that we had in the province of Quebec. The people of the coal producing regions of Nova Scotia were very worried. Certainly my constituency, which at one time had a flourishing coal industry and which still has five great undeveloped coal fields, was anxious about the situation.

But under the eyes of the last administration the coal industry was allowed to die; they acted as funeral directors and wept again their crocodile tears over the corpse of a once flourishing industry. We were facing a situation of a coal industry in dire trouble, of pits being shut down not for 25 days, but for 25 years; a situation where no miners would be employed in Nova Scotia. We looked to the federal government of that time for some assistance to our coal industry, but not one word of help did we hear from them in terms of a subvention or something that would aid our recovery.

As it happens, a few years ago, at the instance of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, Dr. Christie had made a survey of the industry and had, in 1954 or 1955, filed a report suggesting a thermal power program, a system which would link up the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in order to produce cheaper power in the maritime provinces. As a matter of fact, the thing is not new because for over 20 years the Liberal government had been promising cheaper power to the maritime provinces. But cheaper power always meant subventions on coal to be used in power plants, and while they talked about cheaper power they would never give us the subventions. For example, in 1945 the then premier of Nova Scotia pointed out that in the aftermath of the war our coal industry would be in worse trouble than before and that we would have to have some power sources in the maritimes to give us cheaper power. At that time the suggestion was turned down.

Also in the spring of 1957 representations were made by the Nova Scotia minister of mines and industry, and by the premier of Nova Scotia, asking for subventions on Nova Scotia coal to be used in the power plants. Our province of Nova Scotia was ready at that time to finance and build power plants in Nova Scotia provided the government would assist them by granting the coal subventions without which cheap power could not be produced.

Finally, after 25 years or so of promises, on the eve of the election in 1957 the Liberal administration came forth with the so-called power program. As far as we were concerned, we wanted two things from a power program; first, we wanted cheaper power and, second, we wanted a market for our coal. When we first heard of this power program it looked like a new opportunity, a new life for the Nova Scotia industry. But when we began to examine the power proposal of the former government we found it very empty indeed; we found it would provide neither cheaper power nor a market for our coal. The more we asked the federal government to define its intentions and tell us exactly what they were giving us under this power program, the less satisfaction they gave us. Someone in this house used the expression "gobbledygook" a couple of days ago. We never heard more gobbledygook than the Liberals used when they introduced their power program in 1957. One of the main questions as far as we were concerned was whether or not coal would be used in these plants. Now as reported in volume 3 of Hansard of 1957 at page 3294 the former minister of northern affairs and national resources, the Hon. Jean Lesage, had this to say, and I quote:

> With regard to the fuel to be used by the plants that will be established under the federal proposal, the basic objective of securing power at the lowest possible cost is, of course, to be kept constantly in mind. This consideration will frequently affect the location of the plants that are to be built. It is, of course, also the desire of the government to see maritime coal used to the greatest extent possible in the plants that may be established.

In other words, this government wished to pretend to the people of Nova Scotia that it wanted to see Nova Scotian coal used in these power plants. But the minister went on to say:

> The sharp increase in the price of oil and in charges for ocean shipping over recent months have resulted in a situation in which, over virtually all the maritime provinces, it appears that it would be cheaper to use maritime coal for the production of power than to use oil.

In other words what the minister was saying was that coal would be used only if it were competitive with oil, only if it could compete with residual oil from Iraq and Iran after the kerosene and other more valuable products had been taken out; oil which would always be sold at a much lower price than Nova Scotian coal. He went on to say:

> There is some reason to think that this increase in the price of oil may not be as temporary as has sometimes been hoped or suggested. In the circumstances, the economic advantage of the use of maritime coal shows every likelihood of continuing.

With this statement the minister and the government of the day attempted to deceive the people of Nova Scotia into thinking that it intended to use coal in these thermal power plants when it is obvious to everyone that coal could never compete with residual oil; it is clear to everyone that coal could only be used if subventions were provided to move it within the Atlantic region to the thermal power plants.

They did not offer us cheaper power; they offered us power at cost. But we already had power at cost; we had the Nova Scotia power commission producing power at a big deficit every year. The power they offered us would not be cheaper power, it could easily turn out to be more expensive than the power we had then. Nor would the administration say that there would be a market for our coal, the second thing we wanted. We were completely turned down by the Liberal administration, whose representatives have been speaking on this question in the debate today.

Let me take a little further this question of subventions on coal without which the power program would be useless. On page 3296 of the same volume of Hansard is reported a question asked by the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. At that time he asked, and I quote:

> Has the government given consideration to expanding the principle of subventions on the movement of coal within the maritime provinces to assist in the use of that coal in competition with oil, assuming that the temporary condition may not continue and the price of oil may drop?

And the answer, given by Mr. Lesage, was:

> If the hon. member will read my statement he will find that I said or implied we did not consider it was necessary to give a subvention on coal so it would be competitive with oil.

I was going to say a deliberate misstatement was made, but I would rather say that the minister knew so little about the comparative competitive price of oil in eastern Canada that he could make a statement of that kind. But the important thing is, there was a flat refusal on April 9, 1957, a little more than a year ago, to give us subventions which would enable us to burn coal and to have cheaper power in Nova Scotia. Along with that we have the statement of the former minister of fisheries, the Hon. Mr. Sinclair, who said on a platform in Antigonish that uneconomic Nova Scotia mines must be closed. At the same time hon. members will also recall the report of the Urwick-Currie commission, which was asked to report on the relative costs of moving coal to thermal power plants or moving power along transmission lines.

This commission reported that it would be much cheaper to move coal to thermal power plants. They went on to say that so far as they were concerned, as a result of their survey, the production of coal in Nova Scotia would have to be cut to 5 million tons a year, which they admitted would displace 4,000 coal miners in Nova Scotia, and would turn 30,000 people dependent on those men out on the streets to seek their living. Still, we waited in Nova Scotia for some more clarification of the power program. We finally got it, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates), when the former prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, came to Fredericton and there a few days before the election sounded the death knell of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia, and perhaps in the maritime provinces, when he said that his government did not intend to encourage the production of coal in Nova Scotia. In other words, he adopted the Urwick-Currie report which would have left 30,000 people without a livelihood in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Robichaud: That is not what he said.

Mr. MacLellan: They speak of a crisis in the coal industry. Yes, we have a crisis in the coal industry. We have had it as long as I can remember. Some people here have a longer memory than I, but I can remember all during my lifetime on Cape Breton island a crisis every two or three years in the coal industry. As I recall it, there was very little help which came forward from the administration then in power in Ottawa to assist men out of work and laid off in Nova Scotia coal mines.

What has this present government done? In 1957, a little over a year ago, our coal industry was on the rocks. We had been losing money, a lot of money, every year since shortly after the war. It was easy to be seen that before long our mines might have to close down without some help, and the 130,000 people of Nova Scotia who looked to that industry for a livelihood would have to look somewhere else, probably to the free tickets up to central Canada suggested by the Gordon commission.

This government, when it came into power in June 1957, immediately began a program that has saved our Nova Scotia coal industry. If it were not for that program we would not be worrying about this present crisis and a 25-day lay-off; we would be faced with the situation today where hardly a ton of coal was being mined or moved out of Nova Scotia. First of all this government made the power plant program a reality in terms of cheap power and in terms of a market for coal by providing subventions to move coal within the Atlantic region to those thermal plants. Without this subvention the power program would have been an empty gift.

Then, they gave us subventions to move coal into the Ontario market and above all to protect our market in the province of Quebec against cheaper transportation which United States coal would enjoy because of the St. Lawrence seaway, and against competition from that fuel in our natural markets. Further, they gave us something which the former government would never have thought of doing, namely the preference that Nova Scotia coal has in furnaces operated and owned by the federal government, to give us an additional market there. But, Mr. Speaker, I believe one of the greatest things that has been done, and something that shows more than anything else the warmth of this government, of our leader and of his cabinet, and also their interest in our problems in the Atlantic region and also of their interest in the unemployment problem generally in Canada, was when we received the other day the announcement of the special help to the coal miners of Nova Scotia in general and of Cape Breton island in particular.

Hon. members know that we have 1,400,000 tons of coal piled up in Cape Breton. That is $14 million worth of coal. The Liberals insist that the 25-day layoff should have been covered by the government. The only possible way it could have been covered would be for the government to buy the $14 million worth of coal and try to sell it. They could not do it. No government could be expected to do that. They did the next best thing in an unprecedented move in Canadian history. Perhaps no other government on this continent or in any other place in the world would have given the co-operation and help to the Nova Scotia coal industry which was given recently in the announcement to pay the interest and carrying charges on that stockpile of coal, coal which can be sold in the normal course of events in the fall and winter of this year.

I think that all of the members from Nova Scotia in particular, and I am sure the people of Nova Scotia, give a great deal of credit to our minister, the Minister of National Revenue, (Mr. Nowlan), for guiding this tremendous provision through the cabinet, and for giving us help which by all the rules we could never have expected to receive. Then, we have speakers rise in their places who have the audacity to say, well, why was this not announced last week or the week before? I say that if they had come forward with a half decent program to assist the Nova Scotia coal industry five years ago we would not be in this crisis today. If the previous government was still in office, and if the same policies they advocated then were carried out, we would not have the thermal power program in the east today because we would not have had subventions on coal. We would not be running into the problem of whether oil or coal was to be burned in Saint John; it would not arise because we would not have the program. We would have thousands of men without work in Nova Scotia and nothing more.

Some reference was made to the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) when he spoke at Port Hood in the recent election campaign. Port Hood is in my constituency and I was with him on the platform that night. What the Secretary of State for External Affairs said was that it was the policy of the present government that federal funds would be used for those thermal power plants only if the provincial governments concerned agreed to burn coal. That was the policy of the government at that time, the guarantee to Nova Scotia, and I understand that it is still the guarantee of the government today. The guarantee is clear, but if in the thermal plant at Saint John oil is used, then that plant is to be built at the expense of the province of New Brunswick. If it will use coal, then it will be built at the expense of the government of Canada.

Much mention has been made of the fact that the agreement did not specifically tie the governments of the provinces down to using coal. The only way that coal could be used, and the only way to provide that coal could be used, was, as has been done by this government, to provide a subvention on coal so that coal is competitive with oil in thermal power plants.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say this. We in Nova Scotia feel that we have obtained from this government more in a year than we have obtained from other governments since confederation. They realized our problem; they met it boldly and with a forward program. I say further that in Nova Scotia we do not expect that 22 years of Liberal neglect and betrayal can be cured in one year. There are still many problems but I am confident that this government will meet those problems and that the position of our coal industry in Nova Scotia and the position of our thermal power program are an awful lot better than they were a little over a year ago. Thank you.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express very briefly the support of this group for the spirit, the principle and the purpose of this amendment which are to urge the government to do something to provide more employment for coal miners in Nova Scotia. In saying that, it does not include support for all the procedures suggested, or support necessarily for the remarks made by various members with respect to the present situation or the future situation.

We are supporting the principle and purpose of this amendment. I think the debate we have had today clearly indicates the lack of planning with respect to the development of our natural resources and the need for planning and an over-all policy in this respect. I know there are a good number of members in the house tonight who have over a period of 13 years listened to the former member for Cape Breton South deal with the situation, particularly at times when there were depressions in the coal industry which appeared to be periodical and not quite as bad as at present, when he urged upon the government of the day the necessity of a national fuel policy. I well remember him dealing with this matter in detail session after session during appropriate opportunities on the estimates and also in support of private members' motions moved by himself.

Here we are after all that time still finding ourselves in the same predicament. I remember the former member for Cape Breton South dealing with the situation in detail one night in the house. At the time there apparently had been some temporary improvement in the situation owing to certain subventions and things of that sort. I remember quite well his saying that if the government of Canada did not develop a national fuel policy the situation would grow worse and worse from year to year and the solution would be increasingly difficult.

I think that indicates the situation we are facing tonight. I think the whole debate justifies the C.C.F. policy and approach to this type of situation, namely the necessity for planning for a national fuel policy related to the general development of our natural resources, related to a financial and industrial policy that takes cognizance of all the facts and provides a program and policy as a result of the application of the best brains we have to a given situation free from the influence of certain private interests who, when they get into difficulties like this, throw their casualties on the public exchequer to take care of and also refuse to continue to develop their natural resources.

This failure on the part of previous governments—and I am not taking sides in this issue so far as free enterprise supporting the government is concerned—has resulted in no action, then limited action, with still considerable unemployment, sufficient unemployment to concern those persons who moved the amendment this afternoon.

This is not an isolated case, Mr. Speaker. While we all sympathize with the unemployed coal miners in Nova Scotia and are in hearty support of what the members of that area wish to do to improve the situation, this is only one instance of a number of similar situations in the coal industry in Canada at the present time. To illustrate, without being out of order, the greater compass of this problem than is recognized by many members from Nova Scotia, I will mention the difficulties of a little town in Kootenay East called Fernie. The American Coal Company operated a mine there for nearly 60 years. The company made very large profits until recent years. Because of that operation a city was built with all the facilities that go with a city. With less than a month's notice to the city council and to the union concerned the company closed down the mine. They took out the machinery. I am informed that the mine contains reserves of coal sufficient for 50 or 60 years. There was no sense of responsibility to the community, no sense of responsibility to the miners, no regard for the predicament in which these people were placed. They closed down the mine not because they were losing money but because by keeping open more efficient mines they could maintain their rate of profit.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has gone far enough by way of illustration in dealing with a situation which is entirely outside the scope of this amendment.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to relate it to the situation in Nova Scotia by tenuous argument. Anyway, that situation exists there. My point is that these companies get control of great natural resources. They utilize Canadian human resources and when they get into a situation like this then in many cases, although not all, they accept no responsibility to the Canadian people as a whole. They say to the Canadian people, "You look after the casualties, you look after the unemployment and we will maintain ownership of the resources that are not being develcped in case there is a possibility of making a profit in the future". That is what is being done across the country in many mining camps other than coal mining camps. That throws a responsibility upon the unemployed, the municipal authorities, hospital authorities, school boards and so on. It is an extra burden for which in many cases—I must say not all—these people completely fail to accept their responsibility.

In concluding my few brief remarks, because I know there are a number of members from the maritimes who are anxious to speak—I hope I speak with the consent of the Acting Prime Minister at this point and that he will not accuse me of political skulduggery or anything of that sort—I do think the situation brought to our attention today in this debate and illustrations of similar situations across Canada indicate, regardless of whether we call ourselves so-called free enterprisers or socialists, the need for national planning, for a national fuel policy, the need for us to get together regardless of party differences to formulate a policy and a plan that will do something constructive over the long run to maintain employment for the worthy citizens of this country.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate may I say that it has certainly warmed the cockles of my heart, to use an old expression, to see the happy few on the other side so very much interested in the plight of the Nova Scotia miners. The crocodile tears that flowed around the opposition benches this afternoon were purely artificial. The people who have worked under the water dripping from the roofs of the mines are the ones who know what they are talking about. I have often wondered where these great defenders of the miners who came to the defence of the miners this afternoon have been over the past few years. Where were they? I have not heard of any great work they did on behalf of the miners. I know that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and the former member for Cape Breton South, I admit, always brought the plight of the miners to the attention of the house but nothing was heard from these great men who stand up today in defence of the miners.

Mr. Robichaud: Did you read Hansard for the last few years?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I come now to this great amendment—

Mr. Robichaud: You haven't, for sure.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am sure that the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) rather blushed when he presented this amendment although maybe he was not the author of it. I do not know. However, the amendment reads:

> That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "This house regrets that the government has failed, despite the measure announced on Friday by the Prime Minister, to avert the five-week shutdown in the Nova Scotia coal mines;
> That this house regrets further—

The tears are really flowing at this point.

Mr. Robichaud: Who brought it to the attention of the house?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I did about a week ago.

Mr. Robichaud: A month after I brought it to the attention of the minister.

An hon. Member: They cannot take it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to continue if you do not mind, sir. I would be very pleased if you would allow me to continue because the hon. member for Gloucester and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), that great fisherman from down east, take up a great deal of the time of this house. It is very seldom that some of us on this side do any talking, especially myself. There are times when I feel like speaking in defence of my people, when I feel it is right, and surely then I can be allowed to carry on for a few moments. I know that a few things I shall say will hurt, but perhaps you will bear with me. I return to the amendment, and read:

> That this house regrets further that the government has backed away from its commitment to promote the development of industry in the Atlantic provinces;
> And particularly from its specific undertaking to ensure the use of coal in thermal plants assisted financially by the federal government.

Now, what gall, what unmitigated gall, especially in view of what has happened over the years. A little while ago the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnes) was saying that he had a lot in mind and he could go into the facts very fully. I could, too. However, I do not have anyone to write my speeches for me. I did not have too much time to prepare this one as I just returned from home where I was discussing this problem with the united mineworkers.

Mr. Robichaud: I can tell the hon. member that I write my speeches.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am sorry, but I did not say anything about that. I was not casting any reflection.

In any event, as I said before, what gall. One of the hon. members from Newfoundland, I do not know what his constituency is, said there were no cutbacks and no lay-offs during the post-war period. This is not correct. There were some years ago, and what did the previous government do at that time? What did hon. members who are rising to the defence of our boys now, do at that time? I would love to be sitting along the walls of the Princess mine or down in the other coal mines, and listening to some of the remarks of the boys. I should like to hear a few of the things they are saying at this point. Where was the assistance at that time granted by the previous government? There was none.

Mr. Robichaud: How blind can you be?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): We happen to use our eyes a little more. There are none so blind as those who will not see. What happened to No. 1B during the Liberal regime when 900 miners were thrown out of work in Glace Bay? What was the government doing then? The hon. member was part of it, and what did he do? What about No. 24 in the Glace Bay area? What about No. 11 in the Glace Bay area? What about the Springhill area? What about Westville area all during the Liberal regime? What about the Franklin mine, my old alma mater, out of which I was carried one time? What about the Colonial mine during the Liberal regime? What was done then?

We see all this crying. We get a man who is talking about coal mines, and he ends up by talking about fish. Oh, I understand you are getting on the record and back home they think you are really doing something. If we have not done anything, if this government has not done anything, then why on April 16 after an election, mind you, does an editorial writer for the Halifax Chronicle-Herald write an article entiled "More Glad Tidings". It reads:

> Glad tidings for the long-ailing Nova Scotia coal industry have been coming in an almost unprecedented flow in recent months.
> In the wake of the announcement of the Ottawa plan for subsidizing coal-produced power in the maritimes and the decision of DOSCO to maintain its production levels—

And, I shall get to that point in a minute.

> —despite a cutback in demand has come now the news that the federal government's subvention policy is to be amended to permit the sale of supplies from both Canada's eastern and western mines further afield.

I should like to emphasize that if nothing has been done, then why did this newspaper, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, carry this article? I am sure you all agree that it is a responsible newspaper. I continue:

> The maximum assistance to be paid in the future on shipments from the maritimes to central Canada will be $5.25 instead of $4.75 for rail-and-water movements and 60 per cent of freight rates instead of 45 for all-rail movements. This means, as the announcement by Prime Minister Diefenbaker pointed out, that our coal will be able to compete against U. S. imports in a broader area of Ontario than in the past. Along with this is an extension of the special subvention for Springhill coal, introduced last year as an emergency measure, for another full year and the offer to pay $4 per ton on the movement of coal to Europe when the demand on that continent for supplies from North America returns.
> The additional aid is further evidence of Prime Minister Diefenbaker's special consideration to the problems of the Atlantic provinces and of his keeping faith with their peoples by fulfilling his election campaign promises for a better deal.

Now, I regret very much, as everyone does that there are lay offs and that there are cutbacks. I am sure that even the hon. members over there, really down in here, sort of feel for the boys. It is quite a show you are putting on, I can see that, but if you wanted to put on a show why did you not put it on some years ago? Definitely, the lay-offs are not good. Mr. MacDonald said that there would not be any lay-offs, but I would remind you that the government does not operate the coal mines.

Let us go back a little bit farther, and I shall take you back to 1947. We were on strike for a long period of time. Oh, there were great efforts, were there not at that time, by the federal government to help out in the strike? Yes, and along the same lines as there had been in previous years of the Liberal reign, there was nothing done.

If hon. members do not mind, I should like to quote another editorial from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, and it is entitled "Another Prop For Coal". Surely, the man who writes these editorials is a good, responsible citizen. Of course, if you gentlemen in the opposition wish to say that he is lying, or something of that nature, that is your privilege. He is quoting facts, things that have happened since this government came into power. I read:

> For the second time in two months, the federal government has increased transportation assistance for the Nova Scotia coal industry to enable it to obtain new customers in central Canada where it faces stiff competition from American companies enjoying lower production costs.
> The addition of 55 cents a ton to the subvention level to give a competitive advantage over U. S. coal in a market for approximately 175,000 tons at Belleville, Ontario, now raises the maximum rail-and-water subsidy to $5.80 per ton. Nova Scotia's representative in the cabinet, Hon. George Nowlan, has described this measure of extra aid as "a special case" involving sales to the C.N.R. and the Canada Cement Company at Belleville which are fairly large consumers. But there will be a natural desire to apply it to other shipments as there arises opportunities for sales with such additional help.

Now, our good little friend who used to sit over there somewhere, the hon. member for—

Mr. Pickersgill: You can mention his name now.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Oh, yes, we remember him now. This incident has been mentioned, but I should like to mention it again for the simple reason that you gentlemen sitting over there have been sipping from the same cup as this hon. member for so long that the dregs are still there; you cannot change.

Mr. Speaker: I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, but I think it would be a good practice if the hon. member would speak to hon. gentlemen opposite through the chair.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Thank you very much; I humbly apologize. At that time, Mr. Sinclair said, and this has been mentioned several times by other speakers, that there is no point in subsidizing an industry merely for the sake of providing employment. Why has there been such a sudden change? I am sure such a point of view was discussed in the cabinet or somewhere by the previous administration. The mayor of Westville said Mr. Sinclair should have been chased out of the province for what he said about the coal industry. Mr. Sinclair repeated the statement in Vancouver.

Mr. Morton: He was chased out.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, he was chased out of Vancouver.

An hon. Member: He is very "chaste" now.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, but this is not a laughing matter. While I think of it, let us go back to the thirties, to 1938 and 1939—

Mr. Robichaud: What about the early thirties?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): —and 1940, 1941 and the early forties under a Liberal government. How was the coal industry doing?

Men had to work on shifts down in the mine for a dollar a shift or for $3 a shift. They had to work for $3 a shift in those days under a Liberal government. Then some chap by the name of Hitler sort of made a little bit of prosperity. Of course in later years we found out that all the Hitlers were not over in Germany. As I said, if this government had not done anything, then how is it that only within the past few days, in reply to the statement that was made Friday, Mr. Thomas McLachlan, president of district 26, U.M.W. said this, and I quote from the Chronicle-Herald of June 28:

> —Representations made by Premier Stanfield and others were on a very high level and it is felt by the U.M.W. representatives that timely intervention by the premier, and timely intervention by Prime Minister Diefenbaker and his cabinet are responsible for forestalling any further curtailment of employment in the mines for this year.

That is a statement of the president of the district. I should like to add my voice to that of the hon. member for Cape Breton South with regard to the matter of the waiting period for unemployment insurance. This matter has been brought to my attention by a legitimate telegram from the district office of the United Mine Workers of America. I also have here in my hand one from the secretary of the Princess local, Sydney Mines, and it is along the same line, requesting that the five waiting days be waived in order to allow the idle miners to receive the recommended financial benefit. I certainly hope that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and the department will give every consideration to this request.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that there are many aspects of this picture and many things that could be brought into the debate. As I said before, I have not had time to get all the facts together. Sometimes it would be handy if one really had a ghost writer. It would be helpful especially when you have not too much time at your disposal. From what this government has done during its short period in power I am firmly convinced that it will continue seriously and sincerely to make every effort to stabilize the coal industry which was deliberately, shall I say—in any event, it appears that way, although I may be wrong—neglected or sold down the river for so many years under the Liberal administration.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this amendment which I had the honour of seconding I feel that I must begin by expressing surprise that, since the first part of the amendment is primarily directed at the administration of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois), it should have been the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) and not that minister who was put up by the government to reply to the motion. This is all the more astonishing because of the nature of the reply made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I cannot think that, however feeble the reply the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys might have made, it could have been so insulting to the intelligence of the house as was the performance we listened to this afternoon from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. But what astonished me most about his speech was that the Tory party had found a new prophet in George Brown. I am sure that the 50 Conservative members from the province of Quebec must have been somewhat astonished to discover that the real author of the "vision" is George Brown, the man who wanted a legislative union instead of a federation in this country.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course the minister went on by quoting—and quoting only to disagree with him—the very proper statement by his predecessor in a speech in Toronto to the effect that the resources of this country within the provinces, were under the control of the provinces and that we should respect that jurisdiction. It is evident that we have another example of the many we have had since June 10 last year of the return to "Bennettism" pure and simple.

An hon. Member: Where did you get that one?

Mr. Pickersgill: What astonished me even more was the effrontery of the minister in commending the Sifton immigration policy; he was the minister who, if my memory serves me correctly, joined the government only after this government had virtually stopped immigration altogether, after it had been brought up to a point by the previous administration where it exceeded anything which had taken place in this country since 1913.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): You certainly strained yourself there.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to be led into any of the diversions which are very popular on the other side of the house. One thing that I notice, Mr. Speaker, is this. The last thing that any member of the government or any supporter of the government seems to want to talk about is what has happened in this country in the last 12 months. They are always eager to tell us about the preceding 22 years but they seem to want to obscure—and I do not blame them for it either—everything that has happened in the last 12 months, except the two elections.

An hon. Member: What about the last speaker?

Mr. Pickersgill: The last speaker talked about the 30's. It seems to me that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) gave us a very good precept to follow when he suggested that we should deal with the present and not with the past or the future.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Would the hon. member tell me when the Liberal government came into power in the thirties? I said the late thirties. I meant 1938, 1939 or the early 1940's.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said that the hon. gentlemen seemed to be very anxious to talk about the thirties. I am more anxious to talk about the year 1958 because that is what the government in office today has to deal with. This is a serious problem, as the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) quite rightly said; and it is about the only thing he said with which I agree. This is a problem affecting human beings who are not having a very pleasant time at present. I think there is plenty to occupy the house with what is going on at the present time, and what is going to be done about it, without these essays into what somebody else might have done in some other situation in hypothetical circumstances. It seems to me that after a year in office it is about time this government came to the conclusion that its own policies were going to have some effects.

An hon. Member: They are.

Mr. Pickersgill: Very well. An hon. member said "they are". Here is what I read from the D.B.S. Daily Bulletin for Thursday, June 26, 1958:

Coal—Shutdown of Nova Scotia Mines

Coal Production Smaller

Production of coal in May declined 10.8 per cent to 827,000 tons from 927,300 a year earlier, making the January-May total 10.8 per cent smaller at 5,085,400 tons compared to 5,698,600 a year ago.

Yes, sir; they are. It is precisely because that sort of thing is going on and, as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) so properly said, not merely in the coal industry but to a greater or lesser degree in nearly every industry in this country that hon. gentlemen opposite do not like to contemplate the last 12 months and spend all their time talking about something else.

Mr. Baskin: Another tight money policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, you are getting another tight money policy and as you watch interest rates increase in the next few months; as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) indicated, you will find it gets tighter and tighter.

Mr. Baskin: That is what you hope.

An hon. Member: Never mind looking in your crystal ball; tell us what to do.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish now to address myself to the third part of the motion which reads in part as follows:

—this house regrets further that the government has backed away from its commitment to promote the development of industry in the Atlantic provinces, and particularly from its specific undertaking to ensure the use of coal in thermal plants assisted financially by the federal government.

I am not going to take the time of the house by repeating what has been said by hon. gentlemen on this side of the chamber about remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite during the election campaign including the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith).

The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLellan), who is a new member, made a very notable contribution to the debate in his really distinguished speech, although I did not agree with much of what he said. He reminded us again, in his remarks, that he was on the platform when the Secretary of State for External Affairs made the statement that it was a condition of the agreement with the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick that coal would be used in these thermal plants.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources this afternoon said that Mr. Stanfield in the statement he made in the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia had reiterated the view taken by the minister himself. What Mr. Stanfield is reported to have said is this. According to the debates of the house of assembly of the province of Nova Scotia of March 4, 1958, when he was asked by Mr. Hicks whether an express stipulation was in the agreement about the Saint John plant, the premier is reported to have replied:

Mr. Speaker, I don't know how—what my hon. friend wants. I said that I had been instructed—

I do not know why he would use that word. I continue:

—by the Prime Minister that the burning of coal is a condition precedent to federal assistance in the construction of any thermal power station under this agreement.

Mr. Fielding: Under the master agreement?

The Premier: Under the master agreement.

Here we have the premier of Nova Scotia saying formally in the legislature, after being questioned repeatedly so that there could be no doubt as to what he was talking about, that it was his understanding that this was to be a condition expressly contained in the master agreement. We have the master agreement that was brought down here in the house by the minister and there is no such provision in it. What is more, we have these expressions from the minister which, even after his repetition of them today, still leave us and leave the people in the Atlantic provinces in great doubt as to what fuel is in fact going to be used in this thermal plant at Saint John.

The minister gave us a long lecture this afternoon, first about what happened 100 years ago and then about what might happen 40 years from now, which is ten years longer than the period for the amortization of these agreements. But it seems to me that the one thing he was most anxious to avoid was dealing with the real point, and the point is this. Surely it would have been perfectly simple for the government to put into this agreement a stipulation that coal should be used, not necessarily forever, but for as long as coal was available and there was not an alternative market for it.

I want to be fair about this, and I agree that circumstances might arise such as were envisaged in that perfectly proper statement made by Mr. St. Laurent at Fredericton, which has been so distorted in this house by hon. gentlemen opposite, that coal will become more valuable as an industrial product than it will be as a fuel. If that situation arises nobody in the provincial or federal governments would be foolish enough to want to use coal as a fuel, but that situation has not arisen; and it would have been very simple to put in the master agreement, or any of the other agreements, a provision that as long as coal was available, and as long as there was not an alternative market for coal, coal should be used, but if there was a better alternative market for coal and some other fuel was cheaper it might be used. That would have been perfectly simple and everybody would have understood it, but there is some nigger in this woodpile somewhere—

Mr. Baskin: You are in it.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and the minister is obviously very anxious to keep the nigger there. The plain fact is that if the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—I believe it is true of the people of New Brunswick as well, but certainly it would be true of the people of Nova Scotia—had thought there was any doubt about the statements that were being made to them by minister after minister before March 31 there would not have been the kind of result there was on the evening of March 31. This is the greatest and most obvious double-cross we have witnessed on the part of the present administration.

I do not believe that either the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or any of his colleagues on the treasury benches are prepared to rise in their places and tell us that as long as coal is available for this purpose, and there is no better market for it, it will be used in the Saint John plant and in every other plant that is assisted by the federal government. If any hon. gentleman on the treasury benches is willing to say that I am sure my good friend, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), will join with me in withdrawing the third part of the amendment at once. We cannot understand why this statement has not been made.

The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond, the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources spoke about the problem of using coal in thermal plants and suggested that in some extraordinary way it would not have been possible to use coal in the thermal plants which were proposed by Mr. Harris and Mr. Lesage because it would have been too expensive.

I noticed that the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond, in an otherwise straightforward and candid speech, was very careful to leave out the most important and authoritative statement that was made on this subject and that was the one made by Mr. Winters last spring with the full authority of all his colleagues to the effect that it was the policy of the government to keep the cost down to the cost of the lowest priced fuel, and that if in order to keep coal down to the price of oil it was necessary to give a subvention to the coal, a subvention would be given. That was the policy of the Liberal government. It was our formal policy, formally enunciated by the minister from Nova Scotia and publicly stated.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question. Would he advise the house on what date the statement was made by the former minister of public works to which he has referred?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was made on June 6, 1957.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The election was on June 10; it was an election promise.

Mr. Pickersgill: I could read the hon. gentleman some statements that were read this afternoon about the same subject as late as March 25, 26 and 27. These statements were made by hon. gentlemen opposite who occupy the treasury benches. The reason that statement was made by Mr. Winters is perfectly clear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Just like some others.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was because there was some question raised about the statement that was read by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond made by Mr. Lesage in this house.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): It did not work, though.

Mr. Baskin: He was looking for votes, and you know it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The statement by Mr. Lesage says that, so far as he could then foresee, coal would be cheaper than oil and that he did not feel there was any necessity—and I do not agree at all with the gloss or interpretation put on that statement by the hon. member—that he did not see any necessity for crossing the bridge before he reached it, because he believed that coal would remain cheaper than oil for some time to come.

But the question was posed during the debates that were going on in various parts of the maritime provinces at that time as to what the government would do if this eventuality arose. A formal decision was made by the government and announced by Mr. Winters on that subject, and that was our policy and it remains our policy and, as the hon. member for Gloucester said this afternoon, it would probably be a more effective policy in reducing the cost of power than the policy enunciated by the present administration. And I think that perhaps I should remind hon. members of this house who may, some of them, have forgotten it, that when Mr. Harris made his statement in the budget debate on March 14 about these thermal power plants, it was warmly received by the premiers of both provinces who came here to Ottawa and who accepted the whole proposal in principle.

What happened between that date and certain other events? I am not going to put an interpretation on the conduct of my political opponents, but something did happen which, judging from what has happened since, had nothing to do with the merits of the case.

An hon. Member: It happened twice, did it not?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it happened twice, and what has happened now? The great double-cross. Once the election is passed, once the voters can have no more say for several years, the real policy appears.

The other thing that is very puzzling to me is this: We were told when this legislation was before the house last June that it was a matter of the greatest urgency, a matter of extreme importance to the government of New Brunswick who needed to get this bill so that they could go right ahead with this power project in Saint John. What has happened? Half a million dollars, more or less, was put into the estimates last year for this purpose, yet none of it was spent. This year another appropriation has been made, yet no agreement has so far been signed. What has happened to the urgency? Why, last January, was it so urgent, and why, today, has nothing whatever happened? It does seem to me that before this debate closes some member of the government should tell us what is really going on about the Saint John plant. Of course, we do know that in the last 12 months there has been a marked decline in industrial activity, accompanied by a regrettable decline in the demand for electric power. We were told by the minister this afternoon in a burst of candour that this power plant at Beechwood, for which a large sum of the taxpayers' money is being pledged, is now exporting power to the United States. Perhaps this is one of the ways in which the government is seeking to redress its unfavourable trade balance of which we have heard so much.

But it does seem to me that we were not told last January, when this legislation was considered so urgent, that the taxpayers of Canada were having to put up money to complete a power plant to export power to the United States. We are told that now. That is another of the things that come out after an election, another of those things that would have changed the face of things a good deal.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): You should read the maritime papers.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman would like me to read the maritime papers, would he? I will oblige him. I have here the Halifax Chronicle Herald, which the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. Muir) has told us is a most reputable newspaper. I have here an editorial, somewhat later in date than those he regaled us with, and somewhat different in tone. It is entitled "The Plight of Coal" and it is dated June 19, 1958. The first paragraph begins:

> Dosco authorities now have served what is being taken as an official warning of their intentions to cut back on coal production, "over the next several months" and, although the notice has been carefully phrased to ease the blow as much as possible, it still has hit as disheartening and disappointing news.
> It was just four months ago today that we were moved to applaud in these columns an announcement from the company that, despite the decline in demand and growing stockpiles, there would be no layoffs or other forms of reduced operations.

I wonder, if that announcement had not been made, whether the results would have been quite the same on March 31. I continue the quotation:

> This official statement, said Premier Stanfield as he read it to a cheering legislature, was "magnificent". It was issued by the same man who now conveys the sad tidings of this week, DOSCO management chairman Allan C. MacDonald. And it was less than a month ago—on May 22—that he repeated this assurance to U.M.W. officials in Cape Breton. The present intentions are, perhaps, understandable in the light of the existing market conditions for coal, but should such hopes have been held out to the miners and to the one-fifth of Nova Scotia's population which directly depends on the coal industry for livelihood? It has made many people here wonder if there is even worse news from Dosco ahead.
> On top of this there was the disclosure of the previous day, when federal government documents concerning its program of assistance for providing cheaper power in the maritimes were tabled in the House of Commons, that there was no stipulation written into the agreements with the provincial governments that coal would or should be used in the new thermal power stations.

It is evident that the editor of this paper is not much impressed by the arguments put forward today by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the leader of the house would tell us what he hopes to do tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we continue with the supply motion and then, when we get into supply, we will take the items of government business which were listed on Friday, first the motion which provides for setting up a sessional committee to deal with government-owned railways and shipping, then the second reading of the act to incorporate the lakehead harbour commissioners, then the second reading of the act to amend the Lake of the Woods Control Board Act, and following that the resolution concerning the Yukon and the Cape Breton Highlands national park.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order of the house passed this day.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES BY PROVINCES, 1951 AND 1956

Question No. 32—Mr. Argue:

1. What were the total expenditures by the federal government for goods and services for the years 1951 and 1956?

Questions

2. Of this amount what proportion would be estimated to have been spent in those years in each of the provinces?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. The government accounts are not maintained in such a manner so as to give an exact answer to this question. However, the following statement showing expenditures by standard objects of expenditure covers mainly expenditures on goods and services.

	Thousands of dollars Fiscal year ended March 31
	1952	1957
Civil salaries and wages	371,996	595,676
Civilian allowances	7,230	9,252
Pay and allowances, defence forces and R.C.M.P.	208,994	434,390
Professional and special services	39,137	73,987
Travelling and removal expenses	47,530	61,001
Freight, express and cartage	18,342	35,249
Postage	3,398	5,441
Telephones, telegrams and other communication services	8,213	14,750
Printing of departmental reports and other publications	5,204	6,597
Films, displays, broadcasting, advertising, etc.	7,889	10,639
Office stationery, supplies, equipment and furnishings	17,841	18,199
Materials and supplies	248,685	173,777
Buildings and works including land—
Acquisition and construction	401,350	502,145
Repairs and upkeep	88,394	163,476
Rentals	8,528	17,791
Equipment—
Acquisition and construction	401,350	502,142
Repairs and upkeep	88,394	163,476
Rentals	684	1,927
Municipal and public utility services	11,895	29,365
Interest on public debt, etc.	531,035	534,141
Movement of mail by land, air and water	38,040	48,932
	2,404,740	3,185,214

2. Not available.

DORVAL AIRPORT FACILITIES

Question No. 81—Mr. Macnaughton:

1. Has a final decision been reached to use satellite or aeroport parking spots instead of finger system parking for aircraft at Dorval airport?

2. What is the maximum number of planes that can be handled at any given time at a satellite or aeroport?

3. What is the estimated length of stay permitted each aircraft at the aeroport?

4. Are these facilities sufficient to handle all present and estimated future domestic and international passengers, freight, and mail services?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. This depends entirely on the size of the aeroquay satellite but can run to ten or more.

3. Plans call eventually for turn around times of 20 to 40 minutes depending upon type of aircraft and type of operation, e.g. domestic or overseas international.

4. Within the foreseable future, yes.

AIR TERMINAL COST, DORVAL, QUE.

Question No. 82—Mr. Macnaughton:

1. What are the estimated figures of total cost for completion of the new air terminal at Dorval, Quebec?

2. What was the original estimated cost?

3. When is it expected to complete the said terminal?

4. Is there a general contractor in charge? If so, what is the name?

5. Are there any subcontractors? If so, what work are they performing, and what are their names?

6. Were tenders called, and on what dates were contracts awarded?

Questions

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. $15,000,000 for main terminal building.

2. Various cost estimates were made at various stages of the project but final accurate cost estimating was not possible until 1957 because final plans and specifications were not completed until that year. Earlier estimates varied from $10 million, when the project was first under study in 1954 and 1955, to $12.5 million in 1956, as plans and specifications were prepared, and to from $14 to $15 million dollars in 1957 as plans became final.

3. Late 1959.

4. Yes, the Foundation Company of Canada.

5. Yes, as below—

Pre-cast concrete slabs	Creaghan and Archibald
Pre-cast misc. concrete	Toronto Cast Stone
L. W. concrete fill	Porete Co. (Canada) Ltd.

RENOUS NAVAL DEPOT, N.B.—CASUAL EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 94—Mr. McWilliam:

What is the estimated number of man hours or man days and/or estimated amount of money that will be required for casual employment for 1958-59 at the Renous naval ammunition depot, Renous, New Brunswick?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

It is estimated that there will be a requirement for a total of 1,200 man-days for casual employment in the fiscal year 1958-59 at the R.C.N. ammunition depot, Renous, New Brunswick.

PUBLIC WORKS—INSPECTION DURING BUILDING CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 98—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What procedure is followed by the Department of Public Works in connection with inspection during construction of public buildings?

2. By what method are inspectors selected?

3. Are there basic requirements necessary for the appointment?

4. Is veterans preference followed?

5. Is preference given to local applicants?

6. If the architects are responsible for inspection, how are public rights safeguarded?

7. If under the architects' inspection, are inspectors engaged in full time service and required to be on the site at all times during actual construction?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) Where plans and specifications are prepared by outside consulting architects, it is the general practice to also make them responsible for the supervision of construction; (b) where plans and specifications are prepared by the department's own staffs, the work is supervised either by the staff in the district architect's office, or by a clerk of works (inspector) who is appointed for that specific project.

2. Clerks of works are appointed by the civil service commission following public competition.

3. Yes. Demonstrated ability to interpret specifications and read blueprints; a number of years of experience in the duties of a foreman or contractor on building construction or maintenance work; familiarity with prices and qualities of building materials; elementary school education with additional credits for further academic training; ability to prepare field sketches and reports; satisfactory physical condition and personal suitability.

4. Yes.

5. Yes.

6. The district architect, in whose territory and under whose jurisdiction the work is carried out, makes periodic visits to the project to assure that the intent of the plans and specifications is carried out and that the work is proceeding as expeditiously as possible.

7. (a) On projects exceeding $200,000 the outside architect is to provide constant supervision, and to that end he is also required to assign, at his own expense, a competent clerk of works who is to be on the work continually at all working hours during construction of the building; (b) on projects under $200,000 the outside architect is not required to assign a clerk of works, but he must give the project proper supervision during the life of the contract and particularly he, or a competent representative of his office, must be on the work at all times during the critical periods of construction, such as when excavation is being carried to its final levels; forms are being built, reinforcing placed; and concrete being poured.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION—TRUCK PURCHASES

Question No. 101—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government, through the Department of Defence Production, recently awarded contracts for the purchase of trucks from the Ford Motor Company of Canada and from Mercedes-Benz Limited?

2. If so, how many from each company and what was the amount of the respective contracts?

Answer by: Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production):

1. Yes.

2. Contracts awarded since January 1, 1958;

(a) Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited.

Jan. 21, 1 only 18,000 lbs. GVW cab and chassis	$ 4,455.63
Jan. 24, 120 only 3-ton dump	384,197.30
Feb. 5, 4 only truck tractors for 15-ton semi-trailers	28,230.06
Feb. 17, 20 only 27,500 lbs. GVW dump	124,377.40
May 23, 17 only ½-ton pick-up	25,155.75
June 2, 5 only standard cab and chassis	26,560.00
167 only	$592,976.14

Jan. 15, 13 only 1½-ton cargo	$ 51,425.22
Jan. 24, 8 only 3-ton dump	35,313.20
Apr. 22, 5 only 3-ton dump	22,083.25
May 21, 44 only 3-ton stake	173,760.40
May 21, 18 only 1½-ton	81,235.56
88 only	$363,817.63

UNEMPLOYED, 45 YEARS AND OVER

Question No. 110—Mr. Rouleau:

1. How many persons being 45 years of age and over are at present looking for work in Canada?

2. How many of them are female applicants?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Minister of Labour):

1. In the week ended May 24, 1958, the estimated number of persons without jobs and seeking work, 45 years of age and over, was 92,000.

2. In the week ended May 24, 1958, the estimated number of females without jobs and seeking work, 45 years of age and over, was less than 10,000.

Questions

PILOT SUPERINTENDENT, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER SYSTEM

Question No. 115—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is there a Department of Transport superintendent of pilots for the St. Lawrence river system between Montreal and Kingston?
2. If so, what is his name?
3. Has this official, since May 1, told pilots under his authority that they would have police protection from striking pilots at the port of Kingston?
4. If so, what pilots and what dates?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.
2. Mr. J. Melanson.
3. When the great lakes sailing masters set up picket lines at Kingston, the superintendent informed the river pilots under his jurisdiction that in case of any threatened violence by the sailing masters against pilots desiring to pass through picket lines, police protection would be requested.
4. No record kept.

SHIP ACCIDENT, SARNIA WHARF

Question No. 116—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has there been an accident involving a ship and the government wharf at Sarnia?
2. If so, what were the details in terms of time, damages, costs, and causes?
3. Did the ship have a pilot? If so, what was his name, address and what were his qualifications?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.
2. At about 10 a.m. on June 10 the Prins Willem V, of Rotterdam, operated by the Orange line, while moving from Empire Hanna coal dock to the government dock, crashed into the wooden platform west of the freight dock. Considerable damage was done to the platform which is being assessed by engineers of the Department of Public Works. No appreciable damage was done to the ship.
3. It is understood that the ship had a sailing master on board but his name is not known.

SHIPPING STATISTICS, LAKE MICHIGAN

Question No. 117—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the government any statistical information on the percentage of Canadian shipping using lake Michigan in 1956 and 1957 in relation to the total shipping on that lake for those years?
2. If so, what is the percentage?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1 and 2. No such information is available in the Department of Transport.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 1, 1958

The house met at 4.30 p.m.

DOMINION DAY

91ST ANNIVERSARY OF CONFEDERATION

Mr. Speaker: If it be the wish of the house to recognize this, our Canadian national holiday, before entering upon routine business, may I suggest that we sing "God Save the Queen", a verse of "O Canada" in French and a verse of "O Canada" in English. For the benefit of hon. members who may not be equally good in both languages the words have been put on the desks of all members.

Whereupon the members of the house rose and sang

God Save the Queen

and

O Canada.

TELEVISION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF NATION-WIDE SYSTEM

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be in keeping with the practice which has been developed under the order for motions if I were to make a very brief and very informal statement at this time. We are today celebrating the anniversary of the birthday of this country, the linking of the four older provinces which at that time were united in one bond of determination to maintain their identity and independence, and to prevent absorption by the country to the south.

At that time communications were very limited. There was a telegraph system and a railway, but to the west there were no communications unless by smoke signals or messengers who used canoes. Then British Columbia joined confederation, and telegraph lines, railway lines and finally telephones were established. We could communicate back and forth in a fraction of a moment, and we could travel across this continent in a short time.

Today it has been made possible for us to see each other from one end of this continent to the other. Those who are living on the far west coast, beyond the Rocky mountains, can look over those hills and see how the rest of us in Canada live. We in the east can watch the industrial development of the various provinces. All this has been made possible by the inauguration of a national television system, which has been established and is now in operation, extending from Sydney in Nova Scotia to Victoria in British Columbia, and shortly to be extended to Newfoundland.

I thought it fitting that this should be put on the record at this moment. The national program started at 4.30, just as we opened this sitting of parliament. I want to pay tribute to the engineers whose scientific abilities made possible this achievement in so far as plans and development are concerned. I also want to pay tribute to the various telephone companies who have financed this undertaking. I also want to pay tribute to the officers and staff of the C.B.C. whose imagination and courage have made possible this national system which we inaugurated some 15 minutes ago.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that members of the house will have heard with great pleasure and satisfaction the announcement made by the minister. It is peculiarly appropriate on our national day that this extension of the microwave system, so important in bringing all parts of our country together and begun some three years ago, has been completed or almost completed on this July 1. I share with him the hope that the extension to Newfoundland, without which it will not be complete, will soon be celebrated also.

Mr. Nowlan: Within a few months.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of this group I wish to join with the remarks of the previous speakers, and again in connection with this day say that while we are socialists and have a very progressive approach to life as it exists today, we believe in preserving the best traditions of the past. We trust that in future this house will set an example by returning to those good traditions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—REPORTED MISGIVINGS BY CANADA AS TO INTERVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he would care to comment on a press report that Canada has informally expressed its misgivings to Great Britain and the United States about any intervention in the Lebanese crisis, even under the flag of the United Nations.

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the members of the house know the Secretary General of the United Nations returned from the Middle East a few days ago and at the present time is engaged in consultations and discussions with heads of missions at the United Nations. It is expected that within a few days he will make a report to the security council on the situation in that area. I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment now on the Lebanese situation.

However, I will answer specifically and pointedly the question which the Leader of the Opposition has addressed to me. I saw that press report, and I give to the house the assurance that there is no difference of opinion between the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Canada with respect to the central role which the United Nations can play in solving the problem in Lebanon. We, with the United States and with the United Kingdom, are resolved to give every possible support to the secretary general and to the observation group to which we have contributed some officers.

CAMBODIA AND VIET NAM—REPORTED REFUSAL OF CANADA TO ACT IN BORDER DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs could comment on the report that Canada has refused to join with Poland and India, the other members of the international commission, regarding the border dispute between Cambodia and South Viet Nam?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been an incident between South Viet Nam and Cambodia. Our representative, our acting commissioner on that supervisory commission, has taken the stand at a meeting of the commission that this particular dispute does not fall within the jurisdiction of the commission. The commission, our acting commissioner has pointed out, was established to supervise the cease-fire agreement between the communist Viet Minh and the army of the royal Cambodian government and not between Cambodia and South Viet Nam. Speaking for myself and for my department, we concur in the view he has put forward. That view has been taken on other occasions, and has been accepted.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. My hon. friend will recall that I put a question to him two weeks ago with regard to the functioning of the commission in Cambodia and in South Viet Nam. Possibly this would be a good opportunity for the minister to indicate, if he feels this is an appropriate moment, the likely tenure of the commission in both Viet Nam and Cambodia.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): The hon. member for Essex East will recall that in reply to the question he addressed to me I indicated that I would like time to see what we could do with respect to the Laos situation. Those proceedings are progressing satisfactorily, and I promise the house that we will thereafter address ourselves to the question of the dissolution of the commission in Cambodia.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSIONS OF SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS AND MOUNTED POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this being our national holiday, and an occasion upon which we remember the pioneers who built our nation, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what I consider to be a most appropriate question for this day.

Can the minister inform the house, in view of the anxiety of many of our civil service pioneers who still wait in hope, what progress is being made in the study of the problem surrounding increases in pensions for retired civil servants and retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; and does the minister realize that this continuous procrastination with respect to a decision on this matter is causing the problem to be solved for an increasing number of pensioners by the effluxion of time?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, so far as the first part of the question is concerned, this matter is continuing to receive active study. So far as the second part of the question is concerned, my only comment is that it is not appropriate to this or any other occasion. I do not think it is the sort of question that my hon. friend expects to be taken seriously. There has been no procrastination in this matter; on the contrary, there has been very serious study of the problem, which may be more difficult to solve than the hon. member may realize.

FISHERIES

SALT FISH—INQUIRY AS TO RECENT MEETINGS IN OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Fisheries in a position to report to the house on the meetings which took place in Ottawa last week between representatives of the fishing industry and officials of the federal and provincial governments in order to study the problems of the salt fish industry in relation to problems of export, production and quality?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there has been a series of meetings between those interested in the salt fish industry and the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Fisheries of this government. The parts of the conference having to do with matters which fall under the jurisdiction of my department are now receiving very careful attention, but as this series of meetings was called by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I would like to refer the main part of the question to that minister for reply.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Trade and Commerce prepared to answer the question?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are giving very serious consideration to the problem of the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces. We have had a series of five or six meetings with the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland, representatives of NAFEL, of the Newfoundland salt fish trade association, of the Newfoundland fishermen's federation and of the Nova Scotia salt fish exporters' association. All these people gave very comprehensive and reasoned statements of the position of the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces. Officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce and of the Department of Fisheries are giving close attention now to these submissions, and we hope some changes and improvements may result from the meetings we have had and from discussions which will subsequently be held.

There has been some disturbance in the minds of some people with regard to NAFEL, which enjoys a peculiar position in the Canadian economy inasmuch as it has an exclusive licence in connection with the sale of salt fish. That licence was originated by the government of Newfoundland before confederation and continued subsequently by the federal government. It will not be discontinued without action on the part of the government, and I should like to assure those connected with the Atlantic fishing industry, and particularly the people of Newfoundland, that a full year's notice will be given if and when the exclusive rights of NAFEL are brought to a conclusion.

[Later:]

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to clarify that part of his statement having to do with the year's notice which he said NAFEL would receive. Would that notice date from any point in the year when the decision might be taken, or would it date only from that date on which NAFEL's contracts would normally be renewed?

Mr. Churchill: I think it would date from the time at which notice was given, but it would be in line with the normal commercial marketings of NAFEL. We do not want to interfere in any way with contracts that are being entered into now. It is that assurance I wish to make publicly, so that people interested in NAFEL's operations will know they can carry on their business at this present moment without suddenly being stopped. What they have been afraid of is that overnight this privilege of theirs might be discontinued. We have no such intention.

MIRAMICHI, N.B.—STATEMENT ON REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING CHANGE IN SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi asked me a question which I took as notice. He asked if representations had been made to me or to my department by the Miramichi salmon drifters' association seeking a change in the New Brunswick fishing regulations to eliminate the two-week lift period for Atlantic salmon net fishing. No such request has been received since the lift period was fixed under order in council P.C. 1958-441 of March 29 last.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENT ON REPORTED INABILITY OF CANADA TO OBTAIN U.S. NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on June 25 the Leader of the Opposition asked me the following question:

—whether the Canadian government has made representations to the United States government concerning amendments to the United States atomic energy act, approved by the Senate in Washington on Monday, which would prevent Canada from obtaining United States nuclear weapons of any kind, and would make it illegal for the United States even to supply the information to enable Canada to design such weapons for use by our navy, army or air force?

I am bound to give a somewhat extended answer and I would ask you, sir, to blame the Leader of the Opposition for asking such a question rather than myself for the length of the answer.

I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that we have followed closely the discussions in the United States congress of the amendments to the United States atomic energy act. The house will appreciate that certain restraint has had to be exercised in discussing the legislation of another country while it is under review by the legislature of that country. The United States government is being kept fully aware of possible Canadian military requirements, and we anticipate that we would experience little difficulty because of the amendments under consideration in making any future arrangements with the United States government in the military application of atomic energy which may be necessary for our joint defence.

However, the Leader of the Opposition's question concerned a situation last week in which the United States congress was considering amendments proposed by the two United States houses to amendments proposed by the United States executive to an act which is already amended from the form in which it was originally conceived. I am sure the house will understand, therefore, that it would be inadvisable for me to comment in any detail at this stage on what has been a very complicated amending process.

I would, however, like to add a further comment on the implication of the question which has been asked. There is a suggestion in the question, it seems to me, that the process of amending the United States atomic energy act which is going on has in some sense made more restrictive the provisions of that act. I can with assurance tell the house that this is the exact opposite of the intent of the United States administration, as indicated in the hearings which have taken place over some months. Late last October, following discussions with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the President of the United States indicated that he would request congress to amend the atomic energy act in order to permit close and fruitful collaboration in this field between the United States and other friendly countries. Again, in his message on the state of the union early this year, the President of the United States emphasized the necessity that congress enact legislation to enable the United States to exchange appropriate scientific and technical information with friendly countries.

There have been a number of other statements by senior United States spokesmen which echo the view that the amendments were intended to liberalize existing United States atomic energy legislation. Many features of the act as it existed before the recent amending process remain unchanged. Even under the earlier provisions of the act it has been possible to meet Canadian requirements as they have developed.

At this stage it is impossible to be certain of all the implications of the amended act for Canada, or indeed for any other interested country. After the new act becomes effective there will follow a period when important interpretations have to be made of its terms in the light of specific requirements. Certainly the amendments would seem to provide somewhat more latitude for co-operation between the United States and friendly countries than was provided in the United States law preceding the amendments.

It is for this reason that the Canadian government anticipates that future Canadian defence needs, in so far as this area of co-operation with the United States is concerned, will be served just as in the past by the necessary degree of United States co-operation in this field that has been possible under existing United States legislation.

I have dealt with the general aspects of the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. He has raised as well two particular points. So far as the first of these is concerned, it is not my understanding that the amendments to the United States atomic energy act in so far as they concern the supply of nuclear weapons to other countries affect in any way the provisions of the atomic energy act of 1954.

As to the final part of his question about supply and design information concerning atomic weapons, I should like to point out that the United States atomic energy act as amended will make provision for the supplying of United States restricted data necessary for the development of defence plans, the training of personnel in the employment of defence against atomic weapons, the evaluation of the capabilities of potential enemies in the employment of atomic weapons, and the development of compatible delivery systems for atomic weapons.

The implications of the revised United States atomic energy act for the Canadian defence program perhaps fall within the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of National Defence. I apologize for the length of the answer, but I could not possibly have done better.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR INFORMAL ATTIRE OF EMPLOYEES IN HOT WEATHER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the extremely hot weather would the Acting Prime Minister give consideration to allowing the members of the staff of the House of Commons to remove their jackets, so they may perform their duties in more comfortable attire during this warm interval?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the hon. member that this comes under your jurisdiction.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUDBURY, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF OLD BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister advise whether negotiations have been reopened for the calling of tenders for the sale by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation of the old building in Sudbury, at the request of the city council?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question I wish to state that the officials of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation are presently studying the demands made by the city of Sudbury and certain difficulties that have arisen in the negotiations with the company that had made an offer and deposited a cheque.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO RETURN TO THE HOUSE OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister which I do, sir, with all due respect to the Acting Minister of Labour (Mrs. Fairclough). Can the Acting Prime Minister inform the house when the Minister of Labour is expected to return to the house after his lengthy absence, to accept the responsibilities he should assume as minister of his department in view of the continuing economic crisis caused by strikes, lockouts and unemployment?

Coal—Shutdown of Nova Scotia Mines

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that upon reflection the hon. member will realize that the statement he has just made is extremely unfair to the Minister of Labour. It is all right for the hon. member to drag in the question of strikes and lockouts, in which he seems to be very much interested—

Mr. Winch: I am.

Mr. Green: —though not necessarily always from the point of view of getting them settled. The government is very much interested in strikes and lockouts.

Mr. Winch: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Winch: —I have always been interested in getting strikes settled.

Mr. Green: The Minister of Labour has been absent in Europe on very important business having to do with his department, and I am surprised that the hon. member for Vancouver East has not realized that fact.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether there is more important business for the Minister of Labour than the situation now existing in Canada?

Mr. Green: The Minister of Labour has various duties, and I think most fair-minded members of the house will agree that since his appointment he has done an excellent job as minister.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, June 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Robichaud.

COAL—ALLEGED CHANGE IN GOVERNMENTAL POLICY

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind hon. members of the first part of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Gloucester, because I wish to address my remarks now particularly to that part of the amendment. It asks the house to regret "that the government has failed, despite the measure announced on Friday by the Prime Minister, to avert the five-week shut-down in the Nova Scotia coal mines." It is quite obvious, sir, that this measure has failed to avert a shut-down.

The measure announced by the Prime Minister, welcome though it was—and I hasten to say that any expedient that could be justified at all would be welcomed by us on this side of the house in order to keep these miners at work—is after all only an expedient, and it is very hard to see why it would not have been just as easy for the government to take this action two weeks earlier and avert a shut-down altogether. After all, as I understand the statement of the Prime Minister, all the government is proposing to do is to pay the carrying charges on the stockpile of coal over and above the normal stockpile. If that would be a good thing to do at the end of June, it is very hard to understand why it would not be an equally good thing to do at the beginning of June, and it is very hard to understand why the government left this matter to the very last moment, because as was pointed out last night, and I do not intend to repeat it, the government had plenty of warning of what was coming.

The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLellan), who made the only speech on the government side deserving of any serious consideration, is obviously a good lawyer. He is the kind of lawyer one would engage to defend one if one had been guilty of murder, because I never heard a better attempt to make black appear white than the effort made by the hon. gentleman last evening. He talked about Liberal neglect and betrayal of the coal industry. He talked about that in the face of the indubitable fact that never during the Liberal regime were 9,000 miners thrown out of work at any one time, as has happened since the Tories came into office. He talked with total disregard of the fact that subventions, which have been in operation since 1928, were a Liberal expedient. He told us a fairy tale about Angus Macdonald, when the fact, of course, is that Angus Macdonald was a member of the government at the time the royal commission was established which recommended mechanization, one of the most serious efforts yet made to make the coal industry efficient and economically sound.

He also said that the present government had started the policy of having coal used in government buildings. I assume he was ignorant of the truth which is, of course, that that policy was in operation under the previous government. He talked about the power program instituted by Mr. Harris and Mr. Lesage, as so many Tories do, as if it had been instituted by the present government. He talked about the efforts of the present government to get an overseas market, and completely ignored the fact that the only successful effort in this regard was that made by the previous administration in arranging exports to the United Kingdom. He also talked about the market being protected in Ontario and Quebec, in the face of the fact that that market is being lost more and more every day.

Even this belated action of paying the carrying charges on the stockpile is nothing new. It is true that it is a new expedient applied to the coal mines, but it is precisely the same policy as was applied two years ago by the Liberal government under the leadership of Mr. C. D. Howe with respect to the carryover of wheat. We cannot help but be flattered that, in order to meet an emergency, the present government should once again have to follow a precedent instituted by a Liberal government.

Since this is only an expedient, since this paying of carrying charges to the end of the year is going to solve absolutely nothing, it does seem to me that when the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys rises to speak he should tell us what is going to happen at the end of December. What is going to happen to the coal industry in 1959? The problem is still going to be there. The Prime Minister did indicate in a vague sort of way that there was some prospect of selling about 4 million tons. I think the minister should be precise and tell us just what there is to this prospect. What markets are in sight?

He should also tell us if there is an agreement already in force with Dosco, and he should lay the agreement on the table so we can see what is in it. He should also tell us whether Dosco has given any assurance that in the period beyond the end of this year collieries will not be closed, because there is a strong suspicion that it is the intention of the company to close collieries.

Now, sir, we had at least three members on the government side of the house last night quoting the statement made by Mr. St. Laurent at Fredericton something over a year ago. What did Mr. St. Laurent say? He said that he would not advocate any substantial increase in coal production. He said also there should not be any ghost towns created in the coal fields. In other words, what he was saying was that the policy that was applied to the gold mines so successfully by the previous administration, and which is being continued by this administration, should be applied to the coal mines. I say that no public man with any sense of responsibility would have promised a substantial increase in coal production in 1957. Hon. gentlemen opposite, not expecting to win an election and blinded by a vision—the vision of office —were ready to promise anything.

Here is what they did with that statement by Mr. St. Laurent. I have here a full-page advertisement from the Halifax Mail-Star which is headed, "The Coal Industry; Action Today or Regret Tomorrow." It reads in part:

If coal production is not increased the services of some 4,000 of the 11,000 mine workers presently employed in the Nova Scotia coal industry will not be required.

This is a quotation from the Gordon commission. Then there is the quotation from Mr. St. Laurent, to which I have referred, and a quotation from Mr. Stanfield, the premier of Nova Scotia:

The Prime Minister, as a matter of policy, has set his face against the expansion of the coal industry in Nova Scotia . . . And on no issue is there greater disagreement than our stand on coal policy and the position taken by the Liberal party.

Hon. gentlemen had better not applaud too quickly.

In these statements above, the people of Nova Scotia may read for themselves and judge for themselves who has the best interests of Nova Scotia at heart.

Your Progressive Conservative candidates are in favour of a coal policy that will increase coal production! Do a good turn for Nova Scotia—turn out and vote Conservative on June 10.

What has happened since? Coal production has declined by 10 per cent up to this time, and the mines are closing. Obviously production is going to decline a great deal more than 10 per cent in the next five weeks.

An hon. Member: You hope so.

Mr. Pickersgill: Obviously production is going to decline, since there is going to be no production at all. The mines are going to be closed. What policy has the government for dealing with the coal industry, and for the future of the coal industry? The minister of northern affairs, speaking for the government, talked about a big steel mill some time in the future, some time within the next 40 years. The minister of northern affairs, with that long-range vision of his, was going to give us a steel mill in Nova Scotia.

But what do we really hear about the steel mill? We hear from Dosco that it is not in Nova Scotia they propose to build a steel mill. Dosco is proposing a steel mill in the greater Montreal area. What is the government going to do? Where is that policy of decentralization of the Tory resolutions drawn up at Moncton, on which they sold their policies a year ago? Where is the decentralization of industry? Apparently the decentralization of the steel industry is to be away from Cape Breton to Montreal.

There is no one on this side of the house who would not want to see a steel mill in Montreal. I do not believe there is any doubt that there will be a steel mill in Montreal. But it does seem extraordinary that this government, which got the votes of the people of Nova Scotia by telling them that the Conservatives were going to bring about decentralization of industry, are now sitting idly by while Dosco appears to be proposing to transfer its main operations from Cape Breton to the St. Lawrence.

It is not only in the coal industry, sir, that things have been happening in Nova Scotia. Mr. Henry Hicks gave a statement to the press on June 11, and this is what he said. This statement relates more particularly, of course, to the second part of our motion, which I will not take the time to read, the part referring to the government backing away from the decentralization of industry. This is what Mr. Hicks had to say:

In the past few months we have seen the closing down of several important and useful industries in Nova Scotia, most notably Consumers Cordage in Dartmouth, The Canadian Canners processing plant at Middleton, Moirs box mill at Bedford and the Wolfe Hat and Cap plant at Stewiacke. Even more recently, the announcement has been made of the probable closing of the Hamilton Biscuit Company at Pictou.

In addition to this, a disturbing number of business firms in Nova Scotia have gone bankrupt and made assignments in the past few months. The figures for 1957 were running three times as high as the figures for the previous two years. While the closing of these firms has come in for a good deal of public attention, I am suggesting that the public may not be fully aware of the lay-offs in other industries throughout the province. Some of them are known—the Halifax Shipyards Limited; Eastern Car plant at Trenton; Point Edward naval base—but there are others, lesser in numbers individually, but collectively involving many of our people.

While it is of course true that the Canadian economy is passing through a period of recession, there are definite signs to indicate that we in Nova Scotia are perhaps being affected more adversely than any other areas of Canada. For example, dominion bureau of statistics figures indicate that the housing industry in Canada is experiencing a substantial improvement for this year, but as was pointed out in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of June 4 in an article headlined "Home Building Booming, but not in Maritimes", we in this province are unfortunately not sharing in this improvement. Indeed all maritime provinces are substantially behind last year in home building figures.

Now, sir, in New Brunswick the decline in employment is evident in the collieries at Minto; in the closing down of the base metal mine in the Bathurst area; the closing of the textile mill at Milltown; the threat to the sugar refinery at Saint John, and if that goes the public has been told that Ganong's at St. Stephen may have to close.

Finally, sir, last night the minister of northern affairs gave us encouragement by telling us that the federally subsidized Beechwood power was being exported to the United States. This is happening at a time when the pleas of the government of Newfoundland for assistance in power development in that province are rebuffed by this government. Apparently Newfoundland does not come within the scope of the George Brown-John Diefenbaker-Alvin Hamilton vision.

It does seem to me, sir, that already I have given enough evidence to show that whatever the government's intention may be the facts are—and it is the facts at which we have to look and the facts by which we have to judge—that in the past 12 months there has been a decline in economic activity in the maritime provinces even greater than the decline in other parts of Canada. There has not been any sign whatever of this policy of decentralization of industry about which so much was made before the June election, and even before the election of last March. As the vision fades before the harsh, clear light of reality, of another period of Tory hard times, the people of the maritimes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest hon. gentlemen just stop and listen—the people of the maritimes will regret the Tory discovery of the maritimes and their own discovery of the Tory party. I say that if things go on the way they are going at present in the maritime provinces, it will not be very long before people there are looking back to the golden age of Liberal neglect in the St. Laurent-Howe era, when the population increased; when income increased; when there was virtually full employment; when equalization multiplied by seven times the yield of direct taxes; when transfer payments from the federal government in Nova Scotia increased 9 times, in Prince Edward Island 11 times, and in New Brunswick 20 times, while they increased only 6 times in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the member of the government representing the province of Nova Scotia, I think perhaps I should intervene in this debate for a few moments. There is nothing much more to be said from this side of the house than was said yesterday in those four very able speeches that were delivered by the Nova Scotia members in opposition to this proposal which has been made. Despite the caterwauling and sarcasm of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, I will tell him that he has never heard finer speeches made by four freshman members of the house at any time in all the years he has been sitting here.

It also was particularly appropriate, Mr. Speaker, that two of those speeches should be made by men who worked in the pits. I refer to the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir). The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria suffered an accident resulting in a broken back. I think this house and this country will take the judgment of these men on the coal industry of the province of Nova Scotia before they will take—no matter how respectable and how honourable the members may be—that of an ex-fisheries inspector from Nova Scotia and an expatriate college professor from Winnipeg, particularly when the expatriate college professor has a schooner but has to get the William Carson to get him back to Newfoundland. If he is as much at a loss in navigating that schooner as he was in making that speech last night, he certainly needs a chart and compass to get him back on course again.

It was an amazing speech, Mr. Speaker. It had no beginning and it certainly had no end. It slithered something like a water snake, twisting and turning, without logic and without reason. When it ended there was nothing more said by it than there was at the beginning.

This is one of the great motions of want of confidence in the House of Commons, one of the six motions to go into supply when the substantial omissions of the government are brought to the attention of the house. If this is all the opposition could arraign this government on, then certainly the record of the government is very good indeed.

What are the facts of this matter? In the first place I should like to say this. I should like to pay tribute to the men who have been operating in the mines of Nova Scotia during these years, who have worked hard and have increased the daily production per man, which fact, together with mechanization, has resulted in the surplus which we have today. The men have gone for over four years without an increase in wages and without a new contract. They deserve full credit for the tremendous achievement which has been made in the development of coal in the Nova Scotia mines.

I should like to pay tribute to the leadership of the union, those leaders who came here and made their representations to the government. We heard the Prime Minister refer to them in the house the other afternoon. I am not going further except to say that it is a tribute to Canadian labour when you have men of that calibre representing a large union such as the U.M.W., which was referred to on this occasion.

It is true that there is overproduction at the moment. There seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding about this matter. I heard it suggested over on the other side of the house yesterday—I do not think this was intended seriously—that this stockpile itself could not be sold during the coming year, that there were not orders enough to make that possible. The truth of the matter is that the company is selling more coal than was sold before. The truth of the matter is that there are orders for over 4 million tons of coal. The truth of the matter is that with the help of this government and with the—

Mr. Pickersgill: Then why are they shutting down?

Mr. Nowlan: Wait a moment and I will tell you. As I was saying, with the leadership of the company and the aggressive management and the co-operation of this government in subventions, they have sold over 350,000 tons of coal to new customers within the last two months, customers that were never found before. My hon. friend spoke about markets being lost in Ontario. That is the greatest poppycock I have ever heard. Markets have been developed in Ontario. That is why we increased the subventions. They are being developed rapidly in the province of Ontario. During the winter months and during this spring a stockpile developed there. The stockpile now is probably about 1,400,000 tons of coal.

Mr. Robichaud: There was also an election.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, there was an election. That is really the reason we have this motion today, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members opposite took the maritime provinces for granted so long that they thought the maritimers were helots, and that all they had to do was pull the string and they would vote Grit. But they finally woke up and had intelligence enough to vote Conservative, and hon. gentlemen opposite have not yet got over the shock. The maritimers ceased being taken for granted. That is a mistake the Liberals still make, in assuming that they will continue to vote for them.

As I was saying when I was interrupted, the stockpile is roughly 1,400,000 tons. There are orders for 4,600,000 tons of coal and orders are still coming in. Many of these orders are for green coal from the mine. You cannot translate the coal from the stockpile into the orders as they get them. Only a proportion can go. It is going to take months, perhaps into the winter, perhaps even into next spring before the whole stockpile is liquidated; and liquidated it will be, because the company will see to it that it moves out and, as I have said, the orders are recurring and multiplying.

What was the situation? We were told that we did not avert a lay-off of five weeks. We did not have an opportunity to avert a lay-off of five weeks. We were not consulted about a lay-off of five weeks. The company told us that a lay-off of five weeks was necessary for the efficient and economical management of the company's properties. We are not in a position to dictate to the company what it should do. The company went on to say that if that five-week lay-off, which was necessary, were not continuous but were spaced over the period of the next two or three months in various pits at different times, tied into the vacation period and so on, its impact—as serious as it is, of course—would be much less than if it were one that came with full force and was carried on consecutively through all the pits in the province. But the company did say that having inaugurated that lay-off of five weeks which they felt, from the standpoint of business efficiency and management, was necessary, it also would have to extend the lay-offs much further unless government assistance was forthcoming.

Assistance was discussed last week and the week before and various other weeks. The company proposed that one way in which it might be done would be to assist in the carrying charges of the surplus stockpile over and above the normal stockpile, of which of course they have had figures throughout the year. Those estimates were made. They were confirmed by the dominion coal board. We agreed and the government of Canada, in co-operation with the province of Nova Scotia, assumed the difference between the normal stockpile carry-over as estimated at the end of this year and the stockpile we estimate is going to be there. We take the interest, the stockpiling and the insurance and pay these expenses instead of having them paid by the company.

The company still has to raise the money. The company still is risking its capital. The company still has the coal to dispose of. These are the obligations of the company. It is a joint undertaking whereby the company advances the money and carries on the mine. We agreed to assume the cost of the additional burden over and above the normal to the end of this year. The province agrees to accept part of the cost.

Much has been said about this being paltry and about the way it has been done, but I want to say that the union officials who were here expressed tremendous satisfaction at the way in which this government had acted. There have been many quotations from the papers yesterday and today, most of them rumours and a dialectical display of a coup here and a coup there, but I want to refer to a statement appearing in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of yesterday, which quoted Mr. Delaney, the union deputy board member who was here on Friday, as saying that there would have been, of course, much greater loss if this government had not acted at the request of the union, and that the federal government action was the fastest taken by any government in his experience.

We are supposed to be too slow; we are supposed to have been too late, but here is the national board member of the U.M.W., with all his experience in dealing with governments throughout the years, saying that the action we took was the fastest that has ever been taken. Where is all the specious poppycock we heard yesterday from the other side of the house? This government deserves tremendous gratitude for having done what it did. It has the endorsation of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, one of Nova Scotia's large newspapers; it has the endorsation of the Cape Breton paper; it has the endorsation of other large daily papers in the province; it has the endorsation of 95 per cent of all the weekly press in the province; it has the endorsation of the provincial government and has the endorsation of the united mine workers of America. The only thing it lacks is the support of the hon. members who spoke this afternoon and the few for whom they were speaking. I will take the support we have for our position and for the action which this government has taken.

This is not the first thing we have done for the coal industry. We increased subventions last year. In particular we increased subventions last fall for the mine at Springhill in order to keep that mine operating until it was eventually closed, not for lack of financial support but because of the physical situation which developed when the mine was temporarily closed until the seams were brought back to parallel. We increased subventions to other mines so the coal could be brought to other territories, and we increased subventions three weeks ago in order to allow 150,000 or 200,000 tons of coal to be moved into the Belleville area in Ontario. Now we have again increased subventions. Mind you, this should be made clear. This money is not being paid out to the company as such; it will probably not all be paid out this year. This money will be paid out in the form of subventions as the coal moves from the pit stockpile, and it probably will not all be moved and therefore the subventions will not all have been paid out until some time next year.

There has been some talk of corporations. I have no particular brief for this corporation, but I think it has done reasonably well in maintaining employment and in paying out millions upon millions—more millions of dollars than have been paid out before—in producing coal and continuing to carry the burden, as the corporation is still carrying the burden, and spending money to keep going. It has to pay out all this money itself. It is a lot to do, and it is something which has not been done before.

The hon. member must certainly have been hard put to find an analogy for what his government did for the coal industry when he compared this action with what Right Hon. C. D. Howe did for wheat three years ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the same thing.

Mr. Nowlan: Is that the best comparison of what his government had done for coal? It is true that the former Liberal government under Mackenzie King in the early days of the twenties brought in coal subventions, but they were inadequate. They were not sufficient to keep the industry going. It was under the government of R. B. Bennett, when Gordon Harrington was premier of Nova Scotia, that subventions were increased materially so the economy of the Nova Scotia mining communities was restored and the mines operated for another 20 years. After those subventions were established, costs and freight rates increased until we reached another stage and we were losing our markets. What did the former Liberal government do in order to assist the Nova Scotia coal industry in those days? What did that government do during the last few years?

Hon. members pointed out yesterday afternoon the difficulties of the various mines, that this mine had closed down and another mine was closing down, and that thousands of men would be out of work.

One mine definitely closed down just over a year ago, when the Liberal government in Halifax was being assisted by the Liberal government in Ottawa. We now have a Conservative government in Halifax and we have a Conservative government in Ottawa, and those governments are working in cooperation with each other and are accomplishing something for the coal industry.

I deprecate the pessimism which has been exhibited in this house. This afternoon my hon. friend went off the course. He did not have much to say about the coal industry, so he became Jeremiah and wrote the third book of Jeremiah when he talked about the closing of all the industries in Nova Scotia. Although I was sure he was sincerely sorry to have to enumerate the long list of shut downs, one could not but detect a slight gleam in his eye. He went on to speak of the Moirs woodworking company which had been closed down and he also mentioned several plants which had been closed down, burned down, or had gone out of operation in the last ten years.

What was the Liberal coal policy? We have heard a great deal said about that and certainly the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas) and the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLellan), who spoke yesterday afternoon referred to it. I do not have to recap or recount the coal policy of the former government but perhaps, just to keep the record straight—having in mind that this was referred to by the hon. member who has just sat down—I should say that their so-called coal policy did not come anywhere near meeting our problems. The people of Nova Scotia refused to accept it and the Liberal government itself did not know just what it was. They talked about producing coal at cost and using it for producing power. As the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond said, "What is cost?" It could be anything.

This government, before the election of June 10, laid down its policy. We said if we were elected we would build thermal plants which would produce electricity cheaper than it was then being produced. That was our pledge, and that pledge has been kept. We have inaugurated a policy as a result of which we expect and believe that thermal power will be developed in Nova Scotia at a comparable cost to that of power in Ontario at the present time. This is really a major gain.

Our interests were twofold; (a) to promote the coal industry in Nova Scotia and (b) to promote the natural development of our province. We tried to do these two things together, using our coal industry and development of our power, and by means of subventions are bringing down the cost of the power produced in that area.

This is the program we have been carrying out and which we are carrying out today. There has been a great deal of complaint, and particularly complaint about some plant to be built in Saint John—whether it is going to use coal or whether it is not going to use coal. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the magnificent speech he made yesterday afternoon pointed out that no one could foresee the future for generations or even for years to come. But this can be said without any question whatsoever,—namely that any thermal plant receiving assistance from the federal government today, tomorrow or in the reasonably foreseeable future, is going to burn Nova Scotia or maritime coal or it will not get subventions. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate last night said he wanted a statement on that subject, and I hope this is a specific answer to the questions he asked. I am speaking with the authority of the government when I make this statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question? Would he state whether that stipulation will be put into the contract for the Saint John plant, as Mr. Stanfield said it would?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not discussing contracts at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; exactly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: Will you stop that "ah-hah". That is about all you know. Some of you are used to the kind of government which thinks everything has to be in black and white and that everything has to be written in a contract if commitments are not to be broken.

Mr. Bourque: Tell us something about the truth.

Mr. Nowlan: What did I hear you say?

Mr. Bourque: I said, tell us something about the truth of what has been going on.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think there are too many speakers in this house.

Mr. Nowlan: I am wondering if the hon. member is insinuating that I am not telling the truth. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will withdraw that on your instructions, I hope.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure of the words the hon. minister complains about.

Mr. Nowlan: He said for me to tell the truth.

Mr. Bourque: I did not say that. I said tell us all about the truth.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, Hansard will have what he said on the record. I am not concerned about that any more.

An hon. Member: Unless it is changed.

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure it will not be changed any more.

The government's policy was that the power should be developed. The Liberals, then the government, in a last dying effort produced the so-called Winters scheme for the development of power, and the merit of that can be judged by the fact that last night the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate admitted that it was on June 6, in the dying days of a dying campaign of a dying government that the government made a commitment with respect to using coal in the Nova Scotia thermal power plants.

An hon. Member: After they had kicked us in the teeth for years.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the merit of the so-called program advanced. We advanced our own program. It was accepted by the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in June; it was accepted again this March. It is being carried out, and it will be carried out; and, as I said a few moments ago, coal will be used in all plants which have received subventions or assistance from this government for the reasonably foreseeable future. Here again, look at the difference between the two schemes. These plants are going to be operated by the provincial governments, under provincial control.

One could go on and on, but I think I have said enough to suggest that the record of this government with respect to its coal policy, and the increased assistance which we have given to the industry during the short time we have been in office, have re-established the faith of the people with respect to putting the industry on a firm basis again and the people of Nova Scotia have no doubt as to where this government stands with respect to it. I say this because never before has any government gone so far as we have gone in co-operation with the provincial government in extending this subvention.

Hon. gentlemen opposite say, what about next year? I do not know about next year. Next year is another year. We are dealing with the present. We have made arrangements to provide full employment for the miners in the mine fields of Nova Scotia operated by the company subject to the 25-day lay-off which the company, as I explained before, said was inevitable and which they intended to carry out in any event.

It may be that next year again the coal industry will face difficulties. I do not know. If it does, I think this government has shown its interest in the coal industry in the province, so it would be prepared to give consideration to the problem if it should again arise. This action taken by the government the other day has both negative and positive implications. It is negative in that it prevented a lay-off. To that extent it is negative, although even this was very positive to the people who are not to be laid off. But it also has a positive implication, because the government would not have achieved this temporary result if they had thought that in a few months time the effort would be abortive and useless.

The government believe that the future of the Nova Scotia coal industry can be re-established and is reasonably bright. We have seen an example within the last few days, when the Ontario hydro commission chairman said that within a year or two he would be buying well over one million tons of coal and that within 10 years, even after making allowances for the St. Lawrence seaway and all the other developments of hydro electric power—he, or rather the hydro commission, would be buying over 10 million tons of coal according to the present expansion program for Ontario.

All it comes to, Mr. Speaker, is a redirection of this subvention, a little here and a little there. We have already broken into Ontario to a fairly substantial degree, and by increasing subventions, which might not necessitate an over-all increase at all, you could move Nova Scotia coal into this tremendous market which is so very near and capable of so much expansion, this market which is going to develop along the seaway. And with the development of the seaway both ways, United States coal may come down, but Nova Scotia coal can go up.

I remember when I was sitting on the other side of the house I quoted from dominion coal board figures which said that by 1965 the coal industry, not only of Nova Scotia but the coal industry generally, would be on the upsurge again because of increasing costs of producing oil and other fuels. And I believed what I said when I said that the future of the industry is bright.

We have a new company. It must be remembered that the company only took over last November; it has not been there very long, but the management has been aggressive and intelligent in developing new sales policies; and with the collaboration of the governments and that management I believe that within a relatively short period, a year or two at the outset, we could develop a market for Nova Scotia coal, and develop the production of Nova Scotia coal.

One thing which I believe to be really bad about this lay-off is not the financial loss so much but the fact that the miners who have worked so hard might feel that if they had not worked quite so hard they would not be facing a lay-off. I hope the leaders of the industry will avoid that mistake being made, because we have to have continual production and continual effort, the co-operation of management and labour in the industry, and given those things we can solve this problem and we will do so.

In so far as this specific amendment is concerned, we are told first that the house regrets that the government has failed to avert a five-week shut-down. As I said a moment ago, it is true there is to be a five-week shut-down. But we did not fail to avert it, because the company said it was inevitable in any event. When they came before us with this proposition they had already announced the five-week shut-down as something which they, or any company in a similar position, would be bound to institute.

Then the amendment expresses regret that the government has backed away from its commitment to promote the establishment of industry in the Atlantic provinces. That is absolutely fallacious and without any foundation in fact or fancy. The policy of this government is twofold. As I said, it is to help promote the coal mines, to develop cheaper power, and to develop industry. And in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island industry depends on power and transportation. We have taken the steps necessary to provide cheaper power and to avert an increase in freight rates not only in the maritimes but elsewhere in Canada, and we are going to take other steps with regard to transportation problems in the maritimes and in the rest of Canada. This government will, I am confident, have shown before very long that it is responsible for a tremendous development of industry in the maritimes as well as in Canada generally.

The last part of the amendment reads:

> And particularly from its specific undertaking to ensure the use of coal in thermal plants assisted financially by the federal government.

That again is a sheer figment of the imagination. The government has not departed from the policy announced by the Prime Minister that we are going to insist that all thermal plants in the maritime provinces receiving federal assistance shall burn coal. That is our policy. It has been stated by the Prime Minister, and it is beyond challenge and contradiction.

I do not think there is any point in commenting further on the statements that have been made. As I said earlier, the speeches that were made by hon. members yesterday were speeches of which I was proud as a minister coming from Nova Scotia. They were speeches of which I am sure all hon. members of this side of the house and the people of Nova Scotia in general will be proud as well when they read reports of them in today's newspapers. The speeches were a credit to this house and to those who made them. Hon. members who entered into the debate come from coal constituencies in which they have a lifetime of personal knowledge and experience, and it was rewarding to see the keen interest they took in the matter.

Under the circumstances I suggest that the house cannot possibly accept the amendment which has been proposed and I urge that it be defeated when it is brought to a vote this evening.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the privilege of saying a few words on this amendment though I have to confess that perhaps in the eyes of the hon. minister who just sat down I am disqualified from doing so because I am an ex-professor.

Mr. Nowlan: You might be an intelligent one, though.

Mr. Pearson: I am not even an ex-inspector of fisheries. I recognize, of course, as all hon. members of the house must recognize, that anyone who has worked in the coal mines has a special claim to be heard in this house in respect of any coal question. There is no difference of opinion amongst us on that point. But, Mr. Speaker, this happens to be an important question of government policy, and perhaps even a lack of experience in the practical aspects of the coal industry may not disqualify me from saying something about it, especially in view of what has been said by my hon. friend who just took his seat and who, I must add, ended his speech on a much more realistic note than that on which he began.

I had hoped and I think all hon. members on this side of the house had hoped—and indeed the hope has already been expressed—that the minister more particularly concerned with government policy in this matter, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) would have given the house all the advantage of his knowledge of the problem, and would perhaps let us know some of the ideas the government has about the problem when these temporary measures which have been mentioned have ended. However, he has not as yet taken part in the debate, though perhaps he is just waiting for me to sit down so he can make his contribution.

I can readily understand the desire of the government to enter the Minister of National Revenue in the debate, not only because he comes from Nova Scotia, which is a good reason for his doing so, but also because he was able to throw a smokescreen of irony and intelligence around some of the facts of the issue. He did it, as I admit he nearly always does, with a certain amount of debating skill; but one fact glaringly remains, that he did not deal with the questions that were raised in this debate by my friend the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), who moved the amendment, and by my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who seconded it. The hon. gentleman dealt with a lot of other things but he did not deal with those questions.

I regret, too, that in his lively remarks the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources did not deal with those questions either. That hon. gentleman gave an interesting interpretation of the paternity—or the grand paternity, if you like—of the Canadian vision. The Prime Minister may be the father, but I am sure the house and the country were surprised to learn yesterday that that eminent Liberal father of confederation, George Brown, was its grandfather. I am sure, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said last evening, that news will be of particular interest to my hon. friends from Quebec, who must be aware of George Brown's interest in the establishment in this country in 1867 of a legislative rather than a federal union.

Not only did we learn some interesting history in the course of this debate but we were also treated once again, as we have been treated so often in this house, to a contradiction between words uttered last February and March and a year ago in May and June, and words uttered in this house after the election had taken place. Surely it should be unnecessary to repeat the specific and concrete assurances made by so many members of the government in the last election campaign and the one before that in respect of one particular aspect of this question which is mentioned specifically in the amendment, namely the use of coal from Nova Scotia in thermal power stations.

One thing the Minister of National Revenue accomplished this afternoon, in my opinion, was to add another contradiction to the series of contradictions in governmental statements on this matter; because, as I hope to show a little later, it is not going to be easy for him, as I understand what he said, to reconcile his remarks this afternoon with what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said yesterday in regard to this matter.

The Minister of National Revenue said a few moments ago—I shall repeat this because I do not want to misquote him, and he will tell me if I am wrong—that the government has accepted a specific commitment which will ensure that Nova Scotia coal will be used in thermal power stations in the maritime provinces. That is, I take it, a commitment which he has now given the house and the country.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps the hon. member would permit me to clarify his statement by adding that I referred to thermal power stations receiving government support.

Mr. Pearson: Those stations receiving government support and subventions on coal.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Nowlan: I would also substitute maritime coal for Nova Scotia coal because there may be New Brunswick coal involved.

Mr. Pearson: Very well, maritime coal rather than Nova Scotia coal. That is the statement that has now been put on the record by the Minister of National Revenue, which makes it necessary for me to relate that statement to what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said last night in regard to the particular policy of ensuring that maritime coal should be used in thermal power plants.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the hon. member leave the development of that point until after the adjournment. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, when we reached six o'clock I was attempting to deal with the remarks which have been made on the amendment before the house by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and had suggested that those remarks would be found, in some respects at least, to be quite inconsistent with what was said by his colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) last evening. Before I proceed to point out that inconsistency I had better put on the record very briefly, because there is not much time available, Liberal policy in respect of the particular question which is dealt with in the amendment.

As hon. members must know, Liberal policy was to apply subventions to make coal competitive with oil in thermal power plants in the Atlantic provinces, which we thought and still think was the best way, not only to help the coal industry but to bring about the cheapest possible production of power in those areas where cheap power is certainly needed. Indeed, it was our intention to assist in the production of power so that it could be distributed at cost.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I must say I was very interested indeed in one remark made by the Minister of National Revenue on this particular point of distributing products at cost of production. I took down what the minister said and I am sure it will be of very great interest to his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) when the time comes for him to explain to the house what he means by the proposed amendment to the dumping duty legislation which would establish cost of production as the basis on which dumping duty should apply. I say that because this afternoon the Minister of National Revenue, speaking on a different matter but applying himself to the principle of cost production, had this to say: "What is cost of production? It might be anything".

That is a very useful observation to have on the record in regard to the deficiencies of and the difficulty of determining cost of production as a basis on which duty might be levelled.

Mr. Fulton: That is why—

Mr. Pearson: Did my hon. friend have something to say?

Mr. Fulton: I was just rather amused. That is all.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, our coal policy as enunciated during the last election campaign included four points, and perhaps it might be interesting if I put them on the record because one of the things we desire to do as the session progresses is to put on the record all the policies we put forward during the election campaign as this will be an indication to parliament and to the people that we stand by those policies and those promises.

This is what we had to say about coal. Our coal policy would include: (1) An intensive and comprehensive program of scientific and industrial research to find more uses for coal and help bring about expanded employment; (2) further measures to encourage greater production and marketing, including more flexible uses of subventions to move coal to markets within and without the maritimes area; (3) increase the scope of federal agencies such as the dominion coal board so that they would consider the social and human problems of the mining towns. No longer would they be restricted to considering economic matters alone but their policy would take the social and human affairs of the community under consideration as well. (4) A specific and immediate plan of co-operation with the provincial governments to promote industrial enterprises to diversify the economy and increase employment opportunities.

In contrast with that specific and definite statement of policy, Mr. Speaker, we are in more doubt now, I think, than we were before the Minister of National Revenue spoke as to what the policy of the government is in respect of this important matter. I think it is unnecessary for me at this time to repeat the assurances which were made and which were put on Hansard yesterday, assurances made during the last election campaign in very concrete and specific terms by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that the burning of coal in thermal power plants in the Atlantic provinces which received help from the government was a condition precedent to federal assistance.

The record in that regard was made quite clear by those on this side who spoke in the debate yesterday and I do not intend to repeat what they said. But because it is at the very core of our amendment it is important to reiterate what the premier of Nova Scotia said in the house of assembly of that province on March 4 when he assured the province of Nova Scotia that the Prime Minister of Canada had given him the assurance that the use of coal was a condition precedent to federal assistance and that such a condition—this is the important part in view of what my hon. friend said this afternoon—was covered by the master agreement. I am going to read the exchange on this point between the premier and the leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia as taken from the records of the Nova Scotia house of assembly. I am quoting from Hansard of yesterday because it was put on the record then but it bears repetition in view of what was said this afternoon. The premier said:

> Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have just told my hon. friend through you, sir, that the instructions that I have received from the Prime Minister—

That is the Prime Minister of Canada.

> —are just the burning of maritime coal is to be a condition precedent to federal assistance under the agreement.

The language may seem a little awkward but it is quite clear that just the burning of maritime coal is to be a condition precedent to federal assistance under the agreement. Then Mr. Hicks intervened:

> Including the Saint John one?
>
> The Premier: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how—what my hon. friend wants. I said that I had been instructed by the Prime Minister that the burning of coal is a condition precedent to federal assistance in the construction of any thermal power station under this agreement.
> Mr. Fielding: Under the master agreement?
> The Premier: Under the master agreement.

Nothing could be clearer than those words. The intention of those words is perfectly clear, that not only was the federal government to carry out the commitment which my hon. friend mentioned this afternoon that coal would be used in thermal power plants receiving help from the federal government but that commitment would be included in the master agreement as a condition precedent to the granting of such help.

The speech of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources last evening, which I did not have the pleasure of hearing but which I have had the equal pleasure of reading in Hansard today, was in startling contrast to that specific commitment and to the commitments made by his colleagues in the election campaign. I am not sure how the Minister of National Revenue is going to reconcile his commitment this afternoon with what his colleague said last night because I gather from Hansard that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was almost indignant last night at the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) insisting on the use of coal in these power plants. This is what he had to say as found at page 1758 of Hansard:

> The suggestion that because this government did not put a clause in this general agreement insisting on the use of coal in every thermal plant in these four provinces is a suggestion that we should do something which is absolutely against the interests of the coal industries of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I want to make it very clear that the policy the hon. member advocates—

That policy was making the use of coal compulsory in these plants.

> —would, in fact, destroy the future of this coal industry in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Then, again he said, having mentioned all these things, why then do I make this statement that to achieve what the hon. member for Gloucester has advocated means the destruction of the coal industry in the future? He answered his own question by saying that to insist on a general agreement—and this is what the Prime Minister said would happen during the election campaign—that only coal should be used would be suicidal and completely destructive of the long-range future of the coal industry in that area.

Again, I call the attention of the house to what the Minister of National Revenue said about that this afternoon. I remind the house also of what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said on this subject on May 21 in answer to a question by the hon. member for Gloucester, and this appears at page 313 of Hansard for that date:

> Mr. Robichaud: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister now inform the house whether such agreements insisted that coal be used to generate power instead of oil?
> Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): To my knowledge there is no such term insisting that coal be used. In fact in one part of the working out of this agreement I understand it is fully understood between the two governments that on certain occasions oil will be used in one of the plants.

I suggest, therefore, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what was said this afternoon, that the words of the minister of northern affairs serve only to strengthen the basis of our amendment asking the house to express its regret that the specific undertaking of the government on this matter has been broken. I can understand, and I think this has already been referred to in this debate, the feeling of the writer of the editorial in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of May 23 when he had this to say in referring to this withdrawal from the specific commitment.

> Something happens to public confidence in governmental institutions when ministers lead citizens to believe one policy will be adopted and then to undertake, without satisfactory explanation, a different course.

Mr. Speaker, irrespective of the conflicting evidence of government spokesmen on this matter, irrespective of the fact that they have withdrawn from earlier commitments on this matter which are in specific terms, what are the implications of the situation? It is true that the government, through the Prime Minister, made a statement last Friday which will be helpful to the industry in this emergency, so far as it goes. But it is true also that these shut-downs mean economic loss to the province of Nova Scotia, and no one can take any satisfaction out of that. They mean also a planned reduction in coal production of 300,000 tons. They mean real hardship to the coal miners and their families. This afternoon the Minister of National Revenue paid a very eloquent, very moving and very deserved tribute to those coal miners and to other persons associated with the coal industry in Nova Scotia. I think we can all associate ourselves with that tribute.

He talked about the efforts they had made over recent years to increase the production of coal, and the success which had attended those efforts. But I would remind him, if he needs reminding and I do not think he does, that he did not make reference to the fact that increased production was largely the result of the mechanization changes which have been made in the coal industry.

Mr. Nowlan: In part.

Mr. Pearson: All right, in part; in large part.

Mr. Nowlan: In large part.

Mr. Pearson: According to the president of Dosco this mechanization was due to the fact that the Liberal government of those days, on which my hon. friends like to pour contempt on every possible opportunity, made available for that mechanization about $7.5 million by way of loans.

Mr. Nowlan: We have an application for a bigger loan before us right now.

Mr. Pearson: As the president of Dosco himself has said, without that financial assistance by the federal government this increased production would not have been possible.

What we are asking in this amendment is that the house express its regret that this present situation has not been prevented. We find some difficulty in understanding why any member of this house, especially a representative from a coal mining area, could vote against an amendment in those terms.

It is a little difficult to understand what some of the members who spoke in this debate last night had on their minds. Their speeches were a combination of attack on the previous government, and that is an easy gambit in debate, coupled with rather extravagant praise for the present government.

Mr. Fulton: And that is an easy one to do too.

Mr. Pearson: It is very easy for my hon. friend, I know. I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that those speeches last night on which my hon. friend this afternoon poured such praise and no doubt from his point of view that praise was entirely justified, might have contained at least a note of urgency, a call to the government for action, a call that might have been made by independently minded members of the house, and some warning of the danger ahead. It was surprising that none of the members who spoke last night seemed to take that line.

We have at present a planned curtailment, and the minister admitted it this afternoon, of coal production to the amount of 300,000 tons. Most, if not all, of what we got last night from the Conservative members who spoke was praise for the Minister of National Revenue, and a great deal of what we got this afternoon from the Minister of National Revenue was praise for the members who spoke last night. They have constituted themselves into a provincial mutual admiration society.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That is more than you can say for your side.

Mr. Pearson: I would be the last person to try to interfere with that process—

An hon. Member: Sit down, then.

Mr. Pearson: —of mutual admiration, especially before the process of disillusionment begins.

Mr. Nowlan: I trust that mine was as deserved as that of the other members.

Mr. Pearson: I listened to the minister's remarks this afternoon with great interest and some pleasure. However, none of the government members who have spoken—and I said this before six o'clock—have addressed themselves to the measures which were announced by the Prime Minister on Friday or to the questions which we on this side have asked during the course of this debate. On the Prime Minister's own admission, the stockpile of coal at the end of this year will be 750,000 tons in excess of the normal carryover. The normal carryover, I am informed by people who know more about the details of this industry than I do, is about 650,000 tons. At the end of this year, then, the stockpile on that basis will still have 1,300,000 tons of coal. This afternoon the minister got a great deal of comfort from the fact that there were 4 million tons on the order books of the company.

Mr. Nowlan: Over 4 million.

Mr. Pearson: Over 4 million, then, but I do not know how he can get very much comfort out of that fact when the surplus stockpile at the end of the year will be 1,300,000 tons above the normal requirements. Surely there is a possibility of real danger in that situation. Surely some member of the government, perhaps the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois), who is not in his seat at the moment, will even at this late hour in the debate tell us what is going to be done at the end of this year. Does the assistance which has been provided apply only to the remainder of this year? These are questions which have been asked, but I repeat them. What commitments, if any, has the company made in return for this assistance? Have they guaranteed no shut-downs, no colliery closures in 1959?

It was a little bit surprising to hear the minister say this afternoon that this request for assistance and the development of this emergency occurred so suddenly that the members of the government knew nothing about it until the approach was made just a few weeks ago. But in that approach did the coal company make any promise not to close the Florence colliery in Cape Breton, the Acadia Coal Company in Pictou and No. 2 mine at Springhill? I cannot answer that question but I venture to say—my hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong; maybe I shall tempt him into intervening on this point—that the government has received no promise from the company that it will keep these mines in continued operation. We therefore wish to remind the government and the house once again that no shut-down of this magnitude involving 9,000 miners and all the collieries of the Dominion Coal Company can be treated as anything but an extremely serious development indeed; and it is something that never occurred under any Liberal government in the post-war period. If this is a matter of comparing Liberal neglect with Tory progress I think the 5,000 men in Cape Breton lining up today in front of the unemployment insurance office for benefits will prefer Liberal neglect.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am just going to make clear once again what this amendment is and what it does. It asks the house to express its regret that the government has repudiated, with respect to the use of coal in thermal power plants, promises which it made in specific terms and which it has not attempted in this debate to explain away. We also ask the house to express regret that it has failed to avoid the shut-down in the coal mines of Nova Scotia. Once again I find it difficult to understand how any member of this house, especially any independently minded member from Nova Scotia, can vote against an amendment of that kind. We on this side of the house have a duty to bring this matter, which is a serious one economically and in human terms of unemployment, to the attention of the house; and in this amendment we think we have discharged that duty.

FINANCE—NEED OF LONG TERM CREDIT FOR SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, under standing orders only one amendment is permitted to a supply motion, so it is not possible for our group to move an amendment on this occasion with regard to a problem or a grievance, and unfortunately it is not possible to tie in a subamendment which would be permissible under standing orders along with the amendment moved by the official opposition. However, as there is now a matter of an hour and a quarter left before time runs out on this supply motion, we are afforded this opportunity of presenting a grievance which our group thinks is an important one and should be drawn to the attention of the house at this time.

In the 25 years that I have had the honour of being an elected member either of federal or provincial parliaments I believe I have earned the reputation of being an extemporaneous speaker. In 25 years I have never used comprehensive notes. However, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, and with the forbearance of hon. members, I intend to do so this evening in order to try to put forward every aspect of an important grievance.

What we have in mind is a problem which afflicts very seriously an important sector of the Canadian economy, namely the small business group. May I first of all emphasize that we in the C.C.F. have always recognized the indispensable role which small business plays in the Canadian economy. I know I am safe in saying that without our service industries, without our retail and other distributed outlets, without our small production industries, our communities in Canada would find it almost impossible to produce and to distribute effectively the nation's commercial and industrial products. I am certain all hon. members will agree that our service industries, which, of necessity, include many small businesses, are, have been, and will be an integral part of our complex economic organization.

Our group has given a great deal of thought over many weeks and months to the position of small business in Canada, and we fail to understand, in view of the importance of small business and small industries to our economy, why there has as yet been no development policy brought forward, no adequate program which would meet the particular difficulty of small business and small industries, namely the problem of long term financing. I feel quite certain that many members of this house know that a great many small businesses in Canada have long been confronted with the difficulty of raising long term credit in order to finance their capital requirements, and it is on this particular phase of small business that we desire to speak at this time.

I think all hon. members will agree that if a small business is properly managed then it has access to the chartered banks but as a general rule small business can only obtain a short term loan from a chartered bank. That is understandable because it has been the traditional practice with only one or two special exceptions for the chartered banks to limit their lending to short term credit. Small and medium-sized businesses are dependent upon banks for short term credit and as a general rule these loans do not extend over a year. Indeed, in the majority of cases the loans are repaid inside of a year. On the other hand long term lending has generally been shunned by the banks in our country and that too is understandable because it is based on the nature of our banking system which is deposit banking. Since deposits in banks are withdrawable either on demand or on very short notice the banking institutions of this country have understandably maintained the policy of keeping their assets comparatively liquid. I think it is because of that need that they have not in the past extended long term loans to small business and to small industry. However, there is a great need for such loans to be extended to small business and industry.

I am certain that hon. members will remember that there were some bankers who were opposed to the National Housing Act of 1954 which allowed the banks to enter the long-term mortgage field. Experience since 1954, however, has clearly demonstrated that banks can allocate a certain amount of their bank credit in the form of long term mortgage loans without impairing to any appreciable degree what is termed the liquidity of the position of the banks. The logical course for a large firm that wants a long-term loan is to raise money either by floating a stock issue or, if it wants to raise non-equity capital, by selling a bond or debenture issue, but this is not possible for small industry or small business.

All hon. members, I am sure, will accept as axiomatic that a small firm or industry would have little hope of being able to raise the necessary capital funds by going to an investment house, a brokerage firm or an insurance company in an effort to raise money through the issuance of debentures. The position of the banks in the past, as I have said, is definitely understandable but I think we must also recognize that small industry and small business are on the horns of a dilemma. They cannot obtain long term loans from the banks and neither can they go through the medium available to large business to raise required capital.

If hon. members will only think back a little I feel certain they will remember that a gap in the financial structure of this country was filled in 1944 by the establishment of the industrial development bank. The primary purpose of this public corporation was to supply long term capital to small and medium-sized businesses which, for the reasons I have already mentioned, could not obtain such capital from the private financial institutions. The bank was empowered to lend money or guarantee loans made by private credit institutions or even to acquire common stock, bonds or debentures from the issuing corporation with which it had entered into an underwriting agreement. While the industrial development bank has helped to fill the gap its operations have been limited, as its name implies, to assisting industrial enterprises. Not even the changes in the act made in 1956 which somewhat broadened the field of eligible businesses have substantially changed the situation. Consequently there are still many small businesses which do not qualify under the lending terms of this bank. We feel that some action must be taken to assist small industry and business.

Several important questions come to mind when we consider a plan or policy to meet this situation but we in this group remind hon. members first of all of the principles underlying the industrial development bank and also of the changes that were made only a short time ago in the National Housing Act to permit for the first time the chartered banks of Canada to enter the long term lending mortgage field. I believe I am correct in saying that the banks have in no way retreated from their position of liquidity because of their entering this field. Presumably guarantees could be extended to the chartered banking system in the field of loans to qualifying small industry and business if the government would only set its mind to tackling this most important problem.

We say that experience in Canada has definitely proved that bank credit if used wisely can be employed up to a point in financing long term requirements. Because of the experience of the industrial development bank, the chartered banks and the wonderful facilities offered by the chartered banks with all their branches throughout Canada, we suggest to the house and the government a plan to aid small industry and small business to obtain the required capital on a reasonable long term basis.

Mr. Pallett: Did you read the speech from the throne?

Mr. Winch: Our group recommends to the consideration of the house a five point program which I should like to enumerate at this time. We suggest the following program:

1. Broaden the class of loans under the industrial development bank to include a broad coverage of non-industrial enterprises such as the service industries, distributive trades, etc.

2. Increase the capitalization of the industrial development bank to accommodate increased lending, investing and guaranteeing of loans.

3. Amend the Bank Act to allow chartered banks to lend money or make advances to qualifying small business upon the security, mortgage or hypothecation of real or immovable property. May I say that this would be in addition to the special exceptions which have already been made in this respect under the National Housing Act, 1954, and the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

4. Guarantee term loans by chartered banks to small business against losses up to 10 per cent of the total amount of such loans made by any bank. May I add there that the figure of 10 per cent was chosen by our group because the same percentage is operative under similar guarantees, for example, with respect to farm improvement loans.

5. Enable chartered banks to sell mortgages securing such term loans to the industrial development bank in the same way in which the banks are enabled to sell housing mortgages to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Furthermore, ensure that banks can receive advances from the Bank of Canada using such mortgages as eligible security in the same way in which they can receive advances from the Bank of Canada using housing mortgages as security.

We in this group, Mr. Speaker, feel that not only is such a plan necessary in Canada at this time but that it is feasible, practical and will assist small business and industry. It will protect the banks making the loans because it puts them in the same position as they are at the present time with respect to long term advances for housing or farm loans. We propose this program with the object of opening up a new avenue by which the chartered banks, working in close-cooperation with a revised industrial development bank, could grant capital assistance in the form of term loans to qualifying small businesses. To some it may seem a novel approach but it is no more novel than the legislation passed by the house in 1954 which allowed the banks, for the first time in their history, to go into the mortgage lending field under the National Housing Act. In order to guarantee what is termed the liquidity of the banks and thus maintain the complete integrity of deposit banking the necessary safeguards have been provided in the five points I have outlined on behalf of this group.

We believe that the program we are proposing at this time will fill a gap in the financial structure of the country, a gap which has long handicapped small business. We hope that it will receive the most serious consideration by members of the house and the most serious consideration of the government which would have to bring in the required legislation.

Mr. Ormiston: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Ormiston: I wonder whether the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) considers that government sponsored co-operatives compete with small business. What is his reaction to that policy?

Mr. Winch: Co-operatives only operate in Canada under laws of the federal and provincial parliaments. We are asking that small business be given the same assistance as any other business.

Mr. Pallett: You would do away with them if you had the chance.

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to say a few words in connection with small business. I find, after listening to the hon. member who has just taken his seat, that he has enunciated more or less what has been Conservative policy over the years. But it is not C.C.F. policy.

An hon. Member: Bring down a bill.

Mr. Fulton: He has only just read the speech from the throne.

Mr. Van Horne: I suppose also that the remarks I am going to make tonight may again be the subject of vindictiveness on the part of the hon. twitching, squirming, jumping, jack-in-the-box from Twillingate. Instead of cluttering up the debates and highjacking—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is well recognized in this house, and I am sure the hon. member will agree, that reflections on any hon. member of a character that touch his person in that way are certainly not within the traditions of the house. I would ask the hon. member if he does not think he has gone away beyond the bounds of fair comment in that kind of observation.

Mr. Habel: He took a whole month to think that up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. On the point of order may I say that while any one of the epithets alone might have passed unnoticed I think that the combination of them is more than the house is likely to appreciate.

Mr. Van Horne: I am very pleased to withdraw those terms, twitching, squirming and jumping. Instead of cluttering up the debates of this house, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) would have probably been well advised to stay back on the squid jigging grounds, where he might have been of some help bailing out some fisherman's boat.

Mr. Habel: Is this your grievance?

Mr. Van Horne: No, that is not my grievance. Perhaps I should also say that while I appreciate the invitation from some member of the C.C.F. to join his party I can tell them quite frankly that if there is one outfit I would not go near with a 14-foot barge pole, it is the C.C.F. I would much rather be an impatient Tory. My politics are for free enterprise and the help of governments, instead of regimentation by governments. I believe in private ownership, and this does not apply only to the C.B.C. I feel it is wrong for governments, such as the government of Saskatchewan, to compete with private enterprise, and I am not just thinking of Trans-Canada Air Lines. Governments are set up to assist and encourage private enterprise, and not compete with it, nor hamstring it by bureaucracy or fetter it by too much legislation. Today business spends a big percentage of its time in collecting money for governments at all levels. I feel we must regain that pioneer spirit which possessed our forefathers when they landed on these shores, and go forward and marshall the wealth and the resources of this country, thereby creating jobs, payrolls, security and opportunities for work. Free enterprise, aided by a sympathetic and non-competing government, can do this. The C.C.F. just does not fit into the picture of a greater Canada, so I suggest they join us.

Mr. Speaker: I remind the hon. member that the grievance, as I understood it, related to government guaranteed long term loans to small business. If the hon. gentleman does not want to talk on that subject, there is another hon. member who does. I suggest he address himself to that problem.

Mr. Van Horne: One of the great problems that exists in my riding affects small business in a singular way. While I may be restricted tonight to speaking only about capital assistance, I may say this: No government in the history of this country has taken seriously, nor has given the consideration to small business which it deserves. The industrial development bank, in so far as it affects a certain group of businesses connected with manufacturing or processing, does serve a useful purpose in a very restricted field. The regulations that govern loans make it very difficult for many businesses that need loans to get them. Today the No. 1 problem with small business is certainly capital, yet our economic setup is so arranged as to provide financial capital for the larger corporations. There is no similar setup whereby a small business can become capitalized easily and effectively.

This problem is not peculiar to Canada alone; it applies equally to other countries with which we are familiar. I believe the reconstruction plan introduced into the United States by the late President Roosevelt in the early thirties did to some extent correspond with the subject matter which my hon. friend just mentioned. I can recall reading reports of that reconstruction corporation in which it was stated that a man was given a loan of $2,000 in order to establish some sort of a stamp collecting business. Under that setup the loans were not confined to processing or manufacturing companies, as are the loans granted by the industrial development bank. In that singular respect, the industrial development bank does not respond to or meet the requirements of small business.

Another thing that probably strikes anyone who sees the difficulties under which small business operates is the lack of assistance in regard to markets. Last fall I happened to be in Paris, and this fact will probably answer to some extent the remarks made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) the other day when he twisted some remarks I made earlier. In my riding, as you know, we live by pulpwood. My riding has three pulpmills and two Canadian National Railways stations. Our whole economy is based on sticks of pulpwood. When we cannot sell paper or pulp we have conditions such as exist today where some 6,000 people are out of work, very many of whom are without enough stamps to entitle them to unemployment insurance benefits.

This is a most unfortunate situation. Someone may say that this is not a small business because I am talking about three pulpmills. I agree that three pulpmills do not constitute small business, but the hundreds of contractors who cut pulpwood or have pulpwood cut by the cord are operating small businesses. Possibly I can tell you why some of their difficulties exist, and perhaps I could make one or two suggestions to help overcome them.

While in Paris last fall at the NATO conference I took advantage of the opportunity to interview two of the largest pulpwood buyers in France. One was a Mr. Chassaigne, of the Compagnie d'Importation de Bois et Pate a Papier. I asked him how much pulpwood he generally bought and he said that up until recently he had been buying 300,000 cords a year, many of which came from Canada. I would say that 300,000 cords of pulpwood is a lot of wood. I asked him where he was buying this wood now, and he said from Russia and Sweden. I asked him why. He said, in the first place we have nothing against your pulpwood; the quality may not be quite as good as the quality of the wood we get from Russia and Sweden, but the wood coming from Russia arrives on the delivery dates." In addition, he said that the present tight money policy—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's memory seems to be very short. I gave him the floor in preference to another member who wanted to speak on this subject. I think, in fairness, he should pursue the grievance that is before the house because we have only a limited time to deal with this matter.

Mr. Van Horne: Perhaps I am doing so indirectly, but I am coming to the problem of money in connection with the sale of this product. However, I will agree to alter the trend of my thoughts. The point is that these foreign buyers simply do not have the money or cannot get the money with which to purchase lumber or pulpwood or many other things from Canada because of the currency policies.

Possibly one of the things that prompts me to agree heartily with most of the recommendations made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, although the points he made seemed to be inconsistent with the policies of his party as I have come to know them over the years, is the fact that if small business in Canada today is faced with the problem of continued growth and the lack of capital to pursue it certainly the responsibility is not only on the federal government but also on the provincial governments.

In my own province the provincial government has established, and this only recently, an industrial loan board. I may say that here again the problem is far from being solved because of the scope of the loans that are made. They do not satisfy the requirements of small business. Of course, one of the big problems in providing capital for small industries is that you are dealing not only with real property and physical assets but you are dealing with the potential of sales; you are dealing with the stockpiling of materials and inventories and so on. If loans could be made up to 90 per cent of the value of the physical property owned by the small business, then I would say that a real start had been made and real help would have been given to small businesses.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my remarks are complementary to those of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who raised this matter, and I am sure that practically all hon. members are pleased that he did so. Particularly pleased, I would imagine, are those countless small business concerns throughout the country which would be affected and assisted by such a proposal.

After listening to the hon. member who just sat down I might say that I appreciated greatly finally being able to listen in this house to someone who is a true Tory. Up until now I thought they did not exist. I would suggest that he study a little longer and in a little bit greater detail the approach of the C.C.F. party and that, contrary to what he believes, he will find that these ideas are not in one way inconsistent with the general attitude that we have.

I should like to mention a few figures and statistics in order to point out the necessity of instituting such a program as that proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East. This statistical information comes from the dominion bureau of statistics publication on commercial failures under the Bankruptcy and Winding-Up Acts. With reference to the number of business failures or insolvencies over the past few years we find there has been a gradual increase in the number. To compare last year with the year before, according to the statistics we find that there was an increase of some 12 per cent in the number of failures and an increase numerically from 1,967 to 2,198. I might add that of those 2,198 insolvencies last year, 1,320 of them involved wage earners and lost wages where people did not get their wages because the company had gone bankrupt. The others that did not involve loss of wages were wholly-owned or family-owned businesses. The amount of total liabilities over 1956 also increased by some 9 per cent.

But the most interesting point in the application of these statistics to the proposal made by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East is the average amount of liabilities incurred by the businesses which went insolvent. Last year the average amount was $31,900, which was certainly not a large amount of money compared with the indebtedness and liabilities that might be incurred if some of our multi-million dollar corporations in Canada went bankrupt. I might point out that 57 per cent of the entire number of insolvencies were ones having liabilities in the bracket between $5,000 and $25,000 while over 86 per cent were ones having liabilities of less than $50,000. This is in the field of being a small business in terms of liabilities and in terms of money.

If we had legislation that would allow businesses as those to which I have just referred the opportunity of participating in the financial field in the same way as can larger corporations, undoubtedly many of these bankruptcies would not have taken place and many of the wage earners who were affected by the insolvencies would not have been affected, would probably still be employed, would still be drawing their wages, would still be spending that money and contributing to the general economic welfare of the Canadian society.

While there are many more, some of the particular types of small business which are referred to in this statistical information are filling stations, clothing stores, furniture stores, radio and appliance shops, food stores, general merchants, drug stores and the like which are similar to the small corner grocery store type business. All of them, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver East, have great difficulty in getting any financial assistance when they need it. All for the lack of a few dollars they find themselves in difficulties. I am sure many of these businesses could have been saved, could have been put on their feet, could have been contributing to the economy of Canada and could have been employing a few more of the wage earners of the country.

As everyone knows, in our so-called free enterprise system—which as many know is not a free enterprise system at all—these small businesses particularly have a most difficult time in competing against the huge monopoly corporations that we have. They are just not in the same class at all. A review of the various inquiries made under the Combines Investigation Act will show that a small concern attempting to buck a large group of chain stores or a large monopoly corporation or semi-monopoly corporation has a most difficult time in doing so and can easily be wiped out of business if the large concern so desires and puts its mind to it. In fact that has happened in the past on many occasions.

If there is any thought of attempting to advance the philosophy of free enterprise as it was originally evolved and not as we have it at the present time, then we must enter into some relationship like this in order to protect the smaller concerns—these people who are in effect no nearer being a capitalist than I am—the businesses which are in effect merely in the working class group but which try to participate in society and try to find a means of expressing themselves through the type of business that they develop or start. If there is any thought at all in the minds of those on the government benches opposite of establishing some protection for these small business people against the effect that monopoly enterprise has on them at the present time, here is an opportunity to move in that direction and to establish such legislation so that small businesses can take their proper place in society without fear of being wiped out of existence because of the mercenary attitude of the large multimillion dollar corporations. As a result of this grievance having been raised—and I am sure in my own mind that opposition will not be found in any part of this house—I hope that it will be instrumental in leading the government a little bit further along the line of giving assistance and guidance to the people in Canada.

Mr. John MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, you have heard the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) say that he is a spontaneous speaker and that it is only on rare occasions that he needs notes. I am just the opposite on this point. I am not the competent and qualified debater that he is and on every occasion in this house to date on which I have spoken I have needed quite comprehensive notes. But because this matter has arisen in the house tonight and I have no notes with me except those which I have taken of his speech, you may rest assured that my remarks will be brief and direct.

The hon. member for Vancouver East tonight has raised a grievance which I am sure we all recognize is a true one. As far as Winnipeg North Centre and the city of Winnipeg are concerned, may I say that the problems and ills that befall small business are of great concern to all members from the city of Winnipeg.

However, I am just a little suspicious of the grievance brought forward tonight. Perhaps it is just a coincidence but it does seem that whenever there is a delegation from the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa there are great speeches from the group on my right made by them as "the friends of labour" and then whenever there are delegations from the farms in Ottawa we have speeches from those on my right to the effect that they are the great friends of the farmers. Now that we have speeches on small business I am just wondering if there is a delegation in Ottawa representing small business.

Be that as it may, I find myself in the position of agreeing with some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. In the course of his speech he spoke of the problems of small business; that there is no adequate provision for long term financing and so on, and so far as I am concerned I think he is absolutely right. At the present time only short term credits are available for small business. He has said there is little hope for small business to raise capital except through the banks and here again I think the hon. member is quite correct.

[Mr. Howard.]

He went on, however, to set out a five point platform on behalf of the C.C.F. group designed to broaden the class of loans under the industrial development bank, to increase the capitalization of the industrial development bank, to amend the Bank Act in order to allow them to make loans upon mortgages or hypothecations in addition to the provisions of the National Housing Act, to guarantee term loans made by banks to small businesses and to enable the chartered banks to sell mortgage securities.

I do not know when the hon. member for Vancouver East became a financial expert, and I certainly am not one. Perhaps this is the reason why he made such detailed notes for his speech. The hon. member and all the members of the C.C.F. group are quite well aware of the provisions in the throne speech which said that this government intended to set up a committee to study the problems of small business. Who are we as individuals or members of one group in this house to say what are these problems and what are the solutions to these problems? The hon. member for Vancouver East went into great detail about some of the problems of small businesses, of which I am well aware, and some of which apply to my own constituency, but our government has gone ahead and has made provision for the setting up of a committee to study these problems. There may be some merit in the suggestions made by the hon. member but all these things are going to be considered by the committee when it is set up by the government. The group on my right, as always, have perhaps gone off course—they are always so sure of themselves.

The C.C.F. group has brought forward a plan which they say will solve all the problems of small business and, as a matter of fact, they may have some solutions, but this plan does not provide a complete solution. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has submitted on behalf of the C.C.F. party an outline of their philosophy and I do not intend to get into a debate on this subject, although at some other time I will be glad to do so.

Mr. Howard: Any time.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, but I do not now intend to take up any further time in the house apart from making this observation. I recognize the problems of small business and my constituents know that I recognize those problems as they also know that this government recognizes them and that those problems will be dealt with accordingly.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): The subject matter raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) is most important. I wish we could have been given more notice so that we could have been better prepared for debate on this subject. There are, however, one or two things to which I would like to refer at this time.

I was particularly pleased to hear the hon. member refer to the industrial development bank legislation which was put on the statute books by the Liberal government. This was undoubtedly a far-sighted measure and has done a great deal to assist in the development of the economy of this country in the post-war years. The essence of his grievance, as I understood it, was that the provisions of the act should be extended to make it more readily available to small business. The other parts of his speech, so far as I could follow him, merely dealt with supplementary measures and providing ancilliary legislation for the furtherance of that objective.

In this connection I feel I should place on record the fact that the 1958 election program of the Liberal party envisioned that very thing, and when the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) was speaking he set out a list of the types of small businesses he had in mind. These could really be summed up by the words "retail businesses". I do not think, however, he intended to limit his remarks to retail businesses although nearly all of the types to which he made reference could be placed in that category. The program of the Liberal party, the literature of that party and the speeches delivered by Liberal candidates made a great deal of reference to this very point and it was a definite part of the program of my party that there would be easier credit for small business, including the extension of the Industrial Development Bank Act in order to make its benefits available to retailers.

The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) made a speech, in which I must admit I do not very fully concur, which among other things dealt with the matter of export business. I could not help but recall as he was speaking that the export business of Canada has been materially helped to meet difficult conditions, mostly with respect to exchange restrictions in foreign countries, by the Export Credits Insurance Act. This again is Liberal legislation which has done a great deal to develop the economy of this country. While I do not suggest that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska intended to acknowledge any indebtedness to the Liberal party for that splendid bit of legislation, yet I think, as I have said, it is a fact that this legislation has done much to advance the development of Canada in postwar years. Liberal legislation has contributed greatly to the development of our economy. I have made reference to these two acts in particular because they have really constituted the subject matter of the remarks of the hon. members who have spoken during the last few minutes.

There was another logical extension of aid to small business which arose out of the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver East, and that is the matter of corporation income tax. I would remind the house that the Liberal program in the last election campaign involved the proposition that there would be a reduction in the corporation income tax by cutting it in half, that is to say, by reducing it from 20 per cent to 10 per cent on the first $10,000 of corporation profits. This, I regret to say, will not come about because of the results of the election and, as I listened to the budget speech, I concluded that the very opposite will undoubtedly happen. I do not, however, want to branch off into the budget debate—

Mr. Pallett: That is another incorrect conclusion to which you have come.

Mr. McIlraith: I did not hear the interjection of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) but if he will speak a little louder I will answer him.

Mr. Pallett: I merely remarked to the hon. member that he has come to another wrong conclusion.

Mr. McIlraith: The conclusion is quite obvious to anyone who deals with the matter of small business. Small business will be damaged by the budget delivered on June 17, 1958; in fact, the whole treatment of the economy will be conducive to damage rather than assistance.

Mr. Green: This is not the budget debate.

Mr. McIlraith: That is precisely the point. The leader of the house reminds the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) that this is not the budget debate. I was merely contenting myself with answering the hon. member for Peel. The point remains that all the statements of the hon. members who have taken part in this presentation of grievance tonight have been in effect a recognition of the appropriate and effective legislation which was passed by the Liberal government in aid of the development of small business. All they are really asking is a continuance and an extension of that legislation as was set forth by the Liberals in the 1958 election campaign.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I am very pleased indeed to associate myself with the expression of the grievance raised this evening by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. MacLean) with regard to the proposals made by my colleague from Vancouver East. Though expressing a great deal of appreciation and understanding of the problems of small business, he seemed to feel that the suggestions put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver East were possibly conceived in some haste. I should like at once to assure the hon. member that this problem of the small businessman has been considered at considerable length by the C.C.F. movement for a goodly number of years. We realize the seriousness of the problem and its far-reaching implications for the Canadian consumer, to an extent that we have had a continuing committee studying this matter for many years.

The hon. member seemed interested in knowing where the headquarters of small business are to be found in Canada. I know he comes from the city of Winnipeg. I have before me here a letterhead from, I assume, the secretariat of the retail merchants association of Canada, and I can tell the hon. member that the head office is in his city of Winnipeg. As for the idea proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver East being, in the main, so unique or novel, may I offer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a suggestion that it is nothing of the kind.

I should like to read this submission of the retail merchants association of Canada as made in a letter to me dated April 13, 1957. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will then see a very close similarity to the proposals put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver East when he spoke on behalf of this group with regard to this grievance. The submission says, on page 2:

> This association has made the suggestion that a Retail Business Capital Loans Act be set up for the purpose of enabling retailers to borrow money for rehabilitation and expansion. We have suggested that the mechanics of such an act be similar to those of the Homes Improvement Loans Act, i.e., that the individual loans be made through the chartered banks, with a government guarantee.
> This could be done by authorizing the bank to advance 50 to 75 per cent of the cost of the proposed improvement or extension of buildings, equipment, parking facilities, etc. The loans would be repayable over a period of years. As we pointed out previously, such a plan would not introduce any new principle into Canadian finance. Similar assistance has already been extended to fishermen, farmers, manufacturers, home-owners and home repairs, food processors, etc.

So the idea has been given serious thought over a long period of years. With the assumption of office by this new government we had thought that some action would be forthcoming during this session. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) indicated, after the speech made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, that the hon. member had obviously not read the speech from the throne. I think the grievance remains a grievance despite anything I read in the speech from the throne. The speech from the throne is somewhat along the lines of the proposal made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in that it predicts that a committee or a branch of a department of government will be set up to study the problems of small business and to advise on measures necessary to meet them. We feel that the small businessmen of Canada were given an assurance that their problem had been considered and that the necessary action would be forthcoming. There is such a thing as chickens coming home to roost, and the various promises that have been made by the Conservative party are coming home to roost now with great and growing rapidity, and these chickens are rather blue. They are bluer than the Tory party, and they are coming thick and fast.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) endorse the activities of the industrial development bank and, as the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) pointed out, it stands to the credit of the Liberal party that this bank was established and has been so influential in assisting individual enterprises in Canada.

The C.C.F. party has always in this house been a strong supporter of the industrial development bank, and in effect all we are asking now is that its powers be broadened so as to enable it to render a service to the small businessman.

Some argument has arisen in debating this grievance as to what constitutes a small business. My interpretation of a small business in need of government interest and concern is a business not necessarily of a certain size or volume with regard to its assets, but a business in which there is some relationship between ownership and management. It may be a business consisting of $5,000 or $10,000 of assets; it may go as high as half a million dollars depending on the type of enterprise. I think our society has lost something by divorcing management from ownership, and that those engaged in business have a little less chance to be responsible members of our society now that this separation of ownership and management is taking place.

The record of our group in speaking on behalf of the individual in Canada is very clear indeed. The very reason for our being in existence as a political force is that we feel that with the way things are going at the present time the rights of the individual are disappearing day by day in our society. The tendency of big business to consolidate and amalgamate robs the individual engaged as an employee in enterprise of a large share of his individualism. Eventually he finds he has become a mere cog in a machine. His position is different from that of a civil servant who renders a service to society as a whole. That is different and distinct from the relationship of the individual working in a huge enterprise who does little more than punch a machine or go through a certain routine. This party has always supported genuine free enterprise. In fact, the birth of this political party came about through the growing power of monopolistic corporations and their influence on the individuals in our nation.

I am assuming that the present grievance is that this government is not taking action to help small business in Canada. This was demonstrated when the government did not express any sympathy for the idea of placing a limitation on interest rates. Huge department stores through their financing methods are able to squeeze the small businessman to the wall. This applies particularly in the appliance field where these huge corporations do not care how much net profit they make on the sale of an article because they make their net earnings on the finance charges they are allowed to levy. If the Tory party believes in competition to the extent it professes it might very well reconsider its position with regard to placing a limitation on finance charges. This would be a valuable way of giving assistance to the small enterpriser and the small merchant in Canada.

Another device that might be used would be to make more effective the anti-combines legislation of this country. The practices of combines tend to gobble up free enterprise in one field after another on the Canadian scene.

Another cause of the hardship of the small businessman is that he is not able to buy on the same terms as is the large business enterpriser. I feel that an amendment to the combines legislation might serve an extremely useful purpose so that when a small corner store orders one case of Lifebuoy soap the owner will not be charged a higher price than is charged a huge chain store for the same product. In view of the huge overhead paid by large businesses and especially by chain stores I am convinced that small merchants would be able to compete very successfully with them if they were able to buy at the same price levels.

Mr. Speakman: Would the hon. member permit a question? Has the hon. gentleman not heard about the chains of independent grocers whose buying power approximates that of the large chain stores?

An hon. Member: In Saskatchewan.

Mr. Regier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have heard of chains of independent merchants. When merchants co-operate for their mutual survival I believe that is as welcome a move as any other co-operative form of endeavour. However, I think the hon. member will agree with me that most private businessmen in Canada today do not have the advantage of such an association. Perhaps the hon. member will have a recommendation to make to that effect to the committee which I understand the government intends to set up.

We in this group are rather disappointed that the government apparently intends only to set up a branch or department of government which is going to study the problem and then advise as to possible measures that may be undertaken. Certainly in the light of the promises that have been made and the false hopes that have been built up this is little short of procrastination on the part of the government.

According to press reports concerning the visit of the Minister of Justice to the west coast some little while ago the minister while in western Canada placed a slightly different interpretation on the intentions of the government in this respect. According to a newspaper report, the minister explained that this proposed new branch or section of government would supply advice not on measures of legislation that might be implemented but would provide it to individual enterprises as to how they could more economically and efficiently operate their enterprises.

Mr. Fulton: I am afraid the hon. gentleman has misunderstood as usual.

Mr. Pearson: And you are speaking out of turn, as usual.

Mr. Regier: Perhaps the minister feels that the committee he will establish would be wiser than to adopt the recommendations of the retail merchants association. We in this group advocate the recommendations they have made after years of research. However, if he feels I am misconstruing the matter the hon. gentleman is free to make his own remarks in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Regier: The party in power frequently likes to refer to the United States as the heart of free enterprise. May I remind the government that even the government of that country has set up nothing less than a cabinet committee to advise on ways and means of assisting small business in the United States.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

78. Departmental administration and payments to Canadian commercial corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production, $7,232,086.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

130. Departmental administration, $371,750.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

193. Departmental Administration, $623,942.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader of the house what the business is for tomorrow and Thursday?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we plan to resume the budget debate and as it is the seventh day I believe that means a vote late in the afternoon. Then we shall conclude the budget debate on Thursday. I am not yet sure about the business for Friday but probably we will commence with the estimates of the Department of Public Works. Tomorrow on routine proceedings I plan to move that the estimates of the Department of Fisheries be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries and that the estimates of mines and technical surveys be referred to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES, ST. LAURENT, QUE.

Question No. 123—Mr. Rouleau:

1. Does the federal government make grants to the city of St. Laurent in lieu of taxes on the national film board office located within the limits of the said city?
2. If so, since what date has the government paid such grant and in what annual amount?
3. Does the federal government pay grants for other public buildings belonging to the federal government and located in the said city?
4. If so, how many such buildings are there and what is the annual amount paid in respect of each one?

Question

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. Since January 1, 1956: 1956 grant, $23,075; 1957 grant, $128,807.

3. Yes.

4. Old post office building: 1956 grant, $346; 1957 grant, $664.

The city of St. Laurent also receives grants in lieu of taxes on portions of Dorval airport and Cartierville airport, including a few crown-owned residences, sheds and barns.

Dorval airport: 1956 grant, $1,253; 1957 grant, $4,671.

Cartierville airport: 1956 grant, $2,215; 1957 grant, $8,257.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 2, 1958

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—TRIBUTE TO CANADA BY ARGENTINE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege which affects every member of this House of Commons and every member of the other place. Would you, Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with the honourable the Speaker of the other place, and on behalf of the houses of parliament of Canada, express in the warmest possible terms our sincere appreciation of the unprecedented courtesy and honour that the Argentine house of deputies paid to Canada by suspending its sitting yesterday in tribute to our 91st birthday?

MR. FISHER—REFERENCE TO ANSWER TO STARRED QUESTION

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A week ago an answer was given to starred question 27, part 1, by the Minister of Transport. I have received sworn testimony from one of the persons involved in that question, and it indicates that the minister's reply was incorrect. I wanted to bring this matter to his attention. I will forward him the information so that, if this testimony should be true, he can make the proper correction.

ESTIMATES

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South) presented the third report of the standing committee on estimates, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC STEAMSHIPS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON STRIKE SITUATION

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I should like to make a brief statement on the British Columbia coastal shipping strike involving the Canadian Pacific Steamships operations. As hon. members are aware, this strike has now been going on for about six weeks. I have today received word from the commissioner of inquiry, Mr. Eric Taylor, who is still in Vancouver, to the effect that after further strenuous efforts over the week end and up to late last night, he feels there is nothing more that he can do to bring the parties together.

In view of this he has recommended that arrangements be made forthwith for the resumption of the operation of the ships of the company in the interests of the community, on the understanding that the disputes which arose out of failure of the parties to agree upon the amendments to be made to the collective agreements which expired in the case of the S.I.U. on September 15, 1957, and in the case of both the Canadian merchant seamen's guild and the national association of marine engineers on September 1, 1957, be referred to arbitration by an arbitrator appointed by the Minister of Labour of Canada for the purpose of resolving the matters in issue and the making of a decision thereon by August 15, 1958.

I am conveying these recommendations to the parties concerned and urging them to give them their favourable consideration.

PRIVATE BILL

REFERENCE OF PETITION TO COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved:

That the petition of Beverley Georgina Berry Turpin for a bill of divorce, presented on June 30, 1958, together with the clerk of petitions' report thereon of July 1, 1958, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for such recommendations as may be deemed advisable.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-U.S. EXCHANGE OF NOTES WITH RESPECT TO AERIAL REFUELLING

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I desire to table an exchange of notes between the United States government and the Canadian government. This exchange has to do with the conditions which will govern the establishment, maintenance and operation of aerial refuelling facilities at certain bases in Canada.

Canada-U.S.—Aerial Refuelling Facilities

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the Prime Minister informed the house on June 10 of the intention of the two governments to complete a formal agreement on this subject. This agreement has resulted from extended discussions between the two governments. The purpose of the establishment of the refuelling facilities is to strengthen the readiness capability of the United States strategic air command, which constitutes the free world's main deterrent against aggression. These refuelling facilities are designed to contribute to the ability of that deterrent force to react quickly in the face of the reduced time of warning which must now be contemplated in the event of an act of aggression against this continent.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether with regard to the exchange of notes, now constituting an agreement between Canada and the United States, any construction of air refuelling facilities in this country pursuant to the agreement will be performed by Canadian workmen; and will the conditions relating to the construction and procurement of construction equipment likewise be confined to Canadian sources?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would refer to paragraphs 5 and 6 of the annex to the note I have tabled. With respect to construction, it is provided that procedures for awarding contracts for construction of the air refuelling facilities, and so forth, shall be determined by agreement between appropriate agencies of the two governments. Then there are set out in paragraph 6 with respect to procurement of equipment certain provisions in that regard. I can assure the house, Mr. Speaker, that the interests of Canadian contractors will be safeguarded as much as possible.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a position to say whether or not this covers the use of labour, by the United States, or is it the intention that only Canadian labour will be employed? Are we to construe from what the minister has just said about the interpretation of article 5 and following articles of the annex that the construction work may be awarded to American contractors?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): The agreement that is referred to in paragraph 5 of the annex has not as yet been worked out. I can only reiterate the assurance that I gave.

[Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac).]

EQUIPPING OF MISSILE TESTING STATION IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. As Canada does not produce any missile weapons and, to our knowledge, our armed forces are not equipped with the same, could the minister make any comment on recent allegations that a contract has been awarded for the equipment for a missile testing station in Canada?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I will take that question as notice and give the hon. member an answer tomorrow.

Mr. Winch: As a supplementary question, would the minister also check as to whether or not a contract has been awarded to Computing Devices of Canada, which has its headquarters in Ottawa, for the supplying of equipment for the purpose I have mentioned?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I will also take that question as notice.

FISHERIES

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That items numbered 130 to 153 inclusive, as listed in the main estimates of 1958-59, and items numbered 555 to 565 inclusive, as listed in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, relating to the Department of Fisheries, be withdrawn from the committee of supply and be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Motion agreed to.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That items numbered 193 to 218 inclusive, as listed in the main estimates 1958-59 and items numbered 575 to 577 inclusive, as listed in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, relating to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, be withdrawn from the committee of supply and be referred to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Motion agreed to.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have one more motion which I did not mention last night, but in view of the report of the standing committee on estimates, which has been concurred in, I am moving this additional motion today:

That items numbered 78 to 84 inclusive, as listed in the main estimates 1958-59, and item No. 541, as listed in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, relating to the Department of Defence Production, be withdrawn from the committee of supply and be referred to the standing committee on estimates, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Motion agreed to.

STARRED QUESTION

CARSON STROUD

Question No. 28—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. When was Mr. Carson Stroud selected as adviser on employment to the officials of the Terra Nova national park?
2. Who recommended his appointment?
3. What are his qualifications to serve as adviser?
4. Who selected the temporary and casual employees in the park before Mr. Stroud became adviser?
5. Were there any complaints about the selection of employees before Mr. Stroud became adviser?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is April, 1958.

The answer to the second question is that there is no appointment. I will take responsibility for suggesting that he be among those asked for advice.

The answer to the third question is that Mr. Stroud is a leading citizen in the area and is highly regarded.

The answer to question 4 is as follows. The only previous adviser of whom the department is aware was Captain M. Berry who is, I believe, a personal friend of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, and any additional information will have to come from him in that regard.

With regard to question 5, some complaints were received between the time I became minister of the department and before Mr. Stroud's selection. I believe his advice will help the park authorities to handle employment questions at the park in the best interests of the local people. No complaints have been received from local residents about selection of employees since the department has had Mr. Stroud's advice.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT—CABINET USE OF PLANES

Question No. 28—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did any minister of the crown use Department of Transport planes for other than government business between February 1 and March 31, 1958?
2. If so, what ministers, for what flights?
3. What remuneration did the department receive for any such flights?
4. What was the institutional or personal source of such remuneration?

COAL TENDERS, P.E.I.

Question No. 118—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Have public tenders been called for the supplying of coal for Department of Transport, Department of Public Works, and national defence buildings, in Prince Edward Island, for the fiscal year 1958-59?
2. If so, who submitted tenders, what was the amount of each tender and the grade of coal in each case?

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES IN U.K.

Question No. 135—Mr. Godin:

What was the value of goods purchased by the Canadian government in the United Kingdom in each month from July, 1957, to date?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

EFFECTS OF ATOMIC RADIATION

Motion No. 11—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of any reports or submissions exchanged between the Canadian government or any of its departments, and the United Nations or any of its agencies, between January 1, 1957, and the present, dealing with the effects of atomic radiation.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is not debatable, but I am suggesting some modifications. Since January 1, 1957, the Canadian government, as a member of the 15-nation UN scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation, has submitted four reports dealing with different aspects of atomic radiation. Copies of these four reports will be tabled.

During the same period one copy only of papers and reports received by the UN scientific committee from the other member countries of the committee has been made available to the Canadian government. These copies are on file in my department. These reports now total about 230, most of which are of a highly scientific nature and run to as much as 2,000 pages. In view of their number and strictly scientific content, I respectfully suggest that instead of having copies made of these voluminous reports for tabling purposes, they be made available to the hon. member for his perusal in my department. I believe the hon. member is agreeable to this.

Mr. Speaker: May I record this motion as having been otherwise dealt with and withdrawn by leave of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BEAM STATION ROAD, TERRACE AIRPORT, B.C.

Motion No. 20—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government, or any of its departments, and the government of British Columbia or any other organization or person, dealing with the use of the beam station road at the Terrace airport by the British Columbia provincial government or by any other person.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would mind allowing this motion to stand until I have an opportunity to discuss it with him.

Motion stands.

FEDERAL ELECTION EXPENSES, 1958

Motion No. 21—Mr. Howard:

For a return showing the total amount of election expenses on behalf of each candidate, by constituencies, in the general election of March 31, 1958, as indicated in the return respecting election expenses submitted by the official agent of each candidate, as required under the provisions of section 63 of the Canada Elections Act; and showing also the names of any candidates, by constituencies, on whose behalf election expense returns have not been submitted.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

REPORTED REDUCTION IN PROHIBITED EXPORTS TO COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he would comment on a report which appears in the press this morning to the effect that as a result of discussions in Paris the list of prohibited exports to the Soviet union and communist China has been reduced and, if this is the case, could the minister indicate the nature of the relaxation?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make at this moment because I have not received an official report with regard to the changes that may have been made.

URANIUM—STATEMENT ON REPORTED SALE BY UNITED STATES TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on June 24 the Leader of the Opposition addressed a question to me with respect to the effect on Canada's position, as a supplier of uranium to Japan, of an agreement signed June 6 between Japan and the United States for the supply over a 10-year period of 2,700 kilograms of uranium to Japan by the United States.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The agreement in question is an agreement for co-operation in the civil uses of atomic energy, and provides, among other things, that the United States will sell or lease, as may be agreed, to the government of Japan enriched uranium containing up to a total of 2,700 kilograms of U-235. This material will be supplied up to this total quantity only in such amounts as will be required from time to time over a 10-year period for the fuelling of certain nuclear reactors which the government of Japan, in consultation with the United States, decides to construct or to authorize private organizations to construct in Japan. The material in question is, of course, enriched uranium which Canada is not in a position to supply.

As my colleague the minister of external affairs stated in the house a few days ago, we understand that the Japanese authorities are anxious to co-operate with Canada in the peaceful uses of atomic energy, and we hope they will shortly be in a position to begin negotiations toward an agreement for such co-operation. This agreement will contain a provision permitting the supply by Canada of natural uranium in commercial quantities to Japan in the coming years. Our present information is that the Japanese nuclear power program will in due course require substantial quantities of natural uranium, and as one of the world's leading uranium producers we hope that much of this will be provided by Canada.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN PAYMENTS DUE TO DROUGHT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister would care to comment on his inspection of the very serious conditions on the prairies and tell us whether or not the government contemplates any emergency action arising out of that inspection, particularly in respect of an increase in the rate of payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as government plans are concerned they will be communicated to the house as soon as any decision is made. However, in reply to the earlier portion of the question I would say this. In Manitoba and Saskatchewan I had an opportunity of doing that which is very necessary to be done at all times by one who has my responsibility—to know at first hand what is actually taking place.

In the province of Manitoba, according to the information I received, and that was supported by what I personally saw in the particular areas I visited, some 700 townships this year will require to be inspected under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. In the province of Saskatchewan, while yesterday and also the day before when I was in Brandon several localities received rain for the first time—

Mr. Argue: What was the amount?

Mr. Diefenbaker: While changes could take place in consequence of a continuance of reasonable precipitation, at the present time the picture is anything but one that would please the hearts of those who are familiar with conditions that have obtained in past years and the regularity with which drought has stricken certain portions of Saskatchewan ever since the white man first visited those areas.

In Saskatchewan the position seems to be that of the 3,000 townships in that province, 2,000 will be subject to the necessity of inspection under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, which gives some indication of the extremely serious condition prevalent in that province at the moment.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his statement. I realize that any government policy will be announced in due course, but I wonder whether the Prime Minister can say if a study is continuing in the whole field of crop insurance. That question comes very much to the fore with conditions as they now are.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the house has been advised on previous occasions, that study is being continued.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED CRITICISM OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a Canadian Press news report dated June 23, entitled "Judge Blasts Federal Men on Not Giving Arrest Reason", which reports Mr. Justice H. W. McInnes, of the supreme court of British Columbia, as criticizing senior officials of the minister's department for issuing a defective warrant for the rearrest of a man who faced the prospect of imprisonment for the remainder of his natural life. In view of the public interest in this unusual situation, is the minister prepared to give an explanation of the circumstances to the house?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. The case referred to was that of an inmate of the British Columbia penitentiary who was serving an indeterminate sentence as a result of a finding by a criminal court that he was an habitual criminal. After he had served 10 years of this sentence he was released on licence under the Ticket of Leave Act in January of this year. I should point out that his sentence had not been remitted, but that he was only granted a licence to serve the remainder of his sentence outside of prison for so long only as the conditions of the licence were complied with.

In June of this year it became apparent that this man was not complying with the terms of the licence under which he had been released from the institution; that for the protection of society it was desirable that the licence should be revoked and that, as required by the Ticket of Leave Act, he should be returned to the penitentiary. My colleague the Solicitor General, who is responsible for the administration of the Ticket of Leave Act, advised His Excellency that the licence should be revoked and it was revoked accordingly.

The Ticket of Leave Act provides that, where a licence under the act is revoked, the appropriate minister of the crown shall signify to the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that the licence has been revoked, and require the commissioner to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the licensee. This procedure was followed in the case to which the hon. member refers. However, the warrant that was issued by the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police indicated on its face that the ticket of leave licence in question had been revoked, but did not indicate that the appropriate minister of the crown had signified that fact to the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police. I should say that the commissioner's warrant in this case followed the form that has been used for such warrants since the Ticket of Leave Act came into force in 1895.

However, when the licensee was taken into custody under the commissioner's warrant, his counsel made successive applications by way of habeas corpus to two judges of the supreme court of British Columbia. Both these applications were refused. However, upon application to the third judge, Mr. Justice McInnes, the commissioner's warrant was held to be invalid on the ground that it did not contain a recital to the effect that the appropriate minister of the crown had signified to the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police that the licence had been revoked.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I might add that appropriate steps have been taken to ensure that in the future any warrant that is issued by the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police upon the revocation of a licence under the Ticket of Leave Act will not be defective, in the sense in which the commissioner's warrant was found to be defective in the case to which the hon. member referred.

With regard to the observations made as to the lack of reasons, I might point out that one of the basic provisions of the Ticket of Leave Act is that, where a man on ticket of leave is found to be not observing the conditions of the licence under which he is at liberty to serve the rest of his sentence outside the institution, that man should be immediately apprehended and recommitted, for the protection of society, and indeed, in many cases, in his own best interests. This is the scheme of the Ticket of Leave Act, which, with certain modifications, will be carried forward into the new proposed national parole act, of which notice has been given on the order paper. There will be an opportunity then for a fuller discussion if it should be desired at that time.

HEALTH INSURANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGED SIGNING OF AGREEMENT UNDER PROTEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to press reports the minister of health of British Columbia stated that that province signed the federal hospital insurance agreement under protest. What was the reason for the protest, and did other provinces make similar protests?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I also noticed the article, which I may state comes as a complete surprise to me. I should like to examine the correspondence and whatever there may be on file, so I think I shall take this question as notice.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FISHERMEN—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if there have been any recent changes in the unemployment insurance regulations so far as fishermen are concerned. If so, would he indicate the precise effect of these changes?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. In answer I might say that fishermen became eligible to receive benefits on December 1, 1957. An order in council relating to fishermen's benefits was passed to this effect in November, 1957, and there has been no change in the regulations in so far as fishermen are concerned since that time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question. Has the minister seen a report in the newspapers of Newfoundland to the effect that the Minister without Portfolio announced there had been a change?

Mr. Starr: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker.

THETFORD MINES—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Did the minister receive a telegram from the municipal authorities of Thetford Mines regarding unemployment and asking that seasonal benefits be paid to the unemployed for a further period? I am sorry I did not have an opportunity to send the minister notice of the question.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such telegram, but I will look into the departmental files and provide an answer to the question for the hon. member.

REQUEST FOR SEASONAL BENEFIT PAYMENT FIGURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Labour whether he has yet had an opportunity to get the figures I asked the acting minister for a day or two ago, with respect to the number of persons receiving seasonal benefits at the time seasonal benefits stopped on June 28?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I understand that takes about two weeks to compute, Mr. Speaker. As soon as the figures are available I will convey them to the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the minister going to be in a position to give the actual number of persons receiving benefits or the number of claimants? He indicated some time ago that he hoped to have the actual figures of beneficiaries.

Mr. Starr: I am not certain I can, but I will endeavour to comply with the wishes of the hon. member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED REMOVAL OF FLAG FROM OFFICE BY R.C.M. POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister inform the house upon whose instructions an officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police acted in requesting that a flag be removed from an office in the parliament buildings?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I am unaware that any officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police acted under such instructions.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Will the minister look into the case and ascertain the facts?

Mr. Fulton: I will be glad to, but I should have thought it would be within the knowledge of the hon. member asking the question that the control of the parliament buildings rests with the protective staff of the respective houses.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Is the minister not aware that there was a radio report this morning to the effect that the removal of the flag in question was performed at the instance of a Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer?

Mr. Fulton: No, I did not hear that report, but I will inquire into the circumstances and let the house know.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—USE OF PORT AUX BASQUES HARBOUR BY FERRY "WILLIAM CARSON"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I regret not being able to give him notice, but I do not believe he will be unduly handicapped. Is the minister correctly reported in today's Gazette to the effect that the Canadian National ferry William Carson is expected to start using the new harbour at Port aux Basques by the end of this summer? If so, can the minister be a little more specific as to when the trial runs may begin?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The trials are expected to start shortly, and are to be carried out this month. It is hoped by the management of the Canadian National that the Carson will start operating into Port aux Basques by the end of this month.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): In view of the fact the Prime Minister has just returned from Saskatchewan, is he in a position to make any statement in regard to the South Saskatchewan dam?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only connection between my visit and that dam is that climatic conditions in Saskatchewan this year indicate how necessary it was that this dam and irrigation project should have been proceeded with at least six or seven years ago.

However, the general position of affairs with regard to the matter is as follows. There has been transmitted to the government of Saskatchewan a draft agreement setting out the basis upon which the national government is prepared to join in the construction of the dam. Possibly I could do no better than to refer to the various items in connection with that draft agreement.

First, the dominion government will pay 75 per cent of the cost of construction of the dam, with 25 per cent being the responsibility of the provincial government except where the cost exceeds $100 million, in which case the national government will provide the total amount of that excess. Furthermore, in so far as the share of the government of Saskatchewan is concerned in the construction of the dam, that is the 25 per cent to which I have just made reference, we have agreed to finance half of Saskatchewan's share by accepting 20-year obligations of the province.

Third, we have agreed to pay 25 per cent of the cost of penstocks to provide a minimum of 200,000 horsepower.

We have agreed to transfer the ownership of the dam to Saskatchewan when it is completed and filled to the extent which will permit operation to produce a minimum of 200,000 horsepower of electrical energy.

We have further undertaken to assume the entire cost of engineering and legal services and supervision.

As to the future after the dam is constructed, we have agreed at the sole expense of Canada to correct all defects which may develop within the first 10 years after turning the dam over to Saskatchewan. We have also agreed to maintain the dam for a period of 10 years, for six years entirely at the expense of Canada and for the final four years with the expense being shared equally with the province.

In order to assure that the dam will be properly constructed, a construction board is to be set up with dominion and provincial representatives to review plans and so on during the time the construction of the dam is going forward, and also a maintenance and operation board during the period in which we will maintain the dam, but its operation will be in the hands of Saskatchewan. And for a period of 25 years from the time Saskatchewan takes over the dam where, by reason of a failure in the structure of the reservoir that is attributable to faulty design or construction, damage is caused which in the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture and the premier of the province of Saskatchewan is of the magnitude of a disaster, we have agreed that Canada will indemnify the province in respect of all claims of third parties arising out of such failure.

From the foregoing it will be seen that many of those things that in the past held back any agreement have now been removed by the acceptance on the part of this government of the need of the dam being proceeded with as a national venture in co-operation with the province of Saskatchewan. My hope is that at the earliest possible date this agreement will be signed, to the end that the work may be started within the next few weeks.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—REPORTED VARIATIONS IN SUPPORT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture; I regret that I did not send him notice. I should like to ask the minister whether he has replied to the representations of the syndicate catholique de l'U.C.C., des coopératives agricoles et du conseil de l'administration de la fédération de l'U.C.C. de la province de Quebec, pointing out that the price support for cheese is a half cent higher in Ontario than in Quebec in general, and one cent higher in Ontario than in the Saguenay region? Does the minister propose to take any action to rectify the situation?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall receiving representations from the organization which the hon. member mentioned, though I may have done so. However, the situation with regard to the support price of cheese is this. Under the provisions of the act we provide a support price which is fixed on the basis of the average price for the preceding 10 years at representative markets. As it happens, during the past 10 years the average price at Montreal has been less than the average price at Toronto and other Ontario points. That is the reason there is the half cent difference in the support price provided for Quebec cheese as compared with Ontario cheese.

Mr. Boulanger: I have a supplementary question. The price is a cent lower in the Saguenay region than it is in Ontario because cheese is shipped to Montreal instead of being graded in the Saguenay region. That is why the price is a cent lower than it is in Ontario and a half cent lower than it is in Montreal.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the fact that it is a cent lower. As a matter of fact, my understanding is that the Quebec cheese people are much better off now than they have ever been. The Kraft cheese people have made a contract with the Quebec cheese producers to take their production off the market at, I believe, the same price as the support price in Ontario, namely 34 cents. If there is a cent difference it may well be because of the fact that the handlers, the co-operatives or those who are handling this cheese, are taking bigger handling charges than they should really be entitled to. However, I have no personal knowledge of that particular situation.

UNITED NATIONS

ILO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, in view of the statement that was made in this house yesterday by the government house leader to the effect that the Minister of Labour was absent in Europe on important business affecting the Department of Labour. Is it the intention of the Minister of Labour, now that he has returned, to make a report to parliament on his recent tour, as is the usual custom when a member of the cabinet is away on a prolonged visit overseas while the house is sitting?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I realized yesterday, as I do again today, how greatly concerned the hon. member is with respect to my work and my activities. I assure him that at all times I try to discharge my duties and responsibilities conscientiously and well.

As to the detailed report on the international labour congress which lasted from June 4 to June 25, I shall be glad to give it in detail but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of this house that it will take three to four hours. If that is what the hon. member desires I shall be glad to do it. However, if he wishes to have an accounting with regard to the ILO congress, I shall be glad to give it to him privately any time he has two or three hours to spare.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATEMENT ON ALLEGED FEATHERBEDDING BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on June 25 the hon. member for Port Arthur inquired whether senior officials of the civil service associations and the head of the civil service commission would be called before a committee of the house in connection with recent allegations made concerning staff reductions in a certain crown corporation.

As hon. members are aware, the civil service commission is presently engaged in a thorough review of the Civil Service Act and civil service regulations, and it is anticipated that the commission's recommendations on all aspects of federal personnel administration will be submitted by the end of this year. The commissioners will be considering such matters as those referred to in the hon. member's question.

For this reason the government believes that if action along the lines suggested by the hon. member's question is to be taken, it would be more useful to parliament if it were taken at a later stage.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister arising out of the answer given by the Secretary of State. While the statement is welcome and we will look forward to the report of the civil service commission, would the Prime Minister consider taking some steps to allay the considerable disquiet which has developed as a result of the situation in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and in the civil service with respect to statements which have been made?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think everything which could be said on this subject has been said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

STATEMENT AS TO ALLEGED NEW POLICY REGARDING APPLICATIONS FOR EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to an inquiry made by the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) on June 25 last. His question was:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Is it true that the civil service commission no longer accepts applications for employment unless there is a vacancy?

The answer to this question is yes. Last year, the civil service commission made a detailed study of the administrative methods and procedures used by the commission. The purpose of that study was twofold. The first objective was to improve as much as possible the efficiency of the services which the commission must give to the public and to various government departments. Secondly, the commission wished to make sure that it was making the best possible use of its staff.

In the course of that study, it was determined that every day the commission received about 40 applications, often of a general character, referring to no specific competition. Two or three clerks spent their whole time answering all such applications. Moreover, some officials of the commission's personnel selection branch had to devote a large part of their time to that same procedure. On the other hand, experience has shown rather conclusively that, notwithstanding all the time which the staff of the commission was spending on such applications, the results achieved were far from substantial.

The commission also felt it was hardly fair to grant this special treatment to people sending general applications when that same treatment was not granted applicants for duly advertised competitions.

Finally, not only are the notices of the commission posted in post offices throughout the country, in the offices of the national employment service and in the district offices of the commission, but they are continuously being published in newspapers from Newfoundland to British Columbia. Consequently, any Canadian wishing to enter the civil service, with the possible exception of very few people who live in remote areas, can easily know from day to day about the employment possibilities in the civil service and about the examinations advertised by the commission.

For all these reasons, the commission has come to the conclusion that the public money which was used to answer the general applications just referred to could more properly be used elsewhere and, as a consequence, the commission no longer answers those requests except in cases where the applications deal with fields of employment where there is still a lack of qualified candidates.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct another question to the hon. Secretary of State. In his opinion, does it require more work to accept and file an application than to take the trouble of replying to the application, returning the form and informing the candidate by letter that no further applications are being accepted?

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if some people want to put in applications for employment in the Post Office Department, for instance, the way to take part in an examination for a postman's job would be simply to read the daily paper...

An hon. Member: Question!

Mr. Denis: I am asking the hon. Secretary of State if the new policy of the civil service commission might not prevent hundreds of people from getting employment in the civil service. I have put the question, and I now request an answer from the hon. Secretary of State.

Mr. Courtemanche: The hon. member for St. Denis has too much experience to ask such a question. He knows that while the Secretary of State is spokesman for the civil service commission, he has nothing to do with the administration of any rulings of that body.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. If the civil service commission makes wrong decisions and states a wrong policy, does the Secretary of State have to put up with it, in view of the fact the civil service commission is under his jurisdiction?

An hon. Member: We have put up with it for 22 years!

Mr. Courtemanche: It is a commission which was instituted by the former government, and I have to suffer the consequences.

Mr. Speaker: Not having the advantage of simultaneous translation, I am afraid I am missing some of this debate.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SPECIAL ISSUE TO COMMEMORATE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST COMMONWEALTH AIR FLIGHT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the Post Office Department any plans to issue a stamp to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the first powered flight of a heavier than air machine in the British commonwealth, which occurred in Baddeck, Nova Scotia, on February 23, 1909? This may not seem a very urgent question, but it is one of vital importance to the citizens of the town of Baddeck.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this subject was selected by the post office as a very suitable one to be so marked, and the design is now in the process of development. It is probable that it will include a representation of the first aircraft which flew at Baddeck, piloted by Mr. J. A. D. McCurdy almost 50 years ago.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Friday, June 27, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Had the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Webster) completed his remarks?

Mr. Chevrier: When the debate adjourned last Friday I thought the official opposition had the right to resume the debate at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I had a note from the clerk that that hon. member had the floor, and I did not want to do him any injustice.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I have at my disposal today, I should like to devote part of my speech to a matter of the greatest importance to me and especially to the province of Quebec. In fact, the budget speech did not mention the matter, or barely touched upon it. I refer to the question of federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Speaker, momentous as the question is, the budget speech gives no clue as to the government's intention in that regard. Indeed the budget gives no clue as to what the government might be planning with respect to this important question, and I am inclined to believe that if provincial premiers happened to come to Ottawa, no one would be more embarrassed than the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) himself. Since he has announced no policy whatever on that question, I am therefore convinced that the hon.

member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) was perfectly right, the other day, when he said: "I am convinced that neither the Minister of Finance nor the government, for that matter, has any intention of convening a federal-provincial conference in Ottawa, in 1958".

Mr. Speaker, this question was one of the main themes of the last electoral campaign in the province of Quebec. According to the former supporters of the Union Nationale and the new Conservative members of that province, the Liberal party and its chief were the very incarnation of centralization, whereas the Conservative party and its chief were in favour of decentralization and provincial autonomy.

Some hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. members have applauded this statement, and I wonder how the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lafreniere) could state here some time ago, that his chief was the saviour of confederation. I should like to know on what basis the hon. member made such a statement. Surely not on the basis of the famous telegrams which were sent by the federal government, several of which never reached their destination. Now then, what is his basis for that statement?

Mr. Speaker, these new Conservatives from the province of Quebec have been going through the province under the standard of the Union Nationale claiming that the rights of our minority had been wronged by the policy of the former federal government. They told the people of Quebec that they were great champions who would stand against this threat, against such tactics of invasion of the provincial field on the part of the then federal government.

Although, Mr. Speaker, I could, in this regard, quote the utterances and promises of a good many Conservative members from the province of Quebec, I will merely take up some statements of the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion), who not very long ago was referred to in Le Devoir as the new Conservative lieutenant for Quebec province at the federal level. I should rather imagine that his colleagues from the province of Quebec who sit in this house must have frowned on reading this statement in Le Devoir. The hon. member himself, furthermore, claimed in this house that he was speaking on behalf of the Conservatives of the province of Quebec.

There was a time, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member knew of no better way of condemning the Liberals than to accuse them of being Conservatives themselves.

In an article published in Le Temps, on January 17, 1947, the hon. gentleman wrote as follows:

> It is generally admitted that the Liberal party has drawn so heavily on the Tory party for inspiration that, at the present time, it is little else than a carbon copy of the Conservative party.

This proves then, that, in those days, he had no great liking for the Conservative party. He even spoke of it derisively. In fact, I almost feel like asking: "When did he see the light?"

Previously, the hon. member, in a radio speech delivered in March 1943 and bearing on the terms of confederation, made particular reference to what had happened in 1867, and stated the following:

> The basic powers which the provinces had reserved for themselves were such as to give rise to the highest hopes. The constitution had granted them exclusive rights of legislation, within their own territory, in respect of agriculture, colonization, immigration, municipal institutions, internal transport, property, civil rights, education, incorporation of companies, organization of the courts, administration of justice, social and industrial organization. From the economic point of view, the provinces retained ownership and administration of crown lands and of natural resources, whereas, from the fiscal point of view, they were granted the right to levy direct taxes, that is, real estate taxes, income tax, sales tax, succession duties, etc.
> In other words, whereas the federal state was to be concerned with the external policy of the country and with its customs policy, the provincial State was to enjoy sole responsibility for its own internal policy, within its own territory. To such a degree of emancipation, then, were we led by the constitution of 1867.
> That is how Quebec, half whittled away through the Act of Union of 1841, reasserted itself, resumed the machinery of direction, and, in short, came into its own again.

Mr. Speaker, what that amounts to can be summed up roughly as follows: matters concerning the country's foreign policy and customs policy fall within the purview of the federal government, and the rest comes under provincial jurisdiction.

In short, I would say that this can only be held to mean that the constitution of 1867 was purely confederate in nature, as distinct from federal, because the central government was supposed to deal only with external questions, whereas the provinces had the responsibility of internal ones.

Considering these former statements—and I could quote many more—and remembering the presumption of his former chief, Mr. Duplessis, who said that the provinces had a priority right with regard to taxation matters and that under a Liberal government Ottawa had seized a fiscal power to which it was not entitled, it is difficult to understand the views recently expressed by the hon. member in this house.

As a matter of fact, the learned argument he submitted at that time mainly consisted, to my mind—and I am saying so with all due respect—in breaking through open doors, but in doing so, the hon. member implicitly stated how much his political philosophy had evolved, and how much his position with regard to political principles had changed since he abandoned the Union Nationale party and his chief, Mr. Duplessis.

The first point raised by the hon. member concerns federal subsidies or grants to the provinces. On this point, his argumentation is not very clear to me. I have read and re-read that part of his speech several times and, to my mind, it can only mean either that federal subsidies to the provinces, barring those which are specifically ordered by the constitution, are unconstitutional or that the subsidies process must not be taken as a general principle and as the only means of financing provinces.

If the hon. member's thought is in accord with the first interpretation, then his words and his deeds disagree because, since the beginning of this session, he has already voted in favour of federal subsidies to provinces, such as the hospital insurance subsidies which surely are not ordered by the constitution, and he will no doubt have to do likewise many times in his stay in this house, no matter how short it be. On the other hand, if the second interpretation is the right one—

Mr. Dorion: Is the hon. member expressing a desire or a wish?

Mr. Chevrier: It does not matter; it does not affect my argument in any way.

An hon. Member: What you are saying is true.

Mr. Chevrier: On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if the second interpretation is the right one, I am then under the impression, as I have already said, that the hon. member has been smashing down an open door because, even if, in fact, federal subsidies have been the main source of revenue for the provinces during many years, I do not know anybody, especially today, who would claim that federal subsidies must be the only source of provincial financing, nor the general rule.

The second point to which the hon. member referred is that of direct taxation. In my opinion, this question is of particular importance. In this regard, I am convinced that he is not unaware, as he would have had us believe in his speech that in some Quebec quarters which he knows well, it is claimed that when the federal government started, in 1917, to impose the income tax, it had taken over sources of income which did not belong to it. He knows several individuals who, on this point, have talked of restitution. If those people asked for restitution, they must have felt there had been a theft, in which case, the federal government had no right in the first place to impose such tax. If the hon. member wants names, I can supply him with a whole list of them. But I do not want to insist further on this point, since the hon. member himself later admitted that, nowadays, there is concurrent jurisdiction in the field of direct taxation. What baffles me in connection with his present attitude is the fact that he states on the one hand, the principle of concurrent jurisdiction and that, on the other hand, he ignores the principle of priority of provincial rights, which, precisely, he has often stood up for, with his own chief the Hon. Mr. Duplessis.

What baffles me also, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that he devoted the major part of his speech to proving that, according to our constitution, each province has the exclusive right to direct taxation within the province, as income for provincial purposes. To hear him talk, we would be inclined to believe that some Canadians deny this right, which has been so clearly established by our constitution. Once again, I am under the impression that the hon. member was merely breaking through a wide open door.

In fact, when the hon. member states that "any federal government that collects direct taxes for provincial purposes is shying away from the letter and the spirit of the constitution", he is attacking the Bennett government and its social legislation, and not the Liberal government.

Mr. Bennett wanted then to impose a direct tax in order to finance an unemployment insurance fund without prior constitutional amendment. That is one of the reasons why his legislation was declared unconstitutional in 1937, thanks to the initiative of some Liberals who had then referred it to the courts. Under the Liberal regimes, only two bills were introduced in parliament, one providing for a direct tax for provincial purposes, i.e. unemployment insurance, in 1941; and then old age security, in 1950. In both cases, the constitution had been amended previously with the unanimous consent of the provinces.

Mr. Dorion: Would the hon. member permit a question? Could he tell us if, in fact, the province of Quebec, then under the leadership of the Hon. Mr. Godbout, had previously adopted some legislation to authorize the federal government to deal with the Old Age Security Act?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, but what I shall—

Mr. Dorion: Then the provincial government of Quebec, as such, had not agreed at the time?

Mr. Chevrier: —what I said, Mr. Speaker, is that the government of the province of Quebec agreed in both cases: the government of the Hon. Mr. Duplessis, in one case, and the Liberal government, in the other. In both cases they have agreed to that amendment.

That is why I say that the hon. member is perfectly right in criticizing the Bennett administration for attempted encroachments upon provincial rights. He is not, however, when he criticizes Mr. Godbout by intimating that the former Liberal premier had laid aside the doctrine according to which the provinces have a right to direct taxation.

The hon. member should remember that Mr. Godbout was the first to levy a provincial personal income tax in 1939. Moreover, in 1952, when he decided to sign an agreement and to lease, for a definite period and for specified amounts, the rights of the province in the field of direct taxation, that agreement, as the hon. member for Bellechasse himself recognized later in his speech:

> —clearly confirmed the existence of a provincial power of taxation.

Why then charge Mr. Godbout with laying aside the constitutional doctrine in that field?

While the hon. member unjustly criticizes Mr. Godbout, he lightly absolves Mr. Bennett by stating:

> Up to 1937, it can be said that successive governments in this house respected provincial rights.

No doubt he has also forgotten that Sir John A. Macdonald was in favour of legislative union in Canada. After that, how can the hon. member dare say:

> If there is a problem which should be above political partisanship, which should not be affected by the heat of electoral campaigns, as he himself stated, it is that one.

Mr. Dorion: Would the hon. member,—I must apologize once more—

Mr. Chevrier: Certainly.

Mr. Dorion: —allow me another remark?

Some hon. Members: No, no; no remark; just a question.

Mr. Chevrier: I will permit the hon. member another question, but no remark, as this would be out of order.

Mr. Dorion: Is the hon. member for Laurier really stating that Sir John A. Macdonald was in favour of legislative union or did he not rather abandon that first idea on account of some particular situation then obtaining in Lower Canada?

Mr. Chevrier: What I have said has been clearly understood and appears in the official report; the hon. member can easily check my statements.

Later on in his speech, the hon. member shows that he himself has not been above political partisanship when he said, speaking about the wartime fiscal agreements:

> An agreement implies the free and voluntary consent of the parties; if the parties are not free to accept, it is no longer an agreement, it is oppression, dictatorship. And that is exactly what we have been witnessing at some conferences which have been held between the provinces and the then federal government.

In fact, if the hon. member had wished to remain above political partisanship, he would have admitted that the then fiscal agreements were becoming inevitable not because of the whims of the federal government but because of the state of war and the exigencies of war. It is true that this important aspect of the situation may not have been understood by the hon. member who, I say it without malice, was at that time—and I state it without any fear of being contradicted—devoting his energies mostly to fighting against the war effort of the Canadian government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dorion: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not understand what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I think it is my duty to raise a point of order. The remarks just made by the hon. member do not correspond to the truth as far as I am concerned.

Moreover, I must say that I had the opportunity to take part in some social movements, precisely—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) that it is contrary to the standing orders to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor unless the hon. member who is speaking gives way to answer a question. If he disagrees, or wishes to make a correction with respect to what is said, it would be the better course to leave that until the hon. member who is speaking has finished, and then he will be given an opportunity to do so.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have not the least objection to these questions being asked, but, on the other hand, I think that it is irregular for an hon. member to interpolate remarks during a speech.

However, with the consent of this house and of the hon. member, I would like to go on with my speech.

Then, if he wanted to be objective, after accusing the government of the day of being oppressors and dictators, how would he qualify the present government's attitude when fiscal arrangements were changed last year by sending telegrams, partly in lieu of discussions, and when, in some cases, those telegrams did not even reach their destination?

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the hon. member and of some other ministers is entirely different, and contrary to what it was before, and I ask hon. members to express their views on a speech heard two days ago in this house. In fact, in all the years I have had the honour to sit in this house, I never heard so centralizing a speech as the one made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton)—

Mr. Pallett: That is not true.

Mr. Chevrier: This speech, Mr. Speaker, clearly shows the disregard of this government for the provincial attitude and its disrespect for provincial rights.

I particularly urge hon. members to read the statement made by the minister as it appears on page 1760 of Hansard of June 30, 1958. He stated clearly that the policy laid down by the previous minister of northern affairs and national resources with respect to federal-provincial relations and natural resources was diametrically opposed to the policy of this government.

In fact, I can say this, and it would be too long to quote his words—

An hon. Member: What page did you refer to, please?

Mr. Chevrier: Page 1760. If I may, I should like to read the pertinent part of that statement. The present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was then quoting what his predecessor, the Hon. Jean Lesage, had said in a speech, in Toronto. I quote:

> The fact that the British North America Act places resources under the control of the provinces is not a matter of accident or coincidence, it is rather a reflection of the basic facts of our national existence. Resource problems are generally regional problems or local problems and must be handled on a regional or local basis. Thus it is that the facts dictate, and our constitution requires, that our resource management be in the hands of the provinces. This is the framework and background in which we must see the problems of resource management and development in Canada. Accordingly, to advocate a "national policy" on a national basis as a responsibility of the national government is to misread the facts of our economy and the spirit and letter of our constitution.
> Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman agree with those views?
> Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Those are the words of my predecessor in office and I am merely using them as an example of a policy that is diametrically opposed to the policy I advocate. I believe that statement by the responsible minister in the previous government lays down a philosophy which is foreign to the whole history of this country.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I urge hon. members to comment on that statement because to my mind, it is diametrically opposed to what they said during the election campaign.

(Text):

If I may, I should like to conclude my remarks by referring to another portion of the remarks made by the hon. member for Bellechasse. In referring to certain Liberals on this side of the house he said that they had been purged by the provincial Liberal party because they had deviated in their thinking from the party line. My hon. friend should have been the last one to raise this point and to accuse the Quebec Liberal party of being dictatorial because, after having served the Union Nationale and Mr. Duplessis for so many years, he should know in fact what is a real dictator. I venture to say that during those years he made no attempt to deviate from the party line and that if he had he certainly would have suffered the consequences.

As to the party that my hon. friend joined recently, I do not think it will have to make any purge because the Conservative members, in my humble opinion, will not dare to deviate from the party line. When the hon. member and his colleagues first came into this house it was clear that they were trying very hard to dissociate themselves from the Union Nationale party and I am sure they had good reasons for this.

An hon. Member: You are jumping to conclusions.

Mr. Chevrier: But as to this repudiation of an evident association that existed for some time and that was responsible in no small measure and in a large part for the election of a substantial number of members in this house, I do say this—

Mr. Pallett: Are you talking about Ontario or Quebec at the moment?

Mr. Chevrier: I do say that my hon. friends were not showing in that attitude much gratitude to the leader of their party in the federal house who was responsible more than anyone for their election to this house.

I must admit that at first we on this side of the house had some difficulty in understanding the position of our Conservative friends from the province of Quebec. We had difficulty because we realized how rapidly they were dissociating themselves from their old friends. But we began to understand the cause of their sudden shift in allegiance when we read Le Devoir during the last 10 days. When we read that newspaper we realized why it was our friends decided to run for cover.

However, we understood still better when we read the press reports of the speeches made a week ago Friday to commemorate the first anniversary in office of the Conservative party. According to the Journal, which I have before me, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), who spoke after the hon. member for York East (Mr. McGregor), is reported to have said that young members could learn politics in the raw from the hon. member for York East. What did the hon. member for York East say?

Mr. Pallett: He made a better speech than you are making right now.

Mr. Chevrier: In the first place, I doubt if my hon. friend understood much of the speech I am making and, in the second place, let us see whether or not he agrees with what the hon. member for York East said. I realize that hon. gentlemen do not like this, but I am afraid they will have to take it. The hon. member for York East said this to the Conservative members attending this function:

> Stay 100 per cent with the party, and do not say something in the House of Commons you will be sorry for later. Anybody who goes against the party is not going to get very far.

Well, that is a fair warning. No one took the warning more swiftly than my hon. friends from Quebec province. Here we now have a full explanation of the sudden shift of the Conservative members from Quebec. Some of them had served a very intransigent master in that province for many years, and they knew full well what it meant if they deviated from the party line. However, when they came to Ottawa as new federal members, they discovered that they had another strong master. They also learned very rapidly that they could not serve these two masters; that they had to make a choice. Well, today they have made their choice, and that is why they are so annoyed at us when we make statements such as I have made, and when statements were made not only during the debate on the speech from the throne but on the occasion of the budget debate concerning their association and their connection with the Union Nationale party.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They are not annoyed, they are simply amused.

Mr. Ricard: Why are you so much concerned about it?

Mr. Chevrier: If you were not annoyed you would sit in peace and listen to what I have to say. The greatest proof of your annoyance is that the hon. member for Bellechasse interrupted, as he had a right on several occasions, and the hon. members to my immediate left are not even interrupting but are making loud noises that no one can understand.

I should like to say that before the general election our friends from Quebec made positive commitments to the population of that province on several very important and vital political problems, especially on the problem I have been discussing this afternoon, namely that of federal-provincial relations. Now that they have made their choice, now that they have decided to stay 100 per cent in the fold, 100 per cent with the Conservative party, I hope that they will rise in their places and make positive and precise statements on their new attitudes about these problems which so vitally concern the electors. I invite them, in all sincerity, to comment on the speech made yesterday by the minister of northern affairs. In my opinion, and I repeat it, that was one of the most centralizing speeches that has ever been made in this house. This speech was made despite the fact that during the course of the previous election campaign the Conservatives made it quite clear in their advertising, made it quite clear in their pronouncements that my leader, the leader of the Liberal party, was in favour of centralization, whereas the leader of the Conservative party and his colleagues were for decentralization. I hope hon. members who will rise in due course will indicate one instance of decentralization by the Conservative government.

If I may, I should like now to deal with a matter which I hope will not be as contentious or as offensive to my hon. friends to my immediate left. Since the March general election—

Mr. Johnson: Would the hon. member for Laurier permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Johnson: Would he consent to the reading of the text of the speech?

(Translation):

Then he read the following in French:

I believe that statement by the responsible minister in the previous government—

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: No, I am merely asking a question.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order! Order!

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the request that I place on the record the words of the minister is that if my hon. friend wants to make a speech in reply to mine he can cite any part of the speech made by the minister. However, notwithstanding the subsequent words that he is asking me to mention, there is no doubt in my mind that those words, even if read, would not derogate one iota from the fact that was a centralizing speech.

I had started to say that there were other matters I wanted to discuss which I hoped would not be nearly as contentious as those which I had mentioned earlier.

An hon. Member: But just as serious?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I can tell my hon. friend that I am extremely serious in what I said. I have given careful thought to what was said, I have analysed as carefully as I could the speech made by the hon. member for Bellechasse, and it was after careful reflection and study that I came to the conclusion that the remarks made by myself applied to that speech.

If I may get back to what I intended to say on two occasions already, I should like to say that since the March general election the behaviour of the government has been mainly characterized by contradictions of the Prime Minister and a number of humiliations suffered by his ministers. I do not need to recall the sudden change in the Prime Minister's attitude on NORAD and the very difficult position in which he placed the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith).

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a point of order. It surely is the best known of all the rules of the house that it is not permissible, when one debate is closed in a session, to refer back to it later in the same session.

Mr. Habel: Especially when it hurts.

Mr. Chevrier: May I be heard on the point of order? I am not referring to the debate. I am not citing anything that has been said in an earlier debate. What I am commenting upon is the attitude of the Prime Minister with reference to one of his ministers, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I submit, with deference, I have a right to do that, and to discuss any other matters of a general nature on the budget speech.

Mr. Speaker: Certainly, a very broad range is allowed in the budget debate. The hon. member has taken it and enjoyed it. His remarks refer to the relations of members of the government in another debate. The hon. member is proscribed from entering into a matter that has been settled, but I have not seen that, as yet, he is getting into the subject of a previous debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was simply going on to say that I wanted to recall the sudden change of attitude of the Prime Minister with reference to NORAD and the position in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs was left following that decision, as well as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes), both of whom found themselves in difficult and embarrassing positions because of the change of mind of the Prime Minister.

This also can be said in the field of trade. There the Prime Minister decided, after the election, to change his position with reference to the diversion of 15 per cent of trade. We all know of the discussions we had in this house with reference to that matter. We all know that following his trip to the United Kingdom the Prime Minister made his position in that respect quite clear; and notwithstanding the questions that we have asked on this side of the house repeatedly with reference to this 15 per cent diversion trade, we have received little or no information. The Prime Minister has changed his position suddenly with respect to the 15 per cent so-called diversion. But this time humiliation has been suffered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) who finds himself without any policy on trade.

Then we had the famous statement at the beginning of the election campaign about a special public works program. There was to be a tremendous public works program of one billion and some hundreds of millions of dollars. After the election, however, when the main estimates were tabled, it became clear that such a special program did not exist and that the public expenditures for that purpose in 1958-59 were nothing more than the ordinary estimates. It became clear also that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) was extremely embarrassed and that is why he tried at great length to avoid the point on the question and to stress housing. He was at great pains to show that this special housing program was going to be of tremendous benefit to the country, and I have no doubt that it will be of some benefit. But no attempt was made, either by him or by anybody else, to explain away the special program of public works announced in the early part of the election by the Prime Minister.

Then again there is the question of contradiction in the field of federal-provincial relations. Before the election there was the positive promise to decentralize. After the election and during this session not one measure is being introduced to this effect. In fact, the subject is not even mentioned. Here the most obvious victim is probably the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) who made it quite clear on one occasion that he did not approve the formula adopted by the previous government and that a different formula would be followed by the new government. However,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that his time has more than expired. I have allowed him a couple of extra minutes in view of the interruptions. Before he takes his seat I should like to give an opportunity to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion), if he wishes to take it, to make correction of any wrong impression which he thinks was made with respect to what he had said.

(Translation):

Mr. Noel Dorion (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to stand before the seat next to mine, because I want to be heard as well as possible.

I first wish to thank the hon. member for Laurier for the importance he gave to my words and specially for the pains he took to be able to—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the hon. member goes further, may I say that I am not giving him the floor to speak. I understood that he took exception to an interpretation put on something he had said. If he wishes to deal with that matter briefly, he has the opportunity now to do so but his remarks, of course, must be brief.

(Translation):

Mr. Dorion: Such being the case, if you will allow me, I shall wait until the text has been given me, and then, with the Speaker's permission, I shall see whether it is proper to make some remarks in connection with the observations made by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Rouleau: You are not in Quebec here.

Mr. Dorion: Who said that?

Mr. Rouleau: The member for Dollard.

Mr. Johnson: It is his finest speech.

Mr. Dorion: They are the first words I have heard him utter.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): I have two questions to direct to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) if he would be kind enough to answer them.

Could the hon. member for Laurier tell the house what is the present position of the Liberal party with regard to the direct taxes referred to in paragraph 2, section 92, of the British North America Act?

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. member will read my speech attentively, for obviously he did not listen very closely to my remarks, he will find the answer there.

Mr. Allard: I must say that this answer is not satisfactory.

My second question is this: the hon. member for Laurier mentioned the rental by the provinces of the field of direct taxation to the federal government during the last world war. Would he be kind enough to tell this house at what date, according to him, the war ended with regard to the rental of the direct tax field?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, this information may be quite easily found in the debates of this house by the hon. member if he takes the trouble to look up the official record.

(Text):

Mr. W. G. Beech (York South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words in this debate, may I first of all extend to you my congratulations on your re-election and my best wishes for a successful tenure of that high office. May I also add that we note with great satisfaction that you are living up to our highest expectations.

It has been suggested that as this is the budget debate, we must say something about the budget. While there may be some difference of opinion as to the merits of the budget, I believe that all hon. members of the house will agree—particularly in view of the fact that it was the first effort on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming)—that the presentation was everything that could be desired. As to the budget itself,

I think there is one aspect of it that should give comfort to every hon. member of this house. I refer to the assurance which it gives that there is not going to be an election this year.

Personally, I believe that it is a realistic budget. The important thing is that the people have the money to spend in order to pay their way. I believe that most people do not object to paying taxes as long as they have the money with which to pay them. Thus we have the money that is included in this budget and spent to bring about that result. I think that procedure is preferable to that of reducing taxes and then not making some provision to give the people the wherewithal to pay those taxes.

It has been suggested that the people should be allowed to spend their own money. I think most of us are in accord with that suggestion. However, it must also be borne in mind that the immediate effects of tax reduction will take some time to be felt whereas the program suggested by the government will place money in the hands of the people much more quickly. It has also been suggested by some hon. members of the opposition that while deficits were all right during the war years, they are not so good in peacetime.

I should like to submit that we are at war; we are at war with unemployment and while the estimated deficit may give some cause for alarm, it should be remembered that it is only an estimate and if the money being placed into the economy by the government's plan has the desired effect, then I am sure those fears will be unfounded. It is to be expected that there will be some who are disappointed with the budget. As a matter of fact, I may say that I am disappointed at being unable to find provision in the estimates for a project which concerns my own riding.

The riding of South York, which I have the honour to represent, had a problem for as many years as I can remember. It concerns a little matter of recognition, or lack of recognition, by federal governments down through the years of this most historic riding. Here we have a township with a population of 120,000 and the village of Forest Hill with another 30,000 inhabitants. Neither of these great municipalities have a federal office of any kind. It is true there are some sub-post offices tucked away in grocery stores or other like establishments but these do not provide the facilities which the residents of such municipalities have a right to expect, and which are available in much smaller communities.

For over 20 years departmental officials have been telling us that the post office facilities are perfectly adequate. Today, despite the fact that the population has doubled, we are being told the same thing. The other day, however, a prominent citizen walked into one of these sub-post offices and asked to register a letter. It was ten minutes after twelve noon and he was told he could not do so because the postmaster had gone out to lunch. He came back at ten minutes after four but was told it was too late because this post office could not accept registered mail after four o'clock. All this in a municipality of over 100,000 people which in two world wars had the highest per capita enlistment in Canada and which contributes millions of dollars in taxes each year to the federal coffers. It is not very flattering to these citizens to know that they have to go outside their municipality to secure the services of a federal department and they are hoping that this government will take immediate steps to correct this unfair and ridiculous situation.

It was very interesting to listen to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) read his long list of requests during the debate on the estimates of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green). These requests indicated to me that the hon. member had in fact neglected his constituents while he was a minister of the crown. There seems to have been a tendency on the part of some former ministers to become so engrossed in the business of running their departments that they forgot about the constituents who elected them and the constituents of other members whose election made it possible for them to be appointed as cabinet ministers. I believe this helped in no small way to bring about the defeat of the Liberal government and I sincerely hope this government will not make the same mistake. I would like to congratulate the government on the forthright manner in which it has tackled the housing problem and upon the introduction of these additional funds into the economy. This has certainly played a large part in checking the current recession and will eventually bring about a return to prosperity in this country.

It is, however, about another aspect that I wish to speak, and that is the fact that thousands of Canadians are now being provided with homes which are more in keeping with the standards which should obtain in this country. There is no doubt that the high price of land is the reason for most of the increase in the cost of housing, particularly in urban areas. Nor can it be denied that most of these higher prices have been brought about by the operations of land speculators. The unearned income created by such speculation must in the final analysis be paid for by the purchasers or the tenants of the homes erected. This burden in addition to the already high cost of housing has had the effect of increasing the percentage of income now being paid for shelter to the point where it is uneconomical and is forcing our citizens to do without the services, appliances and sometimes the food necessary to maintain a decent standard of living. The payment of these considerable sums of money into channels for which there is no adequate return is having a detrimental effect upon our economy and is one of the main reasons for the present recession.

In addition, I would suggest that various levels of government should investigate the possibility of the imposition of a land tax to discourage the holding of lands for speculative purposes. Such taxes have proved most beneficial in some of our western cities, in Australia, New Zealand, Denmark and other countries. There is no difficulty for the people who have the money to pay for them to obtain homes, but the government has now taken steps to make homes available for those in the lower income brackets who find it difficult, if not impossible, to obtain homes on the open market. The reduction in down payments, the increase in the percentage of income to be paid for shelter and the provision of public money for low cost housing have been responsible for a considerable increase in this type of housing. However, despite the fact that homes are being built at the rate of 180,000 per year as compared with 86,000 this time last year, there are today fewer homes for sale than there were at this time last year. There is an ever-increasing need to take care of the backlog and the demands created by new family formations and immigration.

Building under the limited dividend section of the National Housing Act has been greatly accelerated by the government; in fact there has been more building under this section during the last year than was done by the former government since the inception of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As a matter of fact, I have some figures which show that out of 2,742 units built for elderly persons since 1946, 1,416 were built in 1957 and out of a total value of $13,757,856—that is the value of homes built for elderly persons since 1946—$8,006,182 was spent in 1957. This would indicate how this type of housing has been accelerated by the present government and we are given to understand that this acceleration will be even greater during the current year.

There is another provision under this section of the act which is not too well known and which I believe should be given far more publicity. I have in mind the section which makes it possible for limited dividend companies to erect rental housing for low income groups such as elderly persons or those living on old age pensions or low fixed incomes. Under this section service groups such as the Canadian Legion, Rotary and Lions' clubs and similar organizations, may form companies to build homes for elderly persons by providing 10 per cent of the equity with the federal government putting up the other 90 per cent. Some provincial governments make outright grants to such projects and in most cases the municipal governments pay all taxes over and above a certain amount so that a fixed rent may be charged during the period of amortization. Time will not permit me to go into details with respect to these projects but Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have all the information and, as a matter of fact, are preparing a new brochure which they are willing to make available upon request.

These projects are a challenge to every service club worthy of the name and existing projects built by the Canadian Legion and other organizations in various cities across Canada are shining examples ot what can be accomplished in this regard, and I commend them to all those with a sense of community service.

There are thousands of these senior citizens living in attics or back rooms, or living with their sons and daughters many of whom have difficulty paying the way for their own families, with a resulting feeling on the part of the old folks that they are not wanted. These projects take these people who have played such a large part in the development of our country and place them in self-contained homes with their own front doors; tenants pay their own rents and live out their lives together in comfort and security. Anyone who has visited these projects cannot help but be impressed by the happy and contented people who occupy them and I feel sure that several years are added to their lives.

The Metropolitan Housing Company of Toronto has erected several projects for metropolitan Toronto—as a matter of fact it opened a new one last Friday in Scarborough —and other municipalities have similar developments in progress, and it is on behalf of all those interested in such projects that I urge the government to give consideration to fixing the interest rate on new projects at 3 per cent. My first reason for asking this is the immediate need of the tenants concerned. Secondly, it is essential, in order to maintain the character of these projects, that the rents should be kept as low as possible, and I believe the ceiling of $40 per month originally set by C.M.H.C. was plenty high enough. If rents go beyond that figure there is a danger they may become competitive in the event of a levelling off in the cost of real estate.

It is with this in mind that the sponsors are anxious to do everything possible to keep the rents down to a minimum, and to this end most of the projects sponsored by service clubs are operated by non-profit companies which do not take advantage of the 5 per cent profit allowed under the act. The grants made by provincial governments are not used to reduce the equities of the sponsors but are used to reduce the rents. Municipal councils make grants to cover taxes for the same purpose.

When Beech-Hall was first proposed, the interest rate was only 3 per cent and we were budgeting for a rent of $27 for the bachelor apartments and $33 for the extra bedroom. By the time the planning was completed the rate was up to 3½ per cent and the rents had to be increased to $29 and $35. The rate on other projects subsequently climbed to 4½ per cent and the rents jumped accordingly. The rate is now 4¼ per cent. It may be said that the federal government makes its contribution by making the money available but actually it gives nothing as the money advanced is paid back in full with an interest rate that pays for the costs of borrowing the money and administration.

These projects have proven their worth and I believe this government should encourage sponsors by indicating in a tangible way its interest in this type of housing. There are two ways of doing this. First, by pegging the interest rate and, second, by making the loans equal to 90 per cent of the cost of the project having in mind that contractors and plans must be approved by C.M.H.C. before loans are considered.

I believe there should be one of these projects in every community where there is a problem of housing elderly citizens, and I would urge every hon. member of this house to study this legislation and promote this type of housing among the service groups. I can assure the house from personal experience that there is nothing that will give greater personal satisfaction and create more happiness amongst those citizens in the sear and yellow leaf of old age who deserve all we can do for them.

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal): At the outset I should like to commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on the hard work he has undoubtedly put into his budget address. I am quite sure he would not expect me to continue my congratulations much further.

In his analysis of the economic conditions and prospects I was startled to hear him say, as reported at page 1235 of Hansard: "There are hopeful signs that we have reached the end of the recent decline." And, further on, he said: "I have no hesitation in budgeting on the basis of a resumption in the rise of incomes and production."

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether in the light of present day conditions this was not, surely, an over optimistic statement of the situation we have in this country at the present time. I think it is much more accurate and much more factual to use the words which the opposition has used in its amendment to the effect that the government in its budget proposals—and I summarize briefly—has failed to cope satisfactorily with the problem of the recession in spite of the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history, that it is moving toward greater trade restriction at a time when other countries of the western world are moving in the opposite direction. In fact, the economic policy of this government is still very uncertain. In the June 21st issue of the Economist under the heading "Canadian Tories First Budget" we find these words referring to the hon. Minister of Finance:

> He took slightly more than two hours to present his first budget which involves the largest deficit Canada has had since the war. Statisticians are still arguing about how long the statement would have been without the platitudes, but it is an unrealistic argument since the fact that the Conservative government has still not determined its economic policy could not have been concealed without them.

It is incredible but true that this government is not imposing its will on economic conditions. It is submitting to them. Nowhere in the budget speech did I see any policy of action outlined which would attempt to secure full employment, a stable dollar and to ensure the economic growth of the country. There is no statement of economic policy, but only a policy of drift.

We have a deficit because it is fashionable to suppose that deficits cure unemployment. But a deficit does not by itself cure unemployment any more than an investment is bound to yield dividends and profits. The businessman knows how carefully he must be in planning his investments, managing his capital and directing his operations, to be successful. In the same way a government, if its objective is to incur expenditures in order to increase employment, should plan those outlays so that they will give employment. It is one thing to have a budget deficit which has been incurred deliberately to create new jobs; it is quite another thing to have a deficit or loss on current account. The government is operating at a loss and it is a loss which has not itself created any new jobs. Nowhere do I see any evidence of planning. Nowhere do I see any direct relationship between this deficit and any overall planned make-work projects. I do see, however, a rather smug and happy acceptance of this large deficit—unplanned but welcome—this policy of drift.

One of the ends of economic policy is to provide business and the country with confidence in the value of its dollar. In fact, there is every indication that the government's need for additional new funds—$3,400 million of which $1,400 million is new money—will force the creation of new money and cause another disastrous inflation. And yet, in his budget speech appearing in Hansard at page 1234 the Minister of Finance said:

> Inflation remains a very real danger against which we must remain on guard.

Referring to Canada's large deficit we find the following words in the Economist of June 21:

> Since trade and tariff policy are still left completely indeterminate by the budget speech, with some things for all men, Canadian attention is more attracted by the size of the deficit. Even that is not genuine. Mr. Fleming declared it to be $648 million, with additional new financing to cover loans and advances amounting to $1,400 million in the fiscal year. This is by long odds the largest program of public financing undertaken by Canada since the war. Three hundred and fifty million dollars of new money has already been raised in connection with the refunding operation on May 1, and none of it has come out of public savings. It is fully covered by the increases in bank deposits which the Bank of Canada has engineered. In the experts' view, "it is a matter of nice judgment how much of the remaining financing should be achieved by expanding bank deposits," or—as one investment dealer remarked—by the modern and sophisticated method of printing new money.
> The reason why the deficit figure of $648 million is not genuine is that Mr. Fleming has laid hands on a nice little nest egg which the Liberal government had preserved since 1950. It is known as the "National Defence Equipment Account". It consists of credits given to the armed forces for the replacement of equipment left over from the second world war that was given to NATO countries. It gives Mr. Fleming an additional $165 million which he does not have to show in the budgetary accounts, and helps to conceal the full extent—more than $800 million—of the expected gap between revenue and expenditure this year.

We all know the end result of inflation is the destruction of personal savings and the value of our dollar. Here again the government seems to be waiting on events. This is a policy of drift.

I should like to refer for a few brief moments to the economic growth of this country. I believe it is well understood among us that Canada's economic growth depends on capital investment and the strength and buoyancy of its export industries. Capital investment in Canada this year will be less than it has been for several years past. There is no doubt that part of this decline can be attributed to uncertainty among businessmen concerning government policy, or as would be more correct to say, the lack of any overall economic policy. Investment decisions can only be made when business has every confidence in the economic policy of the government.

Planned capital expenditures are declining more rapidly than current expenditures. Where are any new large scale projects such as the St. Lawrence seaway development, the Aluminum Company's Kitimat development, the trans-Canada pipe line construction and the iron ore developments in Labrador and Ungava that gave so much impetus to the economy. All of these projects which are now completed or nearing completion served to strengthen Canada's transportation and industrial growth.

When we undertake to divert trade or impose tariff barriers we are making things very difficult for our export industries. Nowhere in the budget has there been any indication that the government has been even remotely concerned with the problems of our export firms. The Financial Post in its June 21, 1958, issue under the heading "Nation's Business —The New Budget" had this to say:

> One of the most astonishing assertions in the budget speech is that which, by implication, declares our export industries to be of little or no importance. And here we refer to Mr. Fleming's satisfaction with the continuing premium on the Canadian dollar over the American dollar.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask my hon. friend where in the budget speech he will find any warrant or justification whatever for the extraordinary statements made in the editorial he is now reading. Apparently the editorial is written by someone who did not read the budget speech.

Mr. Macnaughton: I certainly have read the budget speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My hon. friend misunderstood me. I was referring to the author of the editorial.

Mr. Macnaughton: I have been discussing the export industries of Canada. We have heard a great deal about industrial growth and development inside Canada but as the fourth trading nation of the world we depend to a very large degree on the maintenance in a healthy condition of our export industries and that is what I am discussing at this moment. The editorial continues:

> The economics of exchange rates and bond prices and interest rates are complex and Mr. Fleming would have done well to have taken some experienced advice in preparation of his speech.
> The fact is that Canadians can't possibly consume all our base metals, aluminum, pulp and paper, etc. etc. We are inescapably an exporting nation. The size and prosperity of our exports is intimately linked with our national prosperity and progress and on the recovery of our export trade depends our recovery from recession. But Mr. Fleming defends the continued high premium on the Canadian dollar, and by implication a policy of maintaining such higher interest rates on Canadian bonds than are current in the United States.

In combination, these policies doom all our vast and important export industries to continued hardship. There will be continued upward pressure on the Canadian dollar rate (because of the continued inducement to the inflow of foreign capital).

Furthermore, they virtually doom the Canadian provinces and municipalities (which have so much financing to do) to pay more for their money than they should at a time when their spendings are looked to hopefully (even by Mr. Fleming) as a useful stimulus for hoisting our economy out of recession.

Again I say that the present government seems to show no concern with the problems of the export industry. Twenty-eight years ago the Tories ignored the exporters of this country and plunged the nation into a greater depression than ever. The late prime minister Bennett erected a tariff wall around the country and then proceeded to blast his way into foreign markets. He did not succeed. Today our export industries are the greatest factor in our industrial power. To damage them is to create greater harm than was possible 28 years ago.

I am bitterly disappointed to note that nowhere in the budget is there any concern with, or even awareness of, the problems which are facing us, namely tough competition and the precarious position of our export industry. In addition to our traditional rivals in the race for world markets we are now being faced with the tremendous competition of a reviving Germany and Japan and a startling and effective new development in western Europe, the Benelux union, in the form of group competition; and when we add to this the competition which is certain to come from Russia and her bulk trade policies we can see that the competition which our industries will face in their attempt to hold and expand their markets will be beyond anything we have seen thus far.

It is obvious, then, that our own export industries will only maintain and expand their markets if they are given the necessary economic support. By that I mean no roadblocks in the form of restrictive tariffs and a firm and stable dollar.

Why has the government not expressed its concern with these problems? Why has it not brought down policies designed to assist our export industries in maintaining their position? What is the government's answer to the give-away programs of the United States, to the proposed European market and to the bulk trading policies of Russia? So much was said by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, and yet so little was indicated. With every other country planning for trade expansion why are we planning trade diversion and restriction? I submit that this is no time to revert to a restrictive policy of protection and a policy of drift.

If I have time I should like to speak briefly about foreign investment in Canada. In his remarks as recorded at page 1237 of Hansard the Minister of Finance said:

Canada's rapid economic growth of recent years could not have been sustained by Canadian resources alone, and the large capital influx and the accompanying large trading deficit, reflect the extent to which we have had to draw on foreign resources to accomplish our spectacular economic progress.

So much was said during the last election about the dangers of foreign investment that perhaps a few words about the benefits of foreign investment might be in order. Let us take a quick look at the reasons for the economic development of the United States because to a considerable degree the same conditions apply to Canada. It is true that much of the success of the United States was due to the good fortune of having a vast continent, plenty of natural resources, people imbued with the spirit of private enterprise and people equipped with skills and the political maturity to use those advantages.

But this was not the entire reason for the successful economic development of the United States. The United States was also aided in the 18th and 19th centuries economic development of their country by foreign investment from that source of capital which in those days was the outstanding place for obtaining capital investment, namely Europe. By 1860, for example, the European investors had invested in the United States $700 million in railroads, factories, enterprises of all kinds. By 1900, European investors had poured in $3 billion more, and it was mainly British and European money and capital which built the United States roads, factories and railways, which developed her resources, opened her markets and financed her trade.

Did the United States fear British and European domination? Are they in fact now dominated by the British and European capitalists or capital money? I ask this question: does this Tory government really fear United States investment or do they lack confidence in the Canadian ingenuity, enterprise and imagination to make use of these funds to build our industries, develop our resources and open up our markets? Because with these funds we can increase our own industrial might and out of enhanced income which all Canadians will enjoy we can pay the small dividend or interest return which investors have a right to expect and still set aside enough to buy back or redeem those securities.

As we grow richer we ourselves will invest more in other less-developed nations and acquire more of our own assets held by people outside this country. United States investment has brought a great deal of know-how and the advantage of science to this country. We are now equipped to compete in markets that were at one time beyond our reach. The alert, the proud, the strong and the aggressive do not fear change; they make the most of it. They profit by it and so will Canadians.

The bulk of United States money which is spent in Canada is spent in employing Canadian labour, using Canadian supplies, and many new industries which it has created, create in turn a whole host of small businesses that supply it or spring from it. I am thinking of one oil company which established itself in the eastern portion of Montreal a short time ago and which, among other things, decided to manufacture alcohol from gasoline. In consequence the price of alcohol was reduced considerably for industrial purposes, much to the benefit of local industry. Or putting it another way, the United States capital generates a demand for Canadian goods.

A good example of a United States-controlled company and how its income is spent in this country is to be found in the annual report of Imperial Oil Limited, 1957, at page 20 under the heading, "Disposition of Each Dollar of Income". There we find, assuming that we take $1 of income earned, the cost of purchased raw materials, including freight —and I give the round figures—is 55 cents; operating and administrative expenses, 22 cents. Ninety-nine per cent of the operating and administrative expenses is probably paid to Canadian employees. Depreciation is given at 4 cents; taxes, 9 cents; dividends, 4 cents; earnings retained and used in the business, 3 cents. It is interesting to note that the government received twice as much in taxes, with no equity interest in the company at all, as did the shareholders who owned the company.

We all know the reasons for the desire of foreign capital to invest in this country, namely the political stability of the country, the wealth of our natural resources and the managerial ability of our people. To me it is very clear from the present budget that Canadians have not the money in sufficient quantities to meet the demand for capital investment in this country.

The point is that when the Minister of Finance states that he will need to find or refund this year money to the extent of $3.4 billion, that is to say, $1,400 million new money and $2 billion for refinancing purposes, where are we likely to find another $6 billion for capital investment in plant and equipment if we do not resort to foreign capital? The Montreal Star, in its issue of Saturday, June 21, under the heading "Effects on the United States of Fleming Budget" goes on to say in part:

> Mr. Fleming outlined various steps which the government proposes to take, and undoubtedly this will be the part of the budget which will receive most attention in Washington.
> What are these steps?

This is really a quotation from the budget address. I continue:

> (2) "We will encourage the United Kingdom, the commonwealth and other overseas countries to seek out wider opportunities to supply Canadian import requirements . . . on the basis of normal market forces."
> (3) "We will continue to foster the growth and diversification of efficient Canadian industries so that a constantly larger supply of our requirements may be met economically from domestic production."
> This can be an effective suggestion. When a government says it will foster industry in order to give domestic producers a larger share of the home market, it has the power to do it—by import quotas, by import licensing, by embargoes, by subsidy and by tariffs. There are many weapons to hand.

Then, in the last paragraph, referring to Washington:

> They will therefore concentrate on the implications of Mr. Fleming's third point to the effect that domestic producers are to be given more protection. They will remember too that the new anti-dumping legislation is to be discriminatory. They will not be too happy about any of it, and it would not be surprising if they began to plan some counter-campaign of their own.

Therefore, I say that the protectionist policy can sometimes be justified to protect infant industry, but does the present government not realize that we have long since grown out of this stage of infancy in this country? How can the fourth trading nation in the world justify this attitude toward our export industry? Again, I say this budget is not a budget of action but only a policy of drift.

I would like to return very briefly to trade with the United Kingdom. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) suggested that we should divert 15 per cent of our trade from the United States to the United Kingdom did he ever really mean this? Certainly the British thought so and they offered him free trade. Again, the Economist, on June 21, referring to this matter, had this to say:

> One thing that remains quite mysterious is in which direction the government's trade policy is aimed. Mr. Fleming made an impassioned case—all his utterances tend to be impassioned—for reducing "the chronic trade deficit with the United States." Yet he and the Prime Minister, Mr. Diefenbaker, still insist on regarding the British offer of free trade as though it were an improper suggestion. The Canadians have not yet digested Mr. Macmillan's pointed and twice-repeated declaration that the proposal "lies on the table for consideration either in whole or in part". On present form, the Diefenbaker government will again pretend, ostrich-like, that he never said it.

Certainly, the people are entitled to ask, where do we go from here because now we see the pattern of tariffs and protectionism evolving with this increase in the tariff wall. Here we are back again with the old Tory policy of privilege and protection, taking care of selected industries and injuring the whole nation. And now when one group has succeeded where will it stop? What about the other groups lining up at the door asking that they be given subsidies or protection? Again I ask the question, will England reply, will she retaliate? Here are the facts. Exports to Great Britain in 1957 were approximately $742 million, while imports from Great Britain in 1957 were approximately $522 million. Consequently, there is a difference in our favour of $220 million a year.

If we are going to adopt this policy of tariff protection, then why adopt it towards a country with whom we have a favourable trade balance? Great Britain is already paying more than we do. Do we want to make the terms of trade with Great Britain worse? Do we want to improve them? Then, I also ask the question, will the United Kingdom save the dollars she cannot earn by buying from Russia some pulp, paper, aluminum and asbestos? Will she buy her minerals some place else? Will she buy wheat elsewhere, which she can easily do in this world situation of excess supply? The cost of yielding to pressure groups must be borne somewhere. The strong export industry on which Canada depends will suffer. Which industry, which companies will suffer only time will tell. We do not know at present. So I ask, when the whole world is moving slowly towards freer trade is Canada, whose present and future standard of living depends upon exports, to reverse that movement?

We shall regret this trend towards protectionism. Our copper and nickel industries are having a tough time, but their position can be more difficult if their customers buy elsewhere. The pulp and paper groups are not working at capacity, and could be further damaged by a decrease in Britain's purchase of forest products from Canada, while increasing her purchases of these products from Russia and Scandinavia. As we all know, recently Russia has taken orders in Great Britain away from our own aluminum industry. We all know how much our agricultural community depends on British markets for the sale of their wheat, barley and other grains. A stiffening in the British attitude could very easily reduce our total exports of these agricultural commodities. This could easily result in a substantial loss to our farmers in the west.

What do the British think of this budget? I have already indicated the reaction of the Economist, so let me refer now to the Financial Times of London, England, for June 19, and to the editorial entitled "Regrettable Decision".

> The budget itself is relatively unexciting and makes no change in personal or company income tax rates. Its main feature, in fact, is a highly regrettable one—an immediate increase in tariffs on wool cloth imports from Britain, from the present 50 cents to 55 and 60 cents a pound.
> This decision to raise tariffs was not completely unexpected. Mr. Fleming introduced a fortnight ago a report of the tariff board which recommended increased protection for the domestic wool fabrics industry and announced that its recommendations would be very carefully studied. It seemed legitimate, however, to hope that no action would be taken at least until after the commonwealth conference in September—particularly when the board of trade sent a message to the Canadian government expressing serious concern that no harm should be done to this very important British export to Canada and drawing attention to the inconsistency which existed between the tariff board's recommendations and the wish of both governments to increase trade between their two countries.
> The Canadian government's decision to ignore these representations will inevitably have a depressing psychological effect on the movement towards closer Anglo-Canadian trade relations. The Diefenbaker administration is committed to increasing Canada's imports from Britain, yet its first measure in the field of trade has been to impose a sharp tariff increase on imports from Britain—not from her competitors—worth some £12 million a year. This action has been taken, moreover, against a British industry which has already suffered severely from the U.S. protection to which Canada objects so bitterly.

There is one last point I should like to make. I have said before that we are the fourth trading nation in the world. This is no mere boast but an economic fact of great consequence to all Canadians because our standard of living depends upon it. The gross national product means the total output of goods and services. Canada's gross national production in 1957 was $31 billion. Canada's gross exports of goods and services to all countries amounted to approximately $6,375 million or 20.3 per cent of the gross national product. Comparing this 20.3 per cent with the figure for the United States, whose gross exports to all countries amounted to approximately five per cent of its gross national product, it becomes clear that we, of all the nations in the world, should be the most concerned about trying to free the channels of trade. If we wish to maintain and keep our high standard of living, then we must encourage the freest possible channels of trade.

Now perhaps a comparison with other countries in different stages of economic development will illustrate my point very clearly. If you were to add the exports and imports of a country together, and divide the total by the total population, you get a per capita figure of total trade. On this basis we find, taking the international monetary fund figures, that Canada has a per capita trade of $712.88; the United States, $204 per capita; Mexico, $63.80 per capita; Burma, $22.31 per capita; Ethiopia, $6.30 per capita. I should point out in passing that the big difference between Canada and the United States in per capita trade is due to the tremendous population in the United States.

However, put in other terms the Canadian is four times as vulnerable to fluctuations in international trade as is the resident of the United States. Therefore, I say that we should be four times as careful about disturbing international trade because the impact will be four times greater on us. We have the most to lose by any decline in world trade. Now let us not in any way accentuate it by slapping our best customer, the United States, in the face by talking of a 15 per cent trade diversion and then by attacking our second best customer, Great Britain, by increasing the tariff on wool and making it difficult for us to get together.

Therefore, I maintain that this first Tory budget leaves Canadian economic policy still very uncertain, with no steps being taken to halt inflation; fails to cope satisfactorily with the problems of recession; incurs the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history, without any basic plan for curing unemployment; and indicates a decisive swing to protectionism at a time when other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction. This is indeed a budget of inaction and a policy of drift.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, having now, like former ministers of finance, sat through a budget debate, at the close of its seventh day, I have some appreciation, as I am sure they had, of what it means to be a captive audience. At least when the speeches are equally divided in number, as in this debate, between government and opposition the Minister of Finance listens to half which belabour him and his budget. It has been at least an interesting experience, Mr. Speaker. I rejoice now to feel free to make a comment on the course of the budget debate and some of the things that have been said in that debate by hon. members opposite.

I have heard a good many budget debates and I think that this one deserves to be regarded as unique because clearly the opposition speeches have had nothing of a constructive nature to put forward. Never, I venture to say, have the opposition speeches in the course of a budget debate been marked to the extent that these have with inconsistencies and a virtual welter of contradictions.

Something has been said in the course of this debate from time to time about speeches being read and there have been references to speeches being written for Liberal members by Mr. MacEachen. All I have to say is that one man could not have written all the speeches that were delivered by the opposition in this debate because there have been so many clear inconsistencies, so many contradictions.

Here we see the Liberal opposition, now more than three months after election date, still going on fighting the last general election. Mr. Speaker, when are they going to reach the point of recognizing the fact that the people did speak on March 31, that that is the starting point and that from that point on they should guide their course and not be going back and trying to fight the general election all over again. Their procedure in terms of usefulness to parliament now becomes a waste of time. Let us now have from hon. gentlemen opposite something constructive.

The second feature that has impressed me is that, notwithstanding some things that I shall have to say in the course of my remarks, there has not been a suggestion from hon. members opposite of the means of saving one dollar. Not one hon. member opposite has put forward a suggestion for saving even a single dollar.

Mr. Speaker, you have heard incessantly from hon. members opposite discussions of dominion-provincial relations. It is quite true—and there is no secret about it—that I did not discuss dominion-provincial relations in the course of the budget speech. The reason was perfectly obvious. If hon. members opposite had wanted a reference or discussion on the part of the Minister of Finance to dominion-provincial relations they certainly would have had it had they not chosen to foreclose that course on the part of the minister. For Mr. Speaker, it will not be forgotten, I trust, that on June 2 no less a person than the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) himself on a government supply motion introduced an amendment dealing with the very subject. May I recall to you, sir, the words of that amendment. They are found at page 733 of Hansard and read:

> This house regrets that the government has failed to call a federal-provincial conference to discuss unemployment and other urgent problems of common concern to federal and provincial authorities; and that the government has failed to give assurance that it would maintain or improve the principle of equalization of direct tax revenues of the provinces embodied in the existing law.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on that day and the following day there followed a two-day debate on dominion-provincial relations. In the face of that I must confess that I feel—and I say this with all humility—greatly flattered that, after listening to my remarks in the course of that debate, hon. gentlemen opposite should deplore the fact that I did not give them a repetition of the same speech when I spoke in the course of delivering the budget two weeks ago tonight. It is subtle flattery. We have had so much time spent on this subject that it seems to me as though it is the only thing that hon. members opposite think they have to talk about.

We had an extraordinary speech this afternoon from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). He undertook to say of a speech made in this house yesterday—and of course he had no right to refer to it—that it was the most centralizing speech heard in the Canadian parliament. The hon. member for Laurier ought to know the meaning of the word "centralizing". But if the truth is told, the fact is that there never was a less centralizing speech made in this house than the speech made by my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) yesterday. Are these the words of a centralizing speech?

> We believe that the resources of Canada belong to the provinces and that we operate in the territories to the north of those provinces only in the sense that we hold them in trust for the people who will live there in the future.

Does that sound like a centralizing speech? To me it sounds like a speech which suggests the fullest degree of recognition of the rights of the provinces under the constitution of this country. If that were not enough, there is more; listen to this:

> That explains why this government on many fronts is offering co-operative plans of resource development with each of the provinces in order that they may best be able to develop their own resources and best look after themselves. There is no question whatever of infringement on constitutional responsibilities. In fact, we lean over backwards in an effort not to force our will in any way at all even to the choice of roads or any other project on which we are co-operating.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What page is that?

Mr. Fleming: (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, that is to be found at page 1761 of Hansard. Far from being a speech justifying what was said of it by the hon. member for Laurier, it contradicts in the flattest terms the charges that were so improperly and so unfairly made this afternoon by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: They were not improperly or unfairly made.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is proof. The hon. member can talk about centralizing but if he will look at what was said and not content himself with using adjectives that have no relation to the fact, he will learn, I hope, in time what "centralizing" means.

Mr. Chevrier: Let me tell my hon. friend that I will not learn anything from him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I say this to the hon. member and to others opposite. When they attempt now to adopt the provinces, I would tell them that the provinces are of full age and that the provinces have not chosen to be adopted by those who treated them so harshly when they sat in the seats of government. The provinces know that had there not been a change of government a year ago they would still be forced to carry on with the provision made under the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements act which, when it was legislated in this house, we said was inadequate and was unfair to the provinces and to the municipalities. That is why, in fulfilment of the undertaking given then, we moved as we did at the last session of parliament to ease greatly the financial burdens of all the provinces of this country, and in particular the four provinces in the Atlantic area.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; I am under pressure and my time is limited. When the hon. member for Laurier today seeks to turn the House of Commons into a debating society in order to discuss Quebec provincial politics all I have to say to him is that when he speaks about Conservative members running for cover, I should like to ask him what he has to say, speaking of running for cover, about what happened in the last election campaign when neither the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) nor the former hon. member for Coast-Capilano, both members of the former Liberal government and one of them a candidate for the leadership of the Liberal party last January, used the word "Liberal" on any of their advertising.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was in both of those constituencies in the campaign and, believe me, I took careful note of the billboards. I could not find the word "Liberal" on one of them.

Mr. Pearson: I thought we were not supposed to fight the last election all over again?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Another feature of the budget debate is that thus far the magazine tax has not once been mentioned. There is a conspiracy of silence opposite. There is embarrassed silence, of course on the part of those who were the fathers of this tax. Where is the father? The child is here waiting, claiming a parent; but the parent has fled. Silence prevails. Hon. members may run away from this child of theirs. They may regret the paternity of this ugly duckling. But while they can ignore it in debate I can assure them that they will have an opportunity of voting on the issue and there will be no avoiding that opportunity.

I have one final comment of this preliminary nature. It is with regard to gold. No hon. member of this house has yet said a word expressive of even the slightest measure of disapproval of what we have proposed by way of an increase in assistance under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. But among those who have importuned the Minister of Finance in the last year on this subject have been the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas) and the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin). Did they express joy that the government had moved to increase assistance by 25 per cent?

Mr. Habel: Yes; they did.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, they were withholding their comment. They were not going to be heard as expressing approbation. All I have to say on this subject is that I hope their constituents will take note that this increase in the assistance under this act apparently kindled no enthusiasm or appreciation in the minds or the bosoms of their respective members.

Mr. Pearson: It is the next election which the minister is fighting now.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I know that the hon. gentleman is shaking in his boots at the very thought of the next election.

In a matter of 24 minutes we shall be voting on the following amendment introduced on behalf of the official opposition by my friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson). This amendment invites the house to condemn the government in these terms:

> This house regrets that the government, in its budget proposals, has failed to cope satisfactorily with the problems of the recession—

That is No. 1.

> —in spite of the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history—

That is No. 2.

> —that it is moving towards greater trade restrictions at a time when other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction.

That is No. 3.

If this amendment has any significance then I think it attempts to belabour the government on three issues and it is those three issues which I now propose to discuss.

We are told in the first place that the government ought to be condemned because it has failed to cope satisfactorily with the problems of the recession. Let us get some facts straight.

This budget—and I tried to make this very clear—was compiled in a spirit of confidence in Canada and in Canada's future. We believe that confidence is not at all divorced from reality; it is a confidence based upon incontestable evidence, and that evidence I endeavoured to set forth. I gave chapter and verse—our expectations of an increase in the gross national product; our exports for 1957; an all-time Canadian record with the exports for the first five months of 1958 already exceeding those for the first five months of 1957. If the figures are required, here they are as released by the dominion bureau of statistics during this last week: During the first five months of 1957 exports totalled $1,936 million and in the first five months of 1958 they totalled $1,952 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Inflation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is an increase in exports, if I must explain this in detail to my hon. friend—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is because prices are higher.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I must assure my dear and hon. friend that this pose of a school grade 2 mentality on his part does not befit him; he is too bright for that.

Some hon. members in the opposition profess to believe that as a result of this course of action somehow or other there is a contraction in purchasing power, but the figures just do not bear that out. The fact is that consumer purchasing in Canada has been maintained and two weeks ago I quoted figures to illustrate how much better off we were in this respect and also in respect to capital investment than is the country to our south.

Here is a dispatch from Washington dated June 10 stating that proposed capital expenditures in the United States for 1958 have been reduced to $30.7 billion from the earlier projection of $32 billion. In Canada we estimated that capital expenditures this year would be $8.5 billion or more than one-quarter of those of the entire United States which has an economy generally measured in terms of about 15 times the size of the Canadian economy. There is concrete evidence of the confidence we have expressed.

I ask the house to consider the course taken by hon. members opposite in this respect. If ever a course was calculated to destroy confidence it is the course which has been followed throughout by the members of the opposition. They have been undisguisedly unhappy in the face of the continued strength of our economy. Just as during the last session and in the campaign following it they magnified the extent of the unemployment problem, so today, even in the face of facts, they are glorying in gloom.

There was a reference the other day to the attitude of some members opposite when it was said that they whined. All I can say, after listening to the members of the opposition throughout seven days of debate, is that what we have heard from them is a wail and it is a wail unworthy of Canadians. The Canadian people well know the bold and determined efforts taken by this government to cope with the recession. They have approved of those efforts and this government has scrupulously adhered to the undertakings given to the people in this respect.

I wish now to say a word about the second part of the amendment. I recall the words of the amendment "in spite of the largest peacetime deficit in Canadian history". That expression may have been artfully phrased, but I think if it is to be taken seriously as part of a want of confidence motion it can bear only one interpretation and that is that hon. gentlemen opposite deplore the extent of the deficit. They deplore that we have to have so large a deficit. Otherwise their amendment on this point surely is meaningless.

Let us now examine the situation. I submitted to the house that after certain proposed tax changes for this fiscal year we shall incur a deficit of $648 million. This deficit was estimated following a careful review of the facts with the benefit of all the assistance available to a minister of finance and considering all the factors that bear on such a computation. Look at the United States. We have statements these days from the United States that that country next year expects a deficit of between $9 billion and $12 billion, which is more than 15 times the deficit for which we are budgeting.

I do not need to recall that the hon. gentlemen opposite are unhappy with my estimate. They are unhappy with it because they want to enlarge it, and if hon. members opposite succeed in the course they have been following in this debate, in destroying confidence in this country, the deficit could well be larger. I hope it will not; I hope the Canadian people will continue, and I am quite satisfied they will continue, to show the good sense they have exhibited in recent months and will not pay attention to the statements of opposition members.

I would recall to this house that the financial critic for the opposition was determined that this deficit would be very much larger and things progressed until, on June 27, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Mitchell) raised the figure to $1 billion. Not to be outdone by the hon. member for Sudbury, along came the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Bourque) that same afternoon and he managed to get the figure up to $2,167 million. That is not arithmetic; that represents what I believe to be astronomical flights into the realm of fancy, but Canada's credit is not helped by irresponsible statements of that kind. The statement of the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean is irresponsible to the point of irrationality when he says that we are going to have a deficit in such figures as he mentioned.

I listened this afternoon with much interest to my hon. friend, the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) when he was pleading for confidence in the value of the Canadian dollar and I applaud the rebuke he delivered to his colleagues who sit behind him, the hon. members for Sudbury and Outremont-St. Jean, as well as to the financial spokesman for the opposition.

It was not long ago that we heard loud voices from the Liberal party pleading for deficit financing. It will not be forgotten that during the Liberal convention in January the then financial spokesman for that party stated in categorical terms that we should deliberately embark upon such a policy and during the campaign, of course, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), not to be outdone, very strongly urged a policy of deficit financing. He was prepared to increase the deficit we would otherwise have had by proposing a $400 million slash in taxes, which the Canadian people rejected because they realized that would mean a tremendous increase in the deficit and they were prepared to be more responsible in their financial thinking than was the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. members opposite, with all their beating around bushes, all their double talk and all the talk out of both sides of their mouths in the course of this debate, must face up to this question which is inescapable. Do they want a larger deficit? Let us have no more pretence by talking on both sides of the question. Do they want a larger deficit or not?

An hon. Member: We want action. We want a new administration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You wanted a new administration last January and you see what you got.

And now, Mr. Speaker, as bearing on the answer for which I am waiting, and which hon. members opposite will not give—you may be very sure of that; they will not give it in this debate, for they will not face up to that question—let me put these matters before the house. When they talk about a billion dollar deficit, let me point out, first of all, that they have not brought forward a single suggestion for saving as much as one dollar or reducing the budget by as much as one dollar. Second, they have already voted to increase the deficit. Those who voted for the C.C.F. amendment to the amendment several days ago cannot possibly support an amendment now which undertakes to deplore the large deficit, so I can only assume, from the fact that all Liberal members of the house voted in this blind way the other night for the C.C.F. amendment, which would have increased the deficit by an astronomical amount, that they have decided not to vote for their own amendment this evening. They certainly cannot vote for both unless they want big deficits, in which case they do not mean what they say in this present amendment.

In the third place, they have talked about our proposal to liquidate the national defence equipment account. But in this respect we are simply following what they did for three years. Liberal ministers of finance had recourse to this account for sums of money which were used for the purpose of reducing net budget expenditures. And so, in the face of precedents such as this, it surely does not lie in the mouths of hon. members opposite to criticize us for having recourse to the same procedure. But we have gone one step further, and we have proposed that this account be liquidated so that parliament will have full control, full knowledge, in respect of the voting of expenditures and of the approval of expenditures of public money.

In the fourth place, their denunciation of a large budget deficit means, again, that they are still opposed to the increases which we brought about in the social security payments, and all their sniping does not hide the fact that it springs from an ill disguised hostility towards these increases in the social security payments which they had the opportunity to bring about when they were in office but which they did not bring about because they were afflicted with the $46 a month mentality.

Also, Mr. Speaker, there is the matter of inflation. Until the hon. member for Mount Royal spoke this afternoon not one Liberal member, or for that matter, not one member of the C.C.F. party, who had spoken in this debate had given the faintest inkling of the recognition of the danger of inflation. So I can only refer back to the words which the Leader of the Opposition uttered in this house on May 13, when he said, as recorded at page 31 of Hansard:

> Inflation, therefore, remains a menace in the midst of the recession. That is the dilemma which faces the government today. It must deal simultaneously with inflation and recession.

All the Liberal members who spoke in the course of this debate, with the exception of the hon. member who spoke last this afternoon for the opposition, completely ignored the danger of inflation when they followed the course of suggesting additions to the deficit and thus increased the danger of inflation which would have resulted from the huge increases in the budget deficit which their proposals would have created.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suppose the Minister of Finance would not permit a question at this point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On this matter of tax reductions, may I point out—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. My time is limited. I usually accommodate the hon. gentleman whose evident, shall I say, uneasiness must be attributed to a pricking conscience.

Mr. Pickersgill: I could have asked a question in that time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Well, it will have to be after 5.45.

Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the deficit, the money must be found and the electorate has passed on this question in the plainest of terms.

And now, with my time slipping by so quickly, I turn to the third branch of the amendment which purports, if you please, to invite the house to condemn the government because, so it says, the government is moving toward greater trade restrictions while the other countries in the western world are moving in the opposite direction.

I hope that the other countries of the world are moving in the direction of relaxing the restrictions which have impeded the flow of trade, because Canadian trade has been faced with barriers which have not been confined simply to old fashioned tariffs. We have had to move Canadian goods through restrictions and discriminations of various kinds. But saying, as hon. members have been saying, and as some of the Liberal press such as the Winnipeg Free Press and other Sifton papers have been saying, that this is a budget which moves the policy of Canada in the direction of protectionism, is very untruthful. And here I must mention the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) and his stirring speech in this house. How he wept over the policies he alleged in this budget on tariffs and dominion-provincial relations. The crocodile tears flowed. They were copious; they went in all directions. It was a flood, Mr. Speaker. And then, as if it were not bad enough to have to witness this lachrymose scene, the hon. member in his most mournful tone reminded the house that he had once been a Conservative, but did not like the Conservative policy because, he said, the Conservatives thought trade was wrong. He said that as if it was going to be greeted with tears on this side of the house. I can assure the hon. member in all good part and all friendliness that we do not regret the fact that he is not in the Conservative party, and if he wants us to weep he has got to give us more cause than that.

He put before us in the most stirring terms the ancient Liberal cult of the import. Mr. Speaker, we do not look down on exports in this party. We take a great deal of satisfaction from the fact that since this government came to office exports from this country have risen.

We have no apologies to make about what we have said with regard to trade relations with the United States. None whatever. Apparently it is all right when others make such remarks, but not right for Conservatives to make them. Here is what the Leader of the Opposition said as quoted in the Ottawa Journal on June 9 in a speech at Poughkeepsie, New York:

> Canadians were prone to feel aggrieved at certain U.S. policies.
> "In trade, don't fence us out, and in politics don't take us benevolently for granted", said the former minister of external affairs.

Mr. Speaker, what are the hon. gentleman's supporters in the house going to say in the face of these words? Are not these words going to give offence to the country with which Canada does its biggest trade? Are his supporters not going to shiver when they read remarks like this, when they consider what effect they may have on the relations between Canada and the United States? Oh, Mr. Speaker, what the Leader of the Opposition has done to Liberal policy with regard to trade! Why, it is going to bring our relations with the United States into the most serious plight imaginable. Oh, Mr. Speaker, this grieves us all very deeply.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, when will the hon. minister leave for Stratford?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): When would you like to go?

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Speaker, let us be quite clear about this. The record of the government in this respect is crystal clear. First, when it came to taking steps to protect the interests of Canadian producers in the domestic market those whose claim had the first consideration of the government were the farmers of Canada. I invite hon. members to examine what we did last year in the matter of safeguarding the interests of the producers of turkey and fowl and dried skim milk. I have received many requests for protective action. Those from whom I have received the most requests are members of the textile industry, in the face of their difficulties, and Canadian agriculturists.

Second, all of the major proposals that are contained with respect to tariff action here are based upon reports of the tariff board, reports of investigations that were ordered by the former Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Where is their sincerity of purpose? Do its members disown now the reports of the tariff board to which it referred the references?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not a fact.

Mr. Benidickson: You changed the recommendations contained in the report of the tariff board.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): These were matters that were left on our doorstep as part of the ugly heritage of neglect left to us by our predecessors in office.

In the third place we followed scrupulously the procedures prescribed by the GATT; and, fourth, in respect of the proposed increase in the tariff on woollen goods, let me tell the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that he twists and distorts the truth when he talks about this slight increase as having a symbolic significance. That statement is completely untrue.

And finally, we are now proceeding with preparations for the commonwealth trade and economic conference that will assure its success.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 5 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the amendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Benidickson) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Pearson: I should like to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock, it is unnecessary to move the adjournment of a debate. It is adjourned automatically by the rules.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader what the business is for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, we shall conclude the budget debate and on Friday go into estimates, finishing off the estimates of the Department of Public Works and then going into agriculture.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NAVAL AMMUNITION DEPOTS—CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

Question No. 105—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has there been an increase or decrease in civilian personnel since 1st January, 1958 to date, in each of the naval ammunition depots in Canada?
2. If so, what classifications were effected?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. Kamloops, nil; Rocky Point, decrease 1; Bedford, nil; Renous, decrease 27.

2. Rocky Point, clerk; Renous, assistant technician 3, 1; clerical assistant, 1; ammunition workers, 11; chauffeurs, 3; tractor operators, 6; carpenters, 3; trades helpers, 2.

NOTE: These figures refer to positions deleted from the authorized continuing complement. With four exceptions the employees concerned have either been reassigned to vacant positions on the reduced complement or employed temporarily on short-term projects. Of the four individuals laid off, two were over the normal retiring age of 65 years.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 3, 1958

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Roland English (Gaspe) presented the first report of the standing committee on marine and fisheries, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

GRAIN

STATEMENT ON FEED GRAIN SITUATION IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement with regard to the feed grain situation in the prairie provinces. The Canadian wheat board has been keeping in close touch with the development of the 1958 grain crop in the prairie provinces, and particularly with the drought disaster which has struck such wide areas of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. It is now apparent that great loss has been sustained and, as time goes on, the possibility of recovery is becoming more limited.

The wheat board has completed a survey of deliverable stocks of wheat, oats and barley on farms at all the 2,100 delivery points in the prairie provinces. Fortunately there are substantial reserve stocks of feed grains on farms in all three western provinces and, although all these stocks are not evenly distributed, they do constitute an important measure of security in conditions which now prevail.

Over and above farm stocks of feed grain there are over 50 million bushels of oats and barley in country elevators at this date. Part of these stocks can be mobilized to meet acute feed and seed problems as they arise. In spite of the widespread drought there are ample supplies of feed grain in the prairie provinces, although these stocks are not necessarily within the area where they may ultimately be required.

As a first step in meeting the problem which has arisen, the wheat board is prepared to hold in country elevators such supplies of wheat, oats and barley as the provincial and municipal authorities think advisable. In carrying out this policy of retention the wheat board will follow policies pursued some years ago. Provincial and municipal authorities will arrange with elevator companies for the retention of needed stocks of these grains and will provide that the necessary carrying charges are taken care of. An instruction has been issued today by the wheat board setting forth the method which may be followed by the provincial and municipal authorities and the elevator companies.

At the present time the wheat board has quite large sales commitments, but the board will be in a position to play its part in relieving any distress that may result from the present adverse crop conditions in some parts of Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I think the announcement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is most timely, and I believe it is a measure of insurance which ought to be taken at this time. We hope that crop conditions will improve; we have seen prairie conditions improve very rapidly, and we hope that this planned step may not be necessary in the final analysis.

I wonder if the minister or his department or the government have considered whether the transfer of the grain that may be involved from places where it is now in store to some other places where it may be needed may be done on the basis of the Crowsnest pass freight rates, the low freight rates, rather than the very high freight rates on smaller movements of grain. I think that is an important consideration.

Mr. Churchill: I will look into that. I have not received from the wheat board the instructions they are issuing today to the provincial authorities and the elevator companies, and in those instructions perhaps that point is mentioned.

WHEAT—REPORTED PROPOSAL TO FORM CANADA-U.S. POOL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce would care to comment on a report from Washington this morning to the effect that during his visit to Ottawa next week the President of the United States will discuss with the Prime Minister a proposal of the latter to form a Canadian-United States pool to liquidate the wheat surplus.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I think I will have to reserve comment. I have not seen that report. My sources of information are perhaps not as actively engaged as those of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: Why not?

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister or his department is considering action on the suggestion made by certain United States congressmen some weeks ago that there should be something in the nature of a Canadian-United States wheat board to handle the disposal of surplus wheat in both countries on a mutually agreed basis.

Mr. Churchill: I did hear about that. We have had no formal discussions with our United States friends along those lines. At the present moment the surplus disposal program as far as Canada is concerned is going very well, and among the four great exporters of wheat we are leading the field.

Mr. Argue: A further supplementary question. Does the minister not feel that such a suggestion has great merit, and is the minister aware that forecasts indicate that the United States this year will have one of the largest wheat crops in its history, if not actually the largest, which may further complicate the export of this commodity?

Mr. Churchill: There is every advantage to be gained by co-operation with our American friends so far as the disposal of surplus wheat is concerned. I am aware of the forecast of a very large wheat crop in the United States. It seems large, in comparison with Canadian crops, this forecast of a 900 million bushel wheat crop in the United States, but it is not so much in excess of crops in other years that we need to be too greatly alarmed about it. The consumption of wheat in the United States amounts to about 600 million bushels a year, so the surplus available for export is not the entire figure which the hon. member has mentioned.

PIPE LINES

ALBERTA-MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of Premier Manning's recent visit to Ottawa and of the Prime Minister's statement last Wednesday regarding an Alberta-Montreal pipe line, can the minister advise the house if a decision has been reached regarding the construction of such a line?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I will take this question as notice.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position to give any information as to the location and scope of the reported strike on the pipe line, and to tell us if it is within the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation area?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not the information the hon. member desires. I will have to take his question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Fisher: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour with regard to the pipeline walk-out in the lakehead area. Has the minister any information as to whether his department has jurisdiction in this dispute? If so, what action is being considered by his department?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the only knowledge I have of this dispute is what I have read in the newspaper article this morning, but upon investigation we find that there is a collective agreement in existence. If there is any dispute on the wage question, the federal government has no jurisdiction. It is rather the responsibility of the contractors and the union which has an agreement with those contractors.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ICELAND—EXTENSION OF FISHING LIMITS FOR FOREIGN TRAWLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of an article which appeared in this morning's Montreal Gazette to the effect that Canada was not prepared to extend its sea limits, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs comment on the government's position with regard to Iceland's definite announcement that she would extend her limits to 12 miles effective as of September 1 of this year?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our view is that we should not take unilateral action at this time as Iceland has done.

The announcement as of July 1 by the Icelandic government is to the effect that this unilateral action will become effective on September 1. We are hoping that before September 1, through bilateral discussions between Iceland and the United Kingdom, Iceland will not be obliged to take that step. We are still placing confidence and faith in the possibility and probability of having another international conference and we are still maintaining our position with regard to six miles of territorial waters and an additional six miles for fishing.

Mr. Robichaud: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is any consideration being given to protecting our own Canadian fishermen from the possibility of fishermen from other countries fishing within the 12-mile limit?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, up to the present time there has been no change in the rights of foreign fishermen that have prevailed hitherto.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS UNIFORMS TO WELFARE AGENCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, a sort of send-off before he begins his two-week trip. Is it now the policy of the Department of National Defence to supply surplus uniforms at a nominal cost to welfare agencies in Canada undertaking rehabilitation programs? If so, would the minister inform the house as to the details of this policy?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no such policy. Under the provisions of the Surplus Crown Assets Act the Department of National Defence is required to report to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation all surplus equipment, and that includes clothing.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, then, Mr. Speaker. Is the newspaper report to the effect that the Department of National Defence has sold 1,000 uniforms to a welfare agency for $1 incorrect?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report to which the hon. gentleman refers. Any uniforms which were for sale would be disposed of in the manner I have already described.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO OBSOLESCENCE OF PRESENT WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Defence Production. In his absence perhaps it could be taken as notice. Can the minister indicate whether the news item which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of July 2, and which reported on the tour by the minister of the plant of the Renfrew Aircraft and Engineering Company Limited, is correct in its quotation of the minister's remark on that occasion, which was, "We are working on guided missiles, rockets and CF-105's, but they may be obsolete in a very short time"?

Mr. Speaker: Since there have been two questions of this kind today I think I should remind the hon. member that it is not strictly in order to ask a minister to verify the truth or otherwise of a newspaper report. If the hon. member will refer to the citation in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms having to do with oral questions he will find that although newspaper articles may be referred to as the basis of a question, the question should relate to something under the responsibility of the government and not simply be an attempt to verify newspaper statements.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I can rephrase it in line with your remarks and ask whether the minister is aware of this particular newspaper article, and whether he would care to comment on it.

STATEMENT ON EQUIPPING OF MISSILE TESTING STATION IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East asked me to comment on recent allegations that a contract had been awarded for the equipment for a missile testing station in Canada. Then, as a supplementary question, he asked whether I would check as to whether or not a contract had been awarded to Computing Devices of Canada.

The answer to the first question is that Canada is developing the Sparrow air to air missile, and this will be tested at the range at the R.C.A.F. station at Cold Lake, Alberta. Various contracts have been awarded over a period of time for the purpose of equipping this range at that station.

The answer to the supplementary question is that Computing Devices of Canada have been given a contract for the maintenance of the range facility and for the supply of certain items of equipment.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I ask a supplementary question. Is this missile testing station, which the minister has said is now to be established in Canada, for the testing of our own production or United States production? I could not quite make that out from his answer.

Mr. Pearkes: It is being used for the testing of the Sparrow air to air missile, which is a missile being developed in Canada.

AVAILABILITY OF OFFICIALS TO COMMITTEE ON ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. May I say that I understand the minister is to be absent for a few days. In view of that fact, would the minister inform this house whether or not his officials will be available to the estimates committee when considering the estimates of the Department of National Defence, in order to deal with the question of a missile named Sparrow being produced in Canada and tested in Canada, in relation to missiles of the United States?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Officials of the Department of National Defence have been available at every meeting of the estimates committee; and when their presence is required, they will be available whenever a meeting is called.

Mr. Winch: I have a supplementary question. I asked a direct question with regard to a missile known as the Sparrow. Will the officials be available to discuss that question before the estimates committee?

Mr. Green: The question is out of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let the minister answer.

Mr. Pearkes: It is entirely up to the committee chairman. When the committee chairman requires officials of the Department of National Defence, they will be made available and will be able to give all suitable information.

Mr. Green: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that this is a matter which should be raised and discussed in the standing committee on estimates and not in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I think the point is well taken. Until the committee has asked for evidence and has failed to get it, it seems to me this is not a matter to be brought into the house; and if it is brought into the house, it should be brought in by way of report from the committee.

Mr. Winch: I did not know until yesterday that there was a Sparrow missile in Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SHAWINIGAN, QUE.—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

(Translation):

Mr. J. A. Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

(Text):

Has the Minister of Labour received a telegram from Mr. J. A. Foucher, mayor of the city of Shawinigan, concerning the great number of unemployed persons in the said city and asking that unemployment insurance benefits be extended? If so, what action does the government intend to take in order to solve this problem?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. My answer to that is that no such telegram has been received in my office as yet. In any event, based on the question he has asked, I wish to inform the hon. member that the seasonal benefits have already been extended twice this year, and it is not the intention of the government to make any further extensions of seasonal benefits.

FISHERMEN—STATEMENT AS TO CHANGES IN REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Trinity-Conception asked me a question regarding any recent changes in the unemployment insurance regulations so far as fishermen are concerned. That was followed by a supplementary question by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with respect to whether a report in the newspapers of Newfoundland to the effect that the Minister without Portfolio had announced that there had been changes was correct.

I have a copy of the telegram sent by the hon. member for St. John's West, Minister without Portfolio, to the Newfoundland papers. This was based on a letter which was dictated by the unemployment insurance commission and sent by our office to the Minister without Portfolio outlining the factors affecting fishermen under the act. Unfortunately, although the letter related the present regulations as they have been in effect, they were released as changes in the act.

THETFORD MINES—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Megantic I want to inform him that our office has not received any communication from the municipality of Thetford Mines relating to unemployment insurance or any other subject.

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister of Labour for his answer, but I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he or the Prime Minister received such a telegram.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any such wire. One may have gone to the office of the Prime Minister. I will make inquiry.

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR SEASONAL BENEFIT PAYMENT FIGURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In further answer to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate regarding figures relating to the number of persons receiving seasonal benefits, I informed the hon. member that it takes about two weeks to compile these figures following the end of the month. I also informed him on May 23, as found on page 404 of Hansard, that it is not possible to provide a figure for the number of persons actually receiving benefits. The best we can do is to give him the number of live claims. If he will look at page 404 of Hansard he will see that I explained this matter in some detail.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, if I may ask the minister a supplementary question, does he not think that it would be within the capacity of the statisticians of his department to work out some scheme to ascertain the number of persons actually receiving benefits? It does seem to me that, particularly at this time, such information would be of great benefit to the house and to the country.

Mr. Starr: I advised the hon. member on May 23 that it would be necessary to instal an electronic tabulation system. Until such a tabulation system is installed it is impossible for us to do it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMMUNICATIONS

POLICY RESPECTING GRANTING OF SUBSIDIES TO TELEPHONE COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister indicate to the house if the Department of Transport has any intention of re-establishing the policy of grants in aid to the private telephone companies?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): That matter is under consideration by the government, Mr. Speaker.

WATER RESOURCES

LAKE NIPISSING—REQUEST FOR CONTROL OF WATER LEVEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Since the regular employment of several hundred people in the mill and woods operations in the Cache Bay area is being adversely affected by the low water level of lake Nipissing, will the minister consider having his officials seek to obtain the closest possible co-operation between his department and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, which controls much of the flow into lake Nipissing, with a view to achieving a more effective control by his department of the water level in that lake?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, at the moment I am unaware to what extent, if at all, the Department of Public Works is responsible for the level of lake Nipissing. However, I shall be glad to make inquiries.

HEALTH INSURANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON ALLEGED SIGNING OF AGREEMENT UNDER PROTEST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Welland asked me a question concerning press reports relative to the signing of the federal-provincial hospital insurance agreement with the province of British Columbia.

There has been correspondence between the minister of health for British Columbia and myself in this connection and I have asked his permission to have it tabled. When I receive his agreement I will be prepared to deal with the questions raised by the hon. member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF DR. ROBERT CLARK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he has yet received the report of Professor Clark with regard to the old age and survivors and old age security system in the United States? If my hon. friend has received that report, is he in a position to tell the house when it will be tabled to be scrutinized by hon. members?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, I have not yet received the report the hon. member mentions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Has my hon. friend any indication when it may be received? He will remember that I asked him this question some five weeks ago, and his reply was the same as today. Does he expect that the report will be available before the adjournment or prorogation of parliament?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I would think, Mr. Speaker, that would probably depend on the prorogation of parliament. The preparation of the report is progressing favourably and, of course, I am looking forward to receiving it as soon as possible.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is taking a long time to obtain something we already know.

TRADE

REPORTED REDUCTION IN PROHIBITED EXPORTS TO COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house what Canada's policy is at the conference now going on in Paris relating to the lifting of trade restrictions on the sale of goods to communist countries? I ask this question because of the great interest throughout Canada in increasing our trade.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The interest of the government, Mr. Speaker, equals and surpasses that of the hon. member who has just asked the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: The usual courtesy.

Mr. Churchill: We are hoping that there will be a general relaxation of the restrictions which have been imposed now for a long time on trade with certain countries. I have no specific information at the moment as to what items will be removed from the present list.

[Mr. Monteith (Perth).]

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ELECTRIC POWER, NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder whether I could ask the Acting Secretary of State if the hon. lady has been able yet to trace the correspondence with the premier of Newfoundland about which I asked a couple of days ago.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): I believe that was tabled this morning. I signed a return for the hon. member, and I believe that will answer his question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. lady.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO CONVENING OF CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising out of the present unemployment situation and the indications that unemployment may reach serious proportions again this winter. Can the Minister of Labour say what progress he is making in the convening of a conference of labour, industry, commerce and government to deal with the whole field of seasonal unemployment, as he forecast in April and as the Prime Minister did again at a later date?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, invitations have been sent out to all those who are to be invited to participate in this conference. The conference will be held here in Ottawa on July 14 and 15.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I have a supplementary question. Does this invitation include representatives of provincial governments as well?

Mr. Starr: That is right. Some of the ministers of labour from the provinces also will be here.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It might be a good time to have the dominion-provincial conference as well.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, July 2, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to compliment the Minister of Finance on a very creditable oratorical effort and on the few changes made on government revenue which were welcomed nevertheless. In this budget one or two items are noticeably conspicuous by their absence and I wish to comment on them. One in particular was not even mentioned, notwithstanding every expectation that it would be dealt with in the government's first budget. I am referring to the excise tax on automobiles, against which the minister spoke long and loudly when in opposition. According to the record he waxed eloquently against this tax. I quote from the May 3, 1955, budget debate speech in which the then hon. member as reported at page 3395, said this about the tax:

> The excise tax has largely been ignored in the minister's approach to the problem—
> Oh, they made much of the removal of the luxury tax—because that is the guise in which it was introduced a few years ago—on tires for motor vehicles. They have made much of the reduction of the excise tax from 15 per cent to 10 per cent on motor vehicles. Well, what they have done, in the way they have gone about it—in leaving the tax at far too high a figure, and giving no benefit at all to those dealers who had a stocked-up inventory of motor cars—has been to bedevil the wholesale and retail motor car business in Canada today.

Then again in volume 3 of Hansard of 1956, on March 27, 1956, the minister as reported at page 2648, had this to say:

> The second feature of the sales and excise taxes which is worthy of mention relates to a reduction that was made last year. The government last year actually reduced from 15 to 10 per cent the excise tax levied on automobiles. What was the result, sir? A reduction in revenue? On the contrary, there was an increase in revenue. The collections from the excise tax on automobiles actually exceeded those of the previous year by $8 million. I suggest that there is a lesson there to be learned by the Minister of Finance and by the government. A few more reductions in rate would not necessarily mean serious and crippling reductions in revenues. On the contrary they would assist the circulation of money and the expansion of business enterprise.

Evidently he no longer believes in his own statement. Then again the Prime Minister, speaking on January 14, 1955, as reported at page 192 of Hansard, had this to say:

> What are we doing to meet the situation? What is the reason for it? We have said that over the years Canadians were being taxed out of the markets of the world and taxed out of their jobs. I know they used to say you could make jobs without profits. We have learned differently in Saskatchewan with the disappearance of the mirage of 1944.
> What about hidden taxes? The average automobile has a hidden tax of $400. This government in its wisdom has decreed a high cost structure in the last few years. It has isolated our trade. It has started the march of unemployment. I believe that Canada's industry must be revitalized by giving tax relief at once. The government must act and act now.

That is precisely what the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition are now saying, and that is what we are standing for.

During the last session of parliament the minister reduced the tax by 2½ per cent. The reduction was made without giving an account of government spending plans, but we were encouraged to believe that in the very first budget, which the people were expecting before the election of March 31, this tax would at long last be consigned to the limbo where all existing government inequities were to be purged.

This tax was conceived as luxury tax when only a few people could afford to own and operate a car. Then the war came along and an all-out struggle demanded the curtailment of civilian spending and all available money had to be channeled into war loans. The automobile industry needs a stimulant rather than a deterrent. The excise tax today is a factor in lowering the sales of automobiles in this country where they are a vital necessity. This was pointed out by the hon. member for Middlesex East when he spoke during the budget debate on March 19, 1957, as recorded at page 2492 of Hansard, as follows:

> There is no doubt the day is coming when some arrangements will have to be made whereby the municipalities and the provinces will have a greater share of the tax dollar. Their necessities are still taxed . . . Probably the motorist is the most heavily taxed individual in this country, yet an automobile is a necessity in our country of vast distances and for transportation to employment.

I say amen to that. In many cases the automobile is actually a tool of production. Over 80 per cent of all cars driven in Canada are driven in the pursuit of business. We do not place an excise tax on the carpenter's saw or the plumber's wrench, but we do place an excise tax on automobiles which are equally used as tools to enable people to earn a living. It is no easier for a salesman to earn a living—and believe me, I can speak from actual experience—than it is for a carpenter to do so. To place an excise tax on the automobile is therefore a deterrent to the sale of cars, as has been amply demonstrated many times when there has been a rumour of a tax cut.

You might recall that last December when a Toronto newspaper printed such a report on November 28, 1957 under the banner headline, "Ottawa to Cut Car Excise Tax" the government was not in a position to comment upon it. There was no reliable estimate of a probable budget, as has been the case in previous years, and people who wished to buy cars cancelled orders placed with dealers in order to see what saving they might enjoy if the tax were removed.

Naturally the automobile dealers across the country sought immediate action, and meantime automobile companies closed down because they could not sell their cars. General Motors closed down for two days, Chrysler for four days and Ford of Canada laid off some 2,400 people a few days prior to the appearance of the headline I have quoted. This meant that thousands upon thousands of Canadian workingmen were laid off and deprived of income with consequent suffering to their families and communities. This is just one indication of public awareness of the excise tax on automobiles and the money which this tax costs the public.

If the public suspects the excise tax on cars might be removed the sales of cars stop, and I submit that the very presence of this 7½ per cent tax on passenger cars is a threat to the steady employment of thousands of Canadians. I am convinced that its removal would provide more jobs and more steady employment than any measure the government has so far introduced in an effort to reduce unemployment. This is a serious handicap to have hanging over an industry so vital to the economic well-being of Canada. The excise tax creates instability in this major industry upon which so many people from coast to coast are entirely dependent for their livelihood.

I wonder if hon. members realize that one in every seven persons in the entire labour force of Canada is employed in the automobile industry, exclusive of service stations dispensing products necessary for the operation of motor vehicles. In other words this tax creates a situation of instability for this large group of Canadians.

Automobiles are taxed in so many ways on both a federal and provincial basis that it would require a lengthy computation by a battery of so-called mechanical brains to find out just how much of the cost of a car is accounted for by taxes. Let me cite a few instances. The latest figure I can obtain is for 1956, when ten provinces in Canada collected $383,765,000, which was equal to 24.9 per cent of the total revenue of those ten provinces. In 1956 the federal government collected from the 10 per cent sales tax almost $98 million and from the 10 per cent excise tax $72,250,000. True, the excise tax—and it is about that tax I am speaking and not the sales tax—was reduced to 7½ per cent last December. The sales tax of course remained at 10 per cent.

All these millions of dollars, plus special automobiles taxes in some of the provinces and in some municipalities, when placed on the purchase price of a car have a seriously deterrent effect on car sales. This is particularly important this year, when we should be doing everything possible to stimulate and not to hold back business.

The removal of the 7½ per cent excise tax on passenger cars, to my mind, would be the best way to stimulate employment. I can think of no better way to stimulate the economy, to provide more employment for the over 40,000 people working in the motor vehicle industry in Canada. To illustrate the importance of the industry I should like to quote the following figures. In the first five months of 1956 the industry paid out in wages a total of $70,263,588, while for the same period in 1957 the figure was $74,446,692. For the first five months of 1958 the figure was $63,361,036. These figures apply only to persons engaged in the manufacture of new motor vehicles in this country.

During the same five-month period in 1956 the government collected in sales tax $43,645,371 and in excise tax $34,679,323, a total of $78,324,692. In the same five-month period in 1957 the government collected in sales tax $49,941,684 and $39,681,983 in excise tax, a total of $89,623,667. And for the first five months of 1958, this calendar year, it collected in sales tax $39,401,540 and in excise tax $23,837,996, for a total of $63,-239,536.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before proceeding further I would ask leave of the house to have this table incorporated in the proceedings of Hansard. It is a table showing revenues received by the federal government from 1914 to December, 1957.

Mr. Speaker: What is the source of the information?

Mr. Badanai: The source is the customs department.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member be given leave to incorporate this table in the record without reading it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member what is the particular publication from which this item is selected? He referred to the department.

Mr. Badanai: It is a document prepared by the customs department here.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It shows the increase in the excise tax on automobiles. It is an official document authorized by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that this table be incorporated?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The table is as follows:

Note—On June 8, 1926, passenger cars under $1,200, manufactured in Canada (which qualify under Canadian content requirements) were made exempt from the 5% excise tax up to May 1, 1936.
From May 2, 1936, excise applies to both domestic and imported passenger jobs.
From June 2, 1931, to May 1, 1936, the 3% special import tax did not apply on passenger jobs which were subject to excise tax.
Imports of passenger and truck chassis were subject to the 3% tax.
After May 2, 1936, to April 25, 1939, imports were subject to both the 5% and 3% tax.
From Feb. 21, 1931, to Jan. 1, 1936, the maximum discount from list price on wholesale importation of automobiles was limited to 20%. During all other periods covered by this chart, the discount is the maximum allowed in the country of export to similar classes of trade.

*Note—On and after April 6th, 1955, where radios are installed in motor cars at the factory, the rate of excise tax applicable to the motor car viz , 10% will apply to the car including the accessories, such as radios, heaters, whitewall tires, washers and similar goods installed at the factory.
Where radios are sold to dealers for their installation in the customers cars, the 15% rate of excise tax is to be applied.

But even these figures, impressive as they are, do not tell the whole story. Canadian automobile manufacturers are purchasing materials and parts from thousands of suppliers. I have only the figures of one company, General Motors of Canada. In 1957 this company purchased Canadian goods to the tune of $425 million and I assume the other Canadian car manufacturers are spending proportionate amounts with Canadian suppliers, which all adds up to the tremendous contribution of the automobile industry to the national economy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts I do not see how the government can ignore this awkward situation confronting one of the industries which is giving Canada so much, and contributing to the employment and welfare of so many. I respectfully suggest that the minister give assurance to this house that this matter of the excise tax on automobiles is not made final, and that he will give serious consideration in the near future to the complete elimination of this tax. There might have been justification for it at one time, but if there was any good reason for it in the past that justification is now obsolete and unwarranted.

There is another matter in which I am particularly interested, and that is the plight of our poor municipalities. If there was any expectation that the budget would contain some sign of assistance to the municipalities, with the exception of the removal of the sales tax on certain municipal purchases, for which we are grateful, with the announcement that the federal government will be offering large blocks of bonds to the public every few months these long-nursed hopes were shattered. These offerings will have a decided effect on limiting the amount of municipal debentures that may be offered, and also any that are offered will have to carry a high interest rate if they are to be sold in Canada.

This budget will force municipal governments to borrow in the United States. The failure to include in the budget a measure to establish a pool or a loan fund to which municipilities may sell their debentures at a reasonable rate of interest was, from the standpoint of the municipalities, a serious omission. Such a loan fund would be of inestimable assistance to the hard-pressed municipal governments. It seems to me to be the only system which would provide them with funds to continue with their progressive construction programs, and keep a goodly number of people employed.

Perhaps investment dealers or brokers do not look favourably upon such pool or loan fund for the obvious reason that, if established, such a fund would take away competitive marketing. I am not suggesting that the government was influenced by financial institutions in its failure to giving serious consideration to this important and vital issue. I am pointing out, however, that the minister in his closing remarks said:

> This budget has been born of confidence in Canada's future, not blind wishful thinking, but unshrinkable realism.

I for one fail to see the realism of the Minister of Finance when he overlooks the immense task of the municipalities of Canada, the oldest form of democratic government, the level of government closest to the people, which is the most responsive to the requirements and needs of Canadians. I cannot see much realism, I regret to say, in a budget which totally ignores an industry such as the automobile industry which has contributed billions to the wealth of the nation.

The fact that only one company purchased goods from more than 4,000 suppliers in more than 400 communities is proof that without a healthy and prosperous automobile industry Canada could not possibly expect much from the vision of development so eloquently portrayed by the Prime Minister and echoed by the Minister of Finance in his two-hour budget speech in the house on June 17. I express the hope that the government will see fit to give this industry another look, and I am confident that there would be no dissension in this house if finally once and for all this iniquitous excise tax were removed.

I was very happy to see the Minister of Labour here this afternoon. I am sorry he is absent at the moment, but I know he would support my contention. The minister and I worked closely together when he was mayor of the city of Oshawa. Coming as he does from a community which is practically wholly dependent upon the automotive industry I know he would also support this measure to eliminate the excise tax on automobiles. This measure would be received by the municipalities and the people of Canada as a beneficial and progressive one designed to achieve the very things this government has so eloquently advocated, not only while its members were in opposition but during the recent election campaign and also in the throne speech.

Here my case on behalf of the automotive industry and the municipalities of Canada rests.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Badanai: Surely.

Mr. Lambert: Would the hon. gentleman kindly advise this house why the city council over which he presides was interested in buying buses in the United States rather than in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: All right, let us have it.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who addressed this question to me should be aware that the municipality which I represent did not purchase any buses from the United States. We have in that community the only manufacturer of buses in Canada, the Canada Car Company, a subsidiary of A. V. Roe Corporation, which was established in Fort William many years ago. I think the hon. member refers to the transportation commission of the city of Toronto.

Mr. Lambert: And the city of Fort William.

Mr. Habel: It is not the same city at all.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to add my congratulations to those already tendered the Minister of Finance on the presentation of a very fitting budget. It will help many and is obviously the result of careful, intelligent thinking. I am convinced that our Minister of Finance is a very conscientious man, and I am sure the Canadian people have much confidence in him. On behalf of my constituents I wish to thank the minister for the excellent and fair way in which he has covered the field under his jurisdiction and for the masterly presentation of this budget. Regardless of what has been said by opposition critics, this budget will go down in history as representing a sound approach to the financial and business problems of our day.

Mr. Habel: Imagine.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, on talking with many of my constituents over the past week end I found that the majority were happy with the contents of this budget, and they had not been expecting miracles such as the opposition critics have intimated was their expectation. They felt that their confidence in this government had again been justified. For those who think in terms of all the people there is very little fault to be found with this budget. Never in the history of Canada were our citizens enjoying a better standard of living. Granted, we have problems and they will perhaps always be with us; nevertheless this government has faced present difficulties and adopted an earnest, sound approach to their solution.

The criticism directed at the government in respect of unemployment by two or three members of the opposition has become monotonous and nauseating. These hon. gentlemen have been instrumental in creating fear and aggravating this regrettable situation. Their propaganda in the last session as well as in this one has influenced many timid business people who have postponed making decisions which could have added much momentum to an upturn in business and employment. Some positive thinking and constructive suggestions would be more appreciated by the government and those who are inconvenienced by what is presently a weak link in our economy. However, in spite of these alarmists business and employment are on the upswing.

Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I will quote a short editorial that I think is appropriate on this occasion. The editorial is entitled, "The Awful Uncertainty of the Future" and reads as follows:

> It is a gloomy moment in history. Not in the lifetime of any man who reads his paper has there been so much grave and deep apprehension; never has the future seemed so dark and hard to calculate.
> In France the political cauldron seethes and bubbles with uncertainty.
> England and the British empire is being sorely tried and exhausted in a social and economic struggle, with turmoil at home and uprising of her teeming millions in her far-flung empire.
> The United States is beset with racial, industrial and commercial chaos, drifting we know not where.
> Russia hangs like a storm cloud on the horizon of Europe—dark, menacing and foreboding.
> It is a solemn moment, and no man can feel indifference, which happily, no man pretends to feel in the issue of events.
> Of our own troubles, no man can see the end.

This editorial sounds pretty gloomy, does it not? The writer evidently was weighed down by present problems and quite ready to sell himself and our nation short. Did I say present problems? Excuse me, please; far from it. This editorial appeared before world war II, before the depression of 1929, before the first world war in 1914, before the panic of 1891 and before the civil war in 1865. This was an editorial which appeared in Harper's magazine on October 10, 1847, well over 100 years ago. Yes, pessimism is the scarecrow that fear erects in the watermelon patch of the future to frighten away the timid souls so the feast may be richer for the few who are not afraid. We still have these gloom artists with us. As a matter of fact we have too many in the House of Commons, on the opposition benches, who would rate as experts in this profession.

At this point I would like to say the riding I have the honour to represent lies along the southwest shore of Georgian bay. It is made up of nine townships and five urban centres consisting of Owen Sound, Meaford, Thornbury, Clarksburg and Shallow Lake. Although we have considerable industry, agriculture constitutes the largest share of my constituency's earning power. The people are basically Anglo-Saxon in origin. However, recent immigration has introduced some Dutch people into my riding. I am proud to say this adds up to a thrifty populace of sound citizens. I want to point out that the people of my constituency desire government recognition, but they realize that the first duty of the government is to attack problems of national importance, and I feel the Minister of Finance dealt fairly with one and all in the budget for this fiscal year.

Agricultural conditions in Grey North have improved during the past year. However, small operations in mixed farming have ceased to be economically sound and the trend is toward larger farms properly mechanized. Some farmers have improved their position through specialization, and it is quite evident this course will be followed by others. Our most successful farmers are those who have the latest scientific methods of operation. Soil is tested so that it may be properly treated for best results. Special attention is given to a program of herd improvement. The net result is more food produced by fewer people. By this progress a process of elimination is taking place. People without the capital and other qualifications necessary to participate in this type of farming are drifting into other phases of our economy where we hope they may be satisfactorily absorbed. However, it is gratifying to know that the Canadian Farm Loan Act stands to be amended. This could help those in need of capital, especially our young farmers.

One branch of our agricultural specialization that has been successful in my riding is the production of apples. In the Meaford-Thornbury area there are more than 3,000 acres of apple orchards. It is an accepted fact in the trade that some of the choicest apples on the continent are produced in this area. These apples are kept at their best for many months after harvesting by three large up to date cold storage plants.

In the past these people have experienced considerable difficulty marketing their crop in competition with United States growers. Perhaps some of the competition was fair; nevertheless when production was good across the line it was apparent that dumping contributed to some of the grief experienced by our growers. Because of this budget, with its promise of strict enforcement of the anti-dumping law, and with the hope that the Department of Agriculture will allow only the better grade of apples entrance to Canada, our growers may look to a future with brighter prospects.

I hesitate to speak about matters which concern me in a personal way, but since I bring to this house some experience in the field of fur breeding, and since this industry has not had a voice heretofore to explain its position, perhaps I might be excused for bringing to your attention, Mr. Speaker, some of its highlights and problems. After all, many people in Canada are dependent on this industry for their livelihood. Shipments of fur to the United States and other countries have brought millions of dollars into our economy.

I am in the unique position of being the only member of this house representing the fur industry. Of course I fully realize that this industry does not play a major role in our economy. However, the fur trade influenced our early colonization and in those years was the wealth and the key industry of Canada. Through the years of early development wild fur was in plentiful supply, but during the following years of exploitation fur became scarce and this prompted the birth of a new, specialized branch of agriculture, namely that of fur ranching.

As its representative in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, I will do my utmost to keep this house informed of its problems. Our relationship with the United States, Canada's best market, has been all that could be desired. We have co-operated fully with the United States ranchers in a program of continuous advertising, and the United States market has always been open to us. We in our industry trust that this spirit of neighbourliness may always exist, and that our Department of Trade and Commerce will continue to foster close co-operation and good will with our friends to the south.

Perhaps at this time you will allow me to take a few minutes to tell you something of the phenomenal development which has taken place in ranch mink during recent years. As most hon. members know, mink can now be produced in many shades of grey, blue and brown, also extra dark brown which is almost black and, of course, white. These are all natural colours known as mutations, and are not dyed or bleached. At our ranch we produced the first mutations in Canada, and we were the original breeders of white mink anywhere in the world.

In mink, as in all other livestock, we have disease problems. The two biggest killers have been distemper and virous enteritis. However, the spread of rabies across the country is cause for some concern. The former disease we have been able to control satisfactorily with a live virus vaccine but the latter has been causing serious losses for several years. Virus enteritis originated on a ranch in the neighbourhood of the Fort William garbage dump, thereby linking the disease with rats.

The budget gave encouragement to the extermination of this pest, which is costing our country millions of dollars annually as a disease carrier and a culprit of destruction. Since the time of the original outbreak at Fort William thousands of mink have fallen victims of this disease. Much research has been done and many experiments have been carried on. The government laboratory at Hull did considerable work on the disease but gave up about three years ago. I pay tribute to the Ontario veterinary college for the contribution they are making in helping the mink producers protect their herds against this devastating disease. Within the next few weeks many mink will be vaccinated with a vaccine produced by this institution in the hope that some protection may be afforded those areas where the disease is known to exist.

This government supports an experimental fur farm at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, under the supervision of Dr. Gunn. I feel that this project has outlived its usefulness at this location. It served a purpose when Prince Edward Island was the centre of the silver fox industry, but since this phase of fur ranching is terribly neglected with very little hope of recovery I think it is time this institution was moved to Ontario, the heart of the mink industry in Canada. Today the mink industry is the fur industry. Our country is climatically ideal for fur production. The food used on fur farms is almost exclusively by-products which would be of little value otherwise.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge this government to encourage and foster this young industry, and to give careful consideration to the establishment of an up to date dominion experimental fur ranch in Ontario where it could work in close collaboration with the Hull laboratory and the Ontario veterinary college.

In Grey North, manufacturing is confined mostly to Owen Sound and Meaford, though Thornbury and Shallow Lake have some small plants with good growth possibilities. The two larger urban centres have several woodworking factories that produce flooring, windows and doors, furniture, radio and television cabinets and many other wood products. Owen Sound has two modern plants producing electrical products, also an up to date publishing company specializing in office stationery, bookbinding and other paper products. In Meaford we have a modern textile mill which at present is having a difficult time. However, all these manufacturers are pleased indeed with the assurance given in the budget that they will not have to compete with any dumped products, and that textiles will be given further consideration.

Owen Sound boasts of one of the most modern engineering works and steel, iron and bronze foundries in Canada. This plant is capable of turning out castings which are calculated by the ton. They are equipped to build large propellers, and during the war this shop produced propellers for all the ships built in Canada. They have produced a new metal which is especially adapted for the construction of propellers for icebreakers and other boats which have constant contact with ice. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that since this plant contributed so much in our time of need it should be given first consideration by the government in competition with propeller manufacturers outside this country.

My riding, located as it is on a fine body of water, has several boat manufacturers. From these establishments come some of the finest pleasure craft available anywhere. The largest of these plants is equipped to build steel barges, landing craft and boats up to 150 feet long, with a tonnage of up to 580 tons. Other steel products manufactured by this company are transformers, lighting poles, road rollers, marine gas and oil drilling equipment. With this line of products this firm will be in a position to make a notable contribution to the development of our north country.

There is an urgent desire by the people of my constituency for more industry. We must have more work if we are to absorb the growing labour force and supply a livelihood for the people who prefer to live in the ideal and pleasing surroundings of Grey North. I hope that decentralization will be given serious consideration, and that this government will use its influence in the encouragement of this plan. It is essential from the point of national security, and would work needed benefit in our smaller urban centres.

Industrial development corporations were instrumental in developing Toronto's golden mile of industry, but these corporations are reluctant to operate in smaller cities off the beaten path where the possibilities of profitable business for them are less favourable. However, Mr. Speaker, a group of public-spirited citizens in Owen Sound have banded themselves together and propose forming a company. Their purpose will be the raising of money through the sale of shares in this company. With the money they propose to render the same service to their city and community that is extended to the larger centres by the industrial development corporations; but to be successful considerable government help will be needed. Not forgetting decentralization, Mr. Speaker, I suggest this government make available, on long-term loan, an amount equal to that raised by any public organization for the purpose of industrial promotion.

The tourist industry has grown to be one of Canada's major industries. Grey North, with Georgian bay as its northern boundary, shares handsomely in the dividends from this industry. Accommodation is available on sandy beaches or on rugged shore lines, and for those wishing to establish their own summer homes excellent building lots can be secured at reasonable prices. In this budget the tax exemption extended to building materials should give stimulation to summer cottage building.

At Owen Sound first-class passenger boat service is scheduled to points in the upper lakes for the duration of the tourist season. At Meaford pleasure craft with licensed guides are at the service of visitors for water tours or fishing trips. Meaford is visited by yachts from many points in the United States as well as in Canada, and is reputed to be the finest harbour on the great lakes for small craft. This harbour is in urgent need of floating docks, and I feel certain the Department of Public Works will remedy this matter.

I would be remiss in my duty if I did not mention the beautiful scenery in Grey North. It is unsurpassed in any part of Canada. With the welfare of the tourist industry in mind, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we facilitate travel by United States citizens through our country. In this respect may I suggest the swift completion of a better means of travel between Canada and the United States at Sault Ste. Marie. This is a fine place to enter Canada, as a great area open to fishing and hunting is immediately available. Even more important to this point of entry was the completion of the famous Mackinac bridge which makes possible a flow of traffic 15 times greater than before. However, without a bridge at Sault Ste. Marie we have a serious bottleneck to the free flow of traffic into Canada.

I am informed that an act was passed by parliament on May 4, 1955, to incorporate the St. Mary's Bridge Company for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a toll bridge across the St. Mary's river at the Sault. The Canadian company was to enter into an agreement with the international bridge authority of Michigan to do this, and their agreement with that commission was approved by the governor in council on September 9, 1955.

No work was actually done on this venture. This first arrangement apparently broke down. Then the state of Michigan began negotiating with the province of Ontario, and this was the position as far as the federal government was concerned up to February 13, 1958. Subsequently, however, the two original companies have submitted a plan to the Department of Transport for a projected location of this structure. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that after the delay of three years since parliament recognized the necessity for this bridge it is now urgent that some influence be directed by the government toward the early completion of this venture.

Plans for improved ferry service from South Bay to Tobermory are now being considered. This is a very popular tourist route, and with the improved facilities I have mentioned many thousands more Americans would visit Canada and a corresponding increase in their spending would result.

I am very well aware of the fact that the British North America Act gave the federal government legal jurisdiction over coastal and inland fisheries. However, by agreement the province of Ontario has taken over the management of fisheries within its boundaries. This arrangement worked very well over the years when Georgian bay and lake Huron, the areas in which I am particularly interested, were well stocked with lake trout and whitefish, but now that these waters have become almost depleted of these species our fishermen have fallen on evil days. These regrettable circumstances could have been contributed to by unsuitable legislation for the conservation of these fish or laws that were not enforced. Fishermen were allowed to go on the spawning beds and take fish, which has proven to be a serious mistake. At that very time these fish were having a tremendous struggle for survival. Lamprey eels were taking a terrific toll. The areas were being heavily populated with smelts. This fish if fed raw carries an enzyme that destroys the vitamin B in any given diet, with the result of paralysis and eventually death. I have proven this in mink feeding. I feel that smelts have also contributed to the disappearance of trout and whitefish.

The federal government has entered into a convention with the United States government in an effort to control the lamprey eel and to rehabilitate whitefish and lake trout in the great lakes. In Georgian bay, which is completely Canadian water, I suggest to the government that immediate stimulation be given a program of conservation and rehabilitation in co-operation with the provincial government. This body of water, which in the past produced millions of dollars of revenue through food and as a mecca for tourist fishermen, is now reduced to a good place for boating.

For example, a few seasons ago in the harbour at Meaford 35 fishing craft for the purpose of trolling for lake trout were kept completely occupied for several months each season. Each boat accommodated four passengers and a guide. I regret to inform you, Mr. Speaker, that not one boat now leaves Meaford harbour to troll for lake trout. The chamber of commerce of Meaford estimates that the loss to the town is in excess of $250,000 annually. The people who are suffering more directly are the commercial fishermen who have thousands of dollars invested in tugs, nets, warehouses and other equipment. They are scattered up and down the shores of this largest fresh water bay on the continent.

In Grey county we are sharing in three conservation authorities. These are on the Saugeen, Sauble and Beaver rivers. The last mentioned is completely within the boundaries of Grey county. In the development of these authorities, and not forgetting the fact that we have large tracts of land not suitable for agriculture, an excellent opportunity is presented for the establishing of camp grounds and a national park. I realize that the provincial government is required to take the initiative in these projects before federal assistance can be expected. However, I want to commend this government for the keen interest and consideration they have extended with regard to this particular development. We in our riding plan to take advantage of this opportunity.

Considering our whole economy, I am satisfied that the finance minister has gone all out to correct the immediate problems on which the budget could work any remedy. At this time I want to repeat the wise words of the finance minister when he said, as found at page 1250 of Hansard of June 17:

> Only by keeping our costs of production in line with those of our competitors can we hope to achieve expanding employment and progressive improvement in our standard of living.

The economic growth and recovery we desire to bring about must take the form, as pointed out by the Prime Minister not of higher costs and prices but more production and more jobs.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, there was naturally a somewhat marked disparity between the speech that introduced the budget and the speech the Minister of Finance made yesterday. We were back again yesterday to those lovely phrases such as "crocodile tears", "crystal clear", and "welter of contradictions", which I thought the minister had perhaps departed from forever with the relative dignity and, may I say, underplayed presentation given the budget. In his speech yesterday the minister proceeded to take everybody to task, and I suppose he should certainly be allowed that delight because of the fact that he has sat here and listened to so much.

He started off by saying that much of the criticism had been contradictory and none of it had been very constructive. Of course the charge that criticism is not constructive is really a red herring. It is not a logical answer. I think the fact that some of the criticism is contradictory is only to be expected when there are so many different interests in this country. For example, there are those who favour higher tariffs and those who favour lower tariffs.

But it seems to me that the contradictions are paralleled by the budget itself. I know I have felt, so far as some of the criticism the Liberal party has made of the government since assuming office is concerned, that much of it has been sour grapes. For example, with respect to dominion-provincial relations the Liberals managed to keep Quebec in a sort of post-Regina, scaffold trauma for many years, and it was certainly about time and most desirable that that hold be broken. I welcome the fact that the Bourbonnais and the Hardy Smalls, the Cathers and the Pigeons are lying down in the same political tent, and I think the Liberal party may be making too much of the disparities. Perhaps we will get something from this government in time. We may even see the Conservative party push some of the Quebec politicians into the twentieth century.

In that regard I think the Tremblay report makes very interesting reading. This is the report on constitutional problems published several years ago. It stresses constitutional and fiscal problems, and there are two paragraphs here that I think should be very much in the mind of the Minister of Finance if indeed they represent the point of view of Quebec as the commission suggests and if, to carry it a step further, these ideas represent the opinions of the members from Quebec who now form such a large part of the party in power. On page 22 of the summary of the report there is the following:

> Since indirect taxes, within the meaning of constitutional jurisprudence, are assigned to the federal government by the constitution, any agreement that may be made would only affect direct taxes. With the federal government itself having access to this category of taxes, any settlement between the governments assumes there would be definition and acceptance of a rule of sharing which would suppress the ambiguities from which the constitutional practices of the past thirty years have resulted—

May I interpose here that of course the charge is that most of these ambiguities developed under the previous administration. I would imagine that the people who presented this report would see the Conservative government as a St. George killing these dragons of ambiguity. To continue:

> We have already formulated this rule of sharing and it is deducible from the Constitution's general aims and purposes. Inasmuch as taxes have a qualitative relationship with the functions of collective life, (such relationship becoming more apparent as taxation becomes more onerous), they should be assigned, in a federative state, to the two orders of government according to the functions respectively vested in them. Thus, taxes on incomes affecting individuals and institutions should be reserved to the provinces, upon which devolves jurisdiction in cultural and social matters. On the other hand, since the federal government, for its part, is vested with the wider economic responsibilities, it should have sole access to taxes on goods and on the circulation of goods.

I want again to comment and say that if this is a good statement of the Quebec position or of the provincial position, and the minister spoke so strongly yesterday to stress the fact that his is not a centralizing government but that it is a government that has a respect for the provinces, I fail to see that within this present budget much consideration has been given to this matter and the stand of Quebec in relation to fiscal policies. I hope that in the future, as these two wings of Progressive Conservatives merge the Quebec viewpoint as expressed by the Tremblay report and the viewpoint of the people from what I might call outer Canada, the government will define more clearly just what it is going to do about the centralist position and whether it is going to be a centralist government or whether it is going to take the lead in financial matters to give the provinces back what the Quebec government in this report claimed was its right. In expressing my own opinion I might add that I hope the government does not make a retrograde step. I hope it leads these people from Quebec up to the view where they realize that the centralist position is the true position of this greater Canadianism that is now being broadcast and advanced so ably by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) of this country.

The minister made the point that no one had mentioned the magazine tax. I intended to mention the magazine tax. I felt all along that it was discriminatory; but I have never seen two better examples where I should like to see discrimination practised than in relation to Time magazine and Readers Digest. It has always seemed to me that Time magazine—and this applies in the United States as well as Canada—is a most retrograde form of journalism. You have opinionated conclusions presented in the form of what appears to be a news report. You have a continuous indoctrination. I wondered at the time when the tax was cancelled, at the fact that Time magazine in its indoctrination in its Canadian section has taken such a generally favourable view of the new government. But that probably is an unworthy suspicion.

[Mr. Fisher.]

With regard to gold, the minister felt that he had not received nearly enough recognition for the step he had taken there. I am pleased to recognize that step. What bothers me about this increase in the gold subsidy is this old question of private enterprise and free enterprise of which we are told consistently in this house. We just had it the other night, I believe, from the hon. member who defeated the former deputy leader of the C.C.F., stressing that his party is a party of free enterprise and private enterprise. It has always seemed to me to be most peculiar that this government would even consider extending this subsidy instead of wiping it out. Surely if you believe in free enterprise and private enterprise, and if this is the heart of your conviction, you do not want to subsidize and keep going something that cannot compete in the markets of the world.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member whether he does not realize that it is government that sets the price of gold?

Mr. Fisher: I am quite aware that government sets the price of gold but it is not the Canadian government. With regard to that matter, I am just suggesting that there is a certain inconsistency here in the private enterprise, free enterprise myth that goes along with the Conservative party. I am, as well aware, as the minister is, that you are not a private enterprise, free enterprise party down the line. You are probably as pink as we are.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Heaven forbid!

Mr. Fisher: I am very pleased to see this subsidy. I think it is great stuff. I just hope that these people who are giving us this private enterprise, free enterprise line would stop and realize that it is not free enterprise or private enterprise; it is a government subsidy keeping going an industry—the gold mining industry—that is so proud of flexing its free enterprise muscles. I have every sympathy with communities such as Timmins and places like that which come down to Ottawa seeking support and for the social reasons that led the government to extend this subsidy. I think they are admirable and I compliment the Minister of Finance on it. But I hope that some time, perhaps in the Conservative caucus, he might read a little lesson on the weakness of free enterprise and private enterprise in certain sectors of our economy and so explain to them that government action is not completely black and awful as many of the backbenchers especially seem to be putting forward here in this house.

I think one comment which the minister made is a very sound one. I think perhaps even members of my group and certain of the Liberals have been unfair. He stressed that his government entered this house immediately following an election and that at that election they obtained a tremendous vote of confidence. I think that is a very sound argument. But I know the minister during his long stay in the opposition never allowed that matter to get in his way. I have checked the Hansard debates immediately after the 1949 election when the Liberal party was swept into power with such a great majority and I fail to find that he put halters on his tongue or took a very reticent part. He was extremely aggressive right after the election. I think that today we all acknowledge that certainly at this time his government has the confidence of the people.

I should also like to suggest to him—in contrast to what I have heard previous Conservative members say—that this budget has not gained a great deal of popularity in the country. It is not the most popular budget that has ever been brought down. There has been considerable criticism of it. Even such journals—righteous supporters of the government—as the Montreal Gazette have not been particularly kind to this budget or to the minister. I think that on this particular point he will have to recognize that we are just, in our poor and humble way, trying to carry out the duties of the opposition. If some of us are even taking his former actions in the opposition as a model, I hope that is not too hard on our dignity. I hope that he realizes that under it all we recognize that for a few moments and perhaps for another few months his party has the confidence of the country.

One of the points the minister stressed yesterday was that no one had come forward with any ideas to combat inflation; that here he had presented a budget, that inflation was one of the great problems of the country at the present time, and especially the Liberals had been retrograde in not coming forward with suggestions to stop this. There is a book that I have been reading—it was recently published—that has a number of suggestions on how to combat inflation. I should like to recommend it to the members of the house. It is a recent publication by a United States professor who had Canadian roots, namely J. Galbraith; it is called "The Affluent Society". There are a number of points from a commentary by another leading United States economist, Stuart Chase, on this book, that I think bear on this problem of inflation. This review from the Reporter magazine states:

> Another important change has occurred in the conventional wisdom since Ricardo's time,—

For those who do not know who Ricardo was, may I say that he was an early 19th century economist who predicted the continuance of poverty and insecurity in the world.

> —primarily as a consequence of the great depression. The goal of full employment and high wages is now supported by practically everybody in America.

And I would say in Canada.

> How else indeed can the affluent society absorb its own production? This goal entails, however, a painful side effect in the wage-price spiral and more inflation. "Where inflation is concerned," Galbraith notes, "nearly everyone finds it convenient to confine himself to conversation."

It seems to me that the minister and the Prime Minister are wonderful at confining themselves to exhortative conversation, especially to labour groups with respect to combatting inflation. The article goes on:

> "All branches of the conventional wisdom are equally agreed on the undesirability of any remedies that are effective." Effective means of combating inflation conflict with the ideal of production for the sake of full employment, and a bigger gross national product.
> There is a theory that advancing the discount rate—

And this comes into the tight money policy idea as reflected in Canada—

> —by the federal reserve will check inflation, but recent monetary history, alas, shows this to be an illusion. Such changes, furthermore, can be dangerous by checking business investment and encouraging unemployment, while administered prices soar majestically upward. The same attitudes that lead us to advocate full employment and the use of industrial plant at capacity "deny us the measures to prevent inflation." This is a shattering conclusion, but I am afraid it is true.

This is the comment of an economist upon one of the most important books on economics which has been published for some time. There is the question of inflation and the question of production, and the whole matter of how far we should push our gross national production. Should production, production, production be the only goal? One would almost gather that the minister thinks so, although I am sure that is not so. I know he is a man of religious conviction and I think he recognizes that there are many more important things in life than just pushing up our gross national product. I see, however, almost no recognition of this fact or of these other parts of life which are so important in this budget message which completely stresses the short range economic problems with which we find ourselves faced at the present time. Certainly in this budget there is no long range vision to pull us out of this inflationary spiral.

I think one of the brightest remarks made by Keynes, the economist, was that one of the difficulties in talking about short runs and long runs in economics is that in the long run we will all be dead. This is definitely a short run budget and there is no long range hope in this budget that we are going to snap out of this trend toward more and more inflation. The only solution the minister seems to have is the exhortatory one of admonition to the opposition.

Before leaving this subject I would like to refer to some recommendations made by Galbraith in order to get ourselves out of this particular rat trap into which our race to increase the gross national product has got us. I especially have in mind the first one, which I believe is well worth consideration by this government. I know it is an extraordinary measure, but I believe it is one which would do a great deal to snap us out of this condition and I suggest that the government particularly consider it if this winter turns out to be as bleak as some people predict.

Galbraith recommends firstly a flexible system of unemployment compensation, financed outside of actuarial standards by the federal government, on top of what provinces may do. As unemployment increases, scales of compensation go up until they are just under weekly earnings. As unemployment declines, scales go down. Thus, when jobs are plentiful the system will provide little incentive for malingering; when jobs are scarce no useful distinction can be made between those who are voluntarily idle and those unable to find work. A full head of consumer demand is meanwhile maintained and "the effect...is to make tolerable the unemployment which is associated with price stability." Galbraith says we cannot hope to check inflation without having some unemployment from time to time and that this is a fact which must be faced.

Galbraith goes on to make many other suggestions which I think would be equally applicable and one of them has always been a bane of the life of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). This is that some form of limited price and wage controls should be instituted and a further step should be the automatic diversion of a share of the increasing income taxes to public authorities for public purposes.

I recommend that this analysis of what I would say is the North American economy and the difficulties in relation thereto should be considered together with some of the solutions suggested and that this will afford much assistance not only to members of parliament but to the Minister of Finance.

I would now like to refer to one point having to do with an omission in the budget, which I had hoped to see rectified. This matter has been taken up with the minister and I know he has his side of the story to tell. It has to do with an amendment which was presented during the last parliament to the Income Tax Act providing as follows:

> A person employed as a construction worker at a construction site from which he cannot reasonably be expected to return daily to his ordinary place of residence where he maintains a home in which he lives with his wife or other dependant shall not be required to include in income the value of free board and lodging furnished during the period of necessary absence or free transportation furnished to or from the construction site, or a reasonable allowance paid to him to cover expenses of such board and lodging or transportation.

During the last parliament the former member for Comox-Alberni and myself, together with the man who is now the leader of the Quebec Liberal party, pressed for this allowance to be extended to the loggers and bush workers in our country whose situation closely parallels that of the construction workers. A group of lumber workers in my area presented a brief to the Minister of Finance, and I must compliment the minister on the audience he gave us but the difficulty appears to hinge around this point: The construction workers who benefit from this particular amendment which was introduced comprise a very, very limited group. This legislation does absolutely nothing for the hourly wage earner; it applies only to people on salary and applies to the sort of executive or person on the managerial level. Very rarely does it help the bulk of the people working on a job. The fact remains that a bush worker or a logger in order to earn his income in most cases has to go away from his home and in effect maintain two domiciles or at least, if he is married, maintain a home in a town or village and also support himself on the job. He is unable to take advantage of this clause and even if the clause were to be extended to take care of loggers and bush workers it would not be of any assistance for the simple reason that under the contracts which apply in most cases in Canada between the unions and the employers in the woods industry there is no such thing as free board and lodging. The men pay for their board and lodging and the only way that any changes could be made which would prove effective for these men would be for the minister to bring in an amendment which would allow men living under these conditions, when they are maintaining a domicile in a city, to deduct what they pay for their board and lodging as an expense on their income tax returns.

Mr. Bigg: Would the hon. member permit a question? I was wondering if he could explain why the lumber industry, which was taken over by the socialists in Saskatchewan, closed down after large monetary losses, as did some four other industries including the fisheries, tanneries and shoe-making industries.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the question is completely irrelevant. I am not discussing Saskatchewan or provincial matters at all. I think the question brought up by the hon. member may be of interest to him and of interest to me, but it has nothing to do with changes in the Income Tax Act, and if the hon. member is just trying to cast a reflection on my interest in the lumber industry I would be a fool not to be interested because we have 12,000 lumber workers in our constituency.

Mr. Bigg: I do not require clarification of my education as to the efficacy of your socialistic programs.

Mr. Fisher: The efficacy of socialistic programs has been proved in many parts, and I suggest the hon. member should look at the gold mining industry, and what is being done for that industry. Now that is a socialist measure. Does he approve of that?

Mr. Bigg: There were no gold mines in that province, but we had an experiment in socialism which was a complete failure.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, this dreadful failure in Saskatchewan always bothers me. I know the hon. member for Bow River brought it up, probably because he is a fugitive from there, an emigrant who had to go to vigorous Alberta and carve out a career for himself there.

Mr. Bigg: Ten boards closed down. That proved it was a socialist failure.

Mr. Fisher: I would just like to remind hon. members that the government has been re-elected a good many times.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe there are too many speakers at the present time.

Mr. Fisher: Well, I did not want to go into this free enterprise business. Anyway, the party across the way is not really a party of free enterprise. After all, these deficiency payments for agriculture, these subventions for coal, that is not free enterprise.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): How would you describe the party opposite?

Mr. Fisher: Pink, but not a really deep pink. I think there has been too much talk about blue over there.

An hon. Member: We are far from red.

Mr. Fisher: I would say that the minister has a nice healthy colour. But I should like to get back to the point I was making when I was so pleasantly interrupted.

The amendment that will enable the bushworkers to claim what I think is their due in the light of what the construction workers now have will be a very difficult one to administer; it is going to create problems for the income tax section which tries to administer it. But I would remind the minister that last year he promised he would give us fair and just treatment wherever taxes were concerned. That principle, he said, would be his sole guide in the application of taxation. I should like to suggest to him that there is an inequity at the present time in connection with this, and I wish he would keep it in mind and try to straighten it out. If he could do so it would mean much for the bushworkers in Canada who, I think, need this help.

One of the points in the budget was the increase in tax allowance to corporations, which the hon. minister hopes will lead these corporations into giving more to the universities. I notice we did not hear anything more in this budget with regard to the $25 million promise which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) seems to have made out west during the election campaign. A study of charitable donations made so far by companies would lead one to think that little gain will result from this increase from 5 per cent to 10 per cent. The total profits of corporations in 1955 amounted to $2,769.9 million; the total of charitable donations amounted to $26.3 million, representing a percentage relationship between charitable donations and profits of .9 per cent. How much of this charitable donation went to education we cannot be sure, but there are some figures which we can gather from previous years. For some years the national conference of Canadian universities has been attempting to gain from the federal government certain changes in the tax laws relating to deductions for charitable purposes in order to increase grants or gifts from private and corporate sources. The fact is that the corporations have not taken advantage even of the present tax situation. One wonders what they are going to do now that there is an additional 5 per cent. By law, corporations were permitted to deduct 5 per cent of their taxable income in respect of charitable donations. In 1956 they had deducted three-quarters of 1 per cent; in 1953 about $26.3 million or about 1 per cent of their net taxable income. In that year 5 per cent would have amounted to about $130 million. It is obvious from these figures that the corporations have not taken advantage of the 5 per cent allowance they previously had. I ask the minister, therefore, what leads him to believe that they are going to take advantage of this additional 5 per cent. There is no need for me to make any comment on the importance of this matter, because the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he was head of the University of Toronto, said:

> We want a great deal of money. Without wishing to sound ungrateful, I have sometimes thought, when a prospective donor makes an offer, that the industrial conscience in some instances can satisfy itself by putting a very small sum on the collection plate. There are shining exceptions...but on the whole Canadian corporations have not as yet taken seriously the needs of higher education.

And here is the key to the minister's comment:

> They have not even taken advantage of the 5 per cent deduction from their taxable income permitted under the tax laws of Canada.

The fact is that this increase is really going to do very little, if anything for the universities. I think the hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken), who is a member of the government, stressed this point. It seems to me that this particular change will do very little to solve the university crisis which we are supposed to have had and which most of us believe we still have. I know one of the difficulties in connection with the corporate contribution to education is that many of our corporations are not Canadian, but when you get a branch plant economy you cannot expect United States companies to be as concerned with Canadian needs, especially university needs, as Canadian companies. I think the government has got to go much further with regard to getting corporation money to the universities than it has done by taking this particular step.

One of the other factors which is not considered at all by this increase is the fact that corporations in Canada are concentrated in certain sectors of the country. I do not know what this increase is going to do for the maritime universities or for some of the western universities where you have got much less in terms of a corporate tax structure to support you and it just seems to me that the change will mean, if anything more and more for those who already have more.

I am glad to see that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) is in the house, because one of the final points I wish to touch on concerns his department as much as anything else. Several times I have brought up the question of the Premium Iron Ore Company, and the fact that this company is before the courts in the United States, the argument being that it is not legitimately a Canadian corporation and that it should therefore be taxed under United States tax law. This is a matter of great interest to the people in our particular area because Premium Iron Ore is tied in with our Steep Rock iron mine. I have sent some of the statements which have been made in this house by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and by the Minister of National Revenue to the gentleman who is at the head of Premium Iron Ore, Mr. Cyrus Eaton, and he has sent me the following answer in connection with the matter.

The point I want to make clear is that the Premium Iron Ore Company will have no redress if the case goes to the Supreme Court and is won by the United States tax authorities. Furthermore, it will place in a ridiculous position our double taxation treaty with the United States. In his letter, Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton said:

> If the American courts should decide the case against Premium, there would be no redress.

There would be no way by which Premium could get back the money it has already paid to the Canadian government in terms of taxes. I continue:

> Steep Rock and Premium sell iron ore in the United States so that it would be possible for the American tax authorities to attach the payments to Steep Rock and Premium customers.
> If the decision should go against Premium . . . because in the United States the ruling of the Supreme Court is binding on the Congress, the President and all departments . . . there would be no redress for other Canadian companies against the allegation that they were carrying on business in the United States. A principle would have been established which would be law in this country and no governmental authority here or in Canada could set aside the principle of the court.

If this is the case, I wonder why the Canadian government is not strongly protesting in an effort to keep that case from going to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Nowlan: How would you do it? Do you suggest we fire on the United States? What do you want us to do?

Mr. Fisher: No, we cannot declare war with the United States but I do suggest it should be taken up at the highest level, perhaps next week when we expect a distinguished visitor from that country.

Mr. Nowlan: Does the hon. member not realize that both the preceding government and the present government sent strongly worded protests to the state department and replies have been received from the United States government? What more can be done? My hon. friend's premise of law is entirely fallacious but I shall deal with that later on. At the moment I would like him to tell me what further can be done. In situations of this kind between two friendly countries the governments concerned can only express their opinions.

Mr. Habel: Send the minister down; he is a strapping, tall fellow.

Mr. Fisher: Someone has suggested that the minister should be sent to Washington to strike fear into the heart of the government. This is perhaps not an unwise idea if we remember the picture the minister presented two days ago as he stood with his fists flailing and his gigantic Bulk vibrating in indignation at the dirty, nasty criticisms from the opposition benches.

I suggest that public declarations on the part of such people as the Prime Minister have been receiving a great deal of publicity and I believe this would be stronger in a case of this kind than aide memoires that mysteriously disappear and find their way into the hands of United States senators. This is an issue on which some one at the top level of authority in this country should speak forthrightly when we have top officials from the United States here.

I hoped to have sufficient time to proceed to a discussion of the 15 per cent trade diversion proposal. I would only suggest to hon. members who are interested in a British economist's view of the Canadian proposal and Mr. Thorneycroft's counter proposal that there is a new book recently published which is called "British Economic Policy Since the War", a Penguin publication, by Mr. Arthur Shonfield. I hope hon. members will examine it because it exposes some of the fallacies of the 15 per cent offer. One conclusion I wanted to express which I gained from glancing at this book was that its author indicates that the former leader of the Conservative party, the Right Hon. George Drew, was not badly mistaken in analysing Canadian trade problems when he emphasized that Canada's future trade development would to a large extent have to lie with South America and the orient.

As this economist presents the case, the 15 per cent trade diversion or a free trade relationship between Great Britain and Canada would almost certainly lead England into dollar difficulties. If Canada were to carry through the 15 per cent diversion policy effectively she would have to come to some sort of agreement with the United Kingdom that would prevent Canada from being used as a mere entree for United States goods seeking to enter the British market through the preference that was being given to Canadian goods. This book and particularly the comments it contains concerning the proposal for the diversion of 15 per cent of Canadian trade from the United States to Great Britain is important reading, in my view, for almost any one who expects to rise in the House of Commons and speak on the subject.

My concluding words with regard to the budget are these. It is a short range, short run budget. There is no vision in it compatible with the dynamic program of Canadian development to which we are looking forward. Indeed, I would almost judge that there may have been some conflict within the cabinet in relation to the budget. The magnificent vistas that were opened up to us by the Prime Minister and which were echoed by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) led many people in this country to believe that we were going to witness a tremendous change in federal government policy. No change has occurred and there has been a certain letdown in relation to the budget. The budget does not reflect in a financial or economic sense the tremendous vision of the future of Canada in which the Prime Minister invited us to share.

(Translation):

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I was hesitant about taking part in the budget debate—

Mr. Rouleau: And well you might!

Mr. Tremblay: The solemn character of this assembly and the distinction of its members had filled me with understandable diffidence and, I daresay, an amount of fear which I found rather difficult to overcome. On the other hand, I realized that the proper thing to do at first was to listen to seasoned parliamentarians, follow their example and profit by their remarks.

However, I had felt for some time that the mandate given me by the electors of Roberval required that I should not remain a silent listener to discussions in which the interests of my fellow citizens are at stake. In addition, I am convinced that the first duty of a member is to express his opinion at the proper time, on national problems and on the solutions which are offered. I do not believe that there is a better opportunity to do this than the budget debate, since the policy of the government is, as it were, on trial.

I therefore join the discussion, but with all the caution required by my youth and my inexperience.

This being my maiden speech in this house, allow me, Mr. Speaker, to offer you my congratulations. You know that you already enjoy my confidence. It would ill become me to wound your modesty by repeating what so many members have said about your integrity, your wisdom and your perfect gentlemanliness. Rather do I congratulate those who praise those qualities: they were right, and were only telling the truth.

Nor did they fail to draw the attention of the house to the qualities of the Deputy Speaker (Mr. Sevigny). I cannot do better than associate myself with those tributes. Let me add, about the chairman of committees (Mr. Rae), that I congratulate those responsible for such a wise choice.

Mr. Speaker, I said a moment ago that the budget gives us an opportunity to put government policy on trial. The speeches we have heard so far are the best evidence of this. I cannot help saying that they reminded me of some trials in which the evidence was not particularly conclusive. I refer especially to speeches of Liberal back-benchers.

From the hue and cry raised by members of the opposition, one would think that the Canadian political situation is at its worst and that all that can be done now is to withdraw to some secluded spot to meditate while awaiting the final catastrophe.

I will not claim that everything is perfect and that the budget introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) gratifies every last wish of the Canadian taxpayer. Besides, such was not the intention of the minister who, drawing upon all his knowledge of economics and his superior talents, brought down a realistic budget which takes into consideration the Canadian economic situation. I believe he succeeded in meeting the requirements of the Canadian economy and the legitimate wishes of the taxpayers, not in the sense that tax reductions are extravagant but in the sense that, having regard for the present situation, the taxpayers will enjoy substantial reductions in certain fields without being burdened by other charges in other fields.

I suppose our friends opposite feel the great urge to ask where the tax cuts are. The answer to that one is easy. The Conservative government has granted, in the course of the past four or five months, substantial tax reductions totalling more than $200 million. Added to that, there will be the savings made by taxpayers thanks to the new measures contemplated in the budget. There is no justification therefore in crying hardship and saying that the government did not make good its promises to the electorate. If the government has yet to make good on some of them, it is in the process of doing so, and the experience of administration that our friends opposite have gained should have made them realize that sometimes the implementation of some measures takes time.

At any rate, I believe that, if the budget is somewhat disappointing to anyone it is because the government has anticipated on the program it intends to achieve in the course of the next fiscal year. In fact, even before making his budget speech on June 17 last, the Minister of Finance had provided some tax relief. We should therefore feel grateful to him for that. Much has been said about the deficit and, in this regard, government opponents did not fail to use electoral and demagogical tactics by reviving an obsolete antitoryism. All that musty gammon and spinach, all that prattle is so phony that it is not worth talking about. We only have to put them to the account of some hon. members who seem to believe that the government puts their seat at stake, or attacks their prestige when it proposes to abolish the tax on rodent poison.

On the contrary, I believe that the deficit budget presented by the Minister of Finance, and so well defended by him yesterday when he replied to the official objections of the opposition, is a realistic budget. The minister must be given credit, great credit, for not having concealed the truth. Of course, it is not particularly pleasant for the Minister of Finance to reveal certain things and to demand certain sacrifices. But, he is duty bound not to abuse the confidence of Canadians. Who else is in a better position to inform Canadians about the economic situation? As soon as the situation is clearly defined, if the citizens have confidence in those who preside over the destinies of the nation, they leave it up to these people to take care of the nation's financial problems. I am fully convinced, in any case, that all Canadians have already accepted the provisions of this budget. On the whole, it is quite satisfactory: if we consider the tax reductions of the last few months and the improvements in social security measures, this budget efficiently lightens the taxpayers burden. On the other hand, it attempts to control an unstable economic situation which could touch off a more serious regression. I would remind those who criticize the budget on the basis of the deficit of those very pertinent remarks made by a distinguished economist, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Morissette) who said, as recorded on page 1711 of Hansard of June 27:

I was surprised to find that our Liberal colleagues base all their disparagement of the budget on the fact that this year the government will have a deficit of about $650 million, when the very A B C of economics say that, in periods of recession, government expenditures should be maintained at a very high level.

Surely, the hon. member whose words I have just quoted will not be blamed for taking heed in this wise of principles expounded by someone who is still the economic adviser of the opposition.

All this, Mr. Speaker, leads to the conclusion that the budget introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance is not a camouflaged budget, a travesty of the present economic situation, as was the case in the first few months of 1957. This budget sets out the economic facts; it recommends appropriate measures; it refers to problems of importance and suggests efficient solutions; it shows certain trends and admits some concern. The hon. Minister of Finance thus institutes a kind of dialogue with the people of Canada, telling them just what the economic situation of the country is, and avoiding at the same time to induce that depression psychosis which the experts from the opposition are striving to create. They are very badly inspired to do so, because they contradict themselves, they who unanimously foretold for Canada an unprecendented economic development, at the time of the June 1957 election, when they had received from their own economic experts all the evidence showing that Canada was then drifting seriously towards recession. Those gentlemen of the Liberal party have no more right to castigate the government for not reducing taxes than they themselves had done. When will they start telling us about the fabulous tax cuts introduced under a Liberal regime? When will they come out with a table of tax reductions instituted under their wise administration?

An hon. Member: Let the hon. member for Hull listen to that!

Mr. Tremblay: Their newly-formed awareness of the people's will is all to their credit, but it does not fool anyone. They have too richly deserved the reputation of stranglers of the people, for us to challenge such reputation. In this respect, I found touching—

An hon. Member: Touché!

Mr. Tremblay: —the remarks made by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard)—I see that he is now occupying his seat—who said the other night, as found on page 7 of the appendix to Hansard of June 26:

> There is no word there of any reduction in tax, only ominous silence with regard to family allowances, and complete silence too with regard to federal-provincial fiscal relations.

Where does such solicitude come from? I do not think that he learned it from his present leader (Mr. Pearson). The hon. member for Lapointe has probably not forgotten the statements made in 1953 and 1957 by the then secretary of state for external affairs of Canada. Here is a report of La Presse of July 23, 1953:

> The minister for external affairs, the Hon. Mr. Pearson, said last night that the 16-point program of the Progressive Conservative party includes nothing else but charges and promises, and constitutes a program which would be highly detrimental to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): There was no unemployment at the time.

Mr. Tremblay:

> Speaking before some 150 people, Mr. Pearson branded as "utterly ridiculous" the promise of Mr. Drew to reduce taxes by $500 million per year if he were elected. We have nothing against anybody suggesting to reduce taxes by such an amount, but we denounce Mr. Drew's contention that he can reduce taxes by $500 million without reducing the social services, or materially increasing the national debt.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): There was no unemployment in 1953.

Mr. Tremblay: From the same paper, on May 27, 1957, I read the following statement:

> Instead of making promises, the Conservatives had better tell Canadians—

And there was unemployment at that time, in spite of what the hon. member for Lapointe might say.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): If there was, you did not discover it.

Mr. Tremblay:

> —how they are going to reduce taxes and government expenditures, Hon. Mr. Pearson, Secretary of State for External Affairs, stated on Saturday night. He added that 40 per cent of government expenditures are earmarked for national defence: "It would be very unwise to neglect our insurance policy against war".

This was in the heyday of the Liberal party—

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): No unemployment.

Mr. Tremblay: —at the height of its power, but very close however to the Tarpeian rock. However, the only thing that mattered then was to fight the Conservative party and prevent the people from believing in the Conservative party. One had to use all the necessary force of persuasion. The Liberal policy was well defined; it did not vary in that field from one member of the party to another. In 1957, they were opposed to tax reductions at a time of unemployment. Reserves had to be accumulated and surpluses piled up, there being a fad, at the time, about surplus budgets. The events of June 10, 1957 forced our friends to change their stand. Immediately, they came out in favour of tax reductions. They quoted figures as impressive as $400 million a year. For once, they were forced to pass from facts to promises; the trouble is that the electors did not believe in them. The Liberals had done so many things, they had made so many mistakes that the people chose to give their confidence to a group of men who, during the elections, had promised to reduce taxes and who, as soon as they were in power, did in fact reduce them.

I have no objection to the hon. member for Lapointe's request for tax cuts. I quite approve of it. In fact I ask for tax cuts myself most strongly on behalf of the taxpayers of my constituency. However, I do so with peace of mind because the leader of my party never had to turn his coat on this point. He pursues his objective of constantly improving the financial situation of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Deschatelets: Apparently, you were not present at the Conservative convention.

Mr. Tremblay: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Deschatelets: I am asking you if you were at the Conservative convention.

Mr. Tremblay: Since my hon. friend is a man of high culture, I advise him to read "En attendant Godot."

The same hon. member had another very touching remark about exemptions. I now quote from page 7 of the translation annexed to Hansard of June 26:

> The budget offered an opportunity to increase the basic exemptions which would have been a form of tax reduction.

I suppose the former minister of finance, Hon. Mr. Harris, did not seek the advice of the future member for Lapointe, on April 6 1956, when, to a labour leader asking for exemptions of $3,000 for married men and widowers and $2,000 for unmarried people, he replied in the following terms:

> If exemptions were raised to $2,000 for single persons and to $3,000 for married people, the amount of income tax collected would be reduced, in our estimation, by more than $500 million, not taking into account an important reduction of income from the old-age security tax. Now then, this amount of revenue would be sufficient to pay the operating cost of the Departments of Agriculture, External Affairs, Justice, Labour, Mines and Technical Surveys, Public Works and the Post Office together, or to pay for family allowances, old age assistance, health subsidies, pensions to the blind and several other services of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

And the former minister of finance went on to say:

> If revenue from income tax was reduced by $500 million or more, substantial reductions in our expenditures in the field of social welfare or of defence, or considerable increase of other taxes, would be necessary. I do not believe that the majority of Canadians would approve either one of those solutions.

Mr. Speaker, to achieve so miraculous a conversion, our friends must have earnestly ruminated on the meaning of their defeat. They must have mustered many spirits from the great beyond to find themselves suddenly in such a state of grace!

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): What did the present Minister of Finance have to say about tax reductions in 1953?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): May I ask a question of the hon. member?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to let his colleague from Roberval go on with his speech without interrupting him, unless the hon. member for Roberval allows—

Mr. Tremblay: I am quite willing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —him to ask a question.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Roberval has just spoken about the statement made by the former minister of finance, Mr. Harris. I would ask him if he would comment now on the observations made in 1957 by the present Minister of Finance about tax exemptions, to the effect that the basic exemption should be raised from $1,000 to $1,500 for single persons and $2,000 to $3,000 for married people.

Mr. Tremblay: As my time is rapidly running out, I cannot do so. The hon. member for Lapointe is just about to go on another trip. To help him in his meditations I advise him to re-read "Le voyage de M. Perrichon".

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Something you would like to do yourself.

Mr. Tremblay: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, to have achieved such a miraculous conversion, our friends must have earnestly pondered on the meaning of their defeat. They must have mustered many a ghost to find themselves all of a sudden in such a state of grace!

They are now acting the busybodies, each trying to outdo the other. All of a sudden, they have discovered the ills which afflict our country. I find it strange that the same man who, during his electoral campaign, confessed on television that the Liberals had fallen asleep at the helm, that they had lost contact with the people, must today so bitterly criticize a government which has just achieved absolute power and which, after a few months of administration, managed to reduce the fiscal burden by $204 million, to increase payments on pensions of all kinds, and to promote a public works program of some $1,185,000,000. I feel that it is a promising beginning and that it is wrong to complain, especially when the Liberals must not have a very clear conscience in this regard. The judgment of the people, so categorically expressed on March 31 last,—judgment against which appeal is now being strenuously made, —should rankle as a remorse in their hearts. And I am very much inclined to believe that it is to get relief from some fixed idea which obsesses them that they have undertaken to systematically demolish the government's policy.

I have no intention whatever of challenging their right to criticize. That is the role and duty of the opposition. It thus fulfills a sound regulating function. It helps prevent some dangers and avoid temptations that stand in the way of regimes that are too powerful. But the opposition should refrain from obstruction. For that, it must not be prejudiced and, above all, must avoid any electoral preoccupations. It is precisely that serious mistake which the present Liberal opposition cannot avoid. It has too much to do trying to regain, by all means possible, the confidence of the people to remain within the limits of objectivity. It goes further than that, and the remarks made here by some Liberal members fall little short of outright demagogy.

Efforts have been made, Mr. Speaker, to disparage those members who form in this house the Conservative representation from Quebec. Some have tried to brand us as supporters of a provincial political group, regardless of the fact that the provincial Liberal party has never been anything but a subsidiary of the federal Liberal party, and forced to bow to its sovereign will.

Some hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Tremblay: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the members from the province of Quebec are here because the electors sent them here as representatives of the Conservative party. As regards the political opinions in the provincial field, that is a strictly personal business. Anyone is free to support the party of his own choice, on the basis of certain convictions and certain facts. None of us, in this regard, need accept lectures from members of the Liberal opposition. Besides, those Liberal members are definitely lacking in ability and, to a certain extent, lacking in tact, since, for a second time, the provincial Liberal party has seen fit to elect as its leader a federal member from the same party.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Tremblay: Let them go and ask Mr. Lesage what reasons impelled him to become a deserter, leaving in the lurch the tattered remnants of a team already quite thinned out.

I now come, Mr. Speaker, to a subject which forms the basis of the criticism of the Liberal opposition: the Conservative representation from Quebec. This took the Liberals by surprise. It dispelled an illusion to which they had clung obstinately. They had thought they could hold on in the province of Quebec, calling up, to gain confidence and save face after June 10, 1957, their triumphs of 1949 and of 1953. But they had forgotten that public opinion had changed since the days of 1948 when the population of Quebec was asked to forget the slaps in the face and the broken promises, as well as the war policy of the Mackenzie King government, and to support, in the name of race and religion, a fellow citizen of the same language and creed. Citizens of the province of Quebec and of Canada were right in then giving confidence to a man who proved himself a great Canadian. But it turned out that the Liberal government, even led by a great leader, abused its strength and lost touch with the people. That is why the people have withdrawn their confidence. It is then that the Quebec Liberals have believed, Mr. Speaker, that they could hold the province of Quebec by raising racial and religious prejudices.

I do not hesitate, Mr. Speaker, to deal with that subject. I must emphasize that I am keeping very close to the subject matter of this debate since we have to examine all the aspects of the government's policy in order to discover why Canadians must today give their confidence to the Conservative party.

I am pleased to state that if the Canadian electorate has expressed so spontaneously its affection and confidence in the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) it is because he personifies a comforting form of national conscience for all the racial elements of this country. Since his election at the head of the Conservative party, he has never ceased to advocate national unity. He has done so unremittingly by word and deed. For once, Canadians have the satisfaction of hearing the same thing from one end of the country to the other. The province of Quebec, in particular, has not been favoured with a special and specious version of those words on unity. No one has tried to sell them a political idea through false pretenses. The same gospel of national unity, of harmony and co-operation "for a better Canada" has been preached. But they have been assured, this time with new emphasis, that the essential civic liberties would be respected and that the Canadian constitution would be, as it should, the guarantee of such liberties.

I recall that during the last electoral campaign, some newspapermen expressed their surprise that the Prime Minister was not making more promises to the province of Quebec. Liberal spokesmen instantly scented an easy and convenient trail. They started to blame the Conservatives for not making enough promises. But the electors were not fooled. They had too bitter memories of Liberal promises of a Canadian flag, of an ambassador to the Vatican and of bilingual cheques. And they had long been aware of the comedy put up on that theme by the former member for Quebec-Montmorency. Just a few hours before polling began, when the Prime Minister came to Quebec and said:

—one of the great strengths of our country is its ability to draw on the two greatest cultures of the modern world, English and French cultures, to create a truly Canadian spirit—

And then he said:

I do not think there is in Canada any majority or minority; there are only equal partners embarked upon the same undertaking: the undertaking to work towards the progress and the welfare of the whole country—

Then, Mr. Speaker, the Canadians of our province realized, through that statement, the deep sincerity of the man who is seeking, as he said the other day, a way to weld together Canadians of various ethnic origins. I know that there were again some newspapermen who questioned that last intention and found it suspicious. I can understand such caution from people who have been used to prejudices. That is why I denounce the manoeuvres of the Liberal party, those unfair electoral practices, which were unsound and morally dishonest and tended to hold the hon. Prime Minister as an enemy of the French Canadians in the province of Quebec. When, the other day, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Brassard), and all hon. members of his group who spoke before him, launched into a series of criticisms of the budget, they could have included what he said on television and over the radio during his electoral campaign, when he made use of the accusations of his party against the person of the Prime Minister, and read abusive pamphlets against the religious and ethnical convictions of the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Those are only quotations.

Mr. Tremblay: I have on file, Mr. Speaker, some of those publications. It is not for the purpose of reviving electoral quarrels that I report that attitude and that I speak as I do. It is for the purpose of inspiring our friends of the Liberal opposition with a certain form of caution in their criticism. Today they are playing the game of objectivity; they are criticizing the Conservative government. Yesterday, they were condemning the leader of the Conservative government. They tried to raise some doubts and some hard feelings towards the policy of the Conservative government. They carefully avoid mentioning that the electors refused to follow them in their attempts to discredit the hon. Prime Minister. It is to denounce such hypocrisy that I have spoken about those facts, as I do not want the public to be misled once more.

The electors of the province of Quebec voted for the Conservative party on the basis of its serious political program and its achievements. It would be an insult to their conscience to claim that they have yielded to all sorts of entreaties.

Instead, they ignored the calumnies which, —if not expressed openly at present by Liberal members from the province of Quebec, now in this house,—are not forgotten by those who heard them during the election campaign.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): This is not the provincial assembly.

Mr. Tremblay: Allow me to tell my hon. friends of the opposition who sent me this splendid red flower that I shall lay it on the grave of the Liberal party.

It is high time, Mr. Speaker, that some misconceptions which are fatal to good understanding between various racial groups of our country, be cleared. The sentence pronounced by the Canadian people, on March 31 last, shows eloquently that the electors of this country are enlightened judges of our political actions, and that we would be mistaken in trying to distract their attention from essential administrative problems. I am delighted because I see in this a sign of political maturity and the assurance that demagogues will no longer be listened to. At any rate, for the information of those who, a few years ago, denounced political immorality in our province and of those who make it a point of discrediting our province, I might add that I do not understand why they are so slow in denouncing the campaign of racial and religious prejudice carried out by the Liberal party and of which the former member for Quebec-Montmorency has given now a too notorious example.

I know for sure that from now on Liberals will have to find other themes than those they have kept using in the province of Quebec to denounce the Conservative party and make it appear as a scarecrow synonymous with war, conscription, economic depression and racial and religious prejudice.

Mr. Rouleau: And unemployment.

Mr. Tremblay: On March 31 it was revealed how worn out were these old methods and how inefficient they had become. Liberals had to answer for their actions; the nation required of them an exact accounting of their stewardship. Such answer as they gave, no doubt, was far from being satisfactory to their accusers. To defame the Conservative party it was far too easy to talk of the 1917 conscription or of the depression of the thirties. The Liberals were far luckier than they deserved, in 1939, when the second world war brought an artificial prosperity to this country and seemed to demonstrate that they had been right in their statements against the Conservative party.

An hon. Member: Artificial for twenty years.

Mr. Tremblay: And it is largely because they failed to prepare Canada for normal conditions and for a peacetime economy, that this country now finds itself in a somewhat difficult position.

Whatever is done now in the way of rousing of anti-Tory feeling, whatever attempts are made to make a bogey out of the Conservative party, this will henceforth be no way to gain public support. Since the far-off days of 1917 and 1930, modern improvements have brought about a radical change in means of public information. No longer can anybody prevent people in British Columbia, for instance, from hearing, on the same day and at the same time, what is being said at the far end of Newfoundland. The provinces of this country are now in a position to speak to one another and it would be a very serious error to fail to take into account this factor of unity.

The Liberal party must therefore find something else to say. More particularly it must, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, draw on resources other than those which it has exploited so far. No longer will it do to preach unilateral unity. Those tactics will have to be replaced by a truly national policy. I hope the Liberals in this house realize that their present numbers, and the fact that they represent only a very few provinces, are the best possible demonstration of their party's failure in the national field. It should be sufficient to point out that close to one half of them represent the province of Quebec. Let them reflect on that fact, which confirms what I was saying about the events of 1949 and 1953, events which, while admirably serving their party, failed to assure its national survival. This might well be because the Liberal party has lost sight of its beginnings and did not remain faithful to its basic principles. It was to be the party of freedom and reform, as stated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in a speech delivered on June 26, 1877. He said:

> The policy of the Liberal party is to ensure the protection and defence of institutions, the spreading of influence, and—within the framework of these institutions—the development of our country's untapped resources. That is the Liberal party's policy; there is no other.

One can hardly deny that the Liberals of today have followed the downward trend. The twenty-two years of Liberal rule have belied the magnetism and the truth of Laurier's words. What it amounts to, Mr. Speaker, is that the Liberals of today are whittled-down Liberals, mere shadows of the Liberalism of former times—of that Liberalism which, judging by Sir Wilfrid Laurier's words, was indeed to bring about radical changes in Canadian institutions. But the Canadian Liberals were scared of the principles which they had borrowed from Europe; they wanted to water down, little by little, what was disquieting in their basic principles; they were afraid of going right through with it, of drawing the conclusions arising from their premises and of proving themselves to be true, strictly conforming Liberals. They did not have the courage of their political convictions. They ended up with that drab type of Liberalism, drained of its doctrinal content, with which we are familiar. And their principles are so inadequately given expression that it is difficult to associate Laurier with these politicians who have bartered their gospel of doctrinal Liberalism—which I do not approve of—for a vague creed of electoral opportunism.

Give me the Conservative tradition; it is based on the facts of history. The party of Macdonald and Cartier has never wished to break with tradition. It has not looked for a solution in historical continuity. It continued with its natural development within the constitutional framework of 1867. Never did it wish to blaze an unbroken trail, or advocate steps which were not in all respects in accord with the spirit and the letter of our constitutional instrument.

I believe the strains we are feeling at the moment arise from the Liberal party having implemented an artificial constitutional evolution in Canada; and this political phenomenon finds its expression in the constitutional solutions of the Liberal party. That these solutions do not correspond wholly with the nature and the spirit of the British North America Act is the least that one must admit.

Thus it is, for instance, that the advocates of Canadian neo-Federalism try, by subtle means, to swing the pendulum of constitutional frictions. They would like to change an economic framework—in itself contingent upon, and subject to, the shifting conditions of our country's economy—for a constitutional formula—

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry but I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired. I now recognize the hon. member for Quebec East.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for the honour of designating me as the member for the historic riding of Quebec East, which for the greater part of Canadian history, has been represented in this house by a member of the Liberal party.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Not now; the condition has materially improved.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In rising to take part in this very important budget debate I would like at the outset to say to my friend and classmate who has the great distinction of being the first Conservative in almost a quarter of a century to present a budget to this nation that, as one of his friends and contemporaries, I share his pride and his deep satisfaction in having that honour. I am sure that we in this house all recognize that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), a man of the greatest integrity and—as he once told us—a man of the greatest industry, would try to do all he could to present a budget which would satisfy a maximum number of citizens in this country.

However, while I congratulate my hon. friend on the great achievement that is his of being the first Tory in many years to present a budget in this house, I regret, also as a friend, that this particular budget should have so many shortcomings and that it will always be recognized as a budget presenting the greatest deficit in Canadian history.

My hon. friend yesterday did himself less than the justice one would have expected from the Minister of Finance under the circumstances. He admonished the opposition because we had not indicated to him how savings might have been provided for and how the consequences of those savings might have been handed on to the Canadian people.

I would merely remind the minister as he himself reminded his predecessor, that no opposition is free from the obligation of making constructive suggestions from time to time.

But the primary obligation in the matter of the conduct of government in a country such as ours rests on the hon. gentlemen who sit on your right, Mr. Speaker.

Now the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said in this house in 1957 something which I think my distinguished friend the Minister of Finance might well wish to remember on this occasion. The present Prime Minister, who was then, of course, speaking on this side of the house, said:

> I say to the government, if you would meet inflation, physician, heal yourself.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I thought it was "thyself".

Mr. Martin (Essex East):

> Let us have some action on the part of the government to bring about the reduction of unnecessary expenditure . . . The governor of the Bank of Canada has warned the government. The government saw his report before it was produced here. He warned them about government expenditures and the need for action to reduce them. Yet instead of taking action the government fans the fires of inflation by failing to restrict its own expenditures. Indeed, the major creator of the existing inflation is the actions of this government . . . No one denies that there is no painless cure for inflation. We have to cut down total spending where total spending exceeds our productive capacity. Cuts are imperative.

I would remind the Minister of Finance of these words. The leader of the opposition concluded, in 1957, by saying:

> Again I say it is the government itself which must act.

So I say to the Minister of Finance, a member of a government which said it was possible to increase expenditures and at the same time present a balanced budget, that in the face of this deficit which we on this side of the house contend will be over one billion dollars in 1958 and 1959 it is up to this government, that it is up to the government of which he is a member, to effect the necessary reductions in all government departments.

I would remind the Minister of Finance of the paraphrased words of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) who, addressing the former minister of finance, said:

> Let the minister of finance have courage. Let him confront each and every one of his colleagues before they go to treasury board, and say to them:

you will have to curtail expenditures by this percentage or there will have to be an understanding between us as colleagues in the same government.

The Minister of Finance has primarily on his shoulders the responsibility for doing what he told us yesterday evening was our responsibility.

The present Prime Minister, when he was leader of the opposition, told the people in the last election that he could at the same time incur additional expenditures and provide a balanced budget—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not the last election.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said "Give us the power and we will show you". They were going to cut down government spending, eliminate waste and balance the budget. They were going to cure unemployment; they were going to increase our trade and divert some $625 million from the United States to Great Britain. They were going to avoid inflation; they were going to embark on a great new program of public works; they were going to ensure our farmers a fair return for their labours; they were going to reapportion tax revenues among the other levels of government so as to provide the provinces and the municipalities with much larger incomes. These were the assurances given to the people in the last election and in the election of 1957, and the minister who now shakes his head—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was not nodding my head. I was shaking my head.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think the minister should be reminded of these promises, and if our public life means anything, the people who made these promises must continually be reminded of them and held to them.

Instead of these promises being fulfilled, we are faced with a billion dollar deficit. This, the Minister of Finance denies, notwithstanding the fact that the head of the Canadian Tax Foundation, the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, and disinterested observers and writers throughout this country have taken the position that the minister's estimate is certainly far short of what he will have to present to this house on the occasion of his second budget.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They do not justify the figure you have given.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister shakes his head, but that will not in any way disturb the fact that the president of the Canadian Tax Foundation has estimated that the deficit will not be less than $900 million.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The main criticism I have to make is that in the face of current economic conditions, in the face of the present abnormal level of unemployment in this country and in terms of what I contend to be a developing trend in unemployment which may be more serious than what we have experienced up to now, this government, through its Minister of Finance and through this budget, has not appreciated the seriousness of the economic situation which now confronts this country and which, I am going to argue, will face us with increasing severity in the months ahead.

The other day we asked, through a motion put forward by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), for the economic survey for 1958, and the Prime Minister, resisting that motion, said it was a secret document. He did not use the phrase that it was a hidden document, but he said it was a document confidential in character which, because of the public interest, could not be given to the Canadian parliament or to the Canadian people at this time.

Mr. Speaker, we have the right to ask of this government whether these budgetary policies as presented by the Minister of Finance represent the advice given to the government by its financial officers, by its trade officials, by officials in the Bank of Canada and others in the public service competent to advise the ministry in matters of this sort. We have the right to suspect in the face of many indications that this budget does not represent all of that opinion and all of that advice. We have grounds for suspecting greatly that this government in its budget ignores the financial situation which now confronts the nation and which is likely to confront it in the months ahead. Hon. members will not forget how on January 20 last, the present Prime Minister, speaking in this house said, as recorded on page 3522 of Hansard:

My hon. friend said there are problems today that were not even contemplated last June. I intend to establish as clearly as the printed word will make possible that during the months of March, April, May until June 10, my hon. friends concealed from the Canadian people the facts.

Then at page 3526, the same right hon. gentleman, speaking of this confidential document, this secret document, this hidden report which continues to be produced by the Department of Trade and Commerce and which has been denied to us by the right hon. gentleman in 1958, said:

They went ahead with the policy which could not but accelerate the forces that were bringing about a deflationary condition in Canada. I am going to now read from this document in order to answer my hon. friend who the other night said, "In June there was no problem of unemployment; our trade was at the highest level; we had an expanding economy."

Today one looks back and realizes that these men who were in power did not do that of which my hon. friend spoke in such colourful terms the other night. He said we must not conceal facts, but I put it to the hon. members opposite—every one of them in the official opposition—that they hid the facts; they concealed the record; they did not let the Canadian people know what was taking place.

An hon. Member: A good speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone says, "A good speech". Yes, it was a good speech and because it was a good speech I am now using it as a basis for the action I am going to ask the Minister of Finance to take. If it was right for the Prime Minister in January of 1958 to embark on the unprecedented step of divulging to this house a document marked confidential and secret that had been prepared by one department of government dealing with the economic situation of the country, does any hon. member deny that it is right that this house should now ask the present Prime Minister to now reveal to this parliament and to this nation the economic survey presented by the Department of Trade and Commerce to this government in 1958?

The former minister of finance, Mr. Harris, in his budget speech in 1957 did not dodge the implications of this so-called secret, hidden report which the previous government, in the language of the present Prime Minister, "refused to give parliament" and the current counterpart of which that same right hon. gentleman now refuses in 1958 to disclose to each and every one of us so that we can ascertain the extent to which the Minister of Finance properly carries out the recommendations and the policies of Her Majesty's advisors in Canada. What was right in 1957 regarding the document known as the economic survey by the same logic must continue to be valid in 1958.

In 1957 Mr. Harris, the then minister of finance, did not overlook the danger signs outlined in the so-called secret, hidden document which the present Prime Minister placed on the table of this house at our insistence once he had made reference to it. The minister of finance in 1957 clearly took cognizance of that report. In fact he used practically some of the very words contained in it indicating the seriousness of the situation as the authors of this report saw developing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is just what he did not do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): To compare his statement in that particular with the statement of the Minister of Finance today is abundant proof of what I have said. The Minister of Finance today did not do what Mr. Harris did.

Mr. Ricard: Thank goodness.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Harris devoted a section of his budget to the economic prospect—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is just what he did not do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he listen carefully to what I am going to say. The then minister of finance, Mr. Harris, devoted a special section of his budget to the economic outlook including references to the probable behaviour in 1957 of those things that constitute the gross national product, such matters as investment, exports, government and consumer spending. But the present Minister of Finance in his budget speech of June 17 gave us no indication whatever as to the probable trend of exports and of government and consumer expenditures—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I certainly did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and of the labour force and profit margins for 1958. As a matter of fact, my hon. friend did the house a great injustice in this particular. The only thing he did was to refer to the 1958 outlook for private and public investment, a document that had been issued some time before by the resourceful Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) who sits on my hon. friend's right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Did the hon. member want me to make a longer speech?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As I have said, this publication was issued months ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It forecast a decline of 3 per cent in capital expenditures, a point which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance did not underline at all.

I have spent some time on the economic survey of 1958 and on the right of parliament, in light of last year's precedent, to know what that document contains. Does it reflect the judgment of those impartial bodies such as the Canadian Tax Foundation, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the very excellent study on unemployment made by the Canadian Labour Congress? Does it reflect the attitude of the Department of Labour? I suggest to the Minister of Finance that the reason the Prime Minister refused to give the house the 1958 economic survey is because that survey does not support the main lines taken by the Minister of Finance in his budget, a budget that denies the critical seriousness of present and future unemployment levels.

The Minister of Finance was the last minister in the government to acknowledge last fall and last January that there was a serious problem of unemployment. The Minister of Finance by this budget completely ignores the recession which Canadians are experiencing. The minister seemingly is gambling on the possibility of a sudden upturn which we all trust will eventuate. I am going to suggest, in anticipating the kind of argument that will be made by those who do not like a realistic appraisal of the economic situation as one sees it in the country, that I sincerely hope the upturn in our country will be such as to warrant the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) being able to refer to low unemployment rolls and to show a minimum number of unplaced applicants under the national employment service. I earnestly trust that the export position of this country will improve. I hope that no hon. member will say that because the facts do not seem to support this kind of assessment we are not doing our duty to the nation when we, as well as impartial observers, indicate how completely out of step this budget is with realities in our country at the present time.

The acting minister of labour tabled the other day some figures showing 366,000 persons unemployed and 607,000 unplaced applicants in the last reported month. I suggest that the gap between these two figures, the number of unplaced applicants and the actual jobless, is so great as to warrant the dominion bureau of statistics taking a second look at them and seeing whether or not the gap which is unusually large does not represent a much greater margin of error than can reasonably be expected through the sampling process. I realize that the estimate of the dominion bureau of statistics is based on a small sample survey taken each month and it is possible that a greater than average margin of error was experienced in May which could possibly account for the disparity. In any event, 366,000 persons out of work in the month of May represents a serious economic situation in a country like Canada particularly at that period of the year.

When one adds to this figure the numbers of others who are unemployed but who are not reported in the dominion bureau of statistics standards as being unemployed one realizes that my statement is by no means an exaggeration. The dominion bureau of statistics does not include as unemployed a man who works only half an hour a week; it does not include people who are engaged for less than 30 hours a week; it does not include those who will be called back to work within a limited time. Therefore, applying the lowest estimate to the month of May, the Minister of Finance I am sure will not deny that that represents a serious unemployment situation. It represents a figure more than double what it was in the preceding year and in the corresponding period.

I said earlier that I did not believe the Minister of Finance has taken into account in his calculations the advice given to him by his own officials. I do not say positively that that is the case but from everything that one can see, from pronouncements made by independent bodies, whose job and whose interest it is to make compilations of future trends, one comes to the conclusion that either the Minister of Finance has completely shut himself off from those who advise him or he is taking the great gamble of being overly optimistic in the hope that his gamble might work. That is a dangerous course for any minister of finance to take.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And a dangerous speculation on the part of the hon. member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not the way to build up confidence in the country.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a misleading speculation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The way to build up confidence in the country is not to ignore facts but for the Minister of Finance resolutely to face up to them, something he has not done in this budget, is not doing at this very minute.

For the purpose of gaining some idea where we are heading, I have projected, in accordance with what others have written, the national employment service unplaced applicants figure and the figures of the dominion bureau of statistics to the end of March, 1959. I am sure that the hon. gentleman himself has done this and I will be very interested to know whether his calculations and mine agree. In any event, if those figures which I am now going to give are true—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They probably are not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that they probably are not. If these figures are true, then I say to the Minister of Finance we have never had in two decades or more any budgets so unrealistic as that brought in by my classmate, the hon. member for Eglinton.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a mighty "if".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suggest to the Minister of Finance that for the month of June the minimum figure of national employment service unplaced applicants will be some 550,000; that the dominion bureau of statistics figure will be around 360,000. In the month of July, the national employment service figure could likely be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 500,000 and the dominion bureau of statistics figure more than 303,000; the August figure of the national employment service could be 460,000 and the dominion bureau of statistics figure somewhere in the neighbourhood of 300,000. That would mean that in the month of August, if these prognostications are accurate, based on the assessment made of the purchase of plant equipment and other indices, we would have in the month of August twice as many men out of work as we had in the corresponding month in 1957.

In September, the national employment service figure could be around 460,000 and the dominion bureau of statistics figure somewhere between 310,000 and 325,000. In the month of October the national employment service figure could be 520,000 and the dominion bureau of statistics figure 425,000. In the month of November the national employment service figure could be 720,000 and some 425,000 for the dominion bureau of statistics. In the month of December—I suggest that my hon. friend might want to read the study issued by the Canadian Congress of Labour regarding this particular figure—1 million-plus for the national employment service and 550,000-plus for the dominion bureau of statistics. In the month of January there could be a possible high of 550,000 for the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was at the time that my hon. friend said there were 800,000 unemployed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says he is not concerned about that figure for the month of January.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am saying my hon. friend said that there were 800,000 unemployed then when there were a quarter of a million fewer than that figure by a true count.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend thinks this is a small figure, why he and I certainly do not have the same point of view with regard to the responsibilities of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The figure you gave was very much larger than the true figure.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You are gloating.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says "gloating". I expected this comment.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

I say to the hon. gentleman who comes to this house as a new member that whatever may be his concept of a member's responsibilities it is the responsibility of all members on all sides realistically to face the situation which they believe confronts the nation at a time when we are discussing this kind of question.

Mr. Lambert: How do you feel you have a monopoly on that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the brilliant observation of my hon. friend?

Mr. Lambert: How do you feel you have a monopoly on that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend knows a lot about monopolies; I do not.

In the month of February, I project as an estimate a dominion bureau of statistics figure of 575,000 and in the month of March, 604,000. I have not given national employment service figures for January, February and March simply because my compilation has not gone that far, and I notice that the Canadian Congress of Labour likewise has not prognosticated that far. But these are projections made by responsible, independent groups in this country, such as by the president of the Canadian Tax Foundation, by the Canadian research economic associates, by the Canadian Manufacturers Association and by the assessments that are made by the Department of Trade and Commerce as to the future of buying within the next eight months of plant equipment and the importations of pipe and the like, all indices that are used to determine the likely increased load in the national employment service, in the kind of assessment that must be made by the dominion bureau of statistics and the unemployment insurance commission.

I hope that events will show that this picture is not in accordance with what will develop. Every hon. member will be happy if these estimates are shown to be wrong eight months from now because there are human beings involved in this, men and women who are out of work, 15,000 of them in my own community of Windsor, as well as in other cities; men and women who have run out of their unemployment insurance benefits, who have run out now by some 3,000 their seasonal benefits and who see in the immediate future no prospect of being able to obtain remunerative employment.

I do not say now that the full responsibility rests on the shoulders of the government, but the full responsibility does rest on the shoulders of the government to make sure that in its budgetary provisions it is making a realistic analysis of the current and the developing situation. What steps has this government taken to do something about unemployment, both in terms of the present figures and in terms of the figures that I have projected? The Minister of Finance says nothing about public works. We know that this government has projected only $35 million more into the public works program than was undertaken by the previous administration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How silly can you be?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Where can you find in the budget any positive reference to the recession? The Minister of Finance was one of those who strongly argued that one way of curtailing unemployment in this country was for the government to do something about it. Le me remind him of his words at page 4208 of Hansard, volume 4, 1953-54, when he looked across the aisle and said to Mr. Harris:

> Does this budget offer any relief at all for unemployment?

He continued:

> Mr. Speaker, the situation is serious but it does not seem to worry this government. They have not faced up to it....Already 50,000 of those receiving unemployment insurance have exhausted their benefits. What is the government doing about that? Nothing!

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How true that was!

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say to the minister, what is the government doing—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is now 300,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —about a much more serious problem? I say, to use his own word, nothing! My hon. friend was one of those who always spoke not only during the formal budget debate but also when the resolutions were discussed. He was a most active member. He wanted the government to eliminate the sales tax on the necessities of life. There are pages of Hansard with that Victorian rhetoric of the Minister of Finance about such things as the sales tax. Are there any reductions in the sales tax on the necessities of life of any consequence or at all in this budget?

Mr. Pickersgill: Rat poison.

An hon. Member: Cut flowers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Some one says "rat poison". What about the excise tax on automobiles? Here is what the Minister of Finance urged as found at page 4373 of Hansard for June 2, 1955.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And did something about it last December, too.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says he did something about it. He reduced the excise tax only by 2½ per cent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Twenty million dollars.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Twenty million dollars, yes.

An hon. Member: More than you did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is wrong, as I shall show. The minister will still get from that source a revenue of some $60 to $70 million. His leader in 1957, speaking in Kennedy collegiate in Windsor, said that he would eliminate—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, he did not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —or substantially reduce the excise tax.

Mr. Pickersgill: Substantially reduce.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And that is what we did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend suggest that 2½ per cent is a substantial reduction?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I certainly suggest that $20 million was a substantial reduction.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend says that this budget is directed to relieve unemployment, directed to the recession, why does he not take into account that in the city of Windsor today in the Chrysler plant, the Ford plant and all the auxiliary plants there are 15,000 men out of work wondering what the government is going to do about something which only a few months ago they said they would correct. Why did he not provide for a reduction in or elimination of this tax? It would not have solved the problem of unemployment completely but it certainly would have given encouragement in the face of the stagnation now existing in sales regarding one of the most important sectors in the Canadian economy. Talking about addressing oneself to unemployment, talking about feeling keenly about unemployed men and women as the Prime Minister did all over the country in the last election—

Mr. Pickersgill: No one would suffer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the way to demonstrate that no one will suffer is by the government to come forward with a budget and policies consistent with its declarations made during the course of the last election.

My leader did make reference during the course of the election to methods by which, in the context of the situation that then existed, some encouragement could be given to the depressed state of the Canadian economy. Hon. gentlemen opposite saw fit to ridicule those suggestions, suggestions that would have involved a new orientation of fiscal policy at least on a temporary basis.

An hon. Member: The Canadian people would not accept them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that the Canadian people would not accept them. My hon. friend is right. The Canadian people did give hon. gentlemen opposite a mandate to do something about unemployment but I must say that to date the government has not given any evidence that it is prepared to embark on any policy, whether through orientation of fiscal matters or through public works, in a courageous way, in a nonorthodox way to meet what is undoubtedly a serious emergency, a serious social disaster, to use the words of the Prime Minister uttered in the city of Edmonton.

No consideration has been given by the Minister of Finance to such things as accelerated depreciation allowances, to the kind of income tax reductions that would reach the masses of the people thus enabling them with this additional money to purchase the necessities of life, which might serve as a means of priming the pump. These proposals, which will undoubtedly be dealt with later, were made in the context of the situation as it then existed, not in the context of a budget with a likely deficit in 1958-59 of over a billion dollars.

We had a right to think that there would not be a deficit of such large proportions because did not the Minister of Finance say not later than the end of January that he anticipated a surplus of $80 million? This government was elected with the biggest majority in history and I know hon. gentlemen opposite will like to applaud that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I congratulate them on that great electoral achievement. But it is over now. The problems facing the Canadian people in terms of the unemployed, in terms of farmers who are dissatisfied with the floor price policies of the government, in terms of our trading relations with United States and Great Britain, demand of the government action consistent with the professions made to the people of Canada and which contributed to the fact that hon. gentlemen sit to Mr. Speaker's right at this time. I ask the Minister of Finance, in the face of his heavy responsibilities, with his great abilities and his great sincerity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to acknowledge that the picture I have painted today is not an exaggeration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think it is a very exaggerated and inaccurate picture, if you want me to say so.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us hope that the minister is right but if he is not right—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —he will incur the wrath—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member in full stream but his time has expired. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Bourque) has a question of privilege to raise. I will hear him.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BOURQUE—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN DEBATE ON JULY 2

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in my absence the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) made what I consider to be an unjustified attack on me, one which I believe is prejudicial to my reputation as a businessman and which can be very derogatory to me. He said this, and I will have to say it in French:

(Translation):

I would recall to this house that the financial critic for the opposition was determined that this deficit would be very much larger and things progressed until, on June 27, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Mitchell) raised the figure to $1 billion. Not to be outdone by the hon. member for Sudbury, along came the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member tell me what page he is reading from?

Mr. Bourque: Page 1948, from the French debates of yesterday. I continue:

(Translation):

Not to be outdone by the hon. member for Sudbury, along came the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Bourque) that same afternoon and he managed to get the figure up to $2,167 million. That is not arithmetic; that is what I believe to be astronomical flights into the realm of fancy, but Canada's credit is not helped by irresponsible statements of that kind. The statement of the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean is irresponsible to the point of irrationality when he says that we are going to have a deficit in such figures as he mentioned.

I most strongly deny this statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I never said that the deficit would amount to $2,167 million and I shall now read to you the official account for the afternoon sitting of Friday June 27, 1958:

From page 1793 of the French debates of Friday, June 27:

(Translation):

Considering an estimated revenue of $4,660 million, the actual budget deficit is $1,092 million.

There, you have it, Mr. Speaker. I said that the actual budget deficit would be $1,092 million.

I do not want to read it all because I do not wish to take all the time of the house, but I went on to say later:

—which will give, for this year, an actual increase of $2,167 million in our debt.

And further on, I repeated:

—the Minister of Finance will have increased our debt by $2,167 million in a single year.

Now then, having mentioned only one figure, the minister meant to imply yesterday that I had said that the deficit would amount to $2,167 million. Of course, this was to justify the inconsistent budget which he presented.

There is no excuse for the Minister of Finance misrepresenting figures, and I cannot tolerate such tactics.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member has now made the correction which he felt it was necessary to make. I rather think he was not speaking upon a question of privilege, but as I was not able to follow him fully, I take it that the matter is satisfactorily disposed of.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker this afternoon, just before the dinner recess, we were treated to a flow of eloquence forcefully delivered in the best traditions of a histrionic display: the dark clothes, the flashing eyes, the sombre voice. All that was needed was the black cap and we would have had the judge pronouncing sentence of death on the Canadian economy. It was a type of delivery which was somewhat wasted in the House of Commons and which might better have been employed in the theatre at Stratford where I am sure the hon. gentleman could obtain employment to a very high degree. I am not sure just what histrionic display is going to follow it but I know that it will not be given in any such funereal language. However, I am sure that another will paint as sombre and lugubrious a scene. Perhaps for a few moments, Mr. Speaker, moving between these pictures of gloom and doom, we may come back to the facts of the budget and deal with these for a short time.

Much has been said in this debate of a critical nature. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has been criticized. We have sat here for eight days listening to the debate, the contents of which the house well knows. This is not one of those sensational earth-shaking budgets, that provokes great headlines in the press but it is a budget, as the Minister of Finance said at the outset when he delivered his speech, that has produced many matters of benefit to many Canadians. I am not dealing now with the general economic policy but with the specific matters in the budget to which I think attention should be called for a moment in passing.

One of these comes under the department which I happen to administer, namely that of national revenue and has an impact with respect to income tax. From the time I came into the office which I now hold I was impressed by the number of letters—not running into the thousands, but perhaps 500 or 1,000; something of that nature—which were sent to the minister complaining of the application of the act in so far as income tax reductions were concerned in connection with drugs. You all know the situation there. There is in the Income Tax Act a provision that when medical expenses exceed 3 per cent of the income, these deductions can be made for income tax purposes. Under the preceding administration, as the act was administered heretofore, those drugs had to be enumerated and specified by the Department of National Health and Welfare. Then when that was done a deduction could be made for those purchases. As I said, many of the letters received from the ordinary citizens of this country, from parents with children who were desperately ill; from people who had relatives who needed the most expensive drugs in order to recover, and where recovery was perhaps not always certain, they were pathetic letters—I think that is the only word that can be used to describe them—in which they suggested that some change should be made whereby they could obtain deductions for these drugs which are prescribed today by doctors and which were outside the very limited number which had been prescribed by the Department of National Health and Welfare. Even under the more efficient administration of my colleague, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith), we did not find that we could give the deductions that I felt were necessary.

In consultation with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare it was decided, as you know, to include in the budget a provision whereby drugs bought on doctor's prescription could hereafter qualify for a deduction in this regard. We trust the medical profession. We know that provision will not be abused. This, Mr. Speaker, is a simple illustration of what has been done in this budget. Simple, common sense, matter of fact changes are made here and there which affect the lives of thousands of Canadians across this country and which reflect tremendous credit on the Minister of Finance who prepared that budget and who brought it into the House of Commons.

I can think of another provision under the Income Tax Act which does not affect thousands, but does probably affect tens of thousands of Canadians. The one I have in mind I have myself encountered many times. I am sure all lawyers who have had the good fortune to practise in rural communities will also have faced it. I have in mind the family where the parents are getting old and they want to have their son remain on the farm and they convey the farm over to him as an inducement to him to remain there, not thinking of the application of the Income Tax Act and not thinking of the provisions with respect to the gift tax. Having done so, they then find one, two, three or sometimes even five years later, after the father has died and it has become impossible to change the situation, that a gift tax has been imposed sometimes running into thousands of dollars.

Then there is the case of the husband and wife who are perhaps retiring, perhaps establishing a home somewhere else and knowing that there will sooner or later be a death but who want to maintain a home so as to avoid the payment of gift tax, succession duty and so on and so forth. The husband has earned the money and has paid for the house but, if it were under a joint ownership arrangement, all sorts of problems arise with respect to taxes.

Under the budget which has been brought down we have a provision whereby the farmer or the father—not necessarily a farmer, of course—can convey property to his son or to his daughter and avoid payment of the gift tax. Similarly, a husband can convey his property to be held under a joint ownership by himself and his wife and can also avoid the tax and all the incidental obligations which arise upon the death of one or other of the parties. Here, again, is a very simple illustration of what I mean when I say that this budget, although it has not made the headlines with respect to these matters I have mentioned, has affected the lives of many thousands of people in this country and has very favourably affected those lives.

Take next the matter of the sales tax. We have been asked what we have done for the municipalities—have we forgotten the municipalities, and someone over on the other side of the house will say, "Hear, hear". When we were on the other side of the house we urged the government for years and years to do something about the relaxation of sales taxes on purchases made by municipalities and when we made such suggestions we were treated with scornful contempt. It was impossible to consider such a thing. This budget has made provision in this respect. There is wide provision for sales tax exemption on purchases made by municipalities, particularly in those fields which are important to municipalities in these times; for instance, with respect to the problems of pollution, sewage disposal and all those matters which are today bearing so heavily upon the municipalities. There is a provision in this budget whereby they will save millions of dollars, even on the present scale of purchases, and as the years go by there will be more and more savings.

With respect to institutions, whereas formerly there was a narrow list certified by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the provisions for institutions are now immeasurably widened so far as sales tax exemptions are concerned.

There is a simple little problem which has created so much hardship and difficulty which has also been provided for, and that is with respect to school authorities across this country, from Vancouver to Halifax. Protests have rolled in—I have seen scores of them in the short time during which I have been in office—complaining of the effect of taxes on school purchases for furniture and the fact that exemptions apply only to that furniture specifically designed for schools. Scores of school boards have had to pay sales tax on items which they very properly thought would have been free of such tax. This condition has now been rectified and I know the provisions of this budget will mean tremendous savings to school boards throughout the country.

I could go on and on to list examples of measures which will ensure tremendous savings to the people concerned and which are of great importance to them, but there is one, perhaps very minor item, which I would like to mention which has certainly been a source of great irritation to the public in the past. There was an imposition of a fee of $2 imposed upon businessmen for a licence to collect the sales tax from themselves for the government. While this $2 fee was not a very important factor, perhaps, I do not know of anything which has created more irritation among businessmen. A simple little change has been made and this fee has been done away with.

I have not exhausted the list of benefits under this budget by a long shot but I would now like to turn to some of the many criticisms we have heard. Firstly, we have heard that this is a high tariff budget; we have had a somber picture painted for us of high tariff walls being erected, shades of Bennett being invoked and references to Tory policies in the past. We are told that this country is now facing high tariffs as a result of the budget which has been brought down.

One such reference will be found at page 1538 of Hansard for June 23, 1958, where the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate spoke of the tariff provisions as follows:

—I do not know that I should call it a Bennett provision because Mr. Meighen tried it before him and it was repealed once before by the Liberals before Bennett—is, of course, of all the protective devices the most insidious and the most dangerous.

We are all of course familiar with the imagination of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in portraying the pictures in his mind. Sometimes when I hear him speaking I am reminded of that house that Jack built, the house which had a little malt in it, a little rye in it, a little straw in it and all the rest of it, and finally it fell down. That was the house that Jack built, and that is the way it is with the house of high tariffs, which this Jack has built, because there is absolutely nothing in the budget which in any way reflects high tariffs.

There are five classes of changes in the budget, five minor classes, with respect to tariff changes and four of these were recommended by the tariff board. The minister is accused of being a high tariff Tory; this government is being accused of raising the tariffs as high as Hamono's gallows.

What would have been the accusation, what would have been the criticism if we had failed to accept the recommendations of the tariff board. We would have been criticized and attacked for not recognizing the impartial judgment of that great tribunal. The minister has now done this and we are criticized for these so-called high tariffs. I do not think anyone seriously objects to the revision with respect to steel products. The iron and steel amendments are long overdue as the last revision was issued 28 years ago, while today there has been a tremendous expansion in the development of all primary and secondary steel industries in Canada. The great majority of the amendments, however, are merely for purposes of simplification; some are for reduction and there are very, very few limited increases.

It is the same situation with respect to the pipe and tube schedule; it is almost entirely a matter of adjustment and simplification. It is also the same with respect to woollens. We have heard a great deal about the increase in the tariff on woollens; this increase was also recommended by the tariff board and we were confronted with that recommendation.

Mr. Pickersgill: You asked for it.

Mr. Nowlan: We asked for it. The matter had been referred to the tariff board. Sure, we got their recommendation but what is the tariff board for? Did the hon. gentleman opposite raise tariffs without the recommendation of the tariff board? Did they ignore such recommendations? Of course they did not.

An hon. Member: We reduced them.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, and we have reduced them too. We have reduced far more in this budget than we have increased, make no mistake about that. The increase on woollens, on a yardage basis, means only a few cents on the amount of cloth going into a suit of clothes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why do it at all, then?

Mr. Nowlan: Because we had a recommendation from the tariff board and we followed that recommendation. That is why we did it. There is certainly ample justification for the increase, as the tariff board has established, and I wonder if hon. members on the other side of the house are questioning that. If they are I would like to hear about it. So much for tariff increases, the ones specifically named in the budget.

There has also been much talk about the practice of the department with respect to evaluation. It is true that we have increased the evaluation staff of the department. Prior to the war the previous government had 45 or 50 evaluators, highly trained appraisers in most of the ports of the world, making examination of goods coming into Canada. The war came and most of these men, practically all of them, were brought back to Ottawa. Because of their skill and experience they were given senior jobs here, and the net result was that after the war there was practically no one left at all who had had any training in the appraisals branch except the senior executive officials in headquarters in Ottawa. In those days the market was such that everybody was buying, regardless, and it was not necessary to fill up these staffs.

Today the situation is different and we have got 45 or 50 appraisers, university men, largely, who are being trained so that they may strengthen the staff and carry out the appraisals which are necessary if Canadian industry is going to be protected from superficially low values.

An ad valorem tariff can be easily nullified if the values are reduced to such an extent that they have no basis in actuality. After all, the term "fair market value" must surely have some meaning, and it must be remembered that it has been determined time and time again that the market value has really had no reference whatsoever to fair market value and that anyone by making a few sales in the country of origin could then send the goods here, avoiding dumping duty. And when such goods are sold superficially below cost they threaten not only Canadian industry but, what is more important, the employees of Canadian industry.

We heard a prophecy this afternoon of dire doom with respect to unempolyment and the great extent to which it was going to increase in this country. I sat the other morning in the railway committee room and listened to Mr. Burt and the other spokesmen from the delegation that came from Windsor and Hamilton representing the unemployed and demanding government action. What was the principal thing which they demanded? They demanded that we take tariff action to keep out importations from, in particular, the United States. They said, and I am not passing judgment on the correctness of their statement, that the importation of automobiles, the importation of automobile parts, the importation of machinery, all these things had increased substantially, and contributed to unemployment in Canada. They urged us to take action so that these goods could be manufactured in Canada and provide employment for Canadian workmen rather than that they be made in some other country.

I wonder whether the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) who was so eloquent this afternoon on the subject of unemployment will give the government his support when the motion comes before the House of Commons to provide for a different basis of fixing valuations. I presume we can count on his full support and on the support, also, of the party to your left, Mr. Speaker, whose spokesmen were so eloquent on this subject in the House of Commons the other day.

And now, with regard to this so-called high tariff policy. There is no high tariff policy in so far as actual tariff changes are concerned. None whatever. And the change as far as increasing the staff is concerned is something going back to the practice which was carried on by hon. members opposite prior to the war, and they profess to be a low tariff party, not a high tariff party. And the changes in valuation which were suggested by the Minister of Finance, and which I hope to have the honour to introduce in this house before very long, is one change and one change only; not an invidious change or something which would alter the whole economic structure of this country, but one which will help to deal with the unemployment situation, because goods are being brought into this country at fictitious values, often below the cost of production. We intend to do something about this and ensure that we at least give some protection to Canadians in this country.

What else do the critics say about this budget? They say it is a deficit budget. Sure it is a deficit budget. We have a deficit. The hon. member for Essex East this afternoon took off the judge's robes for a moment and assumed the mantle of a prophet and predicted that the budget deficit this year would be way over what the Minister of Finance had suggested, and called in aid several organizations to support his contention.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But they do not support it.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no question we are going to have a substantial deficit, a deficit which the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had envisaged, and a deficit for which this government is prepared to take the responsibility, because we prefer to have deficits rather than mounting unemployment and hardship. As long as we are in power—and we will be in power for a long while—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Nowlan: That observation has apparently provoked some question on the other side. Let me give this word of advice to hon. members opposite. They have talked a lot about two faces, and they have talked about our having one mask at one moment and another at the next. They have accused the people of Canada of being fooled. Well, the people of Canada were not fooled by our one face or by our two faces; they were just sick and tired of your faces, that is all. They were sick and tired of complacency, conceit and arrogance; they just got bored to tears with you and they turned you out. As for Mr. Mackenzie King, your revered leader, listen to what he said: "The Liberal party has to go through the valley of humiliation." As long as members of that party keep talking about two faces and blaming the people of Canada for being fooled, the people of Canada will continue to be fed up with them and they will sit there until your great grandchildren have grown beards.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my time is running out much more rapidly than I realized, and I have to pass on to other matters. There are many other things which have been said about this budget, and again I refer to our friend with the Puckish sense of humour, and the house that Jack built. That wonderful travelogue the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) gave us a couple of days ago should have been featured in the Canadian geographical magazine. I just made a rough check of what it would cost us if we constructed all the projects in his constituency which he recommended in that speech and I worked out that it would come to over $1,730,000. I do not know whether the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is carrying the Liberal party or whether the Liberal party is carrying the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but I may say there is not going to be much money for the other people on his side if he ever came back into power.

Where would the deficit be if the program was carried out that was advocated by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) before the election? I would like to know that, Mr. Speaker. We were told we had $400,000 in tax deductions, and so on and so forth, added on to the others.

In dealing with deficits I would like to call the attention of my hon. friends opposite to a financial guide in whom they took great pride, and properly so—Mr. Abbott. The following are remarks made by Mr. Abbott on the occasion of his bringing down his budget on May 18, 1948 at which time he was minister of finance, as recorded at page 4063 of Hansard:

> I believe that all parties in this parliament and most Canadians share the view that the national budget is no longer merely a matter of the government accounts that should be balanced every 12 months on some financial rule of the thumb. We view the national budget now as an integral part of the nation's business, influenced by and having an influence upon the state of employment, income and prices.

Mr. Pickersgill: And what did you say about that at that time?

Mr. Nowlan: I have here additional quotations from the remarks made by Mr. Abbott which I could cite if time permitted.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a latter day conversion.

Mr. Nowlan: I have dealt with the situation in so far as deficit financing is concerned. We have heard talks about the government being anti-British with respect to what it has done with regard to woollens. Hon. gentlemen opposite give us no credit for having arranged a trade mission or a commonwealth conference. If time permitted I could go on at length in dealing with this matter but there is one matter to which I should like to draw the attention of the house before my time runs out and that is that after all what we are concerned with here is a review of the facts; not dire prophecies, but facts. We are told that the Canadian economy is in a terrible condition, that the government has failed and that the Minister of Finance has made a mess of things.

An hon. Member: He has.

Mr. Nowlan: You may think so, my friend. We also know, and every hon. member will admit it I am sure, that the economy of this country is difficult to administer. Canada is a vast country covering an enormous area stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific and embracing areas stretching from the temperate zone to the Arctic zone. It is not as easy a country to administer as is that to the south which is, as it were, a self-contained empire embracing a tropical and temperate climate. One would assume that the situation in the United States would be much better than the situation that obtains here particularly in view of all the mismanagement in Canada about which we have heard and also because of the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite tie our economy to the coat tails of the United States economy so it is hard to divorce ourselves from it even if we wanted to. We know what the facts have been down through the years. When the United States economy went up, the Canadian economy also went up, but not quite so high because we ride on its coat tails and when the United States economy went down our economy went down further and faster. That has been our history and I do not think any one can question it.

It would be interesting at this point to glance briefly at a comparison of indices between the two countries. I hasten to admit at the outset, as was pointed out this afternoon by the hon. member for Essex East, that motor vehicle production in Canada has fallen considerably below that in the United States as is also the case with regard to pulp production which is a large industry in this country. In that case, too, we have fallen below the United States. But let us examine some of the other indices that are available. Are we really sustaining hard times, a depression? That was the sort of claim that was made in this chamber this afternoon. A thick curtain of gloom was drawn over our proceedings today by hon. gentlemen opposite but now is the time to examine the facts. Let us first examine business failures. What about business failures? Surely there must be a vast number in Canada as compared with the United States. The index reveals that in Canada we have 42.4 per cent less business failures than we had this time last year. I repeat again, 42.4 per cent less. The United States had 23.9 per cent more business failures than this time last year.

What about freight car loadings? It is not as happy a picture as we would like to see, it is true, because we are down 4.9 per cent from last year, but the United States is down 26.0 per cent.

Mr. Bourque: What about bankruptcies?

Mr. Nowlan: I have already dealt with business failures which covers bankruptcies.

Mr. Pallett: He does not know the difference.

Mr. Nowlan: I hear the laughter that bespeaks the vacant mind. What about construction contracts? We have been told that the government has undertaken no construction and that the public works program has failed. The constructon program in Canada, according to the index is up 26.8 per cent whereas in the United States it is down 11.6 per cent.

An hon. Member: How you can juggle figures!

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You do not like these figures, do you?

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate that this is painful for you but you have to listen to it. Let us consider housing starts. Housing starts are up 51.5 per cent in Canada and down 9.2 per cent in the United States. What about the percentage of the labour force unemployed? It is serious, of course, and no one seeks to minimize it for one moment. The unemployed figure in Canada is up 68.6 per cent and in the United States it is up 80.6 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: I hear the groans over there and I do not wonder at them. After all, we have been told that this is the government that brings in faulty tariff policies that will ruin Canada's exports. But what is the export picture? Canada's exports are up 1.3 per cent while the United States exports are down 27.6 per cent. Our industrial production is down 5.3 per cent which is a bad situation but industrial production in the United States is down 12.4 per cent. Again I could go on at length dealing with the figures in these indices. Of the 14 indices I have before me, Canada has lost more ground than the United States in respect to two, motor vehicle production and pulp production, but in every other case the Canadian economy is ahead of the United States economy. These are all based on dominion bureau of statistics figures so hon. gentlemen opposite will not quarrel with their authenticity.

The significant thing about these figures is that they appeared in the Financial Post of June 14, 1958, on almost the same date as the budget was brought down. Have we heard any hon. gentlemen opposite quote these figures during the course of this debate? We have listened to them spreading doom and gloom but we have not heard any facts because the facts do not coincide with the prophecies of disaster. What would have happened if these figures had gone the other way? Can you not imagine hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon not forced to prophecy, not forced to declaim and not forced to sound doom but just reading facts and saying, "What a record!" Imagine their howling about the terrible record of failure if the figures were reversed.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are some of the factors with respect to economic conditions in this country at the moment. I could go on at length but I do not want to take more time in dealing with this matter. I am convinced I have produced enough facts to indicate the truth of this matter. This government does not profess perfection. We differ from hon. gentlemen opposite in that respect. They admitted they were perfect; they boasted about it. We admit that we are not perfect.

An hon. Member: Perfect fools!

Mr. Nowlan: We have made mistakes and we probably will make more.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is for sure.

Mr. Nowlan: But we are going to make them in doing something for the people of this country and not in sitting complacently and idly by, smug in a false sense of our own security and perfection as did our predecessors in office.

My hon. friends opposite this afternoon talked and prophesied about unemployment in this country. Unemployment is a serious matter. No one—not even the hon. member for Essex East, and certainly not I or anybody else—knows what the unemployment figures will be next winter. As a good Canadian I know that the hon. member for Essex East hopes the unemployment figures will be reduced but I suspect as one who has somewhat of an interest in politics he has more than an academic interest in scanning the employment figures and seeing if they do not rise.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What does the economic survey show?

Mr. Nowlan: Regardless of what the economic survey may show—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But that is the whole point.

Mr. Nowlan: —if this government were not in power today the unemployment figures in Canada would be infinitely higher than they are now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: I know this is hard to take and I do not blame hon. gentlemen. Instead of donning the robes of mourning and gloom, I suggest that they attire themselves in sackcloth and ashes which may ensure their return to office quicker than otherwise.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I presume the Leader of the Opposition will follow me in this debate which will conclude in an hour's time with the division that will take place. This is the eighth day of this debate. The rambling prophesying which has been done has no relevancy whatsoever to the facts of the situation of Canada's economy today. Not one fact has been adduced by hon. members of the opposition which reflects upon this government or upon the administration of the financial affairs of this country by the Minister of Finance.

I simply condensed the record for a few minutes. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I thought my time was up 5 minutes ago. Instead of that I have a few minutes more to give more facts. I could give them but all the facts and all the records show that this government has given good administration to this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: The poor fellows will never learn, Mr. Speaker; they are still conceited; they are still arrogant. The Minister of Finance has taken criticism as a good sport, as it is his duty to take it, and it is the duty of the opposition to give it. He has listened to it and he has taken it. Some of it may have been reasonable—some of it was—but some of it was unfair and unjust. But in any event the Minister of Finance has the satisfaction of knowing that he, in company with his colleagues of the government, has given administration to this country during most difficult times which reflects great credit on him and which has strengthened the economy of Canada to a very marked degree.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate as it reaches its closing stages, I must begin by congratulating my hon. friend who has just sat down on his interesting contribution, during which there were times when I felt he was about to substitute the cap and bell for the black hat which he put on the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin); but there were other times when he did get down to facts and he did produce his sheaf of statistics to show that in some respects the economy of this country is not as badly off as some people may think. In so far as there are indications of strength in the economy of this country we all rejoice. But it is our duty—and he will, I know, accept this as a statement of the duty of the opposition—to point out as vigorously as we can the problems that we face and to criticize the government when we feel they are not dealing with those problems in the way in which they should be dealt with. We propose to discharge that duty.

But before making my contribution to that discharge I would like to join others, in paying my tribute to the Minister of Finance on the presentation, the very effective presentation, of his first budget to this parliament. I do so with all the greater pleasure because, as we have so often reminded ourselves in this house, he and I over the years, I was once his teacher; but I hasten to add—

Mr. Churchill: He survived it.

Mr. Pearson: —he did not get his mathematics, his economics, his logic or his philosophy from me.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Pearson: Especially his mathematics and his economics.

Mrs. Fairclough: Were you qualified to teach him?

Mr. Pearson: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I give the minister on this occasion that kind of admiration that might be felt for a ship's doctor who performs a delicate operation while the ship is pitching and rolling its way through a howling gale. It is a difficult operation that he is being called on to do.

Mr. Pallett: One that was left to us.

Mr. Pearson: And it is quite an economic gale that is now blowing around the government. The difference between the respective positions of the ship's doctor and the Minister of Finance is that the gale which the ship's doctor would have to contend with would be an act of God, whereas the Minister of Finance is performing his operation in circumstances largely of the contriving of his own government. It is quite clear that the captain has steered the ship into the gale and he is now asking a new surgeon to perform this operation. Well, has the operation been a success?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pearson: I can say this. The patient, which is Canada, will not die and we all know, regardless of where we sit, that the patient is a tough, resilient person and is going to survive this recession and is going to survive this operation. There is no doubt about that.

An hon. Member: What about the years of Liberal rule?

Mr. Pearson: I will come back to that in a minute and I will be glad to talk about the last 10 years of Liberal rule and what it meant to this country. I will be delighted to do that, Mr. Speaker, and compare those 10 years with what is happening in this country today.

This budget debate, now in its eighth day and night, is notable for some contributions and also for some omissions. It has been normally the case over the recent years, for instance, that in a budget debate the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) would give us a statement of the economy, the export trade, the commerce of the country. That has been the custom. We have not had it until tonight, indeed, in the interesting contribution which has been made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). We had no member of the cabinet participating in this debate except my hon. friend—and it is a good exception—the Minister without Portfolio, the hon, member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell). We had no contribution from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), over whom looms many of the problems we are discussing in this budget. We have had no contribution from the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

There is another omission, namely the question of dominion-provincial relations. Last night the Minister of Finance said, well, I did not discuss this in my budget speech; I discussed this a few weeks ago in a special motion that was before the house and surely the house would not wish me to repeat what I said on that occasion. It is quite true, Mr. Speaker, the house would not wish him to repeat what he said on that occasion because repetition of nothing by nothing does not add very much to our knowledge. We had hoped that perhaps the Minister of Finance on this occasion, the budget occasion, would have said something about this problem. However, he contented himself last night with criticizing us because in our speeches on this side we spent so much time in fighting the last election and that we had not accepted the verdict of the people. That was mentioned again by the Minister of National Revenue tonight. Because we had not accepted the verdict of the people we did not have enough common sense to sit down and say nothing. We must not speak or criticize because of the last election; we must not fight the last election over again in this house. If there is anybody in this house, Mr. Speaker, who fights the last election over again it is the members of the party of the government, perhaps because they get more pleasure out of the fight than we would likely get. Anyway, the last thing in the world that the Minister of Finance should reproach us for is discussing the last election. Nor has he any right to draw from that the conclusion that we have no right to criticize the government.

Indeed the Minister of Finance last night began to fight the next election, in that connection he made one statement which on reflection I hope he will withdraw. He said there was no member—and he mentioned especially on this side, the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas)—who had not the decency—that was not the word he used—who had shown any appreciation of what the government had done in this budget through the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, and he mentioned the hon. member for Villeneuve. Perhaps he thought in doing that he would help his party in the next election. If he had looked at Hansard—he should have looked at it before he made this reference—he would have found the hon. member for Villeneuve spoke in the budget debate at page 1617 of Hansard, where he had this to say:

> I was very happy to hear the Minister of Finance's statement with regard to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. This 25 per cent increase is certainly welcome, and the retroactive effect which the government intends giving to that legislation will compensate, to a certain extent, the considerable losses which the industry has suffered because of the premium on the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not all he said.

Mr. Pearson: The minister might have been generous enough to admit he had made a mistake in this regard in saying what he said last night.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not what I said at all.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will let that pass. This budget speech of the minister is a fascinating thing to study in the light of perhaps what I may be permitted to call certain Fleming fixations in the years before 1958. The first and most important fixation in those years—I wish the minister would read some of his old speeches—was that the budget must be balanced. There must be neither deficits in difficult times through tax cuts to stimulate the economy nor must there be surpluses in boom times as a hedge against inflation and for debt reduction. Down, he so often said—and his words at that time were often very vigorous —with cyclical budgeting as an instrument of the devil and Douglas Abbott, the Douglas Abbott who was quoted with so much approval by the Minister of National Revenue a few moments ago. Budgets must be balanced.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what have we now? The old Conservative orthodoxy has been thrown to the winds and the minister is now in direct and startling contradition with his former statements. He is forced and is trying to defend now what he used to condemn as heresy, the Liberal theory of budgetary policy which was stated a few moments ago by the Minister of National Revenue. In other words, he is favouring now deficit financing and we are glad indeed to welcome him into that fold. But to be logical and responsible the minister must also admit now that surpluses, debt reduction and credit restrictions may also be desirable in circumstances when expansion seems to be leading to inflation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I suggested planned debt reduction, not unplanned.

Mr. Pearson: Oh, I have read the minister's speeches. I have them all here on my desk but I do not want to bore the house by going over all of them. I will only quote a very few.

Mr. Fulton: They will be the best part of your speech.

Mr. Pearson: The second fixation is that tax reductions can be made without deficit financing. We remember those days too in opposition when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the minister and those of their colleagues who are here now said that $500 million could be cut without a deficit or without decreasing any necessary services. How? It could be done easily—Mr. Drew used to wax eloquent on this—by eliminating waste and extravagance. They said that $500 million in tax reductions should come out of such savings and reduced expenditure. Why, the hon. member for Greenwood, Minister without Portfolio, had this to say in the house on April 5, 1955, as found at page 2765 of Hansard:

> —tax reductions . . . should not come out of deficits; they should not have to be borrowed . . . We should get tax reductions from savings of expenditures—

Two years later, on March 19, 1957, he had this to say as found at page 2464 of Hansard:

> Everyone who is not a moron knows that it—
>
> Government spending.
> —could be cut down.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what has happened to that doctrine? Look at the estimates. They are the highest in our history. What about waste and extravagance? It was said that savings could be made to bring these figures down even in a time of emergency and recession and how is this unprecedented increase in our estimates regarded? As something to be deplored? Not at all. Here are the minister's own words in his speech a couple of weeks ago. As found on page 1232 of Hansard he had this to say:

> Government expenditures contributed to the maintenance of economic activity. At all three levels of government they rose by almost seven per cent despite some decline in defence expenditures.

Again, on page 1235 he said that now that business is slowing down "we shall be able to devote more of our energies to filling some of the gaps which have developed... in housing, in municipal services and in other requirements for social capital in Canada, and in laying the basic foundations for the new period of business expansion which will not be long delayed." I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the government is not careful and wise in its fiscal policies the government is more likely to be laying the basic foundation of new and strong inflationary pressures by relying as a cure for recession more on an unplanned and hit and miss policy of public works and what it calls creating additional social capital and less on tax cuts. So far as public works are concerned—

Mr. Green: Go easy on them.

Mr. Pearson: —the minister now admits that they have only—he said this in his speech the other night—a slow impact on employment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not the statement. Give the full statement. That is not fair.

Mr. Pearson: If I am misquoting the minister I will be glad to apologize but I have this in quotes from Hansard. Perhaps if I am wrong he will look it up and correct me.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You have taken a portion out of context.

Mr. Pearson: In any event, the vision of 100,000 men springing to work on a billion dollars worth of public projects has now become an acknowledged mirage.

Mr. Green: What about housing?

Mr. Pearson: It was the greatest electoral hoax in history.

Mr. Green: What about housing?

Mr. Pearson: The minister has also boasted of the superb timing in the government's threefold approach to the twin problems of recession and inflation. He said the other night that this policy had just the right balance, and I think I am quoting him accurately when I say that he said "it is the best mix of the various means" applied in a timely fashion. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a mix all right. It is a mix concocted in the last 12 months of a variety of political ingredients applied as and when political considerations seemed to dictate, applied bit by bit, dissipating and minimizing the effect on employment which a budget with a planned, co-ordinated, comprehensive system of tax reduction brought in last autumn would have had. Only now, in June and July of this year, does the government, rationalizing after the event, discover an economic purpose for steps which it took for political reasons. Only now is it trying to make an economic virtue out of political necessity.

If we look at the true size of the deficit we will all agree that the minister is certainly practising his new cyclical religion with the zeal of a convert, if not with the wisdom of the experienced worshipper. But surely he must know, if he is a student of these matters at all, and I assume he gets good advice on them, that during periods of declining economic activity in the private sector of the economy, maintaining the stability of employment and income requires more than a huge budgetary deficit. Anti-cyclical policy would be too easy to apply if it could be reduced to that simple formula. The timing of the deficit, the method by which it is brought about and its size in relation to the national product are of very great importance indeed if a reasonable degree of economic stability is to be achieved or is to be maintained.

Above all, government fiscal policy must be based on a realistic assessment of economic conditions themselves. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that even the minister will readily admit that his deficit was not planned and timed on any such rational assessment of current economic conditions. It is not leading to any new policy designed and adequate to cope with the present situation. It is merely, as I have said, as a result of the implementation of some electoral promises made when economic conditions were much different from what they are today.

Indeed, as we have said on this side time and time again, this huge deficit was implicitly contained in the Conservative program presented during the election of a year ago in June. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, while this 1957 Conservative program was being implemented in part during the last session,—and I emphasize the words "in part"—no indication of any planned or comprehensive action to deal with the recession was given by the government at this time. Indeed, the measures then introduced could not have been initiated by the government to deal with increasing unemployment, because almost until the very end of the last session the ministers denied—and they denied it repeatedly in this house—that a serious economic situation was developing. As a result we now have a built-in deficit created on the spur of the political moment. The attempt made by the minister to give us a post mortem rationalization of the sporadic action taken by the government will not change the facts.

Therefore it is not the deficit as such that we are criticizing, because deficits are required in the kind of situation we have in this country at the present time. Even though this deficit represents a complete reversal of financial and economic policy on the part of those who are bringing it in, it is not that which we are criticizing so much as the method or rather the lack of method used by the government in bringing it about. Furthermore, most of the additional items responsible for this deficit—except, of course, the drop in tax yields—constitute long term commitments which the government will find almost impossible to reduce if the economic climate were to change in the next few years, as we all hope it will not change. I recognize of course, as my party did at the time, that most of these items—tax cuts, increased social security benefits and the others—might well have been desirable in themselves for social or humanitarian reasons. But there was no possibility whatever at that time of considering them also in the framework of the economic outlook and of their long term inflationary implications.

The government systematically refused last autumn to present to the house a realistic assessment of the economic position or to give us a proper national accounting. Surely all must now realize that as a result of the unrelated actions, or perhaps I had better say as a result of the action related only to the political situation taken at that time by the government, new and important financial rigidities have been introduced into our economic structure which, in the minister's own words, have planted an inflationary time bomb which might later go off with a dangerously explosive effect. That is a very graphic way of putting it.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, all this is very different indeed from the planned and co-ordinated tax cuts applied in a manner and in a place where they could give the maximum impetus to the economy and to employment. That is what we proposed in the last election campaign as something which should have been done by this government last autumn. We stand by those proposals today. We certainly do not apologize for them in any way, shape or form. They were proposals which at that time were considered to be economically sound by some of the best economic thinkers in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not by the people.

Mr. Pearson: They were proposals put forward in the midst of a grave unemployment situation and, as I have just said, without any benefit of a national accounting by the government or without complete and full information either of the economic situation or of the government's policy with regard to it which we should have had in the House of Commons last autumn. As a comprehensive and co-ordinated emergency unemployment program they made sense. In the eyes of the economic and financial experts in this country they made far more sense than did the sporadic and unrelated approach made by the government to this problem at this time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But not to the people.

Mr. Pearson: It was certainly not our fault that they could not put them forward last autumn or early this spring within the framework of a budget and a national accounting. That national accounting should have been given in view of the promises made during the election campaign a year ago and in view of the attacks made on the monetary and fiscal policies of the previous government. It had been definitely promised by the minister himself. If that had been done, and it was not done—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not promised.

Mr. Pearson: The promise has been put on the record in this house at least half a dozen times. If words mean anything at all—and perhaps they do not mean very much to my hon. friend—those words mean that he did promise to introduce a budget into the house at the last session.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I deny that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: The record will have to speak for itself, Mr. Speaker. If that had been done Canadians at that time would have been able to form an idea of the course to be followed by the government and the proposals from other parties could have been made and considered in the light of a full knowledge of the situation. But no such action was taken.

What did we learn from the minister last December about the situation in this country? The estimate of his predecessor, Mr. Harris, of revenue was $5,170 million, made in March, 1957, and he accepted that estimate of revenue. Last December it was accepted. That will be found at page 2002 of Hansard. The other day in the house he told us that no substantial reduction in revenue was likely except from the 1957 tax reduction. We were told that. This is the kind of information on which we had to make up our minds and base our policies. What were the facts? Revenue dropped $510 million to $4,660 million and much of that drop—more than half of it—had nothing to do with tax reductions. As for expenditures, these were $534 million higher in spite of all the Tory talk about reducing expenditures, which talk was repeated by the minister himself on December 6 and, if he likes, he can read it at page 2003 of Hansard in order to refresh his memory of what he said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to be unfair but he purports now to be quoting figures given by me last December which were with reference to the fiscal year 1957-58. But by a peculiar form of elision he slipped on to say that the revenue receipts were $4,660 million. Those are for the fiscal year 1958-59 and are an estimate.

Mr. Pearson: I am not misquoting, Mr. Speaker, and I am not misunderstanding the minister. Surely he does not deny that revenue dropped last year from the figure which Mr. Harris gave us in the spring and which he accepted as the estimate of revenue last December.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It did not drop to $4,660 million.

Mr. Pearson: It was on the basis of his acceptance of those figures that we have to operate at this stage and in spite of that information which we got and which did not turn out to be accurate information. Of course, I do not expect the minister to be infallible and omniscent in these matters.

The expenditures now proposed, however, are far from anything that any one on this side could possibly have anticipated in the previous session of parliament, provided we believed in any way, shape or form the figure which they gave us and their protestations of cuts in expenditure. The result of all this was that Mr. Harris estimated for last year a surplus of $151 million, leaving out the $100 million which my hon. friend always added to that surplus. Even at the end of January of this year, the Minister of Finance insisted that this surplus, which he called a respectable surplus, would be achieved by what he called prudent management. That will be found at page 4019 of Hansard. We learned in June of this year that the position was very different indeed and that instead of this respectable surplus which was to be achieved by prudent management, we got a deficit of $39 million. This was the kind of information, or these were the facts on which we on this side had to operate in working on our financial and tax policies for a recession.

Now let me come to a third and very fierce fixation held by the minister and which I think has now been liquidated by the responsibility of office. It often has a salutary and liquidating effect. This fixation is the vicious effect of so-called tight money on the business and economic situation last spring.

Tight money, that was the culprit! The Liberal culprit responsible for the pause, the slowdown, unemployment and everything else that was bad. The Liberals did it all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: As a result of their tight money policy they were responsible for everything.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: That is just what I had hoped to hear; that is the way the fable goes. It continues that the tight money policy was the culmination of those years of misrule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Those years of misrule under which Canada became the most envied country in the world, achieving a position of wealth, power and high respect unparalleled in its history, which the minister well knows, because outside this country he acknowledges it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What?

Mr. Pearson: In his speeches he acknowledges it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister should read his own speeches, particularly the one made in Florida last year.

Mr. Pearson: He acknowledges the fact that our country is envied and has been for years the envy of all other countries in the world.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It has been envied a great deal more since June 10, 1957.

Mr. Pearson: We have now come to the end of this ten year period—and what a period of time it was. It was a period, to use the words of an hon. member—I believe from Nova Scotia—when he was speaking the other night, of wounds and scars. Wounds and scars on a national economic body which during those years was perhaps the healthiest national economy in the world.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: Don't take my word for it.

[Mr. Pearson.]

An hon. Member: Don't worry, we won't.

Mr. Pearson: I will quote an authority far more impressive to hon. members opposite than myself, namely, the Minister of Finance himself. In his budget speech reported in Hansard at page 1237 for June 17, 1958 he talks about the rapid development which has been taking place in the Canadian economy in recent years. He also refers to Canada's rapid economic growth of recent years. How did we manage to accomplish this rapid economic development in Canada at a time of such terrible misrule? Does this sound as if the Tory government inherited a decaying country, weakened and destroyed by Liberal misrule. The minister is right when he speaks like this, and he is wrong when he talks the other way on the hustings, and he knows it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I talk the same way everywhere, and you know it.

Mr. Pearson: What, then, caused the recession?

An hon. Member: You caused it.

Mr. Pearson: That is the trouble with some hon. members, that they can think in no other terms than party politics, but times are a little too serious for that kind of political party approach. At the beginning of the election campaign on February 14—

An hon. Member: We are not supposed to be talking about the election campaign.

Mr. Pearson: —I said the cause of the economic recession—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps my hon. friends who have not spoken in the debate would kindly wait their turn.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Pearson: I hope, Mr. Speaker, that those who are making these interjections will not acquire the kind of reputation which some members in the past have acquired, to the effect that every time they open their mouths they illustrate the emptiness of their minds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Here is what I said on the influence of the recession on the decline of the economic activity:

> During the second half of 1957 trouble really began to spread. Demand for our products, both here and abroad, lessened. This brought excess capacity, declining private investment opportunities and, with an expanding labour force, growing unemployment. For a country like Canada, when both private investment and exports go down, you can expect a substantial increase in unemployment.

That was a consequence, or a part of it, of the recession in this country as it existed at the beginning of the election campaign. It was not very long afterwards that my analysis was confirmed by the annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada published on February 28, 1958 and hon. members will recall the reaction of the Tory party to that statement of the governor of the Bank of Canada. I recall, and I recall very well, the reaction of the minister himself to that analysis of the situation, but what does he say now that he is chastened and sobered by the responsibility of office?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The same thing.

Mr. Pearson: Oh, well let him read what he says. I quote from his carefully prepared analysis contained in the budget speech in respect of which he had the benefit of some pretty good expert advice and assistance. He does not repeat the stupid partisan charge that tight money was the cause of the change from expansion to recession, and that therefore it was all our fault. He in fact repudiates both his own and the Prime Minister's campaign explanation of the "pause". He does not even mention tight money as a cause of economic decline, but he does have a lot to say about the decrease in world demand for Canadian raw materials and our consequent condition of oversupply and unused productive capacity.

Why, his observations on this matter in the budget speech might have been written by the governor of the Bank of Canada himself.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What about all the references to credit restrictions, high interest rates and so on, before we came into office?

Mr. Pearson: The minister had better read his remarks as recorded at page 1231, as follows:

> As the boom lost momentum in the latter part of 1957—

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: That was the latter part of 1957. I would now like to quote from a later passage in the same speech, as follows:

> The rate of economic growth slowed noticeably during 1957 as the forces which underlay the great surge of 1955 and 1956 spent themselves.

The great surge under the Liberal administration!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: He continued and said that this surge, this excessive pace of 1955 and 1956, was straining our resources of men and materials despite very large borrowings abroad.

Incidentally, I do not recall hon. members opposite who were in the house in those days complaining about the excessive pace of our progress during those years, but that surge, that pace, if you like, did represent danger, the danger of serious inflation, as the minister now admits. It was Mr. Walter Harris in his budget who emphasized that danger and took steps to meet it as a result of which steps factious and partisan men condemned him and the prejudiced echoes of that condemnation are still heard in this house.

We also remember the Prime Minister and his misleading and unworthy use of carefully selected passages from a secret report of the Department of Trade and Commerce in an attempt to show that it was not inflation but recession and unemployment which was the immediate and real danger last spring. This was referred to by the hon. member for Essex East this afternoon. The Prime Minister said we had been told all this by the experts and had ignored their advice and that this had caused all the trouble.

We now know that this was a false charge and the impropriety of the tactics used in making the charge have now been illustrated by the Prime Minister himself.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a true charge which has been confirmed.

Mr. Pearson: If we were to be criticized—and how bitterly we were criticized in this house and on the hustings for "hiding" that report 15 months ago, when it was not asked for—what is the Prime Minister now doing when he is hiding the report of the same body for 1958, which has been asked for.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I cannot allow the hon. member to proceed on that phase, because that is the subject of a motion presently before the house.

Mr. Pearson: Very well, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling and will leave that aspect of my remarks. But I will return for a few moments, if I may, to this very important question of inflation. What does the Minister of Finance now say about inflation? He charged us on this side with taking no interest in the danger of inflation. Believe me, this question has been very much in our minds, and not only during this debate. The minister says in his budget speech: "Inflation now remains a very real danger". This is the inflation which he said in this house only last November had been checked. If this danger still exists, and it certainly does, in July 1958, how much greater was it in the spring of 1957, so we ask ourselves what light does the minister's statement and the budgetary papers accompanying it throw on this situation and what is the government doing to keep this danger of inflation in check.

But when I talk about this I get back to the deficit, and I am quite sure that any observations I am going to make will result in my being accused of spreading doom and gloom, as we always are on this side when we try to state the facts as we see them. Those gentlemen opposite who accuse us of spreading gloom should recall their speeches made in 1955, and before that when we were in a very mild recession and when we were subjected to a far more bitter assault than that to which the goverment is beng subjected now; when they showed much less sense of responsibility in a far less serious situation than we are trying to show in a much more serious situation. It is in this spirit I give my analysis of the danger of inflation.

The minister has provided in his main estimates for an expenditure of $5,179 million, and in his supplementary estimates for $58 million. To this we must add an old age security fund deficit amounting to $190 million, and a further $70 million with respect to the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, plus a C.N.R. unspecified deficit, and I think the minister will probably not quarrel with me if I put this at $55 million. All this brings the total to $5,552 million against revenues estimated at $4,660 million.

That is a deficit of $892 million, and it is a deficit which even the most conservative commentators—conservative in the small "c" sense—in this country are accepting, including the director of the tax foundation. The Minister of Finance denied that this afternoon, but here is the statement of the speech which Mr. Perry of the tax foundation made, headlined: "Predicts Deficit Near $1 Billion". This is a prophecy which has not been made by us alone but by bank presidents, economists, by the head of the tax foundation, and by others qualified to form an opinion, and it will probably prove to be somewhere near the right amount because you have to add to that figure of $892 million, civil service pay increases, payments under the Agricultural Prices Stabilization Act and new payments under the gold mining act, more money, perhaps, for the provinces and so on. Therefore we have the right to say—and we can surely say it without being accused of attacking the national interest—as is being said outside this house, that on the minister's own calculation of an increase of 2 per cent in the gross national product next year, the deficit will likely be over $1 billion.

The minister does not tell us very much about how he reached his own optimistic deficit figure, but it is based on a forecast of a gross national product of $32 billion which is, as I have said, a 2 per cent increase, assuming there is no significant rise in prices and assuming normal crops. After what we have heard this afternoon about the situation in the west, that is a somewhat risky assumption to make. However, that is his assumption. He also leads us to believe he is basing that estimate on the 1958 investment outlook, this assumption of a 2 per cent increase.

But according to the bulletin entitled "The 1958 outlook for private and public investment" published by the Department of Trade and Commerce, present investment plans indicate that total capital expenditures, both private and public, are nearly 3 per cent lower in 1958 than in 1957. We all know, of course, the great influence that capital outlays have in determining the gross national product, and it seems to me difficult to understand how the minister can reconcile a 2 per cent increase in our gross national product with a 3 per cent decrease in total capital outlay without any price rise and with agricultural prices remaining normal.

About that I would say first, that we on this side of the house are finding it impossible to accept the optimistic conclusion of the minister, and we have evidence—and it is not selective evidence, and it is not put forward for any other purpose than an attempt to face facts in a realistic way—which justifies, I think, our caution in this regard. The most recent piece of evidence we have—and the minister must surely be acquainted with it—is the figure published by the dominion bureau of statistics on the gross national product for the first quarter of 1958. That figure is $31.7 billion which, seasonally adjusted at annual rates, shows an increase of only 0.7 per cent over the comparable adjusted figure for the last quarter of 1957.

Furthermore, that particular estimate is based on an arbitrary estimate of crop production for 1958 and ignores the fact that final product prices were slightly higher in the first quarter of 1958. There was in fact a decline in volume of production of goods and services of about one half of 1 per cent compared with the same period a year ago, and a drop in the volume of non-farm output of nearly 2 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for us to accept this optimistic conclusion of the minister because the evidence seems to us to point in the other direction, and if that is the case surely the minister should be taking this into consideration in the plans and policies which he must be preparing at the present time.

But even if we assume an increase of 2 per cent in gross national product in 1958, what would be the employment outlook for the current year? The hon. member for

Essex East made his projection this afternoon, and I think, without going into the details he went into, that if there is this 2 per cent increase in the gross national product and if there is the same ratio between that figure and employment which has existed over recent years, it would mean we would have an increase of about 1 per cent in employment in this country in 1958 as compared with 1957. If there is an addition to the labour force of 2.5 per cent we would have considerably more unemployment next year than last year, and the peak figure would be far too high. I am willing to leave it at that.

The implications with regard to unemployment are serious, but the implications with regard to inflation are just as serious. I do not need to tell the minister this, but his dilemma—and I mentioned this in a speech in the House of Commons on the address—is that he has at the same time to deal with the danger of recession today and the danger of inflation tomorrow.

If we take into account the real budgetary deficit and the net requirement of cash non-budgetary transactions which comes to $775 million on the minister's own figuring and which, in a sense, is a deficit of its own, the government will have to borrow—as the minister must well know because I am sure the figures are haunting him—approximately $1.8 billion in 1958-59. In addition, nearly $2 billion will be needed to pay off maturing securities. This means that the government's borrowing program for 1958-59 will reach nearly $3.8 billion of which approximately $1 billion is due to government deficit.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do not magnify that. I think my hon. friend ought to be responsible. I gave the figures.

Mr. Pearson: These are the figures which the minister himself has used.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, they are not.

Mr. Pearson: Will the minister tell me what the figures are?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Three billion four hundred million dollars was the total I gave, not $3.8 billion.

Mr. Pearson: All right, $3.4 billion. But if the minister were to check again I think he will find that the figures total $3.8 billion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not at all.

Mr. Pearson: That is, in the minister's own words, "a major financial operation".

Mr. Stinson: That is what he said.

Mr. Pearson: That is what the minister called it and certainly it is a major financial operation, especially when we consider the very important fact not mentioned by the minister, that total savings by individuals and businesses in Canada in 1957 amounted to about $6 billion and that the new capital requirements of the private sector of the economy in 1958 will amount to about $5.7 billion.

Even if the minister receives—and again I am using his own words—"the closest co-operation between the Department of Finance, the Bank of Canada, the chartered banks and all investment institutions and dealers", which he asks for and to which he is entitled, he has indeed a major financial operation ahead of him. I do not need to tell him that unskilful handling of this financial operation will have very serious consequences for the country and I am sure everyone on this side of the house will wish him well in the conduct of this complex, difficult and important operation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you.

Mr. Churchill: He is equal to it.

Mr. Pearson: If you think my predictions on these matters, coming from a political source, are suspect, I can refer again to the director of the Canadian Tax Foundation who is an accepted authority in this field. He recently stated his view that in addition to the economic deficit this year there would almost certainly be another substantial deficit in 1959 and that only a "roaring inflation"—that is what he called it although I certainly hope it can be avoided—could increase federal revenues sufficiently in the next year to balance the budget.

The director was gloomy about the long term prospects. The best he could see was a "modest federal surplus by 1967", the year that will mark the centenary of confederation. I hope that the words once applied to Sir Robert Peel when he was chancellor of the exchequer—I think by Disraeli—will not be applicable to my hon. friend. Disraeli said:

> I see the chancellor of the exchequer sitting on the edge of bottomless deficits fishing for budgets.

But, says the minister, notwithstanding all these expenditures and deficits—and these are his words—the "net burden of the public debt will remain well below what we carried quite easily only a few years ago." He did not go on to say that, if this is true, it is due largely to Liberal fiscal and monetary policy after world war II. We know what that policy was. It was laid down in the white paper on unemployment and income published in 1945. That economic and financial policy was systematically and intelligently applied by Liberal governments throughout the post-war period. There were short recessions in 1949 and 1954 and tax cuts made on those occasions helped the country get out of them. For the other years during that period inflationary pressures were predominant and there were budgetary surpluses. As a result of this anti-cyclical policy, a high and stable level of employment and income was maintained and the public debt was reduced by $2.2 billion. As the Financial Post said just the other day:

> The Conservative government is thus reaping the reward of those big budget surpluses by which Mr. Abbott reduced our national debt from 1947 on by . . . $2.2 billion.

I was going to go on to talk about trade matters but I have not time for that and in any event I will have another opportunity to talk about trade. But I want to summarize by saying that this budget contains very little which gives any encouragement to us to believe that the government is going to follow an expansionist trade policy. There are indications in it—and we were not entirely reassured by the eloquence of my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue this evening—that the government on the other hand may in a time of recession fall back on restrictionist policies which they attempted to follow with such bad results for the country in the past. There are indications in the budget, also in the field of trade, that the government is adopting a very peculiar way of preparing for the commonwealth economic conference, first by ignoring the offer of freer trade and secondly by flouting the goodwill of the British by raising the duty on woollens.

My main criticism of the budget is that it contains nothing that will effectively meet the most major domestic problem before us today, that of unemployment. There is nothing in it to encourage trade expansion. It contains very little to give us encouragement in facing the problems of unemployment and recession which lie ahead. In short, Mr. Speaker, this budget, introduced by the longest budget speech in our days, is the shortest in constructive purpose and forward-looking policy we have had since 1935. It represents an inadequate and ill-planned attack on a situation more serious than any we have faced for many years. It shows all the evidence of having been bedevilled at birth by the electoral necessities of those who produced it. There is no route here in the unplanned path that will lead us out of our difficulties. No wonder that in the country it has been received—shall I say—with indifference. That is probably the best one can say for it. It has been unwept, unhonoured and unsung. It is, in short, unworthy of the seriousness of our time.

[Mr. Pearson.]

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), who is not in his seat, made an interesting comment to his constituents in Toronto on March 1 last in explaining why a budget was not brought down last autumn. The congenial minister put it this way, and I quote from the press report of his speech on that occasion:

> You don't really accomplish anything in bringing down a budget.

Mr. Pallett: That is taken completely out of context.

Mr. Pearson: The budget that was brought down a few short days ago may, I am afraid, prove that the Minister of Transport was right at least on this occasion. This budget will not indeed accomplish the purpose which we all desire on all sides of the house to see accomplished, that of putting Canada back on the high road to prosperity and full employment which characterized those ten great years in our history, 1947-57. The minister should talk to his colleagues about it.

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, since I have only a very short time at my disposal I must admit that I am confused in knowing where to start in the speech I had taken a brief moment to prepare but in view of the fact that again tonight hon. members of the Conservative party have been challenged to produce evidence concerning extravagance and waste under the previous Liberal government I would like to draw to the attention of hon. members of the Liberal party an article which appeared in the Montreal Star of January 16, 1958, which bore the following headline, "Project Launched, Then Abandoned—Cost: $6 Million". Part way through the article we find these words:

> The works department paid an architect $48,675 for professional services in October, 1956, although the architect had died the previous July. The money was subsequently paid to the architect's firm but no release was obtained from the deceased's estate.

An hon. Member: I'll bet he voted, too.

Mr. Ricard: Again we read:

> A foreign service officer in the external affairs department was granted 18 weeks' sick leave with pay though he had resigned from government service. Mr. Sellar said: "It is generally accepted that (sick) leave may be granted only when it may reasonably be regarded that the civil servant will return to duty upon recovery."

I ask hon. gentlemen to my right, if this is not extravagance and waste, what is it? Further along in the same article we read:

> An employee of the agriculture department was paid between $1,259 and $1,659 annually for four years but $600 of the annual payment was classed as casual earnings so that the employee could qualify for war veterans allowances.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 6 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the main motion.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Fleming, Eglinton) which was agreed to on the following division:

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rea in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: The house in committee of ways and means to consider a proposed resolution to amend the Income Tax Act. Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the leader of the house has indicated the business for tomorrow. Can he indicate the business for Monday?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we shall take the estimates of public works and agriculture. On Monday we will move to go into supply.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, July 4, 1958

The house met at eleven o'clock.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. R. H. Small (Danforth) presented the first report of the standing committee on industrial relations, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is unanimous consent, because we oppose the idea of committees sitting while the house is sitting.

Motion stands.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I regret to advise the house that the government has received the resignation of Mr. A. D. Dunton as chairman of the board of governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This resignation was received yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Dunton was appointed chairman of the board in 1945, and from 1945 to the present time he has served in that capacity. It has been, I think we would all agree, one of the most difficult positions in the public service, and he has shown in the administration of that office a combination of tact, firmness and ability which has characterized his term of office and placed the administration on a high level of efficiency which reflects credit on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and on himself. The high standard of C.B.C. radio and the tremendous growth of C.B.C. television culminating in the inauguration of the national microwave system on July 1 will serve as monuments to his record of service to Canada.

Mr. Dunton has received various offers of employment during the last year, all of which he has turned down, but he has been offered one which appeals to him because it provides a different opportunity for public service—one which, I understand, has been tendered to him officially this morning, and which he has accepted, namely, the presidency of Carleton University.

We all regret the fact that his services are lost to the public service of Canada in the field of radio and television, but at the same time we welcome the fact that he is entering another area of public service where he will be able to make a real contribution to the development of this country. His resignation will be effective on July 15.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members of the house will have heard with great regret the news the minister has just given us of the resignation of one who has served his country with distinction, devotion and intelligence in one of the most difficult positions that any Canadian could hold. Our regret at this news is mitigated to some extent by the other announcement that he is accepting the position as head of one of the two great universities in Ottawa, where he will have further opportunities of public service.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is with great regret certainly that we in this group learn of the resignation of Mr. A. D. Dunton, chairman of the board of governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I believe his resignation is a blow to Canada and to the C.B.C. which has been built up to such great efficiency over the years. Mr. Dunton presided as chairman of the board of governors while the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was in a state of rapid growth particularly in respect of its television facilities. The corporation has strongly cemented national unity in Canada amongst both our great races and has helped develop a distinctive Canadian culture. Without reservation we are sorry to see Mr. A. D. Dunton resign from this important position. Naturally we are pleased that he will continue to serve his country in another highly important capacity. We wish him health and happiness in his new post, and we anticipate from him the same distinguished service in the years to come.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENT RESPECTING PROPOSED REORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread publicity given to the statement I am alleged to have made yesterday that there were to be drastic reductions in the militia, and the serious effect and repercussions that may arise from that publicity, I would like to make a brief statement on the actual situation. The question of the reorganization of the militia is now under study along the lines that the organization should be based primarily upon the ability of various localities to support militia units, and partly on the proximity of possible targets for enemy attack.

I still want to stress that the militia is an important element in our deterrent, because it is to be trained so it can help to sustain the life of this nation under a nuclear attack and, therefore, make that attack less effective than if there were no such organization.

There are some localities which experience has shown have not been able to maintain the number of units that had been previously allocated to those localities. Some of these units will have to be amalgamated with others, but there is no drastic reduction contemplated in the militia.

REPORTED DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS UNIFORMS TO WELFARE AGENCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my first question to the Minister of Defence Production, based on a somewhat abnormal continuing curiosity.

In view of the reports that arrangements were made by the minister for the sale of clothing sufficient for one thousand men at a cost of $1 to assist a welfare organization in the rehabilitation of certain unfortunate persons, would the minister inform the house if it is the policy of the government to render such assistance to other organizations undertaking similar rehabilitation programs?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I have received a request from the Meurling Institute of Montreal to sell for a nominal sum used clothing for the rehabilitation of certain unfortunate persons in that district. Although it was a most reasonable request, no decision has as yet been taken on it.

CANADIAN PACIFIC STEAMSHIPS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FURTHER STATEMENT ON STRIKE SITUATION

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, because of the wide interest in the coastal steamship strike and the interest which I know hon. members in this house have in this matter I want to follow up and summarize what has transpired since I made my statement on Wednesday last, in which I said that I had forwarded to the parties concerned a recommendation of Mr. Eric Taylor who is acting on behalf of the Department of Labour in trying to bring the parties together.

I have received replies to my telegram from the Canadian Pacific Railway accepting the conditions as outlined by Mr. Taylor subject to their being accepted by the other interested parties. I received other telegrams from R. E. Greaves, the national president of the national association of marine engineers, and G. F. Bullock, secretary of the Canadian merchant service guild, advising me that these two organizations confirm acceptance of the recommendation as outlined by the mediator, Eric Taylor, and will comply. The only one we have not heard from definitely is the seafarers international union. A referendum was being taken yesterday in Vancouver, and we are awaiting the result of that referendum and their decision.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LIMITS ON COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED CATTLE

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act to remove the statutory limits on the amount of compensation for cattle slaughtered pursuant to the act, except when slaughtered pursuant to area or herd disease eradication programs, in which case the limits are to be increased.

Motion agreed to.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING EXTENSION OF BENEFITS AND CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to extend the benefits of the act and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration thereof.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for two additional judges of the high court of Ontario, for one additional judge of the appeal division of the supreme court of New Brunswick and for six additional judges for the county courts of Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ECONOMIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government any plans to investigate possible economies in the organization of the civil service, for instance by the appointment of a Canadian "Hoover" commission, a proposal which the Prime Minister and his party advocated so strongly when they were in opposition?

Mr. Argue: Let us hope not.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is true that over the years this party advocated a commission similar to the Hoover commission in the United States. It is equally true that over the years those who are now in opposition opposed that suggestion with all the vehemence at their command. This government will give the fullest consideration to this matter, and when it is in a position to announce a decision it will be made to the house.

Mr. Pearson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the statement of the Prime Minister now replacing the statement he gave to the press yesterday on this subject?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no replacement in any way, as my hon. friend will find if he will read the question and the answer of yesterday.

Mr. Pearson: I will read them.

Mr. Pickersgill: A contradiction.

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF ANNUAL VACATIONS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister explain to the house the unprecedented delay in proclaiming the Annual Vacations Act which was given royal assent on January 31 last, and can this act be proclaimed immediately so the people affected may get their holidays this season?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I expect to make an announcement to that effect in the early part of next week.

FRUIT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPRESENTATION RESPECTING PRICE SUPPORT STABILIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture to further enlighten the house and, I trust, promote the happiness and welfare of the tree fruit growers in British Columbia. Can the minister inform the house when a decision can be expected in connection with the application of the British Columbia fruit growers association for assistance under the Agricultural Stabilization Act for the 1957 crop?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the British Columbia fruit growers association requested some assistance for the 1957 apple crop in January of this year. I assured them at that time that when they had finished marketing that crop, which was not in fact until about a month ago, we would give consideration to their request. They wrote again on March 27 and asked that consideration also be given to assistance on the 1957 crops of apricots, prunes and two other fruits. I have forgotten which ones they are at the moment. Then they made a formal submission on June 11.

I wrote to them in reply pointing out the fact that we had made a commitment to give consideration to assistance as far as the 1957 apple crop was concerned. We also asked them on June 24 to supply additional information with respect to the 1957 apple crop, information which we will require before we can make any determination and come to a decision whether assistance should be given. Up to date this information has not been received.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ROUYN—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Did the minister receive a telegram from the city of Rouyn asking that seasonal benefits be extended, or that the government take all necessary steps to help the unemployed?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The answer to the first part is no. Since we have extended seasonal benefits twice already, it is not the intention of the government to extend seasonal benefits further.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—REFERENCE TO STATEMENTS BY PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he aware of the reported statement of Premier T. C. Douglas of Saskatchewan with regard to the whole South Saskatchewan dam agreement, which statement is found in the Ottawa Citizen of July 3 and reads in part as follows:

> He claims the province is being asked to pay more than the federal government, although he does not regard power as a separate project.

Is he also aware of the statement of the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan as reported in the Ottawa Journal of July 3, which reads in part as follows:

> He called it "a tougher deal than Jimmie Gardiner offered us when he was federal agriculture minister in the former Liberal government."

If the minister is aware of these statements, would he care to comment on them?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have seen these press reports and certain others, and I must say I was surprised and disappointed to see them in view of the extremely generous terms we have offered to the province of Saskatchewan respecting the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam. With respect to the statement made by Mr. Nollet that we have offered tougher terms than the former minister of agriculture, Right Hon. Mr. Gardiner, offered to them at one time, I would only say that we started our negotiations with Saskatchewan on that basis and continually improved our offer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the minister that the other day the Prime Minister tabled the terms of the offer which I take it he is now endeavouring to explain in response to this question. I assume the matter will come before the house for approval, and it seems to me it would be better to defer discussion until that time, because this discussion is taking the form of a debate.

[Later:]

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, if it is in order I would like to ask the Prime Minister a factual question in connection with the federal government offer in respect of the South Saskatchewan river dam. Would the Prime Minister inform the house what concessions have been made by the dominion government to the province of Saskatchewan in connection with the number of acres to be irrigated by the province as a condition of the participation of the dominion government in the South Saskatchewan river dam project?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question I think I should refer to a statement made by the Canadian Press and, as such, a statement which affects the privileges of this house. This statement was to the effect that the premier of Saskatchewan had said that the province is "deeply disappointed" that the requested federal government loan to help build the South Saskatchewan river dam had been rejected and accused Prime Minister Diefenbaker of "rank discrimination against Saskatchewan".

If this statement was made by the premier of Saskatchewan, all I can say is that it is in error. The total cost of building a dam up to $100 million will be shared 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the provincial government. Of that 25 per cent one-half will be given as a loan by the federal government to the government of Saskatchewan in further assistance with respect to this project.

In so far as concessions are concerned, a very material concession was arrived at as the result of consultation, and that is that while at all times in the past it was understood that if the project was proceeded with 100,000 acres of irrigated land would have to be assured within one year after completion of the dam, we have met the province of Saskatchewan in that regard by reducing by 50 per cent the number of acres subject to irrigation within that period. The other concessions were in general referred to by myself when I brought this matter to the attention of the house on July 2, 1958, and I will not repeat what I said on that occasion.

The premier of Saskatchewan and the minister of agriculture of that province, of course, by their attitudes in this very important matter seem to be generating provincial pre-election schemes.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I think the comment of the Prime Minister has been most regrettable, and I am going to explain why I believe this to be so.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Argue: I am sure the Prime Minister does not want to misjudge a comment of the premier of Saskatchewan. Is the Prime Minister aware that on the C.B.C. television news at eleven o'clock, following his announcement in the house, an erroneous report was made that the Prime Minister had announced that the Saskatchewan application for a loan had been turned down. If that report was on the C.B.C. news is it not possible, though I have no personal knowledge of this, that the report was also in the press in Saskatchewan, and that that was the newspaper report which the premier of that province is answering, just as the Prime Minister himself is answering a news report today?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is entirely erroneous, Mr. Speaker. What I was referring to was an additional amount over and above the assistance in the building of the dam, for which the government of Saskatchewan was asking; not assistance in connection with the financing of the dam of which, as I have already stated, we will agree to provide 50 per cent. I am referring now to the one-half of the $25 million on a 20-year debenture basis. Over and above that the premier of Saskatchewan asked that this government should also finance the province's own power development in Saskatchewan, and I said we turned down that proposal. That is a different matter altogether, and there was no erroneous report on the C.B.C.

Mr. Argue: I think my interpretation of the news at any time is as accurate as the interpretation of the Prime Minister, but may I ask this question. For what reason has he changed his position from that taken a few years ago in this house when he said that this project should be fully a federal responsibility—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Argue: —and does he not know—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This matter will become a general debate if it is pursued in this vein. It seems to me that sufficient explanations have been given to make the matter clear.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister if he thinks that consideration should not be given by this government to the power needs of Newfoundland equal to that given by the government to the power needs of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to note the interest of my hon. friend in the power needs of Newfoundland, which were neglected while he was in office.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a supplementary question, does the Prime Minister consider that the power needs of Newfoundland were so neglected? The minister from Newfoundland said the opposite.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC WORKS

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROTECTION WALLS ON NAVIGABLE RIVERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the controversy between Quebec and federal authorities regarding responsibility for building protecting walls on navigable rivers, even if not or little navigated, would the minister satisfy all interested parties by submitting the case to the Supreme Court of Canada for clarification? If not, why not?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this question is a hardy perennial and I suggest it is not in order at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Caron: Why?

Mr. Pickersgill: It will be in half an hour.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

REPORTED INTENTION TO ORGANIZE TRADE UNION MONOPOLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Has the attention of the Minister of Transport been drawn to reports that Mr. James Hoffa, head of the international teamsters union, plans to organize a trade union monopoly of the workers of the St. Lawrence seaway? Would the minister have any comment to make on this report?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I have read the same newspaper report as the hon. member, and I have no comment to make.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

WINNIPEG—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of continued reports of further substantial lay-offs of employees of Canadian National Railways at many points across the country, including the laying off of 75 employees in Winnipeg today.

Would the minister say what action the government is prepared to take to prevent further lay-offs at this time and whether, as a result of his conversation with the Canadian National following his statement of June 6, the minister can assure the house that long-service employees recently laid off will be re-employed at an early date?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. In reply I can explain the matter no more clearly or fully than I did when I spoke in the house on this matter on June 6 last, when I said as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, as I have told the house on numerous occasions these matters are completely within the jurisdiction of the management of the Canadian National Railways. They have informed me on many occasions that whenever lay-offs are made that is not done until every possible means of keeping the men employed have been explored, and that when lay-offs are necessary everything will be done to re-employ the men just as soon as possible.

Mr. Argue: As a supplementary question, may I say that I think the minister should read on from his statement of June 6, wherein I asked him whether he would make representations to the Canadian National and he replied by saying:

> Yes; I will bring the hon. member's representations to the attention of the management.

If he did, can he explain to the house why the Canadian National is apparently accelerating the rate of lay-offs, thus adding to the very serious unemployment in the country at this time?

Mr. Hees: I did bring the hon. member's representations to the attention of the management of the Canadian National, as I assured him I would do. I was again assured by the management of the Canadian National that whenever these lay-offs are necessary they are not made before every possible means of keeping the men employed is explored, and that whenever it is possible to find work for these men they will be re-employed. But they have pointed out to me, and I point out to the hon. member, that if there is no work for a man to do, the Canadian National cannot employ him.

Mr. Argue: I thank the minister for his statement. I wonder if he would be prepared to discuss with the Canadian National the question of the laying-off today of 75 employees from the shops in Winnipeg?

Mr. Hees: I have discussed this whole matter of lay-offs on many occasions with the Canadian National management, and this particular lay-off, although it is just as regrettable as all the others, does not enter into a different category. I know exactly how the management feels about this and other lay-offs and my speaking to them again about this will not change the effect of it, I feel sure. However, I shall be glad to speak to them again about this particular lay-off.

LIVESTOCK

REQUEST FOR STEPS TO ASSURE ADEQUATE FEED SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in view of his important announcement of yesterday concerning the movement of feed grain on the prairies, and in view of the serious situation facing stockraisers because of the shortage of hay and other feed this year, which is causing many of them to sell stock early and threatening a glut on the market, if he would inform the house whether or not the government is giving consideration to some action to assure an adequate feed supply for the coming months, including this winter?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My responsibility in the matter was with regard to wheat, oats and barley, the feed grains. I did make an announcement yesterday in the house as to action in that regard.

Other matters with regard to fodder would come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce be kind enough to bring this question to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think possibly the hon. member for Essex East is losing his eyesight.

This matter of fodder for cattle in the drought areas of the west has been causing us very serious concern. We have been getting daily reports from the officials of the department in those areas as to what is the situation, and I have been in touch with the ministers of agriculture for Manitoba and Saskatchewan who are coming here next week in order to discuss this matter. We will then be able to consider steps to deal with what might be a very, very serious situation unless rain falls in that area within the next two weeks.

If we do get fairly general rainfall in the drought areas during the next two or three weeks the pastures will come back and a fair amount of feed will be provided. Otherwise there is going to be an extreme shortage of feed, and undoubtedly steps will have to be taken to provide fodder for the livestock in those areas.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture could tell us whether the government would consider paying the cost of the freight for the movement of fodder and feed grains to drought areas in the prairies, in somewhat the same manner that is now provided for the movement of feed grains out of the prairies to eastern Canada, since there is a very great emergency in this case.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated a minute ago the reason the ministers of agriculture for Manitoba and Saskatchewan are coming down here next week is to discuss these very matters, as to what steps should be taken and what is the best way to meet the threatened situation. At that time we will be having discussions upon these very points about which the hon. member is asking.

POWER

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPLY TO LETTER FROM PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Prime Minister if he has yet made any reply to the letter from the premier of Newfoundland dated February 19 which was tabled yesterday?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister has consideration yet been given, as was publicly promised by the Prime Minister in St. John's, to that request and is it the intention of the government at the present session to propose an amendment to the statute as requested by the premier of Newfoundland?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the immortal words of the hon. member when he was on this side of the house, when a decision is made it will be announced.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUDBURY, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF ARMOURY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question through you to either the Minister of National Defence or the Minister of Defence Production. I wonder if either minister could advise the house what progress has been made toward the construction of an armoury in Sudbury following the announcement that was made this spring?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Consideration is being given to the construction of an armoury in Sudbury, because the accommodation occupied by the militia in Sudbury is no longer available.

Mr. Mitchell: I do not think the minister quite answered my question. How far has the department proceeded with the planning of this armoury? When may we expect it?

Mr. Pearkes: Work is being carried out on the plan for this armoury.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether in view of the important international developments of recent weeks there is likely to be an early opportunity to discuss external affairs in this house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to say yet just when, but I would say that within the next week, as a result of arrangements, I hope a date can be fixed.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED EASIER FINANCING OF PURCHASE OF OLDER HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister care to comment on the proposal made yesterday before the Senate finance committee by the president of the house builders' association that consideration should be given to making financing easier for the purchase of older or so-called used homes?

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the question relates to matters before a committee of the other house?

Mr. Garland: It was not asked in that spirit. I asked the minister if he would care to comment. The basis of my question is a press release in yesterday's newspaper.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I suggest it would be quite improper for me to comment on evidence that has been given before a Senate committee.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WATER RESOURCES

LAKE NIPISSING—STATEMENT ON CONTROL OF WATER LEVEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Nipissing concerning the control of the water level in lake Nipissing. This level, apparently, is very low at the present time, and the hon. member asked whether we could not arrange more effective co-operation measures for control, together with the Ontario hydro commission.

I have now had an opportunity to check this situation with the departmental officials, and I can tell the hon. member that the co-operation between the Ontario hydro and the department is as good as can be, up to the limit that we cannot ask them to seriously endanger their water storage as required for power production needs. Officials of the department have telephone communication always available with officials of the hydro, and both agencies currently exchange information. Hydro also sends to the department weekly and monthly reports on data of discharges and storages.

Hydro have just advised an official of the department that there is no possibility of dumping more water than they have been doing recently. They point out that the Temagami, which is their largest storage, is now two feet below normal, and there is no possibility of dumping any more of the storage water. Spring run-off this year was practically nil, and as a consequence storages are subnormal.

Recently, as a result of some little rain and a high percentage of relative humidity reducing evaporation, the lake level has raised by 0.24 foot. However, unless run-off increases further, water power requirements may necessitate a reduction in discharge at the power dams in view of the present critical situation.

I greatly regret that I cannot give the hon. member a more encouraging report.

ATOMIC ENERGY

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN AGREEMENT AS TO USE FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the pattern of three-power co-operation developed during world war II on atomic matters, could the minister inform the house whether Canada will be invited to join in the agreement signed, I think, the day before yesterday between the United Kingdom and the United States for co-operation on the use of atomic energy for defence purposes?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will accept that question as notice.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he has the answer to my question of yesterday on the strike on the pipe line at Port Arthur?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thought the hon. member directed that question to the Minister of Labour. I have no answer for him today, but I will try to have one for him on Monday.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YUKON—REPORTED THREAT OF DAMAGE FROM FOREST FIRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, two days ago I directed a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources concerning the forest fire situation in the Yukon. Since that time, in view of the fact that my information indicates an increase in the number of these forest fires with a consequent increase in the danger to private and public property, I am wondering whether the department has taken any further action in respect to sending assistance to those engaged in fighting these numerous fires.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, we were in contact with the commissioner of the Yukon on Wednesday. There are now 44 fires in the Yukon, and the old ones still have not been brought under control. A tremendous effort is being put into controlling them. The wardens we sent to assist a week ago are proving very useful. The commissioner has requested additional assistance, and yesterday four additional wardens were sent, three from Banff and one from Prince Albert. We are also sending some replacement relief for the forest engineer of the territorial government of the Yukon, who has been seriously overworked in the last two weeks. The replacement, I believe, has already flown in from Fort Smith. There was also a request for equipment, and this was sent in either by air freight or air express yesterday.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Harbours and Rivers Engineering Services—

350. Ontario, $11,642,900.

Mr. Allmark: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the committee a matter which is of the utmost importance to my riding of Kingston and, I believe, of equal importance to the Canadian people. In the planning of the St. Lawrence seaway there was no provision made for the deepening of one small section approximately one-half mile in length at the foot of Wolfe island, some 20 miles east of Kingston. Because there was no provision made for the deepening of this particular section the Canadian channel which has been used almost exclusively since shipping began would no longer be the channel through which the vessels using the St. Lawrence seaway would pass. The western terminal of the St. Lawrence, which has been on the Canadian side of the river, would be transferred to the United States side.

The fact that this channel has been on the Canadian side has made Kingston the pilot's terminal. It has brought industry to this area. It has been responsible for building up shipyard and ship repair facilities which gave to Canadian labour millions of dollars annually in wages. It is obvious that if this one section is not deepened Canadian industry and labour located at the western end of the St. Lawrence river will not only lose the benefits they have enjoyed but will also lose those greater benefits which will result from the building of the St. Lawrence seaway.

It is sound reasoning to believe that ship repair facilities will be required at the junction of the St. Lawrence river and the great lakes. Ships that are damaged in the canals and in the narrow channels to the east of Kingston require repair before proceeding into the open lakes, and ships which suffer damage in the lakes cannot jeopardize the seaway system by proceeding through it without repair. Therefore I suggest that if this one obstacle is allowed to remain and block off the Canadian channel and prevent ships which require repair from reaching the repair facilities now established at Kingston, then these facilities will be built in the United States channel.

The Kingston drydock is owned by the Canadian government. Its cornerstone was laid in 1890 by a Canadian of great vision, Sir John A. Macdonald. It is my hope that this government will take the steps that are necessary to keep in Canada that which we already possess, the western terminal of the St. Lawrence system.

In the early days of this parliament I brought this situation to the attention of the minister. My submissions on behalf of the riding I represent have been enthusiastically and vigorously supported by the Kingston chamber of commerce and by the city council of Kingston. I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works if he and his departmental engineers have had sufficient time to consider my request for the opening of the Canadian channel in this particular area, and, if so, what action the government proposes taking.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member headed a delegation from Kingston which came to Ottawa a few days ago and interviewed the Minister of Transport and myself concerning this proposed deepening of the channel at the eastern end of Wolfe island. As a result of the information we gained at that interview we are having a further survey made, and I am hopeful that it will be possible to take some steps along the lines the hon. member has advocated today. We can assure him that we are very conscious of the importance of seeing that the famous old Canadian city of Kingston should not suffer in any way through any lack of action on the part of the government.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister for an explanation of the expenditures for Port Arthur and Fort William, and the relative balance toward Port Arthur rather than Fort William. I also put to him my former question concerning the distinction between dredging and harbour improvements.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the last thing I should like to do is fan any flames of rivalry between the cities of Port Arthur and Fort William.

Mr. Fisher: There are none.

Mr. Green: I learned shortly after I became Minister of Public Works that when I wrote a letter to the mayor of either of those cities it was wise to write the same letter to the mayor of the other. I have no intention today of going into a discussion of finances in such a way as to lead to the thought that there was any discrimination on the part of the government in dealing with the two cities referred to. It just so happens that last year we spent more money in the harbour of Fort William than we did in the harbour of Port Arthur. This year the reverse is true.

Mr. Pearson: There was an election.

Mr. Green: It had nothing to do with the election.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just inclining a little to the C.C.F.

Mr. Green: I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would allow his thoughts to sink so low. This year there is more money to be expended in the harbour of Port Arthur. As both the hon. members for Port Arthur and Fort William know, there is to be a lakehead dock erected and a lakehead harbour commission is being set up, and I am sure this co-operation will help a great deal to draw those two cities together in just the same way that the attitudes shown here by the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Fort William have been most co-operative on this extremely difficult question.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, as my thoughts, in the words of the minister, are low, may I—

Mr. Green: I did not really mean that.

Mr. Pearson: —ask him what progress, if any, has been made in the construction of a dock at Cutler, Ontario, to serve the very important Elliot Lake mining area, a dock which was promised by the Prime Minister as a government dock in the election of June, 1957?

Mr. Green: Evidently this dock is in the constituency of the Leader of the Opposition, Algoma East.

Mr. Pearson: That is right.

Mr. Green: He is very wise to be deeply interested in it. There was a suggestion that a coal company was interested in establishing a dock there and an attempt was made to work out some co-operative undertaking between the company and the government; but recently the coal company seems to have lost interest. I fear that at the moment not much progress is being made.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am aware of that particular development, and I suggest to the minister that one of the reasons it has been very difficult indeed to work out this co-operative arrangement, by which the cost would be shared by the mining company and the coal company, with the government assisting in various ways, is that the Prime Minister promised that they would construct the dock. That was a little discouraging to the private interests who were about to contribute.

Mr. Green: Well, those private industries are not usually so thin-skinned. I think they understand pretty well what is required where a dock is to be constructed under conditions of this kind. We shall be very glad to have another look at the situation.

Mr. Pearson: I appreciate the minister's assurance in that regard because, as he knows, this particular area of Elliott Lake is becoming increasingly important, and the shipments from that area are increasing in volume every week. A dock in this particular area is becoming more and more important.

Mr. Garland: Can the minister comment on the extent of the repairs and plans for the dock at Sturgeon Falls this year? Perhaps when he is replying he could also clarify the responsibility assumed by his department for the approaches generally to government docks.

Mr. Green: As the hon. member will have noted, there is no item in the estimates for Sturgeon Falls dock although there may be—

Mr. Garland: Just repairs.

Mr. Green: There may be small repairs under way there. There is $1,000 for paving the approach to the dock. The practice in these cases is to construct a road to the nearest municipal or provincial highway.

Mr. Garland: Construct a road to the nearest street or highway?

Mr. Green: Yes. Mind you, that would be limited to construction on government property.

Mr. Garland: Oh, that is the qualifier? In view of the answer the minister was kind enough to give me earlier today concerning the water level of lake Nipissing, I should like to say a word. This is a very serious matter, of which I am sure the minister and his officials are well aware. It affects the employment of people who normally would be working in the mill at the present time. It affects perhaps close to 200 people in that category. No doubt it will affect the possible employment later of 300 to 400 people in the woods operations.

I realize that this is a very difficult problem. The desirable level of that lake is 642 feet. I think the department endeavours to maintain 642.2 feet. At the moment I think the water level is 640.69 feet, or that was the level a day or so ago. In view of the answer the minister gave this morning, stating there is little hope of getting water from the upper Sturgeon river or from any of the adjoining areas, I am wondering whether the minister would have his engineers visit the area with a view to having another look at the situation, to see if anything can be done to facilitate the mill operations there to get into production.

I have in mind one thing. I recall that on an earlier occasion I recommended to the department that they enter into an agreement with the company. I am not suggesting any such course at the moment until we have more facts. The recommendation was that the department enter into an agreement with the company on a 50-50 basis for some dredging in that area which would enable the mill to operate when the water is low. That work was done.

In view of the seriousness of the situation, and particularly because it affects the employment of several hundred people in my district, will the minister instruct his engineers to have another look at the situation to see whether anything can be done to get that mill back into operation?

Mr. Green: We will be glad to have our engineers look over the situation again. The hon. member will realize that the problem really is not one of dredging but of maintaining a minimum flow in the river which runs into the lake.

Mr. Garland: I recognize that additional dredging may not be the answer. I hate to be troubling the minister with those problems; I know that he is anxious to get on with his estimates, but I wonder whether he would care to comment on the progress of the Mattawa dock project?

Mr. Green: The intention of the department is to proceed with the construction of the dock at Mattawa as soon as we can get an appropriate site. We hope that will be in the very near future.

Mr. Garland: I appreciate the minister's remarks, but can he say whether there is any difficulty in acquiring a site? My reason for mentioning the matter is that I recall that during the last election campaign a group of local citizens were called together to have their picture taken. They represented a good cross-section of the community.

Mr. Green: With you?

Mr. Garland: No, not with me. The group represented the municipal, business and cultural life of the community. I recall that the mayor was there as well as members of the chamber of commerce and members of the senior and junior Progressive Conservative associations. The Conservative candidate in the last election was also there. The minister says that the dock will be built if and when a site is located, but the picture to which I have referred was taken on the site that had been decided upon prior to that time. Would the minister comment on whether there is any difficulty in acquiring that site?

Mr. Green: Apparently the difficulties with regard to a site have been overcome. The delay was caused by uncertainty as to what the provincial government was going to do by way of developing a park. The hon. member can assure these distinguished citizens who had their picture taken that the dock will be proceeded with very quickly.

Mr. Garland: I must say that I appreciate that statement very much. My reason for pursuing the matter was that I thought there was some confusion in the minds of the officials of the minister's department as to the location of the dock. It is true that the provincial government is developing a park area further up the river. The dock site recommended and requested originally by the Mattawa chamber of commerce and put forward by me on their behalf to the former administration was in the town of Mattawa. I hope there will be no further confusion and that the dock will be built on the site originally requested by the Mattawa chamber of commerce and other interested citizens.

Mr. Nixon: Would the minister care to comment on the matter of increased harbour and wharfage facilities at Sault Ste. Marie that may be necessary because of the development of the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. Green: As the hon. member knows, he brought a delegation from Sault Ste. Marie some months ago to discuss this matter with me. We then sent out an investigating group consisting of representatives from the Department of Transport as well as the Department of Public Works. They had very satisfactory interviews at the Sault and made their report. We have now engaged consulting engineers to prepare the necessary plans for a structure there. In addition, negotiations are under way with Algoma Steel concerning the proposals. The harbour at Sault Ste. Marie is, of course, very important and we are very much concerned to see that adequate steps are taken there to enable the city to participate in the increased business which will follow the completion of the seaway.

Mr. Nixon: Then it is the intention of the minister and the department to proceed with the project in some manner?

Mr. Green: A good deal will depend on the possibility of completing arrangements with Algoma Steel.

Mr. Nixon: But negotiations will continue?

Mr. Green: Oh, yes, we are pressing them. Officials of Algoma Steel were in Ottawa interviewing departmental officials just a few days ago.

Mr. Garland: Would the minister comment on the announced dock project at Cache Bay? While the minister is looking up the material, I might say that this project was approved early in 1957 and then for some reason was held up during the balance of the year. In January of this year I brought the matter to the attention of the minister's department, and was advised at that time that "in view of subsequent representations received" the project was being held up. I wrote in reply asking what these representations were, and at that time the minister was kind enough to write me a letter saying that the project would be gone ahead with. That was on February 7 of this year. The minister informed me that the dock would be built and that the local municipal council would be so advised. To date nothing has been done there to my knowledge. Can the minister give us some encouragement?

Mr. Green: Apparently the difficulty in this case was that we could not get co-operation from the municipal authorities in the selection of a site for the dock. The project was a marginal one in any event, and in view of the difficulties concerning a site we plan to drop it.

Mr. Garland: If I may pursue the question of the difficulty in locating a site, may I say that the site is there and has been there for 50 years. There was a dock there years ago which gradually fell into a state of disrepair.

Mr. Green: There was difficulty with the municipal officials. Apparently they would not co-operate.

Mr. Garland: Is that the only reason the project has not been proceeded with?

Mr. Green: Under those conditions it was considered not worth while to go ahead with the project. If the hon. member cares to look into the situation again I will be very glad to consider any representations he may make.

Mr. Garland: I thank the minister for that. Is this policy or decision of the minister something new that has developed since his letter to me of February 7? I would remind the minister of that letter, in which he said:

> The matter has been reconsidered in the light of present conditions of seasonal unemployment, and it has now been decided to proceed with this undertaking as soon as possible, possibly before the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. Green: Apparently this difficulty has continued for well over a year. There is a question about the dock site. I have not the details here, but the municipality was supposed to acquire a site for us. They declined to do that. As I said a moment ago, the proposal is a very marginal one in any event. It is questionable whether or not it should be built, even with the co-operation of the municipal authorities.

[Mr. Garland.]

Mr. Garland: That is the only thing that is standing in the way? May I just clear up that point? That is the only thing standing in the way of this dock being built, the failure of the municipality to acquire a site for your department?

Mr. Green: That is the difficulty; but mind you, as I said before it is a very marginal project and would have to be looked at very carefully.

Mr. Garland: I do not want to annoy the minister, but in the light of his letter of February 7, in which he said it has now been decided to proceed with this project as soon as possible, possibly before the end of the fiscal year—

Mr. Green: This site trouble made it impossible to go ahead with the project. There had been discussions, apparently, for over a year about this site.

Mr. Garland: That is really the only thing that is holding it up, the matter of a site?

Mr. Green: I would have to look at it to see whether or not it is a project with which we should proceed. If the hon. member will let me have representations, particularly having to do with this site difficulty, I shall be glad to go into the whole question thoroughly.

Mr. Garland: I find it rather strange to reconcile what the minister is now saying, if I may say so with great respect, with his statement in the letter that it had been decided to proceed. One of the reasons for the decision to proceed was the matter of seasonal unemployment in the area. I could not agree more with that decision, because there were several hundred unemployed people in that general area at the time the minister wrote. It seems to me a firm decision was made at that time to proceed, but now the minister is saying perhaps he might have another look at it. I should like to clarify whether or not this letter means what it says, that the dock would be proceeded with just as soon as possible, and that it is just a matter of having the municipality acquire a site.

Mr. Green: Well, as I have indicated previously when the estimates were under discussion, we brought ahead every work that could be proceeded with having in mind that it would help create employment. This, of course, was one of those works. But then, after this letter was written, apparently we ran into this obstacle of the site which it was thought had been adjusted, but it turned out that was not the case. This was the reason we did not go ahead with the work.

Mr. Nixon: We northern Ontario members are keeping the minister busy. I should like to speak with reference to the Montreal river harbour, which is roughly some 80 miles north of Sault Ste. Marie. For some time difficulty has been experienced in getting in and out of the harbour because of a gravel bar that forms at the mouth of the river. The departmental engineers made a survey this spring, after I had brought to their attention the fact that fishermen could not get in or out of the harbour. This constitutes a real hardship for those who use the harbour, especially when we consider that the nearest harbour on either side of the Montreal river harbour is roughly 25 or 30 miles away; and when we consider also how rough lake Superior can get at times there is real danger for those who use the area for fishing purposes.

The engineers did make a report, and I believe they suggested a plan to correct the situation by some permanent arrangement. I should like to impress upon the minister the urgency of proceeding with that work this year without fail.

Mr. Green: Apparently that work is being done now; the dredging is under way.

Mr. Nixon: I am sorry, but I think that is a temporary arrangement to open the gravel bar that is across the mouth of the river at the present time.

Mr. Green: The work being done now is of an emergency nature, but once that has been completed we are going ahead with the additional work which will be of a permanent nature.

Mr. Nixon: I thank the minister very much for his assurance.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the minister how the liaison works between his department and the Department of Labour with regard to seeing that the fair wage act is being carried out in contracts let to tender. My question arises out of an incident that took place in the Kenora district in connection with the building of a small wharf last year.

Mr. Green: The situation with regard to labour relations is handled entirely by the Department of Labour. In other words they police the contracts let by the public works department in order to see that the regulations having to do with labour are complied with fully. This does not come under our jurisdiction at all.

Mr. Fisher: In the contracts which you let is there a clause which requires the contractor to pay the going rate in that area, and is he aware of this clause?

Mr. Green: Yes, there is a provision that the contractor must comply with regulations established by the department.

Mr. Peters: I should like to mention a dock in my area, the dock at Haileybury. This dock was built many years ago for the very large lake steamers used in the early days of the development of the area. It is an exceptionally large dock, I would say, for these days. Although it was repaired in 1947, it would appear to me that more money was spent on other things than was spent on the dock itself. It is now in very bad shape. There has been some talk of abandoning it, and signs have been erected by the Department of Public Works that they will not be responsible for accidents which occur on the dock. It has reached a state of disrepair where something has to be done.

The town of Haileybury itself has spent a great deal of money improving that particular area of the waterfront. They have put in new parks. They built a small landing platform for small boats separate from this large dock and the breakwater that goes with it, which is made out of rock. The dock has cement abutments and retaining walls and in places these walls have deteriorated and the rock has spilled over into the water. The wooden part of the dock at the end of the approaches was not completely finished when repairs were last carried out, and it would be impossible to dock in some places.

There are still many small boats on this lake, and the lake is swept by a number of steamers of the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company; quite a lot of pulpwood and logs are driven to the mills at Timiskaming and these boats could, and do to some extent, tie up at several of the other government docks. They could also use this dock if it were in a satisfactory condition.

There is a fairly large number of sizeable pleasure boats on the lake which could also use these facilities if they were available, and do to some extent use this dock. However, in its present state of disrepair it is a hazard to the area. I understand the town has made repeated requests for some assistance in this regard. A number of aircraft have flown out of this area in the past, but when the dock got into such a bad state of disrepair they moved to New Liskeard, where they have a small dock.

There is some talk of having a luxury pleasure craft in the near future, so that people can go out during the day, dine and dance in the evening and make a return trip at night. Negotiations are proceeding at the present time in this respect, and if the project is pursued it would mean that the craft would have to go out of Haileybury and these facilities would be necessary. Such craft would be fairly large in size.

If I have understood the replies of the minister to questions of other hon. members, some of this money to be advanced will be spent on repairs and I think such repairs could be carried out quite cheaply. There has been some talk of entirely abandoning the dock, but I would suggest to the minister that in this particular instance such a course is not feasible because it would be a hazard for all time. Many thousands of tons of rock have been poured into this dock, and to dispose of all that rock so the area would be safe for the operation of any type of boat would cost a great deal more money than to keep the dock in proper condition.

Mention has been made of the lighting facilities on this particular lake, which is quite large. At places it measures 12 to 14 miles across, and it is quite a long lake; people come to the area from 10 to 12 miles away, sometimes at night, and in cases of storms proper lighting would be of great assistance even to those people using the smaller type of boats.

I would like to know if the minister has given further consideration to the representations made over a period of years—probably not only to the minister himself but to his predecessors—with respect to this situation.

Mr. Green: This situation has arisen in many parts of Canada. There are not the same number of steamers now using these waters as was formerly the case. In their place we are getting a very large number of pleasure craft, and we find ourselves with docks in many places which were never designed to meet the conditions which exist today.

In this particular case the department would be willing to demolish the dock, but when that suggestion was made there were objections from local citizens to any such course being followed. It would be fairly expensive, of course, because of the rock and other structures to which the hon. member has referred. We will be very glad to have another look at the situation, but this underlying difficulty does exist and I think there is a need for a gradual change of policy all over the country in order to meet existing conditions.

Mr. Garland: There is one item I would like to raise, although I am not sure under which item it should come. This arises from the fact that the navigable waters act is a sort of joint responsibility between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport. My problem is with respect to lake Nipissing and the treacherous shoals which are creating and have created a serious problem. This problem is aggravated this year, of course, by the low water level.

I particularly have in mind the elimination of these shoals. The marking of them would, I recognize, be the responsibility of the Department of Transport, but I am wondering whether, with respect to the elimination aspect, that is the responsibility—since this lake does come under the navigable waters act—of the federal government or of the local authorities.

Mr. Green: The responsibility for keeping navigation open rests upon the Department of Public Works, not under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. That act provides for the granting of licences before any structures can be built which would interfere with navigation on those waters. The question of shoals in navigable channels is the responsibility of the department.

352. Alberta and Northwest Territories, $219,000.

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister about a certain wharf and breakwater upon which I had understood work would be done this year. Unlike the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, although I have many miles of shore line I want only one wharf for all my boats, and that is at Pigeon lake. Although I had understood, as I say, that work would be done on this wharf during the current year, I see no mention of it under the item.

Mr. Green: There is evidently no provision for construction of a dock at Pigeon lake. I will be very glad to have a memo from the hon. member concerning this work, and we will look into the matter.

Item agreed to.

353. British Columbia and Yukon, $2,739,000.

Mr. Hardie: I cannot see anything new, of course, in the estimates this year, but I am wondering, with regard to this estimate, if the minister can tell me whether or not his department will improve the wharf at Yellowknife to enabling the trucking companies which are shipping vans across Great Slave lake to take these vans off the barges? I think a request was made to this effect by the transport and trucking companies of the area, and I am wondering whether the minister is going to do anything about it this year.

Mr. Green: The departmental officials tell me there has been no request for an extension of this wharf. None has come to the department. This may be an error, but that is the situation.

Mr. Hardie: A request was made some time ago to the public works office in Edmonton. The improvement necessary is small; it would not cost a great deal of money, and it would facilitate the work of the trucking companies and the water transport carriers in unloading these vans. I hope the minister may be able to find something in his estimates; a few thousand dollars would do this job this year.

Mr. Green: If the cost of any work of this type is less than $1,500 the job would be done by the Edmonton office direct without our being advised of it, and that may have happened in this particular case.

Mr. Hardie: I am not too sure what the cost would be, but I hope the officials will contact the Edmonton office and find out if they have proceeded on the basis of a project costing less than $1,500, and see what can be done this year.

Mr. Green: We will be very glad to do that.

Mr. Hardie: Another question, Mr. Chairman. Since the speech from the throne indicated that a railroad would be built to the south shore of Great Slave lake, I am wondering if the minister can tell me whether or not the department has made plans for a wharf at Dead Man's island at Pine point.

Mr. Green: We have the answer to this question. There are elaborate plans completed for a wharf at Dead Man's island at Pine point.

Mr. Hardie: In that case there must be an estimate in existence of what the cost of this wharf will be. I wonder if the minister could tell us that?

Mr. Green: There are several phases in the development of this project, and the first one would cost just under $1 million. As the others are added that figure will be increased by several million dollars.

Mr. Hardie: Then, Mr. Chairman, at Hay River, Northwest Territories, which is some 60 miles from the ore deposits at Pine point, we have a natural harbour which has been used for many years. I would suggest to the minister that his department should carry out a proper survey of the harbour at Hay River to estimate the cost of dredging that harbour, or of putting some sort of breakwater out from the mouth of the river which would prevent the drifting of the silt, and compare that with the cost of filling at Dead Man's island in order to reach a conclusion as to where the proposed railroad should, preferably, have its terminus.

The railroad will have to go to Pine point, but with regard to the terminal point of the railroad as far as water transport along the Mackenzie river or across to Yellowknife is concerned, a decision can still be made as to the best terminus for the line if a proper investigation is carried out.

Mr. Green: Evidently a thorough survey was made of the different points that could be used, and it was considered that the Dead Man's island site is the best.

Mr. Hardie: Has the minister any idea, if investigations have been made, of what would be the cost of improving the harbour at Hay River in order to do what it is planned to do now at Dead Man's island?

Mr. Green: I am advised that it would be considerably more, largely because of the necessity of extensive annual dredging.

Mr. Hardie: I can see that, if you had the annual dredging. Before we leave this point, the minister will recall that I suggested putting out some sort of fill, as must be done at Dead Man's island, anyway, to protect any boats that may be docked between the island and the mainland. Could not a fill be put out into Great Slave lake at some point along the river in order to prevent the silt from moving in, thus making dredging unnecessary?

Mr. Green: That has been checked by the engineers and they report it would not be feasible.

Item agreed to.

353. British Columbia and Yukon, $2,739,000.

Mr. Green: I have some answers for the hon. member for Kootenay West in reply to the question he asked on June 6. The first was in regard to dredging between the upper and lower Arrow lakes. This is being continued as in the past. Departmental dredge No. 311 will be carrying out the work this year.

The hon. member also asked about bank protection in the vicinity of Burton, British Columbia. Approval has been given for carrying out repairs to bank protection just below Burton. Materials will be stockpiled during the summer in order that the work may be carried out by day labour during the next low water period.

Then the hon. member asked about the removal of snags on the Arrow lakes. The department will continue to remove snags in the navigation channel on the Arrow lakes as it has done in the past. The fourth question concerned river clearance on the upper and lower Duncan rivers. Here again the department will carry out clearance of snags from the upper and lower Duncan rivers to enable it to be used for navigation.

The hon. member asked about some old piles in the lake near Howser on which driftwood coming down from the Duncan river catches. This problem has been referred to our officials in British Columbia for attention. He also asked about wharves on the Arrow, Kootenay and Trout lakes. It is the present intention of the department to keep wharves on these lakes in repair.

The hon. gentleman also inquired about a wing dam at Arrowhead, British Columbia. The problem at Arrowhead involves the delta made by the Columbia river where it empties into the upper Arrow lakes. This delta is continuing to build and change, and contrary to local public opinion it is not a simple matter of rebuilding a wing dam which satisfied the conditions of some 50 years ago. Two investigations have been carried out in recent years into this problem, and it is the opinion of departmental engineers that a very large expenditure would be required to alleviate the problem at the Arrowhead wharf. A relocation of the wharf may ultimately be necessary, but for the present there appears to be no reasonable alternative except to remove the sand and debris which the river brings down into the area.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to express my appreciation to the minister for dealing with the questions I raised, and I want briefly to speak about one or two other matters. I was interested when he mentioned that there would be consideration of a change of policy with respect to wharves in order to meet changing conditions. I was interested in learning that what is a rapidly changing condition in the Arrow lakes is apparently Canada-wide, an increase in small craft. There have been requests from various places to the department to consider the building of launching ramps for small craft. There are some places where there are no wharves for long distances and where a launching ramp, which I understand would not cost a great deal, would provide great assistance to tourists and people visiting, and assist the economy of the district. I think the minister has heard of an application from the people of Boswell for the building of a ramp there. With respect to ramps I would like to urge consideration of the need for them on the large lakes in a few places, and there must be a similar need across Canada.

My second point is that I would like to know the policy of the department with respect to breakwaters. It is an amazing thing how news travels. People move about more than they used to. A great many of my constituents who are interested in launch clubs and things of that nature have informed me in rather vigorous terms, as usual, that the department has been in the habit of building breakwaters for launch clubs at Kelowna, Penticton and other points on the Okanagan lakes to protect small boats around the edge of the launch clubs from storms. I would like the minister to explain the policy of his department with respect to the building of breakwaters under those circumstances.

The minister referred to dredging. I want to bring to his attention two other reasons for the continuation of dredging in addition to the current need occasioned by the use of tugs and an increasing number of small boats. In fact last year I had 85 craft pass my ranch. The minister knows where I live.

Mr. Green: That is an estate.

Mr. Herridge: That indeed is an overstatement; I should have said my log cabin. We had 85 craft last year come from Grand Coulee, and the number is increasing rapidly. I am told by the commodore of the Seattle yacht club that possibly there will be double that number within the next two years. That shows the necessity for keeping the channels in reasonable shape.

In addition there are two long-term reasons I want to bring to the attention of the minister. When General McNaughton was giving evidence before the external affairs committee with respect to the development of the Columbia river for hydro purpose he mentioned a proposed dam at Murphy creek, and said that because of the great increase in navigation at the present time and the possibility of navigation for the purpose of transporting heavy freight in the future, plans were being made to put locks in any dam that may be built at Murphy creek. Then again he said that in order to provide adequate storage for that dam, while not at the same time causing flooding in the upper Arrow lakes, it would be necessary to do considerably more dredging in the development between the two Arrow lakes in what is generally termed the narrows.

I bring that to the minister's attention because it is a long-term point of view. Owing to the rapid industrial development under the Navigable Waters Protection Act there are naturally increasing applications for the building of dolphins and the erection of piles, and also for the extension of works on the banks of the Columbia river and Kootenay lake. While I realize that certain aspects of those applications come under the jurisdiction of the provincial government, navigation comes under the authority of the federal government; and I hope wherever possible when these applications are made the department will ensure that one of its investigators visits the site and makes certain of the effect of the proposed work and also consults the organizations representing the local people, because irritations can develop quickly due to the fact that all the circumstances surrounding the applications have not been given sufficient consideration.

In conclusion I wish to advise the minister that I accept the offer extended the other day by his erstwhile parliamentary assistant to be included in the pipe line to the Department of Public Works so I can be notified of what is going to be undertaken under this vote in my constituency during this fiscal year.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there is not a pipe line, there is a wide open door. The hon. member asked about launching ramps. We are building a launching ramp at Kuskanook at the southern end of Kootenay lake and an investigation is being made by the officials of the department in British Columbia into the proposal that there should be one constructed at Boswell. With regard to breakwaters, this is one of the features of the new policy which is being worked out. In many places they are now being given the fancy name marinas. We are getting more and more requests for marinas.

Mr. Herridge: We are more simple people. We call them breakwaters.

Mr. Green: The hon. member is not as simple as he pretends. Each case has to be treated on its own merits. A marina or breakwater was built at Kelowna some years ago and about the same time one at Penticton, but conditions in each area are so different that it is almost impossible to lay down a general rule. In some cases we get the co-operation of the provincial authorities and the municipal authorities and undertake a joint project. It is very difficult to work out a definite policy that applies everywhere.

With regard to locks in any dam at Murphy creek on the Columbia river, I am grateful to the hon. member for raising that question because I agree wholeheartedly with him that navigation should not be stopped by any works that go in at that particular point on the Columbia.

Then he asked about investigations made where an application is received under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. We try in every case to have an engineer inspect the site in order to see whether the proposal is a proper one. This is the practice in the department, and I am advised that officials are very careful to see that no harm would be done if consent were given. I think that covers the points.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 353 carry?

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, before the item under discussion, having to do with improvements of harbour and river works, carries, can the minister now answer the question I asked him at the last sitting of the committee with respect to whether negotiations between his department and the municipality of Ste. Anne de Sorel concerning the construction of a retaining wall there have been completed?

Mr. Green: I think the hon. member for Skeena had a question to ask on item 353.

Mr. Howard: I have one or two questions to pose under this item. I do not intend to take the minister on a vicarious trip, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate did the other day, even though I know he would enjoy it very much. I would rather have him come personally to make such a tour. Incidentally, I might add that should the minister desire to travel again along the coast I am sure if he will get in touch with the international woodworkers of America they will be more than pleased to transport him on the loggers' navy. The minister would then be the first and only cabinet minister of the federal government or any provincial government to have the honour of making such a trip.

The minister may recall that I had some correspondence with the department about a study and surveys respecting the possibility of dredging what is known locally as Seven Mile point but is more correctly known as Wiah point on the northern coast of the Queen Charlotte islands. It was my understanding from previous discussions during the last session and correspondence that an engineering survey into the possibilities of dredging at Wiah point was going to be undertaken this year with a revised conception of the nature of the project and a scaling down of the type of work to be done in order to bring down the cost of the dredging. Could the minister give us a resume of what is being planned with regard to that project this year?

Mr. Green: What was the alternative name?

Mr. Howard: It is known locally as Seven Mile point but the correct name is Wiah point. I see the hon. member for Essex East smiling. This is really quite a serious matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, it is lovely country.

Mr. Green: I will have to get further information from my officials. We have no record of it here at the moment. A question was asked this morning by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin concerning a dock at Pigeon lake. I answered that there was no such project, but we know this centre as Ma-Me-O Beach. There was work done there which was completed on July 1 at a cost of approximately $15,400.

Mr. Speakman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Howard: I did not understand too clearly what the minister said about the contents of the books before him. Did I understand him to say there was no reference there to the particular name I have mentioned? If there is no reference in the details he has before him under that name or another name applying to the same locality, am I correct in guessing that no work is programmed for that particular place this year?

Mr. Green: If the cost is under $15,000 it may be covered in the general vote. We are sending for further information. I do not have any details here at the moment.

Mr. Howard: I would say that the cost would be far more than $15,000. I should like to mention one or two other items coming under this vote that are of great necessity and importance to that northern part of the province. A few years ago a contract was let under the previous government to dredge what is known as Delkatla slough or the slough at New Masset to provide a haven for boats to tie up away from the tide in Masset inlet and protected from the weather. It was a pretty sloppy job that was done in my opinion and the opinion of anybody using these facilities in the Masset area. The result is that the sand and silt dredged out of the slough are silting back in again because of the action of the tide, waves and wind to such an extent that the slough will have to be re-dredged some time in the future.

It was thought if the department were to undertake this project I mentioned earlier at Wiah point, which is not too far distant incidentally from Masset, that in order to save dredging costs the same equipment could be used to re-dredge the slough at Masset. I do not know whether or not there was any discussion or correspondence between this department and the provincial government of British Columbia, probably the department of highways, but in conjunction with this Masset problem there is a possibility of the provincial government having an interest in participating with the federal government's dredging program by building a breakwater where there is presently a bridge which would prevent additional material being brought down from farther up the slough into the area that has been dredged out. As I say, I do not know whether or not there has been any correspondence, but I know this question has been brought to the attention of the provincial government that there should be such a causeway built in place of the bridge.

Mr. Green: There is a project for the grading off of the soil banks at the Delkatla slough. This work is to start early this month and is to cost about $9,000.

Mr. Howard: I would suggest that this will contribute only a little towards overcoming the over-all problem, and that it will not be too many years from now until we will have to come back and re-dredge the whole thing again, because only part of the silting is taking place by material that was pulled out and piled along the sides of the slough. The other part comes as a result of the action of the tide coming out of the slough farther up, past where the basin is dredged, bringing silt with it and depositing it in the hole that has been dredged out. Unless some concrete steps are taken other than the re-dredging, and this should be done in conjunction with the provincial government, such as the building of a causeway to prevent the tide rushing back and forth and drawing silt from farther up the slough, we will have this problem of re-dredging recurring every three or four years.

I hope that the officials of the department will look at this Delkatla slough, in conjunction with the province, with a view to building a causeway or a dam to prevent the silt being drawn down.

Mr. Green: We will be glad to have the situation checked by the engineers in British Columbia.

Mr. Howard: While we are on the problem of Masset, and the minister is becoming more familiar with it as time passes, may I say that I noticed an item in the details concerning Masset, and I imagine it is related to the dock at Masset which has been the subject of correspondence for some months.

Mr. Green: Yes, this amount of $56,000 is to provide for an extension to the wharf and shed and for the renewal of the wharf superstructure. The present freight shed is inadequate to accommodate shipments due to increasing freight traffic. The angle approach is required to provide parking space and a turn-around on the wing trestle for waiting vehicles. The repairs are essential for the safety of the public since the decking has deteriorated to the point that trucks have broken through in several places. The stringers are in fair condition only. The contract was awarded on May 8 and amounted to $38,557.50. It was awarded to the Pacific Piledriving Company Limited of Victoria, British Columbia.

Mr. Howard: While the minister has that material before him, I wonder if I could mention this question of the safety of pedestrians using the approach out to the end of the dock? A suggestion was put forward by the community association, which incidentally did a great deal of work in making preparatory plans for this work, that provision be made for a walkway for pedestrians that is separated by a guard-rail or fence from the actual driveway of the approach out to the end of the dock. Is there such a provision in the plans?

Mr. Green: We will have to obtain this information from the district office in Vancouver.

Mr. Caron: I see on page 486 of the estimates there is an item for a retaining wall at Vancouver. Could the minister tell me what kind of retaining wall this is?

Mr. Green: For some time, Mr. Chairman, the dominion has been contributing to the construction of a retaining wall around Stanley park in Vancouver which, as the hon. member knows, is on the harbour entrance. The money this year is to be used for a wall near the entrance to False creek, in another part of Vancouver harbour. These are areas in which there is a great deal of navigation. Under those conditions this wall comes under the provisions under which money is advanced for protective walls.

Mr. Caron: If I understand that correctly, the minister is still of the opinion that retaining walls should be paid for by the federal government only when there is navigation, and even if the river is navigable, but not navigated, the federal government does not accept responsibility for such a wall.

Mr. Green: This would come under the qualifications which are set out in item 355.

Mr. Caron: What are those qualifications? I want this to be clarified once and for all. What are the qualifications which make these retaining walls subject to federal jurisdiction instead of provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Green: This is contained in the description of item 355 which reads:

> —where damages are caused by, or endanger, navigation or federal government structures and to complete protection works already under way.

Mr. Caron: Was this always the opinion of the department in the past, that the department was responsible only in those cases?

Mr. Green: This policy was adopted in the year 1954, of course under my predecessor as minister of public works.

Mr. Caron: I was fairly sure of that, but I wanted to have the minister's statement. I know that under those conditions we very often have a difference of opinion between the provincial and federal governments. For years I have been asking both the present minister and his predecessor in office whether if there is any conflict under the constitution of this country with respect to the responsibility in this matter, it could be referred to the supreme court so that we will have a decision once and for all as to whom we should look for action. As it is we do not know; we go to Quebec and we are told that since it is a question of navigable waters under the constitution of Canada it is the responsibility of the federal government. I am not a lawyer but I am told by lawyers that there have been cases in which it has been decided by the supreme court that even if only a few logs come down a river then according to the principles of law, it is a question of navigable waters. The minister apparently accepts the view of his predecessor and we are not at all sure as to who is the responsible authority.

All we want to know is to whom we should look and so far the minister has refused to submit this matter to the supreme court for a final decision. Would the minister inform the house if he is now willing to accept the responsibility—and there is not a heavy cost involved—of submitting the whole question to the supreme court after, of course, having given notice to the interested provincial governments.

Mr. Green: If the hon. member would look at this description again he will find it concerns damages caused by navigation. It is not a question of damages in navigable waters but damages caused by navigation. This is a policy which must be interpreted by the Department of Public Works; it is not a matter of legal jurisdiction at all. We are only responsible where there are damages caused by navigation or by federal structures and for that reason there would be no justification for an application to the Supreme Court of Canada. It is a matter of administrative decision here in Ottawa.

I am very sympathetic with respect to the hon. member's problem but I would point out to him that if we had to build walls along all the waterways which are navigable in this country our situation would be utterly fantastic, and I do not think any reasonable person would expect a dominion government to undertake obligations of this kind. There is plenty of work to be done where navigation actually causes damage and where there is a necessity for protection walls, but no federal government—no matter which party happens to form it—would, I think, adopt any policy other than the one followed by my hon. friend's own party when in office, which is the one now being followed by the present government.

Mr. Caron: There were two parts to the answer of the minister; firstly, it is up to the department to decide what is to be done. This is an interpretation which probably was given to the previous minister and the present minister by some legal officers, but so far it has not been made clear. If the interpretation of the previous and present ministers is in accordance with the responsibilities lying upon the federal government by virtue of the British North America Act—and true, the Quebec legal officers may not be as competent in this matter as the federal legal officers, but I do not wish to discuss that particular matter—and if it is believed that it is not a federal responsibility, then it is only a legal opinion.

That is what we wish to clarify, and I believe it would be to the advantage of the federal government if the supreme court decides that the opinion now held by the present minister and the opinion which was held by the previous minister is correct. It would settle the matter once and for all. If, on the other hand, they decide it is the responsibility of the federal government all we could do would be to continue with the policy which has been followed by both the Conservative and Liberal governments. The government has always helped to build protection walls, not only along the Ottawa river but the Chaudiere and other rivers. They have not tried to do it all at once; they would spend $5,000 in a certain spot during one year and $5,000 in another spot the next year. As time went on these walls were getting built and they were really protecting the property of people who could not help the water eating up their lands.

On this account I believe it is just a matter of an interpretation—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I do believe the debate is trailing away from item 353.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Caron: I am speaking of retaining walls.

The Chairman: Yes, but we are now discussing an item which concerns public works in British Columbia. It is not really a debate on retaining walls all over the country. I regret to state that I believe the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Caron: I regret to have to discuss this matter but I have asked about it time and time again. It is the general principle which we are discussing. I am not speaking of retaining walls in Hull or in Ottawa or anywhere else, but of the principle, and the only thing I wish to know is whether the minister, once and for all, will see if the interpretation of the federal government is accepted or if it is not, so that everybody can be satisfied. If it is decided that the federal government is not responsible we will go to Quebec, but if it is not decided one way or the other, where are we to go?

Mr. Green: In this case we are very happy to follow the precedent set by the Hon. Mr. Winters. We are simply not assuming any responsibility beyond the description set out in item 355.

The hon. member for Skeena asked about Wiah point. This is a very large project and it is necessary for the department to undertake boring surveys before deciding whether or not to go ahead. These boring surveys will cost about $16,000 and they will be going ahead.

Mr. Howard: Did the minister say they will be going ahead this year?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Howard: And $16,000 is the expected cost?

Mr. Green: This is the amount for the engineering studies.

Mr. Caron: The minister just told me that he was following a precedent created by the previous minister; I admit that, but at the time I also protested. I have asked the same thing for years and I will keep on asking the same thing as long as I live. I want to have a clarification, and I do not see why the minister refuses to give us a clarification so that we know where to strike when we want something.

Mr. Grafftey: Could I answer the hon. member and say that he knows very well that the administration by his own party—

Mr. Hardie: Since when were you appointed minister of public works—sit down!

Mr. Grafftey: I am going to answer this question once and for all, Mr. Chairman. He knows very well that his own party changed the policy of the department in the 1950's—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member is persisting in a question the answer to which he himself knows very well.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but this is not the time to start a debate on any question other than that raised by item 353. I believe the hon. member for Hull should have discussed the matter which he is discussing on item 1, but not on this particular item No. 353 which is the subject of the present debate.

Mr. Caron: This is not a general principle. It is included in 353.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Caron: Why should I sit down. I have been elected as well as you. I want to have an answer on this from the minister and if he does not believe in the supreme court to decide something he should not be a lawyer.

Mr. Green: I am very sorry, and I appreciate the problem of the hon. member, but we cannot refer this question to the Supreme Court of Canada. We are following the policy adopted by the former government because we feel it is the correct policy.

Mr. Caron: If it was wrong in the past, it is wrong today. That is what I want to know—who is right and who is wrong?

Mr. Howard: The Minister of Public Works does not want to follow that theme too far of saying that whatever the previous administration did is good enough for him, or people will begin to realize there is not much difference between the two parties.

Seriously, there is an item here which relates to the total cost of the demolition of Ripple Rock, and while I do not think it is too wise on these occasions to go too far outside the boundaries of the constituency one represents, this has been a matter of concern to fishermen and to voyagers along the coast of British Columbia for many years. I wonder if the minister can indicate to the committee whether the blast which removed the peak of Ripple Rock could be called a Liberal blast or a Conservative blast, by which I mean, was it successful or unsuccessful; or is it too early to know?

Mr. Green: I am trying very hard to keep out of politics. All I can say about the Ripple Rock blast is that it has been an outstanding success. A survey was made an hour or two after the blast, and it indicated that so much rock had been blasted away by the explosion that at least 47 feet depth of passage had been created between the top of the rock and low water level. Subsequent investigations showed that the larger rock had been cut down to 68 feet below low water level and that the smaller rock had been cut down to 47 feet at least, and probably a little more.

A survey of the currents through the narrows, which have been changed, of course, by the blast, is still not complete, but in so far as the removal of the obstacle itself is concerned, the project has been an outstanding success.

Mr. Howard: There is a further suggestion I should like to draw to the attention of the minister at this time regarding Seymour Narrows where Ripple Rock used to be. This question has been in the minds of a good number of skippers of ships who have been travelling up and down the inland passage for many years, many of them old-timers who know the coast as well as they know the palms of their hands. They have always felt that Ripple Rock itself was not the danger, but that the danger arose from the turbulence of the currents because of the fact that Ripple Rock was there. Small vessels became caught in these tide swirls and pushed into the shore, and so on. Another difficulty which was encountered many times by steamers and big boats travelling through the Seymour Narrows is this: they discovered that the area for manoeuver, especially in a running tide, was very limited. Running with the tide made things even more difficult. There is a blind corner as you get past the rock southbound, a blind turn in the narrows, and on many occasions they met smaller craft coming up, and the situation was made even more dangerous by the limited area in which they were able to manoeuver, and because of the current.

It has been suggested to me by these skippers—I do not know whether they have made representations through their organization to the department—that some dredging should be undertaken, say, at Maud island—I am not sure of the name—just to the east of Seymour Narrows where there is a gut which over the years has become filled with silt and mud. The suggestion is that this channel should be dredged clean so that it will provide a channel for smaller craft moving up and down the narrows in order that they should not become obstacles to the steamers, freighters and rafts which go up and down there. Such a channel would be an additional safety factor in this particular place.

Mr. Green: As the hon. member knows, I had the privilege of witnessing the blast. There was a very distinct difference between the white water as the tide went north over the rock before the blast and the comparatively smooth water visible a few minutes after the blast.

Of course, the narrows will always be dangerous because they are so narrow, and the currents and tides will always be there. It will take some time to work out the best method of navigating this channel now that the rock has been removed; it would appear that the best course now is right over the rock.

The other suggestion which the hon. member has made is being given consideration, but we are not yet in a position to say whether some such channel would help or not.

Mr. Howard: I have one other thought or question; a general question, Mr. Chairman. I would imagine that over the years the files of the Department of Public Works which relate to harbours, rivers and dredging have accumulated many suggestions and requests for changes, a great many of which have come from the north coast of British Columbia. Many of these suggestions have not been proceeded with; no action has been taken for one reason or another, and I wonder whether the minister can tell the committee what the general policy of the department is with regard to reviewing these suggestions and requests so that consideration may be given periodically to suggestions which have accumulated over the years, with the object of taking action on them.

Mr. Green: Whenever a proposal is made it is investigated by the engineers. These proposals are reviewed periodically; in many cases yearly, in other cases every two years.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear the minister's most recent statement that these accumulated proposals are reviewed from time to time, some of them annually, I understood, and others a little less frequently. I am somewhat surprised that of the $2,739,000 to be voted under this item only $1,031,500 is being devoted to the immediate area of the lower mainland of our province. In the light of the heavy unemployment in that district and the minister's own intimate knowledge of it and because of the not unconsiderable interest he has expressed over the years in harbour problems in the lower mainland I had really expected that this year we would have seen a considerable improvement in that respect. I am particularly disappointed that certain areas in the lower mainland which to me at least seem highly important have been omitted entirely. I see that the sum of $836,500 is being spent on the Fraser river and an expenditure is being made inside the city of Vancouver for retaining walls in the False creek area.

There have been a number of long-standing requests with the department under the minister's jurisdiction and I was hoping that when late last year he realized our unemployment situation would worsen he would have asked the department to review these old requests. I am not the first member from this area to mention them on the floor of this house.

I do not know whether the minister has been informed that there is a long-standing conflict of jurisdiction concerning the cleaning out of the mouth of the Coquitlam river. At about the time of the first world war the minister's department assumed responsibility because at that time it was a navigable river. The minister knows that the area has now become largely urban and the river is no longer used to any degree for industrial navigation. The mouth of the river has silted so heavily that the level of the river at the mouth has been raised and almost every spring we have a flooding of the city of Port Coquitlam. The city fathers almost every year have made representations to the minister's department as well as to the government of British Columbia and one government shrugs its shoulders and says it is the responbility of the other government.

If my memory serves me correctly the federal authorities argue that since the river is no longer used for navigation their responsibility has ended and that since it is a matter of flood control it is definitely a task falling under the jurisdiction of the provincial government. I wish the minister would undertake some negotiations with the government of British Columbia to see if an arrangement can be arrived at and perhaps the municipal authorities could be invited to participate. As it is, the city fathers feel they do not have the resources to pay the entire cost of this very necessary project.

These floods have caused considerable hardship to the residents of the area and have cost a considerable sum of money even since 1953 when I was first elected to this house and eventually a solution will have to be found. If a three-level conference were called on this subject some arrangement might be arrived at. It is not an uneconomic undertaking and it would be extremely beneficial for the taxpayers.

In its latest submission to Ottawa the city council has recommended that the silt be used for the establishment of industrial acreage which could possibly mean that the money expanded would be recovered in that way. However, because of the conflict of authority, year after year goes by, nothing is done, and every spring flooding occurs. Local merchants are finding their business establishments invaded by water. I have particularly in mind a large furniture store which was flooded with 18 inches of water only a few years ago involving a great loss to the owner.

I also notice no provision in this section for any expenditures in Burrard inlet.

Mr. Green: That comes under the national harbours board.

Mr. Regier: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. In that event perhaps most of my remarks will have to be saved until we reach the estimates of the Department of Transport.

I make the following comment at this time because there are many new hon. members in the house and I still consider myself a new member. Many of us are never sure where the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works ends and where that of the Minister of Transport begins in regard to these matters. In my years here we have never had an explanation of the relative responsibilities of the two ministers. This affects me particularly when the house is not in session and when I am approached and undertake to write a letter on behalf of a constituent. More often than not I send the letter to the wrong minister and I find he has to refer it to the other minister. I believe that the minister would do all hon. members a good turn if he would on some occasion explain exactly what comes within his department and what falls within the purview of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Green: I have looked into the question of the Coquitlam river very carefully. There the situation is very much like that faced by the hon. member for Hull. There is a similarity between the two problems. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam will have heard my answer to the other hon. member. This damage could not be considered as having been caused by navigation and therefore the federal government has no responsibility whatever.

Mr. Regier: We are not asking for the luxury of retaining walls.

Mr. Green: I cannot say no to the one hon. member, and yes to the other.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed to the next item will the minister now answer the question I asked a moment ago concerning whether or not negotiations between his department and the municipality of Ste. Anne de Sorel have been completed with regard to the construction of a retaining wall in that area?

Mr. Green: This really does not come under the item we are discussing; it comes under item 355. We are very hopeful that it will be possible to reach agreement. The question is now before the treasury board.

Mr. Regier: I notice that this item covers "Gibson's Landing, harbour improvements; Prince Rupert (Fairview bay), harbour improvements; Prince Rupert (Sourdough bay), departmental wharf". What phase of this work comes under the minister's jurisdiction and what phase comes under the departments of other ministers?

Mr. Green: The jurisdiction over Burrard inlet rests with the national harbours board. As the hon. member knows, there are seven or eight national harbours, of which Vancouver is one, and they are all under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. The hon. member mentioned that a small amount of money was being spent in the lower mainland of British Columbia but I point out to him that a very big pier is being built in Vancouver harbour by the national harbours board, the vote for which is not in public works at all. This money is being provided by the national harbours board so that it is not accurate to look at these public works estimates and deduce from what appears in them that the lower mainland is not getting its fair share of public works. There are many other public works as well, for example, additions to the Shaughnessy hospital. That money is provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs and I think the amount is something like $4 million. Therefore, you cannot just pick out the estimates of one department and reach any accurate conclusion without checking the estimates of other departments.

Mr. Regier: I wish to thank the minister for his explanation. I take it, then, that anything affecting the New Westminster harbour is in the estimates now before us?

Mr. Green: The New Westminster harbour commission is set up as a separate commission; it is not under the national harbours board and we do spend very large sums of money dredging the Fraser river. I would imagine that that is the main expense in connection with the New Westminster harbour.

Mr. Regier: Is the New Westminster harbour under the jurisdiction of the minister?

Mr. Green: The New Westminster harbour commission is also under the Department of Transport, just as the new lakehead harbour commission will be under that department.

Mr. Howard: My colleague made reference to Fairview bay. I think I know what it is all about. Has this to do with the electrical outlets, or has it to do with something else? I refer to "Prince Rupert (Fairview bay), harbour improvements".

Mr. Green: Prince Rupert, Fairview bay; these additional facilities are required to relieve congestion of vessels in the Prince Rupert area, or in particular at Cow bay. No further expansion of Cow bay floats can be made since the present arrangement offers the maximum accommodation at the foreshore that is available. Tenders for this project were received yesterday, so that the contract will be awarded within the next few days.

Mr. Howard: Does this provision of electrical outlets for Fairview floats have any reference to this item?

Mr. Green: No, that would come under the miscellaneous votes.

Mr. Howard: Less than $15,000?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Howard: As the minister may know, some difficulty or perhaps misunderstanding arose between the Prince Rupert fishermen's co-operative association and myself on the department's attitude or intentions. It was thought originally that when the authorization was given by the department to proceed with the provision of electrical outlets at the Fairview bay floats that it would all be done at one time but subsequently it was discovered that only one section would be done and another section left without electrical outlets. May I have some clarification of that?

Mr. Green: Apparently, we are doing what we were requested to do in this instance by the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. Howard: The Department of Fisheries requested that you do only half of what is required?

Mr. Green: We will investigate this situation.

Mr. Howard: I am sure the minister will see the difficulties which could arise if these electrical outlets are only half installed. Incidentally, as the minister knows, the city of Prince Rupert and the co-operative have put a co-operative effort into this. The minister can understand the difficulty that would arise if only one-half of the area is made available. There will be congestion and all sorts of difficulties there unless the work is done throughout the whole of the floats.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—
Engineering services—
Acquisition, construction and improvements of harbour and river works—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—further amounts required—

608. British Columbia and Yukon, $964,500.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry for the delay but I was trying to find the proper page. Since I have been looking for the proper page, I wonder whether I can mention this? I raised this question before another committee, and I am sure it will get to the proper authority, but I do not think it will hurt to make the suggestion to the Minister of Public Works. In the front part of the main estimates book are listed the items with which we deal in committee. When we get into details, at which we spend most of our time, we find that there is no reference to the number of the vote. I wonder whether if in future years the minister can undertake to recommend that we number the vote in the back section of the book also?

Mr. Green: I am very glad to have the hon. member raise this point. We have been trying for some considerable time to persuade the Department of Finance that this suggestion should be adopted and perhaps the little assistance given to us today will bring about the result.

Mr. Howard: If you would like to hire any of us from this group as assistant negotiators we would be more than pleased to act.

Item agreed to.

354. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $200,000.

Mr. White: Before this item carries I should like to ask a question. It is possible that I may be out of order. I want to know whether it applies to the acquisition of land at London, Ontario, for a postal terminal?

Mr. Green: No, this vote does not cover that.

Item agreed to.

355. To provide for remedial works where damages are caused by, or endanger, navigation or federal government structures and to complete protection works already under way, $800,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What progress has the department been able to make in respect of the negotiations being carried on with the province of Ontario with regard to the low water levels at Puce? The minister and his officers have been looking into this matter to try to relieve a situation affecting a number of people who live in and about Puce just off lake St. Clair. The department took the position that if anything was done by the federal government there would have to be collaboration with the province of Ontario. The minister's officers have been quite diligent in this matter but they have not yet been able to report on the progress of the negotiations with the province of Ontario. I would be very grateful if the minister would give a report on the matter.

Mr. Green: We are trying very hard to reach an agreement with the province of Ontario. Last week one of our officials was in touch with officials of that government but as yet we have not succeeded.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know the minister will make a special effort.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—

357. Maintenance and operation of plant and contract and day labour works, $3,465,000.

Mr. Batten: In the details of this item on page 489 I see that there is an amount of approximately $340,000 for Newfoundland. Would the minister give me a break-down of the sums making up that total?

Mr. Green: The amount of $340,367 is to operate all the dredges in Newfoundland. It is for the operation of the dredges and includes a considerable amount of actual dredging. I have here the details showing exactly where work is to be done and the amount of material that is to be dredged which I would be very glad to show the hon. member.

Mr. Tucker: How many dredges are operating in Newfoundland?

Mr. Green: There are three dredges operating in Newfoundland. Two are being operated by the department and one is rented.

Item agreed to.

358. Construction or acquisition of plant and equipment, $900,000.

Mr. Batten: Maybe when the minister gives me the information on item 357 he will also give me the same information for item 358 concerning the total of $110,000 on page 490.

Mr. Green: This is to provide new drilling equipment for drill boat No. 401. The total estimated cost is $47,500. In the last fiscal year $37,500 was spent so the balance remaining is $10,000. The present scow is in such a state of disrepair that the steamship inspection service has declared it unfit for further repairs and a replacement in the form of a 200 cubic yard steel scow equipped with four pockets 88 feet long and 27 feet wide is required. The total estimated cost is $100,000.

Mr. Batten: I do not want to take up the minister's time but I wish to mention three places where I think some dredging should be considered. I could give the minister a description of the three places but maybe I could do that in another form later. I should like to bring to his attention three places on the west coast of Newfoundland. The first is Parson's pond which requires not only some dredging but some public works such as a breakwater and crib work. Dredging is also needed at Crabbes river and also dredging of the Grand Codroy river. I would ask the minister to give consideration to dredging at these three points.

Mr. Green: We will be very glad to look into them.

Mr. Tucker: I too should like the minister to take into consideration dredging at two small settlements in Conception bay. As a matter of fact, I believe it was only yesterday that I wrote the minister in connection with Harbour Grace South. The other place is Cupids in Conception bay and I shall write the minister in a day or two. I should like him to take into consideration the dredging of these two small harbours.

Mr. Green: Whenever any requests of that type come in they are given very careful examination by the officials of the department.

Item agreed to.

359. Maintenance and operation of graving docks, locks and dams, $1,050,000.

Mr. Howard: I should like to inquire what the letter "S" opposite drydock subsidies means. Is that a statutory vote?

Mr. Green: Yes, that is a statutory item.

Mr. Howard: Is it listed under or in conjunction with a numerical vote? For instance, is it part of item 359?

Mr. Green: No, this is not an appropriation and accordingly it has no vote number.

Mr. Howard: Then at what stage of the committee proceedings can we make reference to it?

Mr. Green: The hon. member can talk about it now.

Mr. Howard: Is it under 359? I am asking for future reference. What is the purpose of the amount? What does it subsidize? I realize it is drydocks but is it any particular phase of their operation such as maintenance, construction, losses in ship building or something else?

Mr. Green: The purpose of this fund is to help maintain essential drydocks. There are two covered by it, the Burrard drydock in North Vancouver, which is getting $81,155, and the Saint John drydock, in Saint John, New Brunswick, which is getting $49,041. The reason for the decrease in the requirements for 1958-59 is that two of the series payments in connection with the subsidy, one on the Burrard drydock, ceased on April 1, 1958, and the second on the Saint John drydock ceased on January 1, 1958.

Mr. Howard: What formula is used for arriving at the amount of the subsidy? What is it supposed to cover?

Mr. Green: These subsidies were provided, in the case of the Burrard drydock, as far back as 1925, and they run for a period of 35 years. The amounts were set at that time. The Saint John drydock subsidy was provided in 1924, and was also for 35 years.

Item agreed to.

360. Canada's share of the cost of international and interprovincial bridges, as detailed in the estimates, $500,000.
