

...s.—The National Intelligencer gives ing account of the sudden illness of Mr.

— Adams (John Quincy)

Just after the yeas and nays were taken on a question, and the Speaker had risen to put another question to the House, a sudden cry was heard on the left of the chair, "Mr. Adams is dying!" Turning our eyes to the spot, we beheld the venerable man in the act of falling over the left arm of his chair, while his right arm was extended, grasping his desk for support. He would have dropped upon the floor had he not been caught in the arms of the member sitting next him. A great sensation was created in the House: members from all quarters rushing from their seats and gathering round the fallen statesman, who was immediately lifted into the area in front of the Clerk's table.

The Speaker instantly suggested that some gentleman move an adjournment, which being promptly done, the House adjourned. A sofa was brought, and Mr. Adams, in a state of perfect helplessness, though not of entire insensibility, was gently laid upon it. The sofa was then taken up and borne out of the Hall into the Rotundo, where it was set down, and the members of both houses and strangers, who were fast crowding around, were with some difficulty repressed and an open space cleared in its immediate vicinity; but a medical gentleman, a member of the House, (who was prompt, active, and self-possessed throughout the whole painful scene,) advised that he be removed to the door of the Rotundo opening on the east portico, where a fresh wind was blowing. This was done; but the air being chilly and loaded with vapor, the sofa was, at the suggestion of Mr. Winthrop, once more taken up and removed to the Speaker's apartment, the doors of which were forthwith closed to all but professional gentlemen, several of whom arrived in succession, as the news spread into the city.

While lying in this apartment Mr. Adams partially recovered the use of his speech, and observed in faltering accents, "This is the end of earth;" but quickly added, "I am composed." Members had by this time reached Mr. A.'s abode with the melancholy intelligence, and soon after Mrs. Adams and his nephew and niece arrived and made their way to the appalling scene. Mrs. A. was deeply affected, and for some moments quite prostrated by the sight of her husband now insensible, the pallor of death upon his countenance, and those sad premonitories fast making their appearance which fall with such a chill upon the heart.

In the hall, meanwhile, a gloomy pause occurred in the usual hum of voices that fills it. Some members sat in mute suspense; others stood in groups, and made or answered inquiries as to the cause and the probable issue of the attack; others hastened toward the speaker's room to get the latest intelligence of the sufferer's condition; while many were busily engaged in writing to their friends at home the alarming news.
A remark very frequently heard was, "Well this is just what Mr. Adams could have wished; it is an appropriate ending of his public career; he falls, like a second Chatham, in the Senate House."

Mr. Adams, though for some months very feeble, was when he entered the hall in the morning, in his usual health, and had but a few minutes before delivered his vote, on a motion before the House, in an unusually distinct and emphatic manner. The attack was believed, at first, to have been a fainting fit; but this idea soon gave place to the appalling conviction that it was a recurrence of paralysis, which has twice before affected Mr. Adams, though in a milder degree. Very slight hopes are entertained of his recovering. Mr. A. attained his eightieth year in July last.—[National Intelligencer.

DEATH OF DR. CHANNING.—Letters were received in this city yesterday, announcing the decease of WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING, D. D. late Pastor of the Federal street Congregation in Boston. This eminent man died at Burlington, Vt. on Sunday last. His age was about sixty-three.

Dr. Channing was born at Newport, R. I. His grandfather was WILLIAM ELLERY, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. His father was an eminent merchant of Newport, of the firm of Gibbs & Channing. His grandfather retained the powers of his mind to extreme old age, being accustomed to read one or more chapters every morning in his Greek Testament—a practice which he continued until he was upwards of ninety years of age. He once remarked that if old men would exercise their minds more, they would retain their intellectual faculties as long as they did their physical powers. Dr. C. inherited the vigorous intellect of this revered relative.

Of the Dr.'s father we are not particularly informed but Dr. C. himself, though for many years an invalid, was, in early life, quite vigorous. Though small in stature, and possessing a light frame, he had muscular strength, and in college was considered an athletic young man. He was also one of the leading spirits in his class. During a part of his collegiate course, his friends expected that he would, on taking his degree, pursue the study of medicine; but his attention was turned to the ministry by the Hollis Professor of Divinity in Harvard College, where Dr. C. graduated. At Commencement, when he took the degree of A. B., he had a distinguished part, and was then looked upon by competent judges, as one of the most promising young men of the day. Soon after, he went to Virginia, where he resided some time, we believe as a teacher. Here he was supposed, by exposure or neglect of his health, to have undermined his constitution. He never fully recovered the robust state of health which he had previously enjoyed.

In 1803, Mr. Channing was ordained over the congregation in Federal street, Boston. The lines between the Orthodox and Unitarian denominations were not, at that day, so distinctly drawn as they are at the present time. In fact, the term Unitarian was not in general use. Mr. C. was considered a serious-minded young preacher, of irreproachable morals, with a cultivated mind, refined taste, unique eloquence, and leaning to evangelical views in theology. Rev. Dr. Mason of this city, and other staunch divines of Orthodox sentiments, in different parts of the country, used to preach in Mr. C.'s pulpit. Circumstances occasioned a more marked division of theological men, not many years after, and Mr. C.'s preaching and theological writings assumed a more decided character. His celebrated sermon at Baltimore at the ordination of the Rev. Jared Sparks (the historian) made this division more complete. Mr. C.'s congregation increased—his people erected a more spacious edifice on the site of the old church—and a colleague, Rev. Mr. Gannett, was associated with him in the charge of the congregation.

Dr. Channing's published Sermons during the war of 1812, brought him into general notice throughout the country. Subsequently his Review of the writings of MILTON, the character of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, and other able performances, established his reputation among the eminent scholars and belles lettres writers of the country and the world. The taunt of the Edinburgh Review, at an early period, that Dr. C. "touched lofty keys, but with no very great force," was not echoed by the numerous readers and admirers of his writings. Dr. C.'s publications on the subject of American Slavery have attracted no little attention throughout this country and Europe. He belonged to no Anti-Slavery Society—he even doubted the wisdom of these associations—but he was an uncompromising enemy to Slavery, and thought, spoke and wrote accordingly. One of the latest, if not the last public performance of Dr. C., was on the first of August, the anniversary of emancipation in the British West Indies, when he delivered a discourse in Berkshire county, Mass. A report of it was published in the Evening Post, and attracted the admiration even of those who do not espouse the cause in behalf of which Dr. C. directed so much labour and sympathy.

Dr. C. was a man of great independence of mind. He was never swayed by popular applause to do an act which his principles condemned. He paid no respect to men on account of their wealth or office. He honored moral worth wherever he found it. His sermons on the paternal character of God, on the loveliness of the example of Jesus Christ, on the evidences of Christianity, and on political and moral integrity, are admirable. He spoke out, in intelligible terms, on conjugal infidelity, and licentiousness. In the pulpit his gravity and solemnity exceeded that of most preachers, and many who boast of more correct theological principles, might have taken useful lessons from him, not only in the pulpit, but in all his social circles. In all circumstances, his feelings were under great self command. On one occasion, at a dinner party, where a distinguished orthodox clergyman overstepped the boundaries of propriety, Dr. C. remarked to the person near him, "A strange man that." On another occasion, when the audience were greatly affected by the eloquence of a distinguished preacher, a professional brother whose feelings were easily excited, expressed astonishment that Dr. C. appeared to be so little moved. "My tears," said Dr. C., "are not so near my eyes as yours are."

Dr. C. had great contempt for ephemeral popularity, for office hunting, for the airs often assumed by upstart aristocrats, for the tricks and compliances of politicians. What was worthy of esteem and veneration in men, whether they were rich or poor, white or colored, he revered, and could look down upon arrogance, folly, and the unprincipled, with pity and virtuous indignation. His elocution, as has been intimated, was peculiar,—his eloquence unlike that of any other man. His preaching and his writings were corroborated by a life of high moral character.

Dr. C. was the poor man's friend and advocate. He prized the principles of our government, but was chiefly anxious that the people should be righteous, rather than prosperous. He loved the cause of PEACE, and by his tongue and pen did all he could to avert the calamities of war. In fine, however much men might dislike his theological opinions, no one who knew him could fail to prize his purity of character, his inflexible integrity, his lofty purposes, his literary taste, his eloquence, and his able discussions. His death is a great loss, not only to his family, but to the city where he resided, to the country which gave him birth, to the cause of letters and freedom throughout the world.

Schools.

UNION HILL SCHOOL, NEAR FORDHAM, WEST-CHESTER CO. N. Y.—Rev. WM. POWELL, Principal—This institution is a Classical, Commercial and Me-thematical Boarding School for Boys; and is now proposed to the public under the most favorable circumstances. It has lately been thoroughly remodelled; the buildings are spacious and commodious, and the kind advice of judicious friends has been secured, and by the careful attention of the Principal, and by the co-operation of the Parents, being such as to control the minds of the Pupils, as well as to the mental activity of the Pupils. Having limited the number to thirty, (who are received from the age of six years and upwards) an opportunity is thus afforded of treating such young men with kindness and consideration; and indeed regarding all as members of the family; the arrangements being so constituted as to unite the advantages of a public education with all the comforts of a private Home. They eat with the Principal, are under his particular supervision; and their manners, as well as their conversation and religious principles, are especially attended to. A restrain-ing influence is fully expected to be obtained through mildness and parental advice; although there is sufficient energy in the discipline of the school to counteract either indolence or disobedience. The Teachers having been carefully selected in reference to their moral worth, their literary attainments and gentlemanly deportment, reside in the family; so that every facility is thus afforded to the Students to acquire a correct knowledge of the English, Latin, Greek and Mathematics; and to speak with fluency the French, Spanish or German languages, according to the nature of their respective pursuits. Music, Drawing, &c &c are also taught if required.

There are two regular vacations in the year—one in the Spring and the other in the Fall—each of two weeks' duration; so that by this arrangement the pupils during the hot months are retained at school.

The location of Union Hill, near the village of Fordham, is proverbially beautiful and healthy. The play ground is so extensive, and yet so retired, as to encourage studious habits as well as agreeable and salutary recreation. Its distance from New York is about eleven miles; and being situated near the present termination of the Harlem railroad, affords parents and guardians a favorable opportunity to inspect the establishment and to judge for themselves of its various advantages.

Payments quarterly in advance, and no deduction will be made from a quarter commenced.

Letters (post paid) directed to the Principal through the West Farms post office, Westchester county, N. Y. will receive due attention.

Farther particulars may be learned from the following gentlemen, who are well acquainted with the Principal, and with the character of the school.
