Dear Sirs

Your letter of June 21. reached me during a season of domestic anxiety. Since then events have occurred, which render me very uncertain when to propose the ensuing autumn of winter. In that uncertainty I am constrained to forego the pleasure of complying with your invitation, to which as a second request I cannot but give the highest value. I will show you so much confidence in your kindness, that should I at some future time during the season of your lectures, find myself in your vicinity, I will certainly not decline an opportunity of meeting the young Men of Troy. At present I have no ability to make a definite engagement.

With high regard

Yours

George Bancroft.
