New York July 16. 1833.

My dear William

I had collected a batch of letters to send you by the Jannette, but her sailing being delayed and busily, because of the Franklin. I despatched them by her some ten days since.

I mentioned the accident which had happened to your Uncle Washington when your cousin Oscar. he was thrown from his wagon and severely bruised - he has however entirely recovered and I had the pleasure of seeing him well three days since. I had the gratification also of finding your good Aunt Paris much improved in health, and begin to hope that she may be yet spared to us for some time.

I expect to go up to Fort Point tomorrow on a true a true days visit to Anna and her little ones, and shall take your sisters Catherine and Sarah with me. Pierre has started for the town through the State on your Uncle Washington's business which will probably occupy him a month at least - he will close his own business here entirely, and contemplate locating himself at Oswego - but as he wrote you true a true letters by the Franklin I presume he has informed you of his plans. In my last I mentioned that your Uncle Washington had heard from his friends (the Thompkins) that one of the concerns of Russell & Co had died and that Mr Goodridge was to take his place - they expected the change would operate greatly to your advantage as it was probable you would be promoted to the place which Mr Goodridge held - You probably are considered as brilliant and they think will lead you to fortune in a few years - I trust that you will study to realize them, by integrity, industry and devotion to the interests of the house. Wm. Blackwell

I hear is in town and I understand expects to take your sisters Julia and Mary back with her to Monroe on Saturday - We are all well - you must excuse these shortness of my letter for I am much occupied in arranging my matters for leaving town - Should the Jannette be still here on my return I may write again - it is probable she will be the last with this season. Affectionately yours
Wm. Irving
