

STRONGSVILLE--A Haines. We don't do much in Strongsville, but there are some good folks there. We have three rumselling taverns there. One of them was a temperance man, and kept a temperance house, but he has departed from the good way. On the whole, temperance is not in a very good condition there. There is a good deal of drunkenness there. It is hard for us to know what to do. Our young men have done well in forming a Young People's Society last winter, and they stand firm.

Mr. Cole. It is a fact in relation to the temperance question, in Strongsville, it has worked wonders. But the most one can say, now, is, that intemperance is going forward, and temperance is going backward. We have some who are so far gone, that they are near the delirium tremens. Some of our young people do not feel so much ashamed of drinking as I wish, and as they ought. We got a good number of pledges last winter.
