For Slim, Shapely Hips, Try These

Some of the very best reducing posture and limbering-up exercises are easy to do. The days of intricate routines that made every bone and muscle ache are no more. Authorities agree that simple steps done slowly, are more effective and a good deal better for the disposition and peace of mind.

For instance, nothing could be easier than the roll exercise to reduce hips and thighs. You simply lie on the floor with arms at your sides, then, keeping the right leg perfectly flat and the knee of the left quite straight, cross left leg over right, slowly lifting it higher until it forms a right angle with your body. Relax and repeat with the right leg.

Notice how this stretches and pulls waistline and hip muscles. Do it twenty times a day for one month and you will see a difference in the size of your hips and the lumps on the outside of your legs.

To slenderize the waistline and to give your figure grace, stretching routines are recommended. Simply stand before an open window, lift up your arms and stretch. Keep on stretching until you seem to feel that you actually have lifted your torso upward away from your hips. Bend slowly to the right, to the left, slightly backward, then forward.

When you walk, think of yourself as a taller person than you actually are. Don't let the upper part of your body sag downward to rest on your hip bones. Keep yourself pulled upward. Swing from the hips with each step.

MORE OR LESS

She takes her husband for more or less these days instead of for better or worse. And she is going to be disappointed if it is for less than she is making on the job she gave up, which it probably will be.—Richmond Register.

SORRY FOR SWELLED HEADS

(Chicago Tribune)

A Chicagoan back from abroad tells of a certain marchesa in Florence who has the reputation of being exceedingly gracious. She never neglects to send a book or flowers or a note to friends who are ill and is unusually thoughtful. One of her acquaintances is an American woman of great executive ability, and one day the marchesa overheard two friends discussing the lady.

"She is just wonderful at organizing things," one of them said, and elaborated on her executive ability and on her activities during the war. "It is a pity she has such a swelled head," she concluded.

As soon as the marchesa reached home she dispatched a servant with flowers from her conservatory to the lady she had heard discussed.

"I was so sorry to hear today that you are ill an hope your swollen head has become normal again," she wrote in the accompanying note.

MICHIGAN GIRL WORKS DESPITE HER INJURIES

Neither infantile paralysis nor a broken back has kept 21-year-old Emma Lucas, Grand Rapids, Mich., from earning her own living.

Struck down with paralysis when a child she conquered it sufficiently to win a dancing contest later. Then an automobile accident sent her to a hospital with a broken back.

After a year at the hospital she was brought to the Mary Free Bed Guild, an adjunct to the Blodgett Home for Children. As soon as she was old enough to hold a book and pencil she took up a business course she had begun before her accident.

Today she holds the position of office assistant in the orthopedic department of the Blodgett Children's Home. A shelf has been built over the arms of her wheel chair so that she can more easily do her daily work in the office.

CAREFUL FLOWER CUTTING SHOWN

When gathering gladioli for house decoration, always cut away the flower spikes cleanly from between the leaves. Always cut low down and leave the foliage intact. By removing the leaves the corm is spoiled for next year. At least two or three of the larger leaves at the base of the plant should be left to complete the development of the new corm.

It also benefits the coming corn if the spike of flowers is removed as soon as it has finished blooming. This allows the plant to utilize all its strength in making a large size corm for next year.

RAIN IN THE COUNTRY

The rain fell like a song of hope on fields that had been dying.

It was a mother's loving kiss upon a wistful face.

Tall trees that had been parched and dry broke into gentle sighing, And happiness lay like a smile upon the garden place.

The house was very snug and sweet, the rain's kind, slender fingers.

Made magic on the sloping roof and smothered the steaming pane.

We lighted candles, slim and white, They painted paths of drifting light against the silver rain.

The house was very sweet and snug —its shadows were caressing— Yet for a moment we were swept with sudden, aching pity For folk who do not understand that rain may be a blessing.

Who wander, shelterless and sad, across the rain-swept city!

—Margaret E. Sangster.
