RULES FOR BUYING AT "WHITE" SALES

White sales held at this season offer buyers a chance to get linens for the year at reduced prices. These materials are bargains only if they have long fibers and strong, well-twisted yarns; close thread count; high tensile strength; no flaws in the yard or weave, and very little sizing, according to the home economics department of the Kentucky College of Agriculture.

In buying sheeting by the yard, a yarn may be revealed out, broken, and its strength tested; the fibers may be untwisted and their length noted. Sheets are best when the fibers are at least an inch long. Thread count, the second test point, is the number of yarns per inch, both lengthwise and crosswise. Thus a 72 by 68 thread count means 72 ends per inch and 68 filling yarns. There should be about the same number of yarns each way; otherwise, the fabric is not balanced, and will not wear well.

Tensile or breaking strength is given for only a few sheets sold at retail, but the fabric can be pulled to get some idea as to its strength. Though most sheeting has slight irregularities, a first-grade sheet has few knots, uneven yarns, or thick or thin places. If there are defects in the yarn or weave, the sheet is usually marked a second and sold at a lower price. Sizing is the starch or china clay used to produce a smooth finish. "Pure finish" means that the smallest possible amount was used, and "no weighting" that heavy materials, such as china clay, were not used. If the fabric is rubbed sizing may come out, or it may be washed to see if its weight or appearance changes greatly.

Other points to be considered are the salvage, width and length, and weight.

FUR SALES GOOD IN SUB-ZERO WEATHER

Last Monday was the quietest court day in the memory of many a Flemingsburg old-timer, with sub-zero weather and streets and highways covered with snow and ice.

There was one exception, however. Trappers appeared to mind the cold, little, and were here in representative numbers. In fact, one buyer described the trading on court day as the most satisfactory of the season here.

As an example, J. R. Cummings, of Muses Mills, received $6.25 each for 20 mink skins. The buyer, Morris Handler, of Blanchester, said that the pelts of Mr. Cummings and others showed up extra good.—Flemingsburg Times-Democrat.

Herald and Courier-Journal one year for $4.50.

KENTUCKY PEACH CROPS ARE HIT BY COLD

The severe cold weather of the past two weeks destroyed one-third of the peach crop in the Purchase counties, County Agent Glynn Williamson, of Mayfield, has estimated. In Henderson, and other counties in that area, the loss may go as high as 50 per cent, he said, and in the Bluegrass section—the entire crop may be gone.

Fruit experts in other states reported heavy losses in peaches.

LINCOLN'S AMBITION

In 1864 Lincoln once said: "I desire so to conduct the affairs of this administration that if at the end, when I come to lay down the reins of power, I have lost every friend on earth, I shall at least have one friend left, and that friend shall be inside of me."

Tent Show Portrays American Progress

The General Motors Parade of Progress, which is traveling more than 20,000 miles this year, is pictured above on location. Giant streamlined exhibit trucks are joined together to form exhibition halls which lead into the "big top." The "world's fair on wheels" will portray to hundreds of communities all over the country the great contributions made by industry to human comfort and happiness.

Bugler Serves As Town's Alarm Clock

Habit Started Eleven Years Ago By Man Seeking Exercise At Six O'clock Each Morning.

Snow may come and snow may go, it makes no difference to Charlie Hughes.

At the age of 47, Charlie Hughes is Baxter, Tennessee's human alarm clock.

A snow might be expected to make a difference to a man like that. As an alarm clock he has to have some place to alarm. And Charlie Hughes' place is a twenty-foot pole on a bluff above a creek.

As an alarm clock he has to make a noise, and the noise he makes on near-zero mornings is a series of blasts on a bugle. His lips pucker up a bit with the cold, but he puffs right manfully.

It's been going on like that for more than eleven years—winter and summer, rain, snow or clear weather. Back in March, 1924, Charlie Hughes decided it would be a "healthful" sort of exercise to climb the bluff near his farm house each morning at 6 a. m., scale a twenty-foot pole, sit in a seat on top of it and toot his favorite notes for the inhabitants of the town of Baxter.

Whereupon he did it. So the people have come to listen for the sound of Charlie Hughes' bugle. They awake and have breakfast by it, and go to work, and send children off to school.

And Charlie Hughes, with such responsibilities and his health to look out for can't afford to be deterred by the weather. It makes no difference to him that Tennessee is having its coldest winter in almost twenty years.

SPEEDERS SENTENCED TO VIEW VICTIMS IN MORGUE

By order of Judge Harry McDevitt, Philadelphia, three speeders were ordered to visit the morgue, in company of guards, to view the badly mangled bodies of four persons killed in automobile crashes. The judge believes such a spectacle, view under such circumstances, will go far to impress a lesson of the horrors that too often follow reckless and drunken driving.

What Would You Do If Fire Started In Home?

The other day a minister in Brooklyn, New York, awoke early in the morning to find his house on fire. He organized his family into a bucket brigade using water from a lavatory on the fourth floor and saucepans, tea kettles, coffee pots and anything else handy for the buckets. Before going to work on the fire he called the fire department and he succeeded in holding the fire in check until the department arrived to finish the job.

Have you ever given any thought to simple fire prevention measures for your home and the other homes in your community? The Reverend's family bucket brigade probably saved his home, but a few well chosen and well placed fire extinguishers would have proven a lot more efficient in the emergency. A length of garden hose conveniently hung near a faucet, would have helped. Most people provide elementary precautions against burglars, but all too few people provide the slightest sort of fire protection for their home. Fire extinguishers, fire alarm devices, and "junior" sprinkler systems and garden hose, are all available at reasonable cost.

What is lacking is appreciation of the ever-present potential fire hazard in the home. Home fires are on the increase. Check your own home and spread the gospel of at least elementary precautions to fight home fires throughout your community.

—Volunteer Fireman.

Cold Spell Date Fixed By Records

Official Tab Shows Renowned Sub-Zero Date in Ky. During 'Nineties Was Feb 13, 1899.

There have been a good many arguments as to the date of the record cold weather in this section of Kentucky during the 'nineties. The official records at Lexington settles the day of the peak of the cold as Monday, February 13, 1899. T. M. Farnsworth, of this city, maintains the coldest day in Harrodsburg was Feb. 13, 1895 when it was 36 below zero.

The 1899 cold wave lasted a solid week, and at no time during that seven days did the minimum daily temperature ever rise as far as zero. On February 7, 1899, the minimum was 12 above; then the thermometer jitters started. Here are the official minimum temperatures for the following week:

February 8.....	4 below
February 9.....	15 below
February 10.....	17 below
February 11.....	4 below
February 12.....	12 below
February 13.....	20 below
February 14.....	1 below

On the 15th the weather began to "warm up." The minimum that morning was 15 above zero and before the day was over the mercury had risen to 24.
