

Facts and Fancies From Frankfort

Editor Herald:

Frankfort, the little capitol city of the proud old Commonwealth of Kentucky, snuggled down in its encircling hills and slashed in three parts by a meandering river, has a charm and a fascination all its own for the great majority of people who visit it only upon rare occasions. Perhaps an inauguration or a wedding, or a funeral, or a party, or a picnic, or a trip in midsummer to see the Governor, or a plea for a job or a pardon for a shirker that turns the blistering stretch of walks and steps that make the approach to the new Capitol a thing of beauty if you're riding, and an everlasting long walk if you're on Shank's mare, you find yourself in the cool dim interior and you glance up at the towering bronze statue of Lincoln—Republican or Democrat, it gives you a thrill to know that here was a Kentuckian.

It's about the real Frankfort I will write, not the town one sees on a casual visit, but the underlying elements of the place, its everlasting hills, its cemetery which is called Kentucky's Westminster Abbey, its old Capitol as well as its new Capitol, the personalities that go to make up its citizenry, a cosmopolitan cross-section drawn from every village and hamlet from Mills Point to the Big Sandy.

My memory of the Governors runs back to the time when, as a little curly-headed girl of five, all starched and beribboned and out for a walk with a beloved aunt, we met the young man who soon was to stop an assassin's bullet, whose last words were, "Tell my friends to be brave and fearless people." He was, of course, the martyred Goebel. On through the fine administration of Beckham who started the building of the new Capitol only to have it occupied by a successor of a different political faith, Governor Wilson—then Governor McCreary, come again to reclaim it for the Democrats. Who can ever forget the eyelash finish of that race between two doughty knights of oratory, Augustus Owsley Stanley and Edwin Porch Morrow of hallowed memory. Governor Stanley it was who guided the Commonwealth through those stormy years when a world was aflame with war and, at almost the end of his administration, when he went to Washington as United States Senator, Lieutenant Governor James D. Black, dubbed "the little giant from the mountains," completed his term. Ed Morrow's gallantry and sportsmanship in the race four years previously was not forgotten, and the people made him their next Governor. No more beloved character has ever graced the mansion than "Howdy Ed" and the soil of Frankfort welcomed him to his bosom when "taps" sounded for him only recently. Remember "Honest Bill" from Olive Hill? That was Governor Fields, who was followed by the man the Democrats chose to call "Flim-Flam-Flem." But of all the courtly gentlemen, immaculately groomed, who ever ruled Kentucky, Governor Sampson was "tops." Our last Governor and our new one are still

"Front Page." Governor Laffoon was the inspiration for the coining of the word "ruby." For the sales-tax penny, but the memory of man being what it is and the sales tax being as dead as the dodo, we may soon be explaining to a new crop of children what a "ruby" means to a Kentuckian. The thing that has surprised me is how quickly the term "Happy" has changed to Governor Chandler. He is perhaps the most colorful personality to flash across Kentucky's political horizon in a half-century. It was his very youth and audacity and endurance and smile that made him the idol of his fellow men. And the manner in which he has grasped the helm of the ship of State has amazed many of the old-timers who've seen Governors come and go. And I've seen them come and go, too. I've seen them ride up to the Capitol to the shouting cheers of friendly thousands, and I've seen them ride away four years to the ominous mutterings of discontent and disapproval.

So, I am to write a weekly letter, relating some of the interesting tales all Frankfort knows, sometimes of its past, sometimes of its present, in the hope that you will enjoy them and will come to see for yourself what makes the wheels go round. For there's action taking place with the reorganization of the Government under way, new personalities coming to the fore. What seems to be in the saddle, still there's the guiding hand of Governor Beckham and his advisory committee to be reckoned on. Kentucky history is in the making, and you'll get some unusual sidelights on Frankfort as she has and as she is, and perhaps a vision of what she will be if you follow up this correspondent's weekly letters.
