Parsley Is Most Popular Cooking Herb

Grow A Few Plants Of The New Paramount Variety, And Keep One Indoors Over Winter.

We hear a great deal nowadays about herb gardens. Interest in cooking herbs seems to go with a fancy for antique furniture. Few of the cooking herbs which used to grow in every garden, and season many of the dishes which our grandmothers served are known to present day home cooks.

But one herb which has held its favor, both as a flavoring, and a decorative garnish to improve the appearance of the dish, is parsley. Every garden should have a row of parsley, and a short row will suffice.

Paramount Parsley for this vegetable is in the "cut and come again" class and each plant will continue to produce crisp leaves all season.

And while we are on the subject of parsley, the Hamburg rooted type should be mentioned. This not only produces leaves which can be used for flavoring and garnishes, but it produces a small root resembling a parsnip, which has the parsley flavor, and is said to be much superior to the leaves for flavoring soups and stews.

The latest development of parsley has come to amateurs through the all-America committee on new vegetables and flowers, which gave a 1936 Award of Merit to the new variety, called Paramount.

It has rich dark green leaves, triple curled, and is destined to decorate many a juicy steak or bowl of creamed new potatoes. When thinned properly the plants grow 12 inches high with a spread of almost 20 inches, and the tendency to turn brown at the edges with age or during the cooler days of fall has been eliminated.

Parsley seed is slow to germinate, requiring from two to three weeks, but it makes a speedy growth when once started. It is a good idea to combine a planting with radishes to mark the row. The radishes will mature and be used before the parsley progresses enough to be bothered by them. Thin out scrupulously, especially with the big new Paramount variety, and when the plants get about 3 inches high, cut them off. The new growth will be more curled and better looking.

Many gardeners provide themselves with a year-round supply of parsley by bringing a plant or two into the house when the cold weather sets in. This is a good idea, because the plants will grow well in a sunny kitchen window, and are always there when a spray is needed. Besides, you cannot always depend upon a supply in the market, and don't care to pay five or ten cents for a bunch when you need only a very little of it.

The best varieties of parsley are really handsome foliage plants, their finely curled, mossy sprays making excellent edgings in the garden. There is little reason why one could not raise a few plants in the window box, as when closely planted they do not become the massive bushes which you would grow in the vegetable garden.

COLONIAL GARDEN

The Colonial Garden is an outstanding feature in the landscaping program being carried out on the grounds of the Kentucky Building at Western Teachers College, Bowling Green, Kentucky. This garden, the design of which was copied from an old Southern Garden of ante-bellum days, has been planted with old-fashioned flowers and shrubs native to the South, and in addition has a border devoted to flowers from other countries, notably England, France, and Switzerland. A plant of sweet-scented lavender from the Shakespeare garden at Stratford-on-Avon is a recent acquisition highly prized.

AFTER A VISIT

I be'n in old Kentucky
Fur a week er two, an' say,
'Twuz ez hard ez breakin' oxen
Fur to keep myself away.
Allus arguin' about fr'endship
An' yer hospitality.
Y' ain't no right to talk about it
Till you be'n down there to see.
See jest how they give you welcome
To the best that's in the land.
Feel the sort o' grip they give you
When they take you by the hand,
Hear 'em say, "We're glad to have you
Better stay a week or two."
An' the way they treat you makes
you
Feel that ev'ry word is true.
Paul Lawrence Dunbar.
