

HEROES OF AMERICAN HISTORY

A WEAVER OF LYRICAL LEGENDS

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW

Longfellow, the son of a lawyer, was born in Portland, Maine. He studied in Europe and became a marvelous linguist. At 22 he was already a professor of languages and translated poems from nearly all the foreign tongues. For years Longfellow taught at Harvard. His smooth, happy existence was interrupted only once by a great tragedy, when his wife died in a fire. Longfellow was a gentle, dignified man and loved children. That is why his beautiful legends of "Evangeline," "Hiawatha" and "The Courtship of Miles Standish" are beloved by young and old.

Our Handwriting

The insane cannot write coherently, the nervous cannot make smooth lines; the untutored cannot execute exact or well-formed characters. These are a few of the glibilitudinous conditions and environments of each and every individual who writes and they are indelibly expressed by him in his handwriting, according to Milton Carlson, handwriting expert. Therefore the writing, whatever it is, or however crudely or beautifully formed, is the reflection and identification of that person—as clearly defined as the likeness of himself in a mirror. But handwriting lasts "forever;" other things vanish.

Nature Printing

A scholar fingerling old books on the table of a second-hand book shop frequently comes on a volume of poetry or a Victorian novel with a flower or leaf pressed among the pages. Sometimes the form of the dried plant has been transferred in a brown stain to one page, says the New York Sun. To a botanist such a stain would be likely to recall certain volumes of "nature printing" issued in the Eighteenth century, in which accurate records of leaves and whole plants were made by a kind of transfer process no longer generally practiced.

Prisoners Allowed to Write
