Why and Where the Tone

of Violin Is Produced

This is roughly what happens to the sound when a violinist is playing on a Strad or similar instrument:

The string vibrates, and sets the bridge in motion. Vibrations are carried through the instrument to the back by means of the post. Emerging at the back, they flash out to the sides, because the grain of the wood goes away from the center to the sides, and vibrations must follow the grain. The grain on the sides is absolutely vertical, so that the sound is carried on to the front of the instrument, technically called the "belly."

The grain on the belly runs down the f-hole from the top to the bottom, but it is cut through by those curiously shaped holes—rather like the letter "f." It is here that each vibration runs along the slant of the "f's" at the curly end of which it flicks away as at the end of a whiplash. And that, says an authority, is why those holes are there, and not just as air vents, as some people will tell you—nor just to look pretty. The whole idea is to insure "one-way traffic" of vibrations, which is why the violinist can control the vibrations so perfectly with his bow.

The back of the instrument with its divergent grain is usually made of some kind of sycamore or maple, while the belly is nearly always of pine.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Ship Accident Resulted

in Development of Glass

Thousands of years ago a ship's crew of hungry Phoenicians had an accident: Through it they learned about glass!

It all happened when they tied their boat with a cargo of soda salt to a river bank in Palestine and began building a fire to cook their food.

Finding no convenient large stones, they used huge lumps of the ship's cargo to support their pots near the flame. It was then, notes a writer in the Los Angeles Times, that the heat from the fire melted the soda, fused it with the sand of the river bank and produced a transparent substance, which in its improved form, we know as glass.

It is recorded that in 1300 B. C. the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans had perfected glass making for beads, beakers, perfume bottles, plates, inlay designs in sacrificial cups, and even for coffins!

In the Thirteenth century glass manufacturing became an industry in that part of Czechoslovakia which was once Bohemia. It was there that a fine sand was found as a necessary ingredient. Rapid progress began immediately as Venetian, Arabic, German, and French glass flowered into artistic beauty. Some of those pieces appear in the world's leading museums.

An Early Indian Treaty

On October 27, 1905, the chiefs of the Cherokee Indian nation executed a treaty which recited that the United States mail had been ordered to be carried from Knoxville to New Orleans and, for this purpose, granted to citizens of the United States "the free and unmolested use of a road leading from Tellico to Tombigbee." This and similar Indian treaties were, at this particular time, of vital importance. Louisiana, a vast inland empire, had but recently come under the American flag. If its few cities and its many small outpost settlements were to become, in any true sense, parts of the Union, it was essential to link them with the other states by the best available facilities for communication.

Some Comets Are Tramps

Some comets regularly belong to our sun family, and these travel in the same paths around the sun always. Others are sudden visitors from far-off spaces. These are tramps whose actions cannot be counted on, and often they disappear as strangely and as swiftly as they came. Scientists believe that they have strayed from other sun families, perhaps, and are veering crazily through space, attracted by any sun which they approach.

Sea Creatures Land Animals

The popular names of many creatures of the sea indicate a real or fancied resemblance to forms of life to be found on land. Thus there are sea-spiders, sea-urchins, sea-otters, sea-snails, sea-leopards, sea-cows, sea-horses, sea-serpents and many others. Many which take their names from plant life on land, such as the sea anemone, sea cucumber, sea-lemon, and sea lily are themselves members of the animal kingdom.

Italy Once Fashion Dictator

There was a time when Italy dictated fashions for the whole world. In the Middle Ages and, later, during the Renaissance, Italian modes of dress were widely copied. Traces of this ancient supremacy may still be found in the terminology of the fashion industry. The word "millinery," for instance, is derived from the Italian term "millanerie" used for certain types of Milanese fabrics.

Tracks of Wagons Preserved

The last signs of the covered wagon caravans that crossed the continent during the gold rush days of the 1840's can be seen on the salt beds of Utah. Owing to the peculiar nature of these flats, the tracks of the wagons have been preserved on this desert by a distinct discoloration.—Collier's Weekly.

KILL 12 'POSSUMS WHILE GUARDING SHEEP IN GARRARD

Dogs have been getting in sheep flocks in the county frequently this year, but watchers of a flock of sheep on the farm of Dallas Robinson, near the city limits on the Crab Orchard road, Sunday night were surprised when, upon shooting at what was thought to be a dog, it was found that 12 opossums, the mother and 11 small ones, had been killed by the shot.—Lancaster Record.

Geniuses of Genes

Geneticists have proved to their satisfaction that as a race horse inherits the speed, or a prize bull the brawn, of its parents, so all animals, including man, inherit the characteristics of their predecessors. They have discovered that invisible units called genes (meaning things of the same kind) are responsible for heredity.
