BRUCE BARTON Says:

Tomorrow the Test of Us

It is sometimes my sad fortune to have to deliver an after-dinner speech. Few experiences are more depressing.

One sits up at a high table like a specimen at the zoo. One waits with increasing discomfort while the toastmaster works slowly down the line, and tries to look appreciative as the other speakers unfold their solutions of world problems with a sprinkling of stale jets.

Only now and then there is a bit of compensation. The other night, for instance, I found myself beside another speaker who ate sparingly, and when I remarked on it, he said: "I always have to feel well tomorrow. We're all right tomorrow you don't get into much trouble."

That made me think that you can estimate men according to their attitude toward tomorrow. How many tomorrow can they see? How much are they willing to sacrifice for tomorrow?

A day laborer can see only a half-dozen days. He must be paid every week. An entrepreneur may cheerfully invest half a life-time in a new business from which he but his children will profit.

Artists and writers have been known to disregard entirely the near tomorrow, pinning their faith on the fairer and more enduring verdict of posterity.

The prophet, of course, looks farthest of all. Stephen, on his way to death, cried: "Behold I see the heavens opened." Jesus, about to be crucified, assured His disciples: "I have overcome the world."

It strikes me that what we need these days is the habit of taking a little stronger look, envisaging a few more tomorrows.

Some of us act as if this present distress were the first of the world's endurance that has ever come. We are afraid that if it is not straight-the horses were stopped on the roadside to rest, they became unmanageable and the hayframe rocked. Thinking the wagon would turn over the children jumped, and all escaped injury except the little Houchins girl.

Deaths . . . Mrs. John Marksbury, 38, former resident here, died last week at Beech Grove, Ind. Mrs. Ben Scanlon, 30, died in Stanford Tuesday and was brought back here for burial. Mrs. Crockett Dunn Kyle died at Pottstown, Pa., Oct. 8. She was a native of Mercer county.

Harvey T. Young, who moved from here to Kansas City several years ago, died there October 8. Miss Annie Lillard died Thursday at the home of her sister, Mrs. Henry Cassell. Mrs. James Colvin, 78, died at Cardwell Wednesday.

USE NATIVE TREES FOR KY. LANDSCAPING
The use of native materials for home landscaping is growing in popularity in Kentucky. Trees and shrubs, wild-flower gardens, flagstone walks, rock gardens, all native materials, have added to the exterior beauty of many homes in the last few years.

of arthritis. Any improvement that was noticeable was very slight. I used it in a desperate attempt to relieve pneumonia in an aged patient—and lost.

I believe diathermy to be a very refined, technical, expensive way of applying the simple principle of heat in the treatment of disease.

I do not own a diathermy apparatus, but work in hospitals where it is available in any instance desired. I sincerely hope it may come to be the standard, accepted method of obliterating diseased tonsils.

WASP ARMY ADVANCES

An "air force" of wasps, 21,000,000 strong, is on its way to Canada to wage a war against caterpillars. Dr. Kenneth Morris, aided by an army of 400 laborers, collected the wasps in the birch forests of Huron. They will be used to combat caterpillars which are ravaging Canada pine forests.

$250,000 YEARLY IS SAVED BY PLAN

The state of Oregon, by placing all state-owned institutions of higher learning under a single directing head, has affected a saving of $250,000 a year, according to Frederick M. Hunter, chancellor of the Oregon schools.

"Anyone with a little common sense could have done the same thing," Dr. Hunter said. "All that has been necessary is to get the officials of the various schools together on a common sense program and we haven't had a single major conflict."

Under Chancellor Hunter's direction are a state university, a state college of agriculture, a medical school, three normal schools, an extension center, an oceanic biological center and ten branch experiment stations.

The average cost of hauling the increasingly popular trailer is about a quarter of a cent a mile.
