Elephants Go in Herds

In the forest elephants go in herds, with the exception of a few "rogues" outlived by their own kind. The chief of a herd has been seen to send out a scout when he believes peril is at hand. In retreating the herd forms in single file as African savages do.

JEST A-WHITTLIN' AN' A-THINKIN' BY PETE GETTYS

You read in the papers the awful cost of bad colds in this country—multiply this by all the other losses from all the other ailments, and it runs into billions and billions. Was jest a-thinkin'—suppose there were no losses from sickness—it wouldn't be all profit, think what it would cost the doctors and drug stores and medicine people.

Did you ever think what'd happen if there were no losses on the farm—every litter of pigs a full one—every calf, every colt, every ewe hatched and every chick raised—no crop failures—no erosion—no insect and disease losses. Well, that wouldn't work—the about like the statement if fish weren't cannibals the sea'd be so full of fishes the big boats couldn't get through.

Was a'readin' a speech a feller made the other day up in Wisconsin, "Why I want my boy to be a Farmer," and there's lots of good sense in it!

"I want our boy to be a farmer and live in what the Germans call an 'erbnaf', or hereditary home, to which his sisters can return in times of depression, should they marry city men, because:

"1. The farmer has more and better food to eat than most city peo-
