He was the son of Henry and Philomine Geffinger who came to the United States from Alsace-Lorraine and settled in Jersey City, N. J. Coming to Kentucky, Mr. Geffinger opened business in Millersburg and then took up his residence in Harrodsburg more than 33 years ago, and was a successful jeweler and optician. ## STRAW LOFT WILL KEEP BIRDS WARM

Aid in Throwing Off Slumps in Production.

By R. E. Gray, Extension Specialist, Ohio State University.—WNU Service.

Insulating poultry houses with a straw loft is becoming quite common. Year after year additional farmers with poultry declare the straw loft insulation is a big aid in helping throw off slumps in egg production during extremely cold spells.

These farmers point out that the straw loft construction is the least expensive of several satisfactory ways of insulating the hen house ceiling, because most of the material used is generally available on the farm. Most of them construct a light framework of poles or of 1 by 2 or 2 by 2-inch lumber at head room height in the poultry house, covering the framework with wire netting, then filling the space between the false ceiling and the roof with straw. The more they get in the more satisfactory they find the insulation.

The straw insulation does not add to the problem of poultry mite and lice control and need not be changed each year unless exposed to an outbreak of a contagious poultry disease. Neither does a straw loft control or aggravate dampness in the hen house.

The straw loft not only redresses the cubic air space but also reduces the amount of heat lost through the roof, where the greatest amount of heat is otherwise lost. Setting bundles of fodder around the outside of the poultry house makes for further winter comfort of the hens, which means higher production.

Regarding windows, it is recommended that in cold weather they be kept closed as tightly as possible; opening in milder weather, but not enough so the drinking water will freeze.

There is no cause for worry about the hens not getting enough air with the windows tightly closed. The average poultry house will have a complete change of air often enough, even with the windows closed, to adequately take care of the birds.

Cold Days Bring on Need for Poultry House Heat

During cold waves poultrymen will find it easier to maintain egg production if laying houses are heated, according to H. H. Alp, poultry extension specialist at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois.

Poultry houses ordinarily do not need artificial heat. However, there are times when a little extra warmth in the house is desirable. During a bad outbreak of colds or chicken pox or in very cold weather, the added heat will be beneficial, especially if the house is inclined to be damp.

One of the easiest ways of supplying this needed warmth is by using a brooder stove with the cover removed. While this type of equipment will not generate a large amount of heat, it will take the chill and dampness out of the air, Alp says. It should not be necessary to continue use of the stove throughout the winter.

Roup Is in Season

Chickens and turkeys can have roup at any time but the disease is more prevalent in fall and winter than in other seasons, and there's a reason for it as there is for everything else. The principal cause of roup is a deficiency of vitamin A in the ration. Yellow corn is an important carrier of this vitamin, as are greens and alfalfa meal. That is why it is important to feed yellow corn instead of white corn to poultry.—Missouri Farmer.

Hatch Winter Chicks

Chicks can be hatched successfully during the winter if a brooder house and the proper equipment are available. At this time weather conditions are not favorable for the start of coccidiosis and other poultry troubles. It is also the slack season for work. The records show that the egg production of chicks hatched in the winter is about the same as for other seasons.

Poultry Cullings

De Witt county is the center of Texas' vast turkey pastures.

Britain is now the largest egg-laying country in the world.

A hen must eat a certain amount of food to keep her body warm and in condition.

Long-lived hens and the sons of long-lived hens should make up the breeding flock.

Data collected by the Department of Agriculture indicates more hens and pullets laying this year than last.

Were a poultry house constructed for the comfort of the chickens, and not for the comfort of the attendants, the roof would be about two feet above the floor.

Birds which lose the power of their legs and their combs turn dark may be suffering from some digestive disorder or they may have some bronchial trouble.
