Death March Survivor Gets Promotion

It's FIRST Sgt. Charles Quinn
today.

Three years between Army proid, motions is a long time during a 5 war, but there wasn't much that could be done about it while he was in a Japanese prison camp.
The 25-year-old Daytonian and rand rand rand released from Cabanatuan prison camp in the Phillippines all received long overdue promotions today in the California city.

And they were still remembering how San Franciscans handed over the city, complete with inch-thick steaks and free telephone calls home, to them yesterday.

Quinn, the son of Mys. Carrie Quinn of 311 Morton avenue, and the others were taken by automobile from the waterfront to the civic center while one of the largest throngs in the city's history turned out to cheer the heroes of Bataan and Corregidor.

Wearing their new decorations, campaign stripes and insignia, the men were given a civic luncheon in the gold room of the Palace hotel. That's where the steaks came in, together with red-liveried waiters, and a soft dance orchestra.

During the meal, Mayor Roger Lapham presented each officer and enlisted man with a gold lapel medallion after an invocation by Archbishop John J. Mitty. Then came the free telephone calls, movies and scenic tours provided by business organizations and individuals.

Mrs. Quinn was to talk to her son some time today to learn the exact date of his arrival in Dayton.
