We Predict Chandler Will Succeed

Despite Enemies Within and Without

While in Frankfort the other day we got a new slant on some of the recent flare-up and its quick set down. Persons high in the councils of his campaign felt that they could do things which Mr. Chandler had pledged he would prevent. The rebukes of the attempt are the main causes of the late flare up. But Chandler passed his budget bill.

With passage of the budget act under which the state will operate the next two years, the extraordinary session of the Kentucky legislature adjourned sine die. It is the soundest, most scientific budget act that has ever been enacted in this commonwealth. It contains a provision which empowers the governor to make readjustments in the budget by cutting sums appropriated to various agencies, in event income of the state is not sufficient to pay the amounts designated in the various departments.

That authority conferred on the governor justified the confident prediction that within the next two years the state will live within its income that the state debt will not be increased. This forecast is made because of confidence in the determination of Governor Chandler to exercise this power, if it becomes necessary, to cut appropriations in order to prevent expenditures from exceeding receipts.

This authority delegated to the governor to cut budget items in accord with income of the state will have another helpful effect. It makes members of the legislature more anxious to enact revenue-raising laws which will provide money to meet the budget, so as to eliminate necessity of the governor cutting appropriations for agencies in which legislators have an interest.

Most members of the legislature are especially interested in some agency of government for which money is provided in the budget. Hitherto, after appropriations have been made it became the duty of the state to provide the money specified, whether income of the state provided the funds. Under the present budget act, and in accord with the reorganization act, appropriations made in the budget may be cut by the governor if money is not available to pay them. That should make legislators more anxious to raise the money needed to meet budget requirements.

Virtually every spending agency of the state has been allotted less money under the budget than was received the last biennium.

The money appropriated for which revenue must be raised actually totals $22,631,187.21 for the next fiscal year. The budget contains, in addition, items totaling $1,715,000 which are not to be paid from the general fund, but from fees or highway income.

While the total budget figure does not represent a large reduction as compared with last year, it contains new expenditures, largest of which is the item of $2,500,000 a year for old age pensions. It contains substantial sums for rehabilitation of the charitable and penal institutions, an improvement too long delayed.

It becomes apparent when one considers that these additional items are included in the budget, yet its total is less than last year, that appropriations have actually been cut to the bone. Reduced appropriations placed upon various departments the necessity for greater economy than has hitherto prevailed. The rigid supervision of spending that has been provided in the reorganization act, coupled with the curtailed budget, gives assurance that extravagance in government is at an end in Kentucky.

Enactment of the budget bill is a significant achievement of Governor Chandler's administration. It redeems another campaign pledge to cut the cost of government to the lowest possible figure. It is a victory for the taxpayers. And they should be grateful to the governor for his valiant fight for a reduced budget with authority to put a stop to the practice of increasing the state debt. It is an achievement in financial statecraft the importance of which will be increasingly realized. The legislature showed good judgment, a high conception of duty, as it cooperated with the governor in passage of the best budget bill that has ever gone on the statute books. We are glad to note that Mercer's Senator Edmund E. Miller and Representative Chas. S. Matherly had a conspicuous part in the good work.

The third extraordinary session has the task of raising about twelve million dollars in additional revenue to pay the appropriations in the budget bill. The citizenship should realize that it is their duty to accept such taxes as are necessary to meet the minimum requirements of government.

The Onward Kentucky Movement

Is Rapidly Gaining Ground

We must confess that at times we have thought the matter of developing the "Onward Kentucky Movement" would be rapid and easy. Then at other times we have thought it difficult, if not impossible. But now we are more and more impressed each week that Mr. Isenberg will be successful and the plan operative earlier than we could have possibly conceived.

At Frankfort last Friday one was bound to be impressed with the personnel that made up the "Onward Kentucky" gathering. The greater part of which were persons we knew. They were not assembled for any possible financial good they might get out of the movement. They were people known for their interest in those less fortunate than themselves. They were there to earnestly assist in a plan in which they see so much hope for fellow Kentuckians.

We heard at that meeting big business executives declare the plan sound and express admiration for the conception of the plan. We learned too, more than we ever knew before of the possible extent of the marvelous artistry and skill of our fellow Kentuckians, both in the mountain fastness and the vaunted bluegrass region. Each section was pictured to us with its own special accomplishments. The highland section as excelling in their handicraft in wood and weaving while the lowland people as having an attitude for fine needlework, preserving and cooking.

Coincident with the discussion of the "Onward Kentucky Movement" is an interesting providential fact. The circumstances which has forced the mountain folks to live in the homespun period is now to become a source to which the family income will be added. People from every section have admired the handwork of the mountain women in the beautiful designs from their weaver's loom. Art and sentiment are woven together in their patterns. To own one or more of their baskets or coverlets is a joy. The words and music of their English folk songs have been collected, published and profit made by persons not mountaineers. But this movement will insure the mountain people a profit as a just return for their faithfulness in preserving the arts of their fathers. Another interesting thing to their credit is the preservation and use of many English words now obsolete, but met with in the Shakespearean period of literature.

On Tuesday two very interesting ladies called on us from the breaks of the Big Sandy, Mrs. Wallace, of Ashland, and Mrs. Jolleff, of Louisa. They came here to see Mr. Isenberg, the conceiver and prime mover of the plan. He was not in town and they sought us as a possible source of information about the movement. We suspect these ladies impressed us more than they realized with the need and possibilities of the movement in the mountains. These ladies have been making a study of the situation of the mountain section and realized the only possible way to gain an outlet for the product of the mountain woman's hands is by a collective marketing system. Some years ago Mrs. Wallace took samples of work done by the mountain women to a Philadelphia exhibition. The samples were enthusiastically received. But Mrs. Wallace met with a set back when she could not promise the trade an adequate supply. In the "Onward Kentucky Plan" she sees chains of counties in the mountains linked with a definite organization that would guarantee both production and outlet.

We are wondering just what Mercer county will advance as her feature article. We must have an article. We have several in mind, but we would like to hear from our readers of what they think would be a good feature; the more thoughts the better; the more sample articles the better at the Frank Fort Exposition in June. "Onward Kentucky!"

Every Time The Fire Siren Sounds

Go Down In Your Jeans To Pay

It costs the City of Harrodsburg a sizeable sum every year to maintain a paid fire department. In addition to this is the cost of upkeep of equipment and fire chief and station keeper. But the extra cost to the city comes when a fire breaks out on a false alarm is turned in. A review of the fire calls for the past year will show the greater percentage of calls were trivial and many due to rank carelessness. Burning trash seems to be a predominating thoughtless act to cause many calls.

Next time you see a fire engine go by, dig down into your change pocket and get out a few cents. For the fire to which the engine is going, though it may be in a home you have never seen, or a place of business you didn't know existed, is going to cost you something. Every fire is a financial burden on you—and the total cost, accumulated in the course of a year, amounts to a substantial sum.

How do you pay for fire? Well, for one thing, you pay for it in the cost of maintaining a fire department, alarm and water facilities, etc. The money for that comes out of the taxes you contribute to the public treasury.

Then you pay for fire in higher insurance rates—over a period of years, any community's rate is predicted upon the fire loss sustained.

You pay for fire in destroyed business. A family loses its home, and perhaps moves away from town. An industry burns—and men are thrown out of work, their purchasing power brought suddenly down to zero. Everyone feels the effects—the grocer, the movie owner, the doctor, the dry-goods merchant, the insurance salesman, the laborer.

Remember this—and perhaps you won't think it's so much fun to watch the fire engine roar by. Do your part to prevent fire, keep the engine in the fire house—and the result will be more dollars in your pocket.
