Dear Stuart & Ursula,
the artist has named his doodle „der Schnapsengel“ (booze-angel).

With the drawing he visualizes his thought/wish that spirituals are available in Heaven. The lyrics of a Dutch Carnival song from the sixties claim just the opposite: „In Heaven they don't serve beer, so I prefer to drink it here.“

Thesis - antithesis which must lead to a synthesis.

The synthesis is taking a bottle gin/jenever to Heaven as gravegift.

The Egyptians, that is to say the old ones, also wanted to continue their Earthly life in their „after life“ and were of the opinion that there were no good things for sale.

With certainty bordering on certainty, I am of the opinion that there is ^{nothing} stationary to be had there either. This is confirmed by the observation of the American poetess Emily Dickinson (1830-1886)

„A letter is a joy of Earth. It is denied the Gods“
