Dear Mr Ratten,

Further to our discussions we have held in the past I regret to inform you that both our standpoints on what is a decent remuneration for being employed by your group, is lying so far apart that it is not of any use to continue the discussion.

Right from the very beginning I have indicated that we are talking about £150 000 p.a. if you ever seriously attempting to employ me. This amount is not out of market for a person of my caliber. Secondly the cost of living is expensive in the Netherlands; Thirdly the type of job will be much more demanding than my present job; fourthly the offered £100 000 salary is not a distinct improvement over what I earn at present if I include my fringe benefits.

I hope you will appreciate the above considerations and I hope also that we meet each other in Rotterdam
Kind Regards
Adrian N. Nijlender
