Dear Miss White:

Just spent a couple of days going over some of the Wisconsin marshes and really had a very enjoyable + educational visit. It was rather hard to try and absorb everything but I am in hopes of getting up there again.

While visiting Vernon Goldsworthy, Manager of Wisconsin Cranberry Sales Co., he showed me his home and garden. Mr. Goldsworthy is interested in obtaining a couple of holly plants that will thrive in Wisconsin. I told him that you were the only holly expert I knew and perhaps you could solve his problem.

If you can spare the time I am sure Vernon would appreciate receiving your good advice on these plants. If you have anything suitable for him would you please send him 2 plants of this holly and send the bill to him also. His address is Vernon Goldsworthy, Mgr.

American Cranberry Exchange

Dear Lester:

It was mighty nice to get your letter and know of your trip through Wisconsin. I am sure neither you nor anyone else could absorb all that was desirable to learn in that interesting cranberry country.

I am writing Mr. Goldsworthy sending him our catalogue and price list, but I can give no guarantee that any holly will survive the Wisconsin cold. I have tried my best to secure what I hope will be the hardiest American hollies from New Jersey and New England, but I am fearful that they could not stand up under more rigorous Wisconsin winters.

Thanks a lot for sending me the request and best wishes to you and Lottie.

Sincerely yours,
