

We had to stop in Le Boulou for a postcard,
since we didn't get one the previous evening.
Then it was on to Spain.

We crossed the border about 10:30 A.M. Never saw so many trucks in one place.

We drove along the Costa Brava to Tossa de Mar.

BARCELONA

ONE AND ONLY

We drove along many curvy roads again before arriving at about 4:00 P.M. We drove through town, making good time, except that Hans took a wrong exit and we had to go back through town again for several kilometers. We did find the right exit the second time. It was beautiful, but more scary than any of the other roads we had driven so far. Luckily Hans drove.

SITGES

We arrived in Sitges and checked into "EL Roca" campground about 5:30 P.M.

It is very conveniently located very close to town and center. We set up our tent and looked around. The facilities were very clean and the bar, restaurant and disco looked very nice. We had a drink, then we walked into town, through the narrow winding streets, visiting the church and waterfront. We stopped for cocktails (bottomless glass) at the Bertram Hotel and watched the passing crowds.

Jim had huge prawns with with vegetables icecream cake with cognac.
Hans had fried sardines with mushrooms.
We also had sangria and coffee. All this for just over $40.00.

We walked off this great meal and then we went to "El Horno", a L-L-bar, which was very crowded, and "El Candil", a disco and modern upscale place. It had an interesting men's room, showing movies. We were really out late tonight! We walked back to the campground, turning in at about 1:30 A.M.

Day 17 Saturday September 21 (sunny).

After a light breakfast, we walked into town and took the 10:00 A.M. train to Barcelona.

The ride was O.K. and we arrived at the station on Paseo de Gracia about 45 min. later.

The streets were fairly quiet. We walked around and saw where Hans used to live (Calle Balmes 2º, 1ª). We also tried to call Juan-Ramón but no answer.

The entire project is very impressive. We visited the little museum, walked around inside the church and admired the detail work.

Sagrada Família (Gaudí)

the expiatory church of the Sagrada Família, conceived as a "cathedral of the twentieth century", in which his genius takes on a complex religious symbology. From 1883 until his death in 1926, Gaudí worked exclusively on the Sagrada Família. It was left unfinished but work has continued to the present day in the midst of fierce controversy.

We also witnessed a Spanish-Japanese wedding in the lower portion of the church. Very touching.

We walked, walked and walked some more. We stopped at the edge of Ciudadela Park for a cheese sandwich and beer.

We strolled through el Parc de la Ciudadela, which was beautiful. There had just been a children's festival, but we missed that. There was a lot of litter all over, especially paper hats.

Then we walked along the waterfront to the Statue of Columbus.

the monument to Columbus who was received by the Catholic Kings in Barcelona in 1493 on his return from his first voyage to the New World. The figure of the admiral stands on an iron column 50 m. high; the monument was designed by Gaietà Buigas (1886) and has become one of the city's best known sights.

We visited the church of Santa Maria del Pi, where a Mass was in progress.

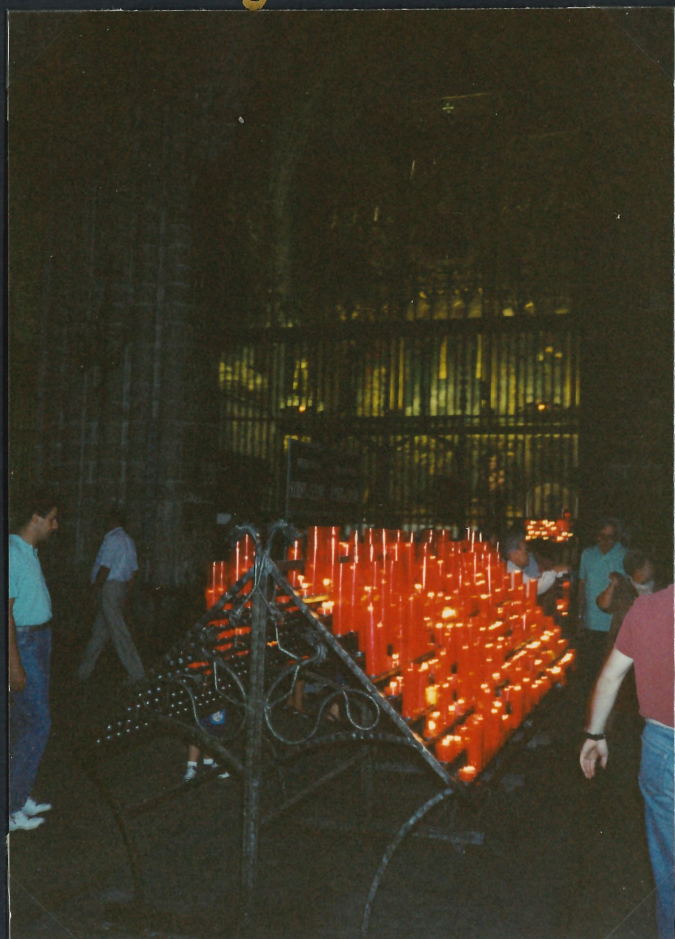

Then to the Cathedral. There Mass was just ending. We strolled through the cloisters, with its fountain and geese.

We bought some candles and strolled by the displays.

We browsed through the many bookstalls along the sidewalk of Paseo de Gracia. This was an anual bookfair and the participants came from Madrid and other cities. We took the train back to Sitges. We got on a slow one and arrived about 8:00 P.M. Jim was sure we were going to go right by without stopping, but we didn't. We went back to the campsite to freshen up, then to the Bertram Hotel again for our cocktails and to watch more of the crowds parading in front of us.

of course. We enjoyed our time there and couldn't help overhearing a heated conversation between a Spanish woman and a German, which resulted in the woman paying the bill and leaving him sitting at the table.
We tried to find the bar "EL Horno" again, but didn't seem able to find it, so we ended up at "Bourbons" for a drink and then stopped at the "Mediterranean" a very stylish Disco with Roman ruins in the walls.

We took the subway to the Cathedral, where we watched the locals perform the national dance "La Sardana" on the square.

The Cathedral comprises several highly interesting constructions from different periods. The spacious church has slender Gothic lines and three aisles and was built in the 13-15th C. (except for the lantern and façade which are neo-Gothic). Inside are numerous features of artistic value: the crypt of Santa Eulàlia, choir stalls, paintings, sculptures, and gold and silver ware. The small Romanesque chapel of Santa Llúcia opens off the cloister. Nearby are the Gothic Cases dels Canonges, now the residence of the president of the Generalitat (Catalan autonomous government).

Hans spent many frustrating minutes trying to contact Juan-Ramón. After many tries he finally got through, but nobody was home.

Then we headed for "Tibidabo".

FROM THE HILLS

A view of Barcelona from the sea reveals a natural wall of tree-clad hills which surrounds and protects the city, as well as providing incomparable panoramas. These are the Collserola hills, the veritable "lungs" of the city, now to be converted into a large park. The headland of Montjuïc, which rises above the sea to the east of Old Barcelona, is another important green space and leisure area.

The highest point in the Collserola hills, which separate Barcelona from Vallès, is the Tibidabo area in the centre which was built up at the turn of the century as a result of private and municipal initiative. The Tramvia Blau (blue tram), one of Barcelona's most popular and distinctive features, links up with the funicular railway which climbs up the hillside. On top stands the great expiatory church, the Sagrat Cor, a neo-Gothic work by Enric Sagnier, whose unmistakable silhouette is an integral part of the city's profile. In front, on the great esplanade, is an amusement park featuring a 50 m. high watchtower, a popular aeroplane and a museum of automatums, as well as restaurants and bars and splendid views over the city, all of which have made the Tibidabo a favourite spot for the citizens of Barcelona.

We ate a lite lunch of "bocadillos" or sandwiches with beer on a terrasse infront of the very elegant restaurant. The side walk show was interesting also. While Hans was making a phone call inside Jim watched a wedding party coming out of the church. All participants assembled on the steps. It was very windy though and the bride's train blew all over.

We walked up the first tier of steps of the church and admired the sunny but hazy views of the city. We went inside the church, which was rather plain.

We took the funicular and then the bus to the center of town.

We were supposed to meet Juan-Ramón at 5:30 P.M. in front of the Cafe de la Opera on the terrasse. We were early, so we strolled up and down the Ramblas watching the Sunday crowds. We saw some mimes, singers and other street artists.

Juan-Ramón found us finishing a nice cool beer.

After our "saludos" and getting reacquainted after about 15 years, we chatted for a while. Then he took us to a student hangout for tapas. We had octopus, sardines, potatoes, cheese and very good wine.

Next he took us to "Las Caracoles" for some excellent ham and cheese and beer. Another well known but (now) quiet and pleasant place.

We strolled the Ramblas some more. By now it was about 9:00 P.M. and even more active and animated. Quite festive indeed. We saw fireworks down the sidestreets towards the cathedral.

We had coffee at the station and then it was good-bye to Juan-Ramón.

We took the 10:30 P.M. train back to Sitges, arriving just in time for the very spectacular fireworks by the church and over the sea.

It lasted for 30 minutes. It was one of the highlights of the trip. Set off in the church square and on the steps, with many colorful and huge explosions in the sky. At the end the church was enveloped in sparks and smoke as they cascaded down the steps like a waterfall. Twinkle lights and explosions so close, one could almost touch them.

Sorry we could not get any pictures.

We strolled along the waterfront to "la Santa Maria" where we stopped and had a couple of beers while listening to a very good band, playing music in the parklike setting of the promenade. All kinds of international popular music. We could have listened all night, but they broke up about 1:00 A.M. Then it turned to disco. We watched the dancers for a while. Some were quite good. We wandered back to camp about 2:00 A.M. A super fantastico evening.

Day 19 Monday September 23. (Sunny).

Santa Tecla day. We got up about 8:30 A.M. and ate the pastries we had bought in Barcelona the evening before.

We walked into town and arrived just in time for the morning parade.

It was very noisy and exciting.

After the tall, tall
figures had passed,
we saw various local groups of youngsters,
performing old traditonal dances and fencing and forming pyramids with gayly colored flowered hats. Young girls doing the maypole dance.

Then we were showered with the huge sparklers, held by the men in the parade. After the shower stopped, a loud bang came from them. Jim got a burn on his head from the sparks. It is amazing that the buildings did not catch fire and more people aren't deaf. Most businesses along the route were boarded up on the street level. They must have gone through this routine many times and didn't want to take any chances.

After catching our breath, we took a walk along the beach and took a dip in the cool--l Mediterranean Sea. We stayed in the water for about 20 minutes, then walked along the quai and admired some of the nice beachfront homes.

We stopped for lunch at a beach-side cafe and had a bocadillo de chorizo and beer. We chatted with an older English couple from Yorkshire who had been coming to Sitges for years. Then we took a short busride to San Pedro de Ribas, a small town in the hills just outside Sitges. Everything was closed, so we didn't spend much time there.

We took the bus back to the campground. It was very hot and so were we. So, it was time to recharge our batteries. We took a nap and rested till about 5:30 P.M. Refreshed, we walked to the Bertram Hotel again for our cocktails. Hans was hungry, so he went next door to bring back some french fries.

At 7:30 P.M. the night parade was ready to start. We situated ourselves by the church. It turned out this was the location where the parade was to end. We ran down one of the small streets and watched. It was very quaint to watch the dancers in the dark. The sparklers were even more impressive by night. The men would form a circle in the square and form a human fountain, even though half of them were drunk.

After the parade we went back to the "Santa Maria" for dinner. Jim had Mediterranean salad with seafood etc. and mussels. Hans had shrimp. For dessert icecream with raisins and coffee. And wine of course.

We saw some more of dancing of the "Sardana" in a square. On either side there was a band seated on bleachers, who took turns playing the music.

Then we went to "El Horno" for a drink, next to "El Candil" for some dancing and also to "Bourbon's". They were still dancing in the square at about 1:30 A.M. We talked to a nice fellow from San Francisco for a little while.

We ended up the night at "The Mediterraneo", the very plush disco on two floors, with Roman Ruins in the walls. We managed to stagger home about 3:30 A.M., at the end of a glorious day.

Hans drove, because we had to take those awful steep winding roads again, partly very close to the edge with the sea deep below us. We arrived about noon and found Juan-Ramón's apartment house right away. Hans went in and left Jim sitting in the van for 1 1/2 hours. Then Jim had enough of this b.s. and had a few beers and walked around for a while. He thought Hans would never come out of that house. When he finally did Jim was pretty p'd off. We said good-bye to Juan-Ramón in a hurry. We left Barcelona about 2:30 P.M. and ran into some terrible traffic jams. We stopped and had a bocadillo de jamón and Jim bought some candies; this was at a freeway diner, which had some beautiful views over the sea.

We walked around the sleepy square for a little while, then turned in about 9:00 P.M. K.M. travelled: 360

Day 21 Wednesday September 25 (rainy).

We woke up about 8:30 A.M. in the van.

Good thing we had slept in it as it was raining slightly. Also we missed a lot of the sounds of the trains going by all night.

After a quick breakfast, we headed into Béziers.

J'

BEZIERS

We walked around Les Halles and bought some fresh groceries and cheese.

We stopped at the cathedral and tourist center, located in an old palace.

We windowshopped a little.

Jim bought a postcard in a newsstand and left it there.

By chance we stopped by a little later and the lady remembered him.

How could she forget!

We left Béziers about 11:00 A.M. and passed several villages which looked quite similar from a distance, church in the center, with the houses surrounding it.

Lodève.

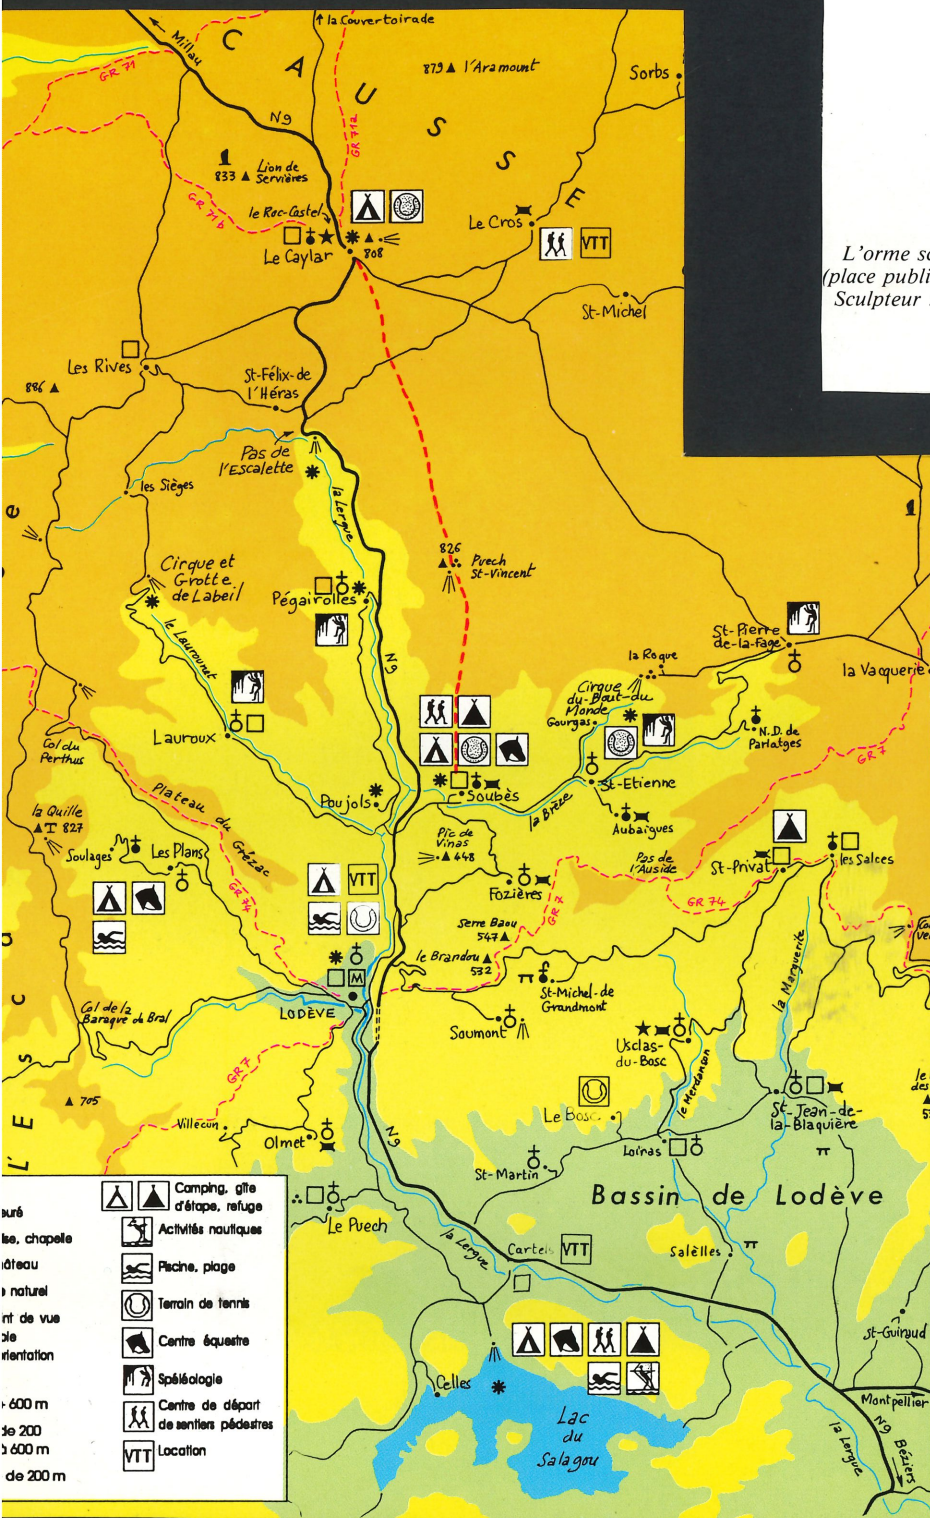

We had beautiful mountain vistas along the way, with gorgeous sandstone cliffs, weird rock formations like old ruins and views of the valleys below us.

We were driving through the village Le Caylar, when we spotted this remarkably stunningly carved tree on the little square. We parked in a sidestreet and took these pictures. One of those surprises, which makes a trip more interesting.

MILLAU: Ses Marchés

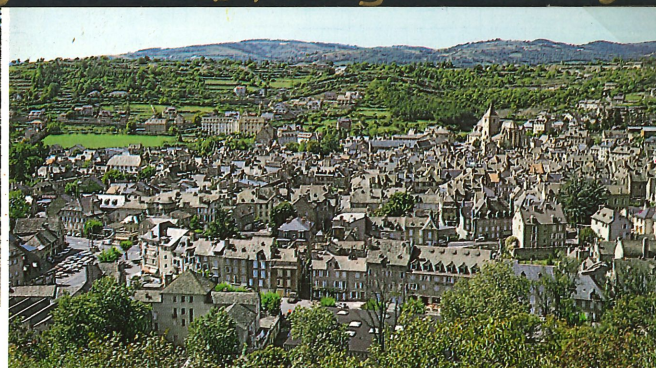

We mainly descended, until we reached Millau, which is situated on an altitude of 616 meters. We arrived about 2:00 P.M., just in time for lunch. This is another of the many old and romantic towns in this région.

It was very windy with pillows and umbrellas blowing around, but we still sat outside and had soup, fries, a ham sandwich and hot chocolate.

We browsed around a little, exchanged money, bought honey dodged the raindrops and were on our way. Very rainy at this point.

Even so, we made a quick stop in Marvejols. It is like a miniature Rothenburg with gates at both ends.

SOUVENIR de MARVEJOLS

On to Saint Flour, arriving about 5:30 P.M.
It reminded Jim of Carcassone, which he knew from pictures he had seen. We drove to the higher part of the city, situated on a high bluff.

ORIGINE DE SAINT-FOUR

Au IV^e siècle, l'évêque de Lodève Florus, traversant l'Auvergne afin de l'évangéliser, s'arrêta au pied d'un promontoire basaltique lui barrant la route. En apposant la main sur le roc, il ouvrit une brèche, lui donnant accès au petit village Indiciac existant au sommet. Cet événement fut capital pour notre bonne ville, la population alentour accourant pour voir et se fixant autour du faiseur de miracles. Au XI^e siècle, Indiciac transformé en ville portera, grâce à Odillon de Mercœur et en souvenir de Florus, le nom de Villa Sanctiflori qui au cours des siècles deviendra Saint-Flour. Aujourd'hui, St-Flour, capitale historique de la Haute-Auvergne, est une ville de 10 000 habitants. La cité a su garder son caractère médiéval tout en s'adaptant à notre époque. Tournée vers l'an 2 000, St-Flour n'oublie pas son passé.

SAINT-FLOUR

We went to look for a hotel. It was drizzling and cool. We stopped first at the Hotel de l'Europe, but Hans didn't like the room, so we went on and found Grand Hotel des Voyageurs, a nice, warm, old and clean place.

Monument de Pompidou.

SIROPS DE FRUITS

Our room faced over the flowered terrace.
 We settled in and had a few drinks before dinner.
 Finally we found a place "Hotel-restaurant" des Roches."
 It was after 9:00 P.M. We were lucky, because most restaurants closed at that time. It was on the square, overlooking the church. We got in for last call.

Hans had paté, calimari and chocolate mousse. Jim had mixed salad, steak (tough), fries and flan. Plus wine. Total: 130 F.Fr.
