THE school is the social agency strategically placed to develop good citizens. Society expects the school to accept every child regardless of "race, or color, or situation"—and to "develop in each individual the knowledge, interests, ideals, habits, and powers whereby he will find his place and use that place to shape both himself and the society toward ever nobler ends." Obviously, such a stupendous educational task cannot be accomplished without continuous cooperation between the school, the home, the government, the church, and the other important agencies of society.—NEA Research Division, "Crime Prevention Through Education," Research Bulletin, September 1932, p. 185.
