SIFF Move Review: The Signal

A Lesson For Why You Shouldn't Hunt Down Hackers

By Kim Bennett
The Seattle Medium

The Signal is a sci-fi movie about a college road trip gone terribly wrong. It's the story of an innocent drive across the Nevada desert turned hacker hunt, turned extraterrestrial encounter. Three MIT students, Nic, Jonah, and Hailey, set out to drive Hailey, who is transferring CalTech, to her new school. In the process, Nic and Jonah, both hackers in their own rights, decide to pursue an apparently superior hacker named Nomad who has been pulling their strings. What unfolds is literally out of this world.

The film at times feels like a horror flick with POV camera work and a little like E.T. with mysterious men in hazmat suits holding lost kids hostage in sterile surroundings. It's not ever clear what's going on, but you know it's nothing good.

Then enter Dr. Wallace Damon, lead scientist played in a cold, calculated, and at times humorous way by Lawrence Fishburne from The Matrix. Dr. Damon, is the always calm and controlled interrogator, asking questions as he studies Nic, his subject. Fishburne's cool delivery of his lines reminded me of Morpheus from The Matrix, making Dr. Damon somehow likable, even drawing some laughs from the audience.

I don't want to spoil it for you because the movie hinges on mystery and the unknown. But I will say, it felt like a mix of a few different films with scenes reminiscent of District 9, The Matrix, Blair Witch Project, and several other sci-fi and horror flicks.

The Signal is an interesting take on the road-trip-from-hell story line. It loses some of its momentum, but has the potential to blow your mind in parts. There are some beautiful visuals of car crashes and slow motion action that are stunning. Overall, it's an entertaining film and a different look at parallel universes, alternate realities, and all things alien.

The Signal will show at the following times and locations during the Seattle International Film Festival: Tues., May 27, 7:00 PM, Lincoln Square Cinemas; Weds., May 28, 7:00 PM, Egyptian Theatre.

Tyler Perry Sues 'For Better Or Worse' Producers Over Studio Fire

By Ruth Manuel-Logan
Special to the NNPA from The Chicago Defender

Actor, playwright, and film mogul Tyler Perry who had a massive fire at his Atlanta-based mega-million-dollar studio last year, is now reportedly suing the producers of his sitcom "For Better Or Worse" for $1.8 million, accusing them of negligence, according to TMZ.

The lawsuit reportedly claims that the blaze broke out due to a white hot light that was placed too close to a backlot facade on the show's set. Perry is claiming that the lighting professionals should have been more knowledgeable and competent.

Last year after the fire was thoroughly investigated, though, Atlanta's Fire Chief Kelvin J. Cochran determined that the damage was so extensive that the source of the blaze could not be found. "The intensity of the fire in the area of origin consumed any evidence that would lead to a cause of ignition," Cochran stated according to the Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

The four-alarm fire reportedly damaged the exterior but not the interior of the building that stood in the 30-acre, 5-year-old complex's center. The building's interior did have some water damage, but that was the result of firefighting efforts. More than 100 firefighters responded to put out the blaze, and they managed to contain the fire to one building. There were no reported injuries.

The impending lawsuit's dollar amount will reportedly cover the total damage to the studio.
