

The City of Seattle Department of Licenses and Consumer Affairs

... which collects over $92 million annually in revenue and enforces 58 regulatory licenses and 5 revenue ordinances, invites you to take a look and consider some of our unique and interesting careers.

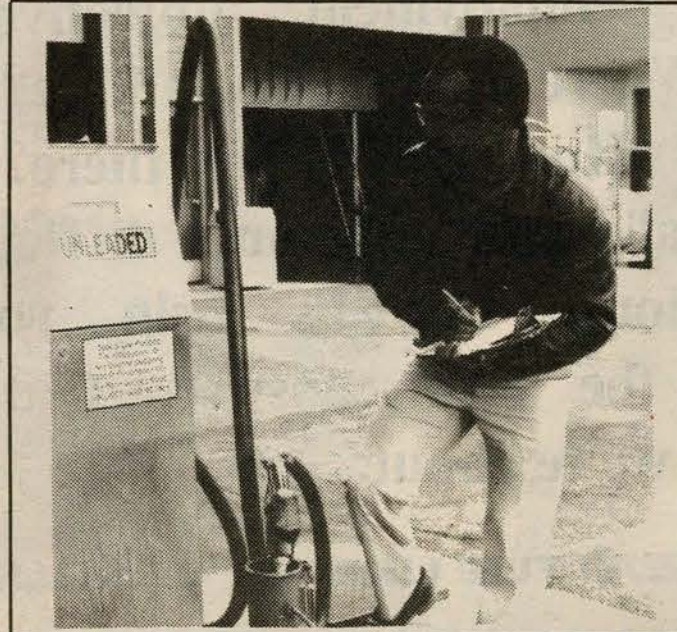

Animal Control Officer Rosario Garcia cares for a litter of kittens which await adoption. In her position, Officer Garcia works not only with dogs and cats, but with their owners and other people who seek to match a pet to their families.

Other Officers travel throughout the City in the course of their day's work. With their Special Police Commissions, these Officers must enforce the City's Animal Control Ordinances. With the approximately 50,000 licenses pets in the City, not to mention those which remain unlicensed, this Division stays busy.

Positions in this field will be opening soon; for more information check with Larry Alcantara of City Personnel, 625-2879.

Tax Auditors Ellis Ricks and Adrienne Chu discuss an audit of one of the approximately 30,000 registered businesses in the City of Seattle. Based on their training and a strong knowledge of City tax laws, they are able to help not only the large firms and corporations in the City, but also small business owners and individuals concerning their tax liability and individual questions.

License and Standards Inspector Ralph Garlington checks one of the City's many gasoline pumps for volume accuracy, so consumers can be assured of receiving the full amount of gas for which they pay. Inspector Garlington also deals with other types of retail and wholesale establishments, checking the accuracy of scales and measuring devices in order to protect the consumer.

In 1983, 1,029,850 commodities were checked by the four Inspectors working in the Weights and Measures Section. The Section also inspects taxis for safety and accurate trip indicators. City towing activities are monitored by License and Standards Inspectors. Other Inspectors enforce business and regulatory licensing ordinances, and work with businesses and individuals throughout the City.

"Consider government as a viable career option. Remember, all doors are open but you must be willing to prepare yourself to penetrate the invisible walls that stand behind these doors and infiltrate the halls of opportunity that lie ahead."

Department Director,
Regina L. Glenn.
