As we discussed, Freeman Riggie will remove the old foundation of the coping for $2,500 and be finished in one day. He will pour a new, properly reinforced foundation for $5,000. Glenwood would be responsible for resetting the posts and coping pieces on the new foundation. Since we have only 25 work days to complete the project (assuming no rain or illness), getting the old foundation out in one day would be wonderful.

The Estradas are confident they can break the old foundation into smaller pieces with the jackhammer and remove them either by hand or with the tractor in approximately one week's time. Assuming that is correct, I estimate our cost for removal would be approximately $1,600. The details are on the attached worksheet. Note that I've allowed eight work days, but I still think this is a very conservative estimate.

I've no idea of the amount of time it would take them to pour a new foundation and reset the coping. In the worksheet attached, I've arbitrarily allowed the same eight work days. In estimating the materials, I reviewed Mario's projects. The Bertallot lot in Section D was the most comparable in terms of size of the coping beams, entrance, etc., but it is only 200 s.f. (60 linear feet of coping). The Allen lot is 490 s.f. (87.2 linear feet of coping). I came up with the materials estimate by multiplying the amounts Mario used on Bertallot by 1.45 to allow for the longer perimeter of the Allen lot. Assuming eight days of work time, it would cost us approximately $2,200 to replace the foundation and reset the coping. Doubling the work days (more realistic) would make the total $3,200, but we'd have to have perfect weather to finish in time.

We need to make every day count, and the Estradas would have to begin no later than this Saturday removing the old foundation. The third option is still to patch and "lipstick" the old foundation and reset the coping on it. Please call me tomorrow (713-498-5972).
