The granite marker that was brought in during lunch today to be set in Washington Cemetery measures 24¼" x 14" (343" x $0.40 = $137.20). However, because it is unusually thick (12½" high) and heavy, Julian recommends a price of $200. OK?

I need to call the man who brought it in (John Wood in El Campo, [REDACTED]) so he can send us a check.

Bernice,

In resetting the marker for Beverly Hobson, can we rely on the diagram in the green book? It shows Beverly in the northernmost space on the SE 1/4 of F-006 (north of Emily). Does Emily have a marker? Do you know which end the head is?

P.S. Mary Ann is on vacation and I'm at her desk, but your reply should automatically go to [REDACTED]

Are you interested in contacting the man who brought the Hobson marker back to see if he knows any more about the missing angel?

My recollection is that there was a depression left in the ground when the angel, monument, and base were removed. Sam Belinoski helped them remove it, and he saif it weighed about 400 pounds.

Of course I am really sad that the angel has disappeared. I wonder if someone removed it "without authorization" after the homeowner died and the place was vacant? There is quite a market in stolen funeral statuary. An antique dealer in New Orleans got five years in the big house for his part in such a scheme (though he was sprung on a technicality after less than two years).

Yes, I'd like to talk to him, but I gathered from what you said that he sees nothing to talk about. It's too bad we didn't get the family history from Beverly's two sisters for our book-in-progress.

The grass is high (it's being mowed as we speak), but I don't think the depression is there. The first photo shows the SE1/4 with the stone for R. B. and Emely. The second photo is where I think the depression was. According to the diagram in the green book, as you face the existing stone for R. B. and Emely, Beverly's marker would be to the right of Emely. Is this correct?

Julian is gung-ho to get started on the foundation as soon as we get your answer.

The glue residue was chipped off and then sanded.
