~ it tells about RANCHO SANTA FE

California's most unique land development project.

Rancho Santa Fe—(San Diego County, 100 miles south of Los Angeles) which will be formally opened today, after years of devoted planning and one whole year of active development work—deserves your attention.

Rancho Santa Fe is destined to become one of the nation's most productive, prosperous, magnificently attractive and beautiful agricultural and horticultural (frostless) sections. It is sponsored by the Santa Fe Land Improvement Company ostensibly for the purpose of making available one of California's most ideal spots—monetary gain is not a consideration.

Rancho Santa Fe—its very name teeming with the romance of old Spain—with its setting of ancient palms and pepper trees—with its Spanish civic center, Hotel La Mirada, School and other proposed buildings—a mere ten-minute drive from the placid blue waters of the Pacific—is indeed a veritable show place.

It has already attracted thousands of visitors who have feasted their eyes on its irresistible charm—even as you will, once you have caught the spirit and purpose of Rancho Santa Fe.

But you must read the story—then we know you will make Rancho Santa Fe the Mecca of your next week-end drive.

After that, life in California will have a new meaning to you.

Come—taste of beauty as best nature and the genius of men can provide.
