

HOLY ROOD CEMETERY
Church Street and Washington Avenue
Glendale, Ohio

Compiled by Bill James Cook
1982

There are only records to be found for this cemetery from the year 1887 until the last burial in the 1920's. However, if you look at the map of Glendale taken from The Hamilton County Atlas of 1869, you will see the cemetery is plainly marked on Church Street near the old St. Gabriel Church. No doubt, many Catholic people were buried here long before any records were kept for the cemetery.

Four persons appear in these records that I have compiled only because their bodies were exhumed and reburied in Oak Hill. Note these four were all buried before 1887:

James Ament - 1873

Patrick Concoran - 1871

John Devanney - 1875

Mary Heher - 1878

Holy Rood Cemetery

What's in a name?

The word "Rood" is the same as the modern word "Rod". Rods were used to measure land; they were also used to form the crucifixes in churches. Hence, the rood is a cross or crucifix; the figure of Christ on the cross erected in Roman Catholic churches. Therefore the name Holy Rood Cemetery means Holy Cross or Holy Crucifix Cemetery in more modern language. The term rood is seldom used today but was commonly used in the 1800's.

When the writer was a little boy in the late 1920's and early 1930's, there was a large crucifix just as you entered the gate of Holy Rood Cemetery and the cemetery was filled with stones and monuments.

The cemetery fronted on Church Street. The gate to Holy Rood Cemetery was made of black iron work and was approximately 200 feet north on Church Street from the location of the old Catholic Church.

The old Catholic Church was built right out to the sidewalk on Church Street with living quarters attached to the rear and side of the church. Later, as a new church was built on Sharon Avenue, the old church and the attached living quarters were converted into the Catholic School. When the school complex burnt the old church part was completely destroyed and the remaining part made into living quarters for the Sisters of Charity who operated the new school built on Sharon Avenue.

Holy Rood Cemetery

Today, 1982, all that remains of Holy Rood Cemetery is a plot of green on the corner of Church Street and Washington Avenue in Glendale, Ohio. In 1982 a tiny stone for a baby can still be found buried under the grass. Also two monuments remain in the cemetery.

The little stone buried in the earth and grass is for Francis Dollman buried June 3, 1888. The monuments have the names Logan and Costello on them.

All the other stones and monuments, the iron gates, the roadway, and the fence have vanished.
