The other copy was one after the paper had been sold and moved to Weston. It is Vol. 2, No. 52, and is dated May 12, 1855. A little discrepancy in the volumn numbers of the two papers, probably due to the fact that the name of the paper was changed from "Platte Argus" to "Weekly Platte Argus." It still maintained the same editorial policy with L. A. and W. F. Wisely as editors. This paper carries the advertisement of Wilson & Clark, attorneys of Platte City, and advertisement of Ayers' Cherry Pectoral, which is still on the market, and one of Woolfolk & Co., who had a big general store at Platte City. It also had some nine or ten steamboat cards. These vessels plied between St. Louis and St. Joseph, and the time table gave stops at Weston, Parkville and a number of other towns in and bordering Platte county. A saw mill adv. quotes walnut, oak, hickory and other lumber at $1.50 to $3 per 100 feet. H. Clay Cockrill practiced as an attorney at Platte City, and N. J. Alexander & Co. had a store at Iatan.

W. C. Remington was county clerk, and a steam saw mill and grist mill was operated at the mouth of Bee Creek. Phinneas Skinner offered for hire "four likely negroes, one man one woman and two boys." Nimrod Farley operated "the ferry that never stops," and in a notice advises all wishing to be in Kansas in time to vote to go to Iatan and they would not be disappointed "for Old Nim is always ready."
