A letter to the Boston Post, dated Quindaro, K. J., August 4th, says:

A good deal of local excitement and inflammatory feeling towards Quindaro has recently been excited, and now exists in the adjacent portions of Missouri. Reports are circulated and have obtained belief that the slaves across the river are enticed to come here by the citizens of this town, and when pursued and identified are still kept from their owners in defiance of law. These rumors naturally produce great excitement in Missouri; some of the newspapers are beginning to make inflammatory appeals, and in two instances projects have been set on foot for an organized band to come over here with hostile purposes. I am assured by a perfectly reliable gentleman, who resides in Missouri, that the Blue Lodge is again in operation in Platte county.
