Clippings and Comments.

One of Lane's brigands writing to a Cincinnati paper, writes of the stealing his company has done, and intends to do. The people of Missouri have suffered terribly and as a specimen of the robberies they have sustained, we give an extract from the letter of the jayhawking thief:

The jayhawkers have captured, confiscated and destroyed not less than $250,000 worth of rebel property in the period they have been in the field. In addition to the above schedule, they have given liberty to not less than 300 slaves, whose united worth would average $100,000, even at the lowest rates at which such "property" sells now.

It will encamp for the next week at a point on the river about ten miles below this city, where it will be paid off, arrange its affairs, and prepare for a movement into another disturbed section of the belligerent State opposite us. Gen. Hunter has given Platte county ten days to capture Sy. Gordon and his gang and hand them over to him. If not done at the end of that time, the jayhawkers move across. Platte is a rich county, full of "secesh," and well deserves the punishment which it has not yet obtained, and may avert. The probabilities are that Sy. Gordon will not be taken, but that Platte county will. By command of Gen. Hunter, Capt. Oliver's battalion, 7th Missouri infantry with the right section of Totten's battery, will remain attached to the command.
