An Ex-Slave Dead.

Doc Jennings, who was buried yesterday, was one of the last of the slaves that was sold from Platte county, Mo. On the verge of the rebellion he was sent to the blacksmith shop by his master where he was ironed and with thiry others hitched to a rope the same as they did horses during the war and driven to the edge of Louisiana where he was sold. He fell into the hands of a cruel master who nearly killed him before he was liberated by Lincoln's proclamation. At the close of the war he came to Atchison where has always enjoyed the reputation of being one of her best citizens.
