THE HIGH SCHOOL'S NUMBER ONE PROBLEM

Many thoughtful people engaged in high school education, would like to find some answers to the problem of what to do with a growing segment of high school pupils. These youngsters come to school with no purpose whatever, unless it be the desire to be entertained.

There was a time when schools were glorious places of escape from dreary home life, but in today's world of fast cars and television, schools are finding the competition tough. At this point one may properly ask: Why should schools be concerned with entertaining pupils? Aren't they supposed to be teaching them? Why don't they get about it? The school's answer is this: Teaching is a two-way street. If we would teach it is assumed that someone would learn. The point is that this segment of high school, roughly 15%, does not want to learn anything that we teach.

In the elementary grades a popular device has been set up in the form of special classes for low ability people. Few if any of this older age group would qualify for this remedy. In general they are not dumb. They think that anybody who works is silly. They are confused, have no present or future plans. They have a consuming desire for attention and they dearly love to have their own way.

DIANA HEFFNER

VALEDICTORY

Since the birth of this school paper on March 17, 1943, I have had a personal assignment connected with its production. In my zeal to have a successful weekly news magazine in our school, I promised Miss Qum, our editor, that I would be responsible for the material for its front page. Like all columnists, I have lived to learn that a newspaper can be a hard taskmaster; that the pleasure of writing is often mixed with the harassment of meeting a deadline.

Although I am reliably informed that no students and few adults read the front page, it is necessary that a paper have one, and trying to make it a good page has been a challenge.

Actually the privilege of presenting news stories, special articles and editorials to the readers of our paper has been quite a pleasant task. Due largely, no doubt, to the fact that the writer has been generally unknown or assumed to be the editor or a student, most of the sentiments expressed thru the years on this page have found general acceptance.

Now that I have fulfilled my obligation to our paper, I hope that others who have worked with me, will redouble their efforts, to the end that "Centralian" remain what it was intended to be—a modest, honest public relations organ of our school.--Elmer E. Stahlman

Sixth Graders Visit Junior High

Wednesday morning representatives from the sixth grades at West Sand Lake and Miller Hill Schools spent the morning at the Averill Park Central Junior High School. Mr. Klefer, Guidance Counselor in the elementary grades, accompanied the group. Sample schedules were given to the group.

Mr. Finegan showed the group a series of slides depicting the school day of a seventh grader and escorted them on a tour of the building. Visits were made to regular classrooms and special rooms such as the guidance office, health room, shop, home-making room, music room, and library.

Thursday, after school, Mrs. Kimball brought her sixth grade class to the Junior High School for a similar program of orientation.

Educational leaders want to admit that there is a problem. We think it is general and it cries for before its growth demoralizes a general program.

Our suggestions for a are as follows: 1. a flexible for leaving school. 2. clinical type classes for pupils in this category--with teachers with special training in the understanding of the adolescent of 1956.
